As to the first point, Minister Cerda indicated that at present it is difficult to decide what stimulus to use to get industry to behave according to the consumer needs of the dispossessed sectors of our society; that industry has characteristics which are suited to a dependent capitalist country and which are not very favorable or positive; and that industry was not conceived to satisfy the needs of the productive sectors of the country, that is, the peasants and workers.

He indicated that from these characteristics it is obvious that industry was not the result of an industrial development which is in tune with our own economic reality and that industry did not develop to satisfy a broad market. Nor did industry develop as the result of the skill of its components in developing the economy, since it was influenced from outside by the Central American Common Market. It was designed to serve a regional market and a national market at the same time. Finally, it is an industry designed for markets which do not depend on us.

That "extradimensional" design can be seen in the high production costs which beset our industry and in its vulnerability to markets like El Salvador and Guatemala, which are now internally affected by political problems and where the laws of competition are not respected.

In addition to these things, Minister Cerda continued, our industry is affected by the division of the market, which has come to be a great weakness: it does not have a clear sense of integration among its various branches. The textile industry is one example, he said, because since Nicaragua is a big cotton producer, its textile industry depends on thread made in El Salvador.

Another example is the Hercasa Chemical Industry, a manufacturer of toxaphene, which was designed for foreign markets and is a victim of unfair competition by Guatemala.

Here, industry was planned on the basis of the Yankee need to respond to the Cuban problem, to generate jobs, to produce foodstuffs, and to make these countries forget about revolution.

Our industry is dealing with markets practically destroyed by political problems and with unfair competition.

Second Point

As to the second point, the minister said it should be made clear that industry and the economy must not pattern themselves along individualist lines, that we must put a stop to the zeal for profit on the part of industrialists and businessmen and that the latter must not purchase in the surrounding area anything which can be produced here.

He affirmed that industry must be transformed so that it ceases to be dependent on foreign goods and technology; that the reactivation of industry must be for competition with foreign countries and not just for survival at home; and that industry must see itself as a link in the business-industrial relationship. He added that we must have solidarity among ourselves, otherwise the government will have to act in the medium and long term.

He referred to high production costs, to underutilization of installed capacity, to labor problems and to financing and investment problems. The laws of supply and demand must be set aside, he said. Industry has had no education for programming industrial development. At present information problems prevent us from knowing industry's needs for cash and financing.

Poor Distribution

For that reason we must establish an industrial decisionmaking center in the Ministry of Industry.

He referred to the poor geographical distribution of industries, with 61 percent concentrated in Managua and the rest in Granada, Leon and Chinandega; to the huge sums concentrated in industrial activity; to the incorrect application of the Third Integration Agreement; and to the corruption in Somozist industries, which divided the exemptions among themselves as "free" and therefore were subsidized by the state.

He reiterated that the revolution was fought for the dispossessed sectors and that the economy generated by industry must be oriented toward those sectors; that industry's behavior must be corrected in favor of the interests of the peasants, who produce the basic grains and cut the coffee, cotton and sugarcane; that the most important element to consider in the new industrial policy is to produce for the dispossessed sectors, to achieve a more just society; and that we must become producers of popular consumer goods. We must avoid, for example, the current large-scale imports of ready-to-wear clothing.

He referred to the improvement of the aggregate value, to national consumable expenditures and to the gross value of production, which is derived from adding the first two elements together. He said that the object is for the aggregate value, added to the national consumable expenditures, to be as close as possible to the gross value of production.

He referred to the need to centralize information and to the fact that production must be the concern of both industrialists and workers; he emphasized that there can be no distribution if there is no production.

During the question and answer period it became obvious to those attending that the chief problem--from the point of view of the industrialists--concerns labor, and these problems are undermining social peace and preventing total reactivation of the industries which succeeded in reestablishing themselves after the war of liberation.

Minister Cerda referred to the labor problems in a general way; then he said we must not fall into casuistry. He indicated that such problems have two causes: some come from the aspirations of the workers who have so long been oppressed,and others from leftist extremists who, he emphasized, want the revolution to confiscate all the factories and industries in the country.

8735
CSO: 3010

JOURNALIST CHIDES STATE PETROLEUM ENTERPRISE

PY142210 Asuncion ABC COLOR in Spanish 12 Oct 80 p 12

[Commentary by Alcibiades Gonzalez Delvalle entitled: "Pardon, REPSA"]

[Text] We reporters apologize to the Paraguayan people. We have finally realized that we are the only ones responsible for the frequent increase in fuel prices. REPSA [Paraguay Refineries, Inc.] has nothing to do with this ugly affair. Only the reporters are to be blamed for this. It happens that we used to make some campaigns--in good faith, of course--for the national economy which is always on the brink of bankruptcy because of REPSA. And this campaign has never received an appropriate answer. REPSA has never bothered to answer any of the accusations. But it gets angry. And unfortunately it has no other way to express its anger but by increasing the fuel prices. This is the way it used to achieve its vengeance. This used to be its only answer.

When we reporters ask REPSA for some explanation on the handling of its business because we feel it is of national interest, REPSA frowns, rolls up its sleeves up to the elbow and increases the fuel prices. When we reporters ask ourselves why the most ordinary and most expensive gasoline is sold in Paraguay, REPSA loses its temper and inflicts a heavy blow on the pockets of the long-suffering consumer. When the newspapers uncover the obscure maneuvers, the scandalous shady deals, the unjustified tariffs, REPSA charges back with a new price increase. This is its only defense, its only answer. When someone gets angry, blinded by a momentary passion, he or she usually lies, slanders, calumniates or screams. But REPSA does not act this way. Instead, coldly, accurately, with impunity, without saying a word, without uttering a single sound, it administers its precise blow on the most sensitive part of its favorite victim. That is, on the economy of the Paraguayan people.

Since, after all, we reporters are also conscientious, we are going to assess our errors and try to end them. Perhaps the most appropriate attitude would be that adopted by the deputies and senators. That is, to keep most absolutely silent. Not to make any protest. Not to ask for any information. Not to do anything at all. And not only the congressmen, but also the students, teachers and workers do not bother about REPSA. And it is appropriate to point out one fact which usually calls the attention: when the gasoline price goes up, nobody says a thing, but when bus fares go up, which is a logical consequence of the first, the students, teachers and everybody else angrily protest against the transport companies.

This time we reporters admit the responsibility for the fuel price increase. Thus, we get ahead of those who used to blame us for all the hardships the country is enduring. We had been blamed before for the floods, the droughts, the scarcities, the blackouts, the rain-flooded streets, etc.

But anyhow--something good ought to be found in our errors--REPSA has improved its system. Now it no longer resorts to a previous scarcity [of fuel], it no longer paralyzes the country to obtain the increase of its prices. It would also seem that it no longer needs to go through the long tiresome ministerial transactions to achieve what it wants: a telephone call would be enough. For this purpose it is REPSA.

Perhaps by this week we are already going to forget the new fuel price. We will be distracted by the increase of bus fares, of bread, of spagetti, etc., while REPSA--and its friends--increase their bank accounts because of the reporters who did not know how to be prudent and prompted the anger of this company which is extremely sensitive to criticisms.

CSO: 3010

COLUMNIST DEPLORES HANDLING OF OIL PRICE INCREASE

PY150203 Asuncion ABC COLOR in Spanish 11 Oct 80 p 11

[Article by Luis Alberto Mauro]

[Text] The week in which the fuel price increase was announced has ended and another week is starting without any indication that the country will be given an explanation for the unexpected increase. We cannot understand this silence. How can it be possible for the citizenry to be denied information on a matter that affects the economy of their homes, on a measure that drives inflation upwards and reduces the buying power of our currency?

This situation brings to the surface some distortions that affect our society. We will list some of these distortions: 1. We have an Industry and Commerce Ministry that is the government agency solely responsible for the difficult situation that REPSA is creating for the country with frequent price increases and with its simple presence in the national territory. Minister Delfin Ugarte Centurion pays no attention to the requests for him to reveal the arguments that REPSA presented to obtain approval for the recent price increase. We, therefore, have a ministry that distorts the democratic order by deciding on vital questions behind closed doors, giving no explanations and expecting that decisions made at that level must be accepted by the citizenry in silence and with bowed heads. This fact brings to light an irregularity that is spreading in Paraguay: a great number of government officials manage public affairs as though they were private affairs in the belief that they must not account for their actions to the citizenry.

2. Agencies of higher status than the ministry, such as the National Economic Coordination Council and even congress, do nothing to correct these irregularities.

3. There is a prevailing idea that errors committed by a political leader or the misuse of public assets for his own benefit must be covered up because "he is a friend of a fellow party member." The sound principle that, upon discovering an irregularity, the party should be the first to ask its member to account for his actions is being lost, and it should not be so, for the simple reason that the prestige of the party is at stake and the party younger members are watching and passing judgment.

4. Businessmen limit themselves to looking at effects, not at causes. At this time they are considering the advisability of drawing up a document on the price increase of oil byproducts, but they have already announced a review of their production costs for the modification of the price structure of a number of products, without bothering to ask the government for an explanation of the causes for the increase of fuel prices. At the same time that they request approval to increase the price of their products, they will stress the need not to raise salaries, arguing that if salaries are raised, new distortions will follow.

5. The workers federation believes that the ultimate solution is increasing salaries. The analysis does not go any further, nobody asks the government why the prices of oil byproducts were allowed to go up. Expert teams get lost looking at the nearest tree, without trying to see the entire forest.

6. The opposition do nothing but take advantage of the circumstances for their own propaganda benefit, without making any objective criticism. The calm attitude to voice an opinion intended to improve the situation is missing. The object is to heap vituperations on the government to bring water to the opposition's propaganda mill.

7. The government says that the press goes overboard with sensationalism, and it proclaims that the criticism will be heard and the wrong corrected if documents and evidence of wrongdoing are presented. But this is not the case with REPSA. There is plenty of evidence of REPSA's wrongdoings in the country, but, despite all evidence, this company goes on nonchalantly maneuvering to serve its own interests to the detriment of the national interests.

This whole situation just serves to show that a state of mind unconcerned with the new winds blowing across the face of the world is prevailing in the country. This situation is not apt to nourish the youth to make them capable of freely debating ideas, but only to practice obedience and conformity. This is the best way to undermine the strength of the country. And this is a situation that must be done away with forever if we aspire to building a more just nation for everyone.

Trying to preserve the moral health of the country, we say that neither the government nor the nation should accept silence as an answer from the industry and commerce minister when he is asked for an explanation as to why he accepted REPSA's proposal to raise the price of oil byproducts.

Minister Ugarte Centurion must convince us that the increase was justified, and the only way to do so is by showing us the figures, the invoices and the dates of all supporting documents. Otherwise, he would be acting with little respect for public opinion.

CSO: 3010

LABOR MINISTER ACCUSES UNIONS OF POLITICAL MANEUVERING

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 18 Sep 80 p 4

[Text] If the tendency to bring what are clearly labor demands into the political realm should predominate, then the democratic regime will be forced to ensure firm compliance with existing legal provisions, the minister of labor warned yesterday.

Alfonso Grados Bertorini condemned the intention of many trade unions of magnifying labor conflict before searching for solutions by the most suitable means, finally opting for strikes or work stoppages.

He noted that "we cannot accept the fact that before exhausting direct negotiations and conciliation, there already exists the coercion of the predetermined strike -- that is, the apparent desire for the conflict to end in a confrontation."

Grados Bertorini also referred to the announced 48-hour work stoppage of the National Miners and Metalworkers Federation, indicating that it was called for political and labor motives because the reinstatement of laid-off workers is being demanded.

Grados Bertorini expressed his confidence that the workers will understand that they must go beyond the directives of certain trade union organizations and before arriving at a work stoppage, work out their demands at the bargaining table.

With respect to the strike waged for several days by National Bank workers, Grados Bertorini said that inasmuch as it is a state entity, the solution depends on the Ministry of Economy and Finance.

Democracy

Grados Bertorini also defended the existence of democracy in Latin America and expressed the hope that in this part of the continent, no more dictatorships like that of Anastasio Somoza in Nicaragua will emerge.

Grados Bertorini said that in Peru there exists the possibility, expressed in the citizens will, of finding solutions within democracy.

He called on workers to sustain democratic order and "not confuse trade union activity, aimed at improving the living conditions of workers, with the political and social struggle."

He said that it was right for trade unions to engage in the social and political struggle under dictatorships, "but that is not their role in democratic times."

Referring to the assassination of dictator Anastasio Somoza, he said that he had been tried by history for leading Nicaragua through a process of inestimable material harm.

He added that "naturally, this does not mean that from my Social Christian position, I would condone the assassination of anyone."

11,464
CSO: 3010

COMMISSION PROPOSED TO ALLEVIATE LABOR PROBLEMS

Lima EL CORREO in Spanish 14 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Nemesio Rodriguez: "Need for Labor Agreement"]

[Text] 13 Sep (EFE)--The conflict-ridden labor situation in Peru, where over a million man hours have been lost, has caused some individuals to speak out demanding an agreement to solve the problem.

After it came to power on 28 July, the government of Fernando Belaunde Terry enjoyed a relative truce in the labor field, but as time passed, the truce turned out to be deceiving.

The silence of the country's largest labor unions in response to the government's repeated calls for a truce indicated that swords remained at the ready.

The final days of the military regime, which lasted 12 years, were characterized by a wave of strikes demanding wage increases.

At that time, in the opinion of observers, the future civilian ministers partly mortgaged their position by admitting that the petitions for wage increases were fair and should be heard.

In his election campaign, President Fernando Belaunde Terry himself promised the reinstatement of the thousands of workers dismissed for sociopolitical actions under the military regime.

It would appear that those promises are part of the issue in the current wage demands.

The relative labor truce during the early weeks of the Belaunde government came to an end with the beginning of the gradual increase in prices for basic commodities, from the first hike in the price of sugar to the last in that of gasoline.

Real Relationship

The government also increased salaries, but numerous collective agreements have recently expired and the need to negotiate new ones hardened the labor picture.

The first phase in the government's economic program has been called "unpacking," which to the man in the street overwhelmed by words and the effort to improve his purchasing power, sounds like Chinese.

With this phase, which concludes at the end of the year, the government is trying to achieve a real relationship between prices for the different products, some of which were repressed during the last months of the military government, while at the same time cautiously increasing the real value of wages.

In other words, it is trying to tell Peruvians that they have been living in a consumer world that was cheaper than it should have been.

This is a difficult shock to withstand when there is a great drop in purchasing power due to the strong inflation (60 percent this year).

This is where the experts see the cause of the strikes, although they also look at the political context since municipal elections are in 2 months.

AP Shows Reticence

Popular Action, the party in power, does not control any of the major trade unions.

Moreover, there is reticence among employers with respect to fulfilling many promises, including the reinstatement of workers laid off.

The General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP) is the most powerful such group in Peru.

It is partly controlled by the Peruvian Communist Party, Muscovite line, but there are other more radical groups with a strong foothold.

With the approaching municipal elections, the left is trying to find a formula for unity that will increase the percentage of votes won in the May elections (total of 20 percent), when it was divided, while the Popular Action Party pursues its consolidation as the front-ranking party in the country.

The current challenge for the AP, in the opinion of observers, is to manage to improve the conflict-ridden labor situation.

One of the formulas being recommended by some protagonists in Peruvian public life is a tripartite pact between workers, employers and the government.

The CTP [Confederation of Workers of Peru], controlled by the APRA [American Revolutionary Popular Alliance], the second-ranking party in the country, is seeking to create a National Labor Council as an advisory organ to the four recognized trade unions.

Tripartite Commission

This council's purpose would be to establish a coherent and realistic labor policy, to make wage systems uniform throughout branches of industry and sectors, and to share responsibility for solidifying the democratic system.

Julio Cruzado, secretary general of the CTP, has said that President Belaunde was sympathetic to the proposal and next week will invite trade union confederations to a "summit conference" to analyze the labor situation.

11,464
CSO: 3010

MILLION MAN-HOURS LOST BY STRIKES

Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Over a million man-hours have been lost to date because of the 34 strikes affecting nearly 25,000 workers throughout the country. Of these, bank employees make up the majority with 18,000.

These figures were released by the Ministry of Labor in a statistical table that also revealed that the incidence with respect to the total active economic population (PEA) in the country is .44 percent and with respect to the number of wage-earners 1.12 percent.

In addition, the manufacturing industry has been affected by the largest number of strikes with 24 waged by 5,050 workers. This means a total of 322,696 man-hours lost up to 5 September.

In mining, there have been 4 strikes carried out by 917 workers, meaning 206,380 man-hours lost by that same date.

In the commerce sector, where the bank strike is going on, there are two strikes with a total of 18,401 striking workers and 392,406 man-hours lost.

In each of the sectors of energy, transport and services, there is a strike. The Ministry of Labor has indicated that the figures are still preliminary and subject to pertinent readjustments.

Great Deterioration

As an example of the deterioration produced by this paralysis of the country's economy, one has a comparative table of strikes and losses in previous years.

For example, in 1978, 1,398,387 workers went out on strike and did not receive their combined wages of 3,367,355,000 sols.

In 1975, there were 779 strikes with an average of 11.67 calendar days affected and 20,269,428 man-hours lost. Nevertheless, this represented an amount of 668,297,000 sols not paid to the striking workers.

Finally, a reference to 1979 speaks of 577 strikes with an average of 6.78 calendar days each, affecting 703,483 workers representing 35.17 percent of all workers in the country.

The number of man-hours lost was 9,352,151 and the amount of wages not paid was also high: 1,638,836,000 sols.

11,464
CSO: 3010

THREE LABOR UNIONS SET UP DEMOCRATIC TRADE UNION FRONT

PA121758 Lima EXPRESO in Spanish 3 Oct 80 p 6

[Text] The Confederation of Workers of Peru [CTP], the National Confederation of Workers [CNT] and the Federation of Workers of the Peruvian Revolution [CTRP] yesterday formed the Peruvian Democratic Trade Union Front [Frente Sindical Democratico Peruano], whose main purpose is to defend the rights of the workers and to reject acts of violence that may create social and political anarchy in this nation.

The announcement of the birth of this new national labor organization was made at a joint news conference by the secretaries general of the three unions, Julio Cruzado Zavala (CTP), Victor Sanchez Zapata (CNT) and Humberto Sanchez Villena (CTRP).

During the news conference, which was held at the Congress, Dr Romualdo Biaggi, the president of the Senate Labor and Social Security Committee, made a brief appearance to encourage the move and to congratulate the authors of the Peruvian Democratic Trade Union Front.

Senator Cruzado Zavala (Aprista Party of Peru), secretary general of the CTP, said that the labor union front covers 80 percent of the nation's workers and is composed of groups with different ideologies, but with an awareness of liberty and democracy.

After pointing out that the new labor organization differs from the General Confederation of Workers of Peru [CGTP] in that the CGTP believes in the class struggle, a concept that has already been overcome, Cruzado affirmed that the doors of the new trade union are open to all independent democratic labor institutions.

He pointed out that the formation of the front makes the establishment of the National Trade Union Council [Consejo Nacional Sindical], made up of the four labor centrals, more feasible.

Three committees were established to improve the operations of the front. They are the Labor Policy Committee, the Defense of Human Rights and Labor Freedoms Committee and the Health, Security and Social Welfare Committee.

CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

STRIKE IN UNIVERSITIES--The announcement was made at a press conference yesterday by the president of the University Federation of San Marcos, Enrique Jacoby, who emphasized that in order for the universities to meet their objectives, they would have to be granted 6 percent of the country's general budget. Jacoby also said that the University Assembly of San Marcos, which was set up on Friday, had resolved to reiterate to the government the request for an economic measure to cover the 2.36-million-sol deficit now facing San Marcos. Jacoby said that there is an imminent danger that that institution of higher education may be totally paralyzed by next month because of a lack of economic resources. The San Marcos University Assembly, in which student delegates are participating after 13 years, also resolved to ask for abolition of the decree-law creating SECIGRA-Health [expansion unknown] and the establishment of the Rural Health Service. The Assembly also unanimously agreed to appoint a commission for the administrative restructuring of the university, to set up new academic programs and to grant amnesty to three students subjected to administrative proceedings. [Text] [Lima EXPRESO in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p 6] 11,464

UNIVERSITY DEMANDS--The national universities and certain private institutions in Lima are practically paralyzed because of the indefinite strike decreed by the institutions from their various campuses beginning on 2 September. Aside from the general demand for greater allocations for the university, co-government and higher wages and salaries, there are other problems at each university. For example, the Employees Association at Garcilaso University halted work from 1000 hours yesterday morning until 1300 hours in the afternoon, demanding raises and cost-of-living adjustments. Likewise, the Employees Association at Cayetano Heredia University is making similar demands and a group from the organization occupied the campus yesterday. The National Universities, which have come out for the indefinite strike and which are abiding by it, are: San Marcos, Villarreal, the Engineering University, the Agrarian University and Callao University. The strike affecting the university system was decreed by the National Teachers Federation of the Peruvian University, the Employees Federation and the Student Federation of Peru. [Text] [Lima EL COMERCIO in Spanish 17 Sep 80 p 3] 11,464

CSO: 3010

CONDITIONS AFTER GOVERNMENT COUP SCRUTINIZED

Amsterdam ELSEVIERS WEEKBLAD in Dutch 27 Sep 80 pp 38, 39

[Article by Johan Van Den Bossche: "Suriname After the Takeover and the Coup"]

> [Text] The new Surinamese rulers want to have the old rulers who are guilty of "moral and ethical misconduct," even though these are not officially punishable, tried by tribunals (called "special trial boards"; that sounds a little friendlier). With some difficulty, you could find something to say for that, but when you reverse the burden of proof, you are going too far. For how can anyone prove that he had behaved like one of society's pearls in a moral and ethical respect? Witch hunts are always mortally dangerous; they are extra dangerous in a country where the various population groups are at one another's throats, at least verbally.

He sat jubilantly behind his steering wheel that evening of 25 February. We were riding in his taxi from one roadblock to another when the radio released the report that Sergeant Sital, who had been locked up by Arron, had been called to the Waterkant.

Scarcely half a year later, he asked during a ride how my talk with Bouterse, the army commander, went. He snorted in agreement when I quoted that Bouterse's former comrade-in-arms Sital could be shot, as far as he was concerned. He noticed my surprise and said, "Naturally, I agree with that. If Sital comes into power, my taxi will be nationalized."

Poor Johnny--like all the other Surinamese he has been set adrift. He does not understand any of it any more. But why should he, when even his own vice premier, Haakmat, and his army commander apparently do not either any more? Witness the one contradictory statement after another they themselves make at intervals of a few weeks.

One example: on Tuesday, 26 August, I had a talk lasting nearly 4 hours with Vice Premier Haakmat. When asked about the tribunals, he patiently explained to me several times that the corruption practiced under the previous regime could be divided into two kinds of deeds: cases involving criminal acts, which should, therefore, be referred to regular judges, and cases of moral and ethical misdeeds, which are not, it is true, criminal, and, therefore, will go to "special trial boards."

The wind proved to have changed 2 weeks later. The vice premier, who wanted to see my questions and answers before publication, asked me to speak of criminal acts in the case of the moral and ethical misdeeds as well, so that the vice premier, who is also the minister of justice, has evidently made a distinction between "cases that are crminal" and "cases that are crminal." Now, I am no jurist, but I really do refuse to make changes of that kind in my texts. But I still wonder perplexedly what cases will wind up with regular judges and which will not. I cannot help it, but--small comfort--neither can Haakmat, for further along in the interview, he did prop up his contention that the special trials boards should be regarded as disciplinary boards.

Burden of Proof

And the vice premier keeps on propping things up like that which he himself has already toppled long before. What can you say, for example, about the statements he made to ELSEVIERS WEEKBLAD that moral and ethical misdeeds really ought to be proven and that anyone who is actually innocent will naturally be acquitted? He did not make any corrections to that, but in other newspapers he did just as happily make it known that the burden of proof was reversed. That is, that it is not the tribunals which have to prove that the accused is guilty, but the accused who has to prove that he is innocent, which is fundamentally different from saying that the moral and ethical misdeeds must be proven. Just get up on the stand, if your name is Henk Arron and you still have not been able to write down where the 380 million guilders in additional proceeds from the bauxite went. While this same Haakmat literally said of Arron in the interview with ELSEVIERS WEEKBLAD: "I am not saying that he lined his own purse. We just want to know what happened to the money."

That last wish is quite proper, for 380 million guilders is nothing to sneeze at, but for that reason to seize on someone who will then have to prove himself "clean" because otherwise he will hang is going too far. It conflicts with any sense of justice, while no one has heard me say--with a paraphase of Haakmat's words--that Arron has not lined his own purse. It just has to be proven. And that is terribly difficult. Or, as someone from the bench told me, "At the time we examined the Arron case very closely, but we could not find anything. So we let him go. But because of that we are now being classed with the counterrevolutionaries."

Naturally, our source is someone who, according to the new rulers, belonged to the "old order," but still not to the extent that he had to be regarded as lost to the "new order." Because of the integrity he showed even to the current rulers, they asked him to take a seat on the tribunal, which he, along with others, by the way, refused. "I could not do it," he says, "even though I am fully aware of the fact that if the whole bench refuses, things will only be worse. Then there will be nothing left at all of an honorable administration of justice."

Witch Hunt

Honorable administration of justice. I think that for the time being, as far as Suriname is concerned, we can just as well forget that. The country has just now drifted by way of a diffuse cloud of suspicion into the area of a proper witch hunt. That was made clear once again a short time ago when the Surinamese were urged by their own government that it was their duty to report to the government people that they knew to be corrupt. Things can get really snug that way; the same kind of snugness that there was 6 months ago when a complaint box was put up, which was immediately crammed full of anonymous complaints against corrupt fellow citizens. That led to a real wave of arrests, the final result of which was either a severe talking to or a little shaking up.

Squabbling Neighbors

No trials, of course, for that would have paralyzed the chaotic civil service system completely in no time at all. The new rulers seem to have learned nothing at all from that case, to judge by the new appeal. While the situation is scarcely changed from about 6 months ago. Just as in any small community, one person will have something against another in Suriname, too, a neighborhood squabble, for instance. Just count out your profits.

But you can do that anyway, when one population group cannot get along with another. After my arrival at Zanderij and the ride in the taxi, I felt at home right away. The driver was a Creole, and before we had reached Paramaribo he had put practically the whole Hindu community to the sword. I did not let that bother me much, because I knew that had I been riding with a Hindu, the Creoles would have been driven into the sea during the 45-minute ride.

But in a situation like that, it is really mortally dangerous to make an appeal to the sense of civic duty of the Surinamese. Everyone has a different understanding of that. But it does not become really explosive until the independent judicial system is set aside and replaced with a "special trial board." Even though fortunately in the manning of that board they took back the first steps by asking jurists almost exclusively.

The only question is whether these judges will be up to facing the extensive indoctrination from the Surinamese themselves. For instance, the Surinamese believe in advance that Arron and his crowd have committed moral and ethical misdeeds. And that is not surprising when you see television anchorman Roy Horb (27) in the evening, answering questions from the exploiter of the Surinamese revolution, Josef Slagveer, by quoting extensively from the suspects' dossiers he had compiled.

It is true, that was done in a completely spastic account, with neither head nor tail, but it seemed to me that Surinamese present were taking it all in. That is probably because it is finally becoming clear to them that they themselves are not being held to blame for the failure of economic policy, but rather Patsy, for example.

Top Hundred

And in today's Suriname, Patsy can be anyone, so long as he was a member of the "top hundred" of the previous government. One hundred, let us hope not any more. If the rulers do go any further, and check broad layers of the populace as to their ethical and moral behavior, Suriname will undoubtedly swell up in protest. For that matter, that is not so surprising, because practically everyone is tainted. Not always by reason of 380 million guilders, naturally. Corruption was, after all, elevated to a fixed component of the Surinamese cultural pattern in past decades. The most frequently repeated sentiment there was and is: "I'll just straighten that out for you." For a consideration, naturally, but that was mutual.

I will never forget the day when my colleague Sigi Wolf--himself of Surinamese extraction--invited me out to eat at the Hotel Torarica at 6:30, while there were clear orders to close the kitchen at 6:00. We walked in just at the moment that Klaas-Jan Hendriks, of the NOS [Netherlands Broadcasting Foundation], was being turned out of the dining room because he was too late. Sigi and someone from the service staff fell into one another's arms and we were coaxed along into the kitchen, where, nota bene, we had to place our own orders. After that we sat down at a table, with Klaas-Jan with his nose pressed against the now-closed glass door as an unwanted spectator. Corruption? Well, for a Netherlander, maybe so; for a Surinamese at any rate, no.

Another example: Across from the Torarica there is a barbershop run by a woman. I was on my way to her and saw that she was putting up the "closed" sign and turning away a customer, so I turned around and retraced my steps. The telephone in my room rang 5 minutes later: it was the barber, who had noticed that I was on my way to her shop, and did I just want to step over and have my hair cut? "You can do that kind of thing, you know, here in Suriname," she continued. Corruption? Well, for a Netherlander, ... etc.

These, of course, are things that do not deserve to be punished, but they produce an atmosphere in which other people decide to take it a step further.

An example: Currently, when you are flying out of Suriname you have to be on an official list a minimum of 1 day in advance. Therefore, it is impossible to effect a decision to take a plane the same day, even though you have a valid ticket. Unless . . . you pay out 300 Surinamese guilders in hush money, as occurred to me. How they got my name on the list a few hours before departure is a complete mystery to me. But I was on it. Corruption? For a Netherlander, yes, and for a Surinamese, yes as well, as I later found out.

Another example? Chin A Sen is said to have noticed that government vehicles were being rented to private individuals, and the officials were putting the money in their own pockets. The premier/president put a drastic stop to that. (At least in part, for the autos are still being rented out, but the income from that is now being used finally to begin paying old age benefits, which had been interrupted for years, at a rate of 50 Surinamese guilders per month.) Corruption? Yes, naturally, even to the Surinamese way of thinking, for the officials involved were prosecuted.

Sewers

By degrees, then, you get to more serious matters, such as higher officials who awarded sewers to contractors who did exist, but for streets that had never existed. Corruption? Yes, certainly, even to the Surinamese way of thinking, for the trials went on while I was in Suriname. The penalties were not impressive (a few years' imprisonment and eventual restitution), but then the amounts were not either. Amongst the three of them, the officials made off with a paltry 800,000 guilders over a few months. They admitted it fully, probably because it could not be denied; the evidence was overwhelming.

But it is not always that way. Take for example Ewald Karamat Ali, then Arron's top advisor, member of the Commission for Development Aid, Netherlands Suriname (CONS), but at the same time a consultant to Reynolds Aluminum. These Americans were taking part at the time in the development of West Suriname, and at a given moment they saw no more profit in the undertaking, despite the contract that supported it, and saw a chance to be paid 6 million guilders for services already rendered. An activity the company was able to bring to a successful conclusion solely because its advisor Karamat Ali had a mighty influence on Arron. The double consultant garnered 800,000 guilders for his representation of Reynolds.

Corruption? Who can say? Formally, probably not, even though it was a heavy blow to the Surinamese' sense of justice. The more so because Karamat Ali saw his chance to leave the country the day before the latest coup of 13 August. He was released because there were no charges on which to hold him, and, furthermore, he left with the knowledge of the authorities (and, therefore, legally). On the same airplane, for that matter, as the ex-minister of public health, Mike Brahim, against whom no charges could be placed either. The new rulers regretted that departure terribly, and, therefore, attribute it to the "old order," by which they mean no one else but the Surinamese bench, which, on the basis of existing legislation, could do nothing other than release the two gentlemen.

It characterizes the fluid situation in Suriname that it immediately occurred to the "new order" to forbid the brother of Mike Brahim, Jozef, to leave the country on vacation with his family. Jozef, who, as the presiding director of the Surinamese Bank, has never been arrested, at first received permission to depart, but later permission was suddenly revoked with no statement of grounds. An application just to let his wife and children leave was not honored either, at which he decided to make an appeal to the army commander, Bouterse, by means of a letter. Before Bouterse answered, Jozef again received permission to depart, and he did, too. I can still see the surprise on Bouterse's face when I told him that, for as far as Bouterse was concerned, he should not have been allowed to depart. For that matter, Bouterse could not explain why not. Unless you consider his declaration of "Just because" to be sufficient.

Sidelines

There are dozens of other examples that could be cited. Take for instance Frank Essed, a colleague of Ewald Karamat Ali on CONS, but at the same time an avid collector of directorates and other sidelines, a hobby that up to now has not been forbidden in Suriname, even though there are very dangerous angles to it. For example: to what extent is the placing of an order by CONS with a firm one of whose members is a commissioner determined by proper interests or not? Naturally, that is not an unimportant question and, therefore, it ought very well to be asked.

But it is no reason to have a shot at someone with respect to a trial. As it is, Essed will have to prove that his interests were proper and that he did not behave in an immoral or unethical way. Apparently, the accountants' reports published by both Dutch and Surinamese bureaus are not sufficient for that, for Essed is still confined. To put that more strongly: it seems very likely that the reliability of the accountants' reports will be questioned during the trial.

A short time ago, Vice Premier Haakmat made it known that much corruption was practiced in connection with CONS; that, therefore, development monies were also involved in it, and that it, therefore, seemed probable to him that the corruption cases will not be restricted to Suriname. I think few people will have difficulty with that, but with respect to possible corrupt Netherlanders the vice premier will have to bring rather harder evidence to light than he has done thus far with respect to his own Surinamese. Or to say that a bit differently: I cannot see our Minister De Ruiter locking any accountant in a cell for a few months just to get a column of figures put in proper order.

Show

The tragic thing for the Chin A Sen government is that it knows--just as everyone else does, to be sure--that under the Arron cabinet there was enormous corruption, but what it further does not know precisely is who was actually involved in it. Out of pure powerlessness, but also primarily because there is no way to make the average Surinamese any happier, the Chin A Sen government is just piling all the punishment on the previous government. In doing so, it is conveniently forgetting that that leaves very little of a trial, but very much of a show. Everything that did not work in the past is now being blamed on about 20 suspects.

Haakmat's defense that there is no other way to try the top figures of the old regime is extremely weak and even approaches the weakness of the arguments of Bishop Zichem, which may fairly be characterized as a low point. In answer to a question from HIER EN NU whether he did not find it serious that one of the fiscal auditors (a kind of official of the Ministry of Justice) did not have any legal training at all, the bishop said: "No, I don't find that to be serious; from time to time that would work out to the advantage of the accused." Good day, bishop. Good day, sense of justice. Good day, constitutional state.

Naturally, Suriname has not been one of those for a long time, if it ever was one. For we must not forget above all that at the time of the coup on 25 February people were released who had been in prison for months without every having been arraigned. That is a sorry state of affairs which Haakmat naturally gladly uses as a smokescreen to divert attention from the fact that he himself has not been able to conjure up any watertight evidence in most cases.

But he has been able to present a number of practical arguments for those cases, the lack of manpower, for example. If Haakmat really wanted to produce watertight evidence, within the shortest time his entire apparatus of civil servants would have to be doubled at least. Or he would have to hold dozens of suspects in pretrial confinement to prevent them from eliminating evidence otherwise.

That was a choice that obviously did not please the vice premier. According to him, it was more efficient simply to reverse the burden of proof, and that is the truth, all right, but it is kind of irrelevant. For what good does it do an innocent party to disappear behind bars efficiently because he could not prove his innocence?

Is a minister of justice who institutes a system like that not indulging in a moral and ethical misdeed? I wonder.

6940
CSO: 3105

BRIEFS

SUGAR CROP DISASTER--Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, Saturday (CANA)--Trinidad and Tobago had a disastrous sugar crop this year, and the country is in no position to take advantage of current high prices on the world market, a senior industry spokesman said here. Mr. Norman Girwar, a director of the state-owned sugar company, Caroni Limited, said this year's output was a mere 107,389 tonnes. That was 12,611 tonnes less than the revised target, and a drop of more than 40,000 tons under the original 1980 target of 147,000. The sugar director, who is also chairman of the Caribbean Cane Farmers' Association remarked: "Trinidad and Tobago has been consistently obtaining a better than average price for its sugar, but will be unable to take full advantage of the rise this year, due to an extremely poor crop. The Trinidad and Tobago Central Bank's report said that the 147,000 original target was five per cent above the actual 1979 production. This year's problems included a delayed start to harvesting operations "due to late delivery of factory equipment, while subsequent technical and electrical problems further hampered production." For the first quarter of the crop, output was 38 per cent less than for the corresponding period last year, the bank said. [Text] [FL101640 Bridgetown SUNDAY ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 5 Oct 80 p 3]

CSO: 3020

LARGE CTV HOLDINGS, LEADERSHIP STRUCTURE ANALYZED

Caracas RESUMEN in Spanish 5 Oct 80 pp 12-21

[Article by Jose Suarez-Nunez: "CTV, a 450-Million-Bolivar Economic Enterprise]

> [Text] In addition to its labor union importance, CTV [Confederation of Venezuelan Workers] controls, through CORACREVI [Housing Savings and Loan Corporation], 15 industrial and service enterprises engaging in a great variety of activity, and, through the Workers Bank, 25 financial enterprises, which turn it into a power with the strength of imposing changes in the nation's economy and in deciding general elections.

On two occasions, during the 21 years that Democratic Action has been in existence, it lost presidential elections. But the chair of president of the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers has been like an AD [Democratic Action] hereditary monarchy in which no other political force has been able to sit.

The AD labor unionists have had difficulties with the communist labor union leadership, which has more experience and is better organized than any other political force. AD has split three times, and on one of those times it lost the presidential election (1968) with the separation of the followers of Luis Beltran Prieto Figueroa and Jesus Angel Paz Galarraga.

In 1968, it lost the presidential election by only 30,000 votes, but it won the labor union elections in the sixth congress by only 25 delegates.

From the first CTV congress, held on 26 December 1936, presided over by Alejandro Oropeza Castillo, until the present time, they fought against storm clouds of dictatorship and the underground. In a 20-year period (between 1936 and 1980 [sic; probably should read 1958]), the organized workers were in limbo, but in the first democratic opening, the AD labor union members did not lose any time and took over the building on the corner of Tienda Honda.

That is known history. What is unknown is that the present CVT is, perhaps, the labor union organization with the most powerful assets in the world. Its counterpart, the business organization FEDECAMARAS [Association of Chambers of Commerce and Industry], which supposedly harbors within it the highest level of the Venezuelan top-level middle class and oligarchy, has not even finished paying for its dark gray building in El Bosque, 100 meters from the Country Club, the symbol of Venezuelan wealth, and it is in perplexity with regard to coping with its most elementary operating requirements.

Meanwhile, the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers owns banks, finance companies, shipping companies, laundries, cigarette-lighter factories, automobile parts, spare parts, prefabricate housing, construction companies, city improvements and dozens of private trading companies.

Some of its founders have died and other have been growing old in labor union posts, as deputies and as senators, while the replacement generation is awaiting its opportunity. The political debate, which is hard and dirty at times, and more heated than the labor union debate, describes them as "conservatives" and "bureaucrats."

But the top labor union leadership has never been marked with the fault of corruption.

The seven CTV presidents have been from AD and the secretaries general (with the exception of the sixth and seventh congress, won by Social Christian Rafael Leon Leon), were members of AD. They have always had senators and deputies who let their weight be felt in Venezuelan politics and in the CEN [National Executive Committee] of AD. The times when the oil labor union demand was for 1 bolivar wage increase and 1 bolivar for housing in 1936, and petitions in 1944 demanding water to take baths in the oil fields have passed. Today's CTV speaks another language. The 1980 watchwords are for worker comanagement in the administration of enterprises and greater participation in the country's vital decisions.

Preparations for the eighth CTV congress, to be held in Porlamar, in October 1980, are going along at full speed. The labor union climate is beginning to heat up between AD members and members of COPEI [Social Christian Party]. Some political movements have decreased their potentiality, like the MEP [People's Electoral Movement] and the URD [Democratic Republican Union]. Other labor union organizations, like COPEI, are increasing their followers and the leftists are emerging -- the MAS]Movement for Socialism], MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left], Causa R [expansion unknown], EPA [expansion unknown] and others. In the fifth congress, in 1964, COPEI had 107 delegates and 14.4 percent of the labor union percentage. In the seventh congress, it obtained 215 delegates and increased to 22 percent. The COPEI members who put the AD members in second place in the presidential and municipal elections, would like to smell the powder of the labor union victory that is approaching, but they cannot be the first force right now.

No signs are seen of a labor union pact between AD and COPEI. The moderate CTV of the last 5 years, which met every month in Miraflores with FEDECAMARAS, has taken on more aggressive watchwords. It went out into the street last year, in a timely action, and put pressure on the government to sign a general wage increase. To the annoyance of Luis Herrera, who so stated, they achieved their objective. The orthodox practice of wage increases by means of collective bargaining was left to one side.

The labor union bureau of AD is carrying out a pragmatic policy. They go around to every labor union in the country and cancel old grievances. Now they are supporting Isaac Olivera in the teachers union. It is proper, because the time has come to add up, because sight is set on the eighth CTV congress, which will be held in the Hotel Concorde in Porlamar, Margarita, from 8 to 12 October.

The organizers of the eighth congress have anticipated an attendance of approximately 1,500 delegates. Lodging will be needed for a minimum of 2,000 persons, because special guests from this country and from abroad, advisers, top-level leaders, political parties will be added. About 30 special guests from the United States, Latin American and European labor union movement are expected to visit the congress. Because the Hotel Concorde has room for only 900 persons, reservations have been made in the Bella Vista, Le Park, For You, Puerto Esmeraldo, Bahia del Morro, Caribbean and Farallon hotels.

It is estimated that the labor unionists will spend some 2.2 million bolivarse on lodging and food, on Margarita Island, during the 5 days that the eighth congress lasts, to be paid for individually by the national and regional labor unions and federations. On lodging alone, it is estimated that each delegate will spend some 1,100 bolivars in the 5 days, not including meals, transportation and other unforseen expenses that may occur. Sixty-eight CTV organizations, represented in the national and regional federations (44 national and 24 regional) will attend. AD labor union bureau sources say that CTV has 1.5 million members. COPEI sources state that CTV has only 800,000 members.

AD sources expect an attendance of 1,300 to 1,400 delegates and this figure might reach 1,500. Of that number, they estimate that the AD labor union bureau will obtain from 800 to 900 delegates and COPEI will obtain from 300 to 315 delegates. MEP will have 160 delegates. The rest will be distributed between MAS, MORENA [National Revolutionary Movement], MIR, URD, PCV [Communist Party of Venezuela] and independents.

The AD labor union bureau assures that it will obtain 9 posts on the Executive Committee, COPEI 3 posts, 2 for MEP and 1 post for the leftists. The social Christian labor union section announces a participation of 1,500 delegates approximately, with the objections to 100 delegates rejected from the Farmworker Federation and 13 from the Education Workers Union. They estimate that they will obtain from 420 to 460 delegates, or 30 percent of the total number of delegates. The following is said to be the position predicted by COPEI: AD, 8 posts on the Executive Committee; COPEI, 4 posts; MEP, 1 post; MORENA, 1 post and the leftists 1 post.

As of December 1979, the Venezuelan labor force amounted to 4,350,885 workers, of whom 4,106,239 were employed. This reveals that unemployment, according to Ministry of Labor figures, was 5.6 percent (244,646 workers). CTV has other figures and states that the country's labor force is 4.2 million workers and that 450,000 are unemployed (10.7 percent), primarily in the construction industry, the textile industry and public administration. The Gaither investigation came up with other figures and states that unemployment, in the Caracas area, now amounts to 17 percent, in its majority young and unskilled workers. According to official figures, Venezuela's population is 13,616,195 inhabitants. It can be estimated unofficially that the total population, including persons without identification, amounts to 15 million. This figure reveals that the labor force is 32 percent of the population. There are other important figures. It is estimated that there are 3,541,561 persons represented by students, housewives, those incapacitated for work and old persons. There is a large population of 5,723,749 persons under 15 years old who do not work for reasons of age. Nevertheless, other surveys, statistics and analyses lead us to discover that there are from 350,000 to 500,000 young persons between 10 and 14 years old who are a labor force, almost clandestine, neither organized nor registered by labor unions. They are the ones who sell hot dogs, who are bootblacks, car-washers and small workers who bag in supermarkets and stores.

As of 31 August 1979, there were 1.1 million workers nationwide, covered by collective agreement. This means that only 27 percent of Venezuelan workers are covered under those labor conditions. Every year, collective agreements are renewed and the following are the figures:

Year	Agreements	Workers
1979	561	98,811
1980	1,460	198,157
1981	736	479,393
1982	16	2,219
1983	1	22

In 1980, 580 collective agreements were signed covering 220,702 workers. The collective agreement procedure means wage increases, life insurance, hospitalization, social services, vacations and some banks provide an additional month by regulation. This form of collective agreement strengthens labor unionism. The daily minimum wage is 30 bolivars.

Labor unions and federations receive dues from the workers, Where there are collective agreements, these dues are deducted automatically. Sometimes there are special contributions by the central, state and municipal governments. The Venezuelan state contributed annual subsidies to the worker movement amounting to 16,648,000 bolivars last year. The following is the distribution:

	Bolivars
Confederation of Venezuelan Workers	2,240,000
CODESA [Committee of Autonomous Unions]	1,000,000
United Confederation of Venezuelan Workers	100,000
Federation of Public Employees	6,200,000
Farmworkers Federation	2,540,000
Farmworkers Confederation	500,000
Graphic Arts Federation	900,000
Port Workers Federation	470,000
Fishing Federation	216,000
FETRA-Hidrocarburos [Petroleum Workers Federation]	90.000
Unified Federation of Federal District Workers	600,000
Transportation Federation	300,000
FEDE-Monagas [Monagas Student Federation]	350,000

The Venezuelan labor union movement demanded, as absolute essential points, the wage and vacation issue, work tools, hygiene and industrial security. With the practice of collective agreements, a series of additional clauses have been annexed: scholarships, marriage and children subsidies and a wide range of medical-hospital, care and maternity benefits of the IVSS [Venezuelan Social Security Institute].

In countries like the United States and Europe, the vital issue is greater economic income and additional measures. There are no vacation clauses, as in Venezuela where a large number of enterprises grant their workers over 2 months vacations, although it is uniform for 90 percent of them to grant 1 month vacation with pay. The double pay clause for unjustified discharge is not applicable in almost any other country. In the United States, for example, a worker is discharged and he has no social services. Unemployment protection is the state's responsibility through Welfare. He is granted 22 weeks of his pay, paid weekly and, at the end of this period, the state makes no more payments.

The majority of the CTV has never accepted the insurrectional line. This firm attitude led them to expel the communists from the CTV when they were about to have labor union control. In this, they had the unrestricted support of President Betancourt. There was a criterion in the first years of the 1960's for making arrangements to incorporate every political party. In the opinion of Francisco Olivo, the proper orientation was for political parties to enter labor unions and struggle there.

CTV has gone through various stages. Its structures have continued to modernize. Augusto Malave Villalva, Jose Gonzalez Navarro, Francisco Olivo, Jose Vargas, Juan Herrera, Perez Salinas, Penalver had organizational and uniting responsibilities. The first congress had a unified spirit. The dictatorship of Marcos Perez Jimenez had just been overthrown and Jose Gonzalez Navarro had the task of brining labor unionists together and of expelling the communists. The first stage was very hard for the labor union movement.

Ismario Gonzalez, always elected in the Health Federation, is one of the leaders of the replacement generation.

The role of architect of the new CTV fell to Jose Vargas, with the economic resources available to it, and to set up a technical team able to discuss with managers, businessmen and the government, in a technical, economic language. It is now a different CTV that probably aims at not continuing to ask for wage increases and at avoiding strikes as far as possible, in order to move toward worker comanagement.

The CTV would like to be independent of governments and businessmen. It could achieve this, but when Democratic Action is in office, it cannot be independent, it cannot avoid it. The explanation offered by members of the AD labor union bureau is that AD has been the best government for the workers.

An important aspect of that point of view is that the CTV members regard their position as a result of the action taken by C.A. Perez. In the previous government administration, they were consulted. The highest levels refuse to agree that during the AD governments they did not make street mobilizations or great protests. They allege that this was owing to the attitude of President Herrera's government, that if it had consulted them, liberalization of prices might have been solved at the negotiation table.

President Herrera did not attend the meeting of FEDECAMARAS in Maracaibo and did not answer the Maracaibo Letter, the platform of the highest business sector. The CTV members are preparing the Porlamar Letter and they hope that President Herrera will concur.

The workers' document, the Porlamar Letter, will propose a new kind of labor participation in economic activity. "With greater responsibility, effectiveness and jurisdiction in the destiny of companies and greater participation in their economic results." The labor unionists will point out, in the Porlamar Letter, the need for greater austerity in spending, administrative rationalization, sincerity in costs, wages and earnings of businessmen.

"They will require a strong collective stand against corruption, speculation, negligence and laxity that are undermining the foundation of the democratic system and the country's future well-being. A complete tax reform and a reform of the body of laws governing economic activity and in particular the relations between capital and labor. They will maintain that all this is possible within institutional and constitutional channels and no change is required in the country's economic and social structure. Control of economic activity, so that capitalism may not concentrate the benefits of social wealth in a few hands."

Andres Hernandez Vazquez, eminent leader of the founding generation, always CTV treasurer.

Francisco Olivo, president of CTV in the past. He did not agree to ideological pacts. He believed that political parties and former guerrilla fighters should first join the labor unions and then fight there.

A Goal: Joint Management

The CTV has set its sight on the eighth congress in Porlamar, in order to assert its most highly desired conquest: comanagement. Venezuela has 830,000 public employees and the state, in addition to 56 autonomous institutes, has capital in some 300 enterprises all over Venezuela.

The country's economy can be socialized with a presidential decree, with one stroke of the pen. With the exception of various strategic areas, like oil, iron, and in other areas, like electricity, public services, not by intention but rather to avoid unemployment, the state has been becoming a bureaucratic giant in the last 20 years. With comanagement, the CTV would be as important as the government.

The CTV is moving from the old building on Tienda Honda Street, which it was asked to vacate over 3 years ago. It has bought three floors in the Protexo Building, on Urdaneta Avenue, and the new image of CTV is there. Plans have also been completed for building its permanent headquarters, an imposing building in Los Caobos, at a cost of 84 million bolivars. The government has made a contribution of 30 million and the rest will be supplied by the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers.

Is the CTV so powerful that it whets so many appetites? Why do the political parties want to control it? Why do businessmen view it with concern, in spite of its moderate behavior?

From 1936 to 1958, the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers was underground longer than it was official. Dictatorships, exiles hardened its most prominent leaders. The stage between 1959 and 1968 represented control by labor union power, almost with an absolute majority, but, starting in 1968, a different stage began, not absolutely of a labor union nature, when they lost political power.

Aside from labor union activity, a discreet business activity started. In the course of 15 years, it became a huge economic empire enabling the CTV of the 1980's to face up to governments and businessmen, regardless of whether AD is in office or in the opposition. The economic upsurge began when, on 2 September 1965, in the assembly hall of the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers, CTV established for itself a nonprofit civil corporation, the Housing Savings and Loan Corporation-CTV (CORACREVI), and the establishment document was signed by Jose Gonzalez Navarro, Jose Tovar, Augusto Malave Villalba, Juan Herrera, Carlos Pinerua and other important Venezuelan labor union leaders.

The primary objective was to promote construction of comfortable housing for workers. It was established for an indefinite time, with a paid capital of 1,655,000 bolivars. Originally, 11 national federations participated in it. Later, some federations requested their separation. When the statutes were modified later, the civil association had a capital of 35 million bolivars, headed by a contribution of 10 million bolivars by CTV and followed in order of contributions by the Federations of the Construction Industry, Health, Graphic Arts, Cigarette Makers, Transportation, Fishing, INOS [National Institute of Sanitation Works], Telecommunications, public and education employees and the United Federal District Federation.

In the course of 15 years, CORACREVI gained control of 15 enterprises with a great variety of activity, with a capital of over 150 million bolivars, generating jobs and economic power in activities of construction, industries, Jose Gonzalez Navarro, one of the important founders of CTV. He was president of the CTV three times. A very well-balanced leader.

The most sophisticated upsurge occurred when Augusto Malave Villalva registered the Workers Bank of Venezuela, 3 years later, on 14 March 1968. The first assembly of the Workers Bank was held on 13 January 1968, in the theater of the El Paraiso Labor Union House. It is one of the most important events in the Venezuelan labor movement and it was attended by the most important labor union leaders to offer their support and solidarity. The obsession of Augusto Malave Villalva and other labor union leaders who had lived in exile in Cuba, Mexico, Costa Rica, Chile, Colombia and other countries was to have their funds for the labor union struggle.

The subscribed capital of BTV [Workers Bank of Venezuela] was 20 million bolivars and on 14 March 1968, by collecting funds from federations and unions, the contribution amounted to 4,975,230 bolivars, which made it possible to pay for more than 20 percent of the shares issued.

An international loan from the powerful United States labor union organization the American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL-CIO), amounting to 27 million bolivars in favor of CORACREVI, opened the way. The dividends produced by CORACREVI, the savings of federations and unions, made it possible to buy shares to establish BTV.

Simultaneously, President Raul Leoni reformed the Venezuelan Social Security Institute and deposited its current accounts in the Workers Bank, in addition to long-term deposits. Thus, the holding company was created that was to generate dozens of additional enterprises.

At present, BTV has 4 billion bolivars in deposits, a substantial part of which are deposits from autonomous insitutes and state enterprises. The BTV has emerged as the banking organization that has developed most housing plans of social benefit. Its paid capital and reserves amount to 265 million.

A great expansion leap forward occurred with the return of Democratic Action to power, in 1973, when the BTV had 5 years of banking experience and was more sophisticated. It established BANTRAB [Workers Bank] Investments, which it registered on 27 September 1973, with a capital of 5 million bolivars, for the purpose of buying, selling and managing real estate.

Three years later, BANTRAB Investments registered three more subsidiary companies to support development of the mother enterprise. BANTRAB Promotions was registered on 30 March 1976, with a capital of 500,000 bolivars, for the purpose of buying, selling and promoting housing. BANTRAB Management Company was registered on 30 March 1976 with a capital of 500,000 bolivars, for the purpose of managing real estate. BANTRAB Computer Company was registered on 26 April 1976 with a capital of 5 million bolivars, for the purpose of operating the computer business.

In a period of time from 20 September 1977 to 18 October 1977 (28 days), BANTRAB Investments registered 20 companies (from BANTRAB One to BANTRAB Twenty), each with a capital of 100,000 bolivars, whose purpose was to be the purchase, sale, management and development of personal property and real estate. The objective is housing development on land around the Caracas subway stations. BANTRAB Investments was associated in these activities with contractor Enrique Delfino for construction of these programs.

Another important enterprise registered on 5 February 1974 was the Petroleum Financing Corporation (COFIPECA), with a capital of 10 million bolivars, for the purpose of financing. Its principal contribution of 9,493,000 bolivars was received from the FEDEPETROL [Petroleum Workers Federation] Savings and Loan Corporation (CACREF). Other smaller contributions were made by labor union leaders. COFIPECA has a paid capital of 20 million bolivars, after its capital increase, but its purchase of 12 million bolivars in shares of PRO-Acero, by that time an unprofitable company and also without any production, was criticized from a stock market point of view. Originally, it was thought that COFIPECA would be oriented toward loans and financing to smaller companies in small and medium-sized industry and to other proletarian sectors most urgently innseed.

Fifteen years after the CTV leaders launched out into business activity, they have succeeded in amassing for the labor union organization an economic empire that exceeded 450 million bolivars on the books. The Workers Bank of Venezuela (BTV) has a paid capital and reserves of 265 million bolivars. Its BANTRAB subsidiaries have total assets of 10 million bolivars. The COFIPECA finance company has a capital of 20 million bolivars.

Jose Vargas, the current president of CTV, is responsible for the new image. He is involved in the opposition and in modernization of the labor union organization. He has been an important moderator within the AD Party between the followers of Betancourt and the followers of Carlos Andres [Perez] with unquestionable skill.

Humberto Hernandez, a senator and veteran leader of the founding generation of the CTV and its most important enterprises. He controls the Transportation Federation absolutely.

Perez Salinas is one of the founders of CTV and was its president once. He is an eminent leader, now retired from active labor union activity.

Pedro Brito, impetuous labor union leader of the replacement generation.

The CTV has a labor union empire of 1.5 million members, according to figures of the labor union bureau of AD, and a capitalist empire of 450 million bolivars. We regard it to be the most powerful in the world. In other countries, labor union confederations have had as their objective investment in printing houses and mass media, in order to be able to carry their labor union message. So interesting a phenomenon has occurred in no other country. On reading legal documents, it appears curious when "labor union member and banker" is recorded as the profession of some CTV leaders.

Does the CTV or the labor union bureau of AD have real influence to cope with the new proletariat, more aggressive, more class conscious and with many of its leaders who carried a rifle during the armed struggle and who answer today to political organizations with no party commitments?

It was seen recently in Aragua that CTV was unable to stop the textile strike. In the area of iron, the Causa R butchers control the most important iron and steel union (6,000 members), the footwear industry and the SIVENSA [expansion unknown] iron and steel industry, unions always controlled by AD, has gone into other hands and thus other worker organizations.

Adversaries of the AD labor union bureau state that the top leadership is out of phase. Is it right for the top CTV leadership, the founding veterans, to have created an economic empire? Yes. But insofar as that economic power is increasing, the figures of the worker congresses are weakening their power and are becoming obliged to share a portion of the labor union power with other political movements.

The large labor union [sic; probably should read wage] increases received by the propletariat were not bargained in the labor union class battle. The first one was thanks to the presidential decree in the first months of the C.A. Perez government administration. The second one, during the administration of Luis Herrera Campins, in a demonstration in which leaders of the Venezuelan left participated. This means that CTV has lost its great bargaining victory, offer and counteroffer aired by means of collective agreements.

The conquests achieved were by means of negotiation or political pressure. Or is it that the present labor union leadership cannot control the masses? Without doubt, labor union power, together with economic power, creates the tripod of political power in the AD labor union bureau and the worker movement is subject, to a considerable extent, to its strategies of a political party. Dagoberto Gonzalez defines the AD labor union bureau, "which takes the workers out into the street when it is not in power." Alfredo Maneiro states that "the CTV controls the workers to the point when the water becomes turbulent in times of peace." Some labor union leaders have stated to RESUMEN in this long survey that if there were a law that would make it constitutionally mandatory to call direct elections on fixed dates, labor union power would pass into other hands, but that there are mechanisms and obstacles that make it difficult to upset the labor union base of leaders now out of phase in Venezuela's 1980 situation.

Manuel Penalver is the number two man in CTV. The liaison between the AD labor union bureau and CTV. He is a respected leader within the labor union movement, but is more devoted to his party, AD.

Juan Herrera has absolute command in the Construction Industry Federation. He is one of the founders, very discreet, who, together with Augusto Malave Villalba, was a pioneer in establishing CORACREVI, from which they both promoted a minimum of 15 more commercial enterprises.

Meanwhile, through CORACREVI, CTV controls a 15-enterprise holding company with a capital of 150 million bolivars. It controls 25 companies, with a capital of 250 million bolivars, through the Workers Bank of Venezuela. The COPIPECA enterprise, the petroleum financing company, has a capital of 50 million bolivars. Altogether the 42 enterprises round out an economic figure of 450 million bolivars.

Those circumstances make the CTV a labor union and economic power leading to political power that cannot be disregarded in any election process.

Enterprises With Labor Union Power

CORAMATIC CA [Corporation]. This is a company registered on 23 March 1971 by German Manso Gonzalez, with a capital of 100,000 bolivars. Its purpose is to operate a dyeing and laundry business. Augusto Malave Villalba subscribed shares amounting to 99,000 bolivars in the name of CORACREVI, making a contribution of 46,000 bolivars in washing, drying, heating equipment. It shows Eleazar Pinto as its president.

La Candelaria Industrial Park CA. It was registered on 28 August 1974, with a capital of 1 million bolivars in shares subscribed and paid for. Origianlly, Ignacio Andrade Arcaya, Tony A. Lovera, T. E. Carrillo Batalla and Andres Galdo. By 8 February 1980, the board of directors was changed and the following appeared: Sergio Leon Morales, chairman; Juan Herrera, president of CORACREVI and Pedro Jose Lander, director of PUBREL [expansion unknown] CA.

Margarita Tourism CA. It was registered on 1 September 1975, with a capital of 2,625,000 [bolivars], for the purpose of operating a passenger transportation business by sea. It was established by the Kenny Antonio Delgado Matos Company, which subscribed shares amounting to 1.05 million bolivars and paid shares amounting to 12,000 bolivars. In the name of CORACREVI, Eleazar Pinto subscribed shares amounting to 1,575,000 bolivars and paid for them in their entirety. By means of a check, CORACREVI made a bank transfer amounting to 1,575,000 bolivars ($366,280) to the Chase Manhattan Bank of New York, payable to Hover Marine Corporation, as initial payment for the purchase of three motor launches for passenger transportation. On 21 October 1976, the company's capital was increased to 8,745,000 bolivars and CORACREVI subscribed shares worth 8,573,000 and Kenny Delgado Matos subscribed shares amounting to 120,000 bolivars.

Quince-Cuarenta [Fifteen-Forty] Housing CA (VIQUICUA). It was registered on 10 December 1976, with a capital of 100,000 bolivars. The purpose of the company is to engage in the construction of real estate developments and subdivisions. Eleazar Pinto signed for CORACREVI and acquired shares worth 99,000 bolivars. Juan Herrera acquired one 1,000-bolivar share in his name.

Venezuelan Cigarette Lighters CA (YESVENCA). It was registered on 29 September 1977, with a capital of 2.24 million bolivars, for the purpose of manufacturing cigarette lighters. Alfonso Ferretti, as general manager, acquired B shares amounting to 672,000 bolivars and Juan Herrera acquired A shares worth 1,568,000 bolivars as a representative of CORACREVI. The books reveal 5,501,045.74 bolivars as its balance of assets and liabilities.

El Encantado Residential Park CA. It was registered on 5 December 1977, with a capital of 50 million bolivars. The company's purpose is to develop and subdivide the housing complex in El Carpintero, Petare. Juan Herrera acquired shares amounting to 25 million bolivars for CORACREVI and Eleazar Pinto acquired shares amounting to 25 million bolivars for BANTRAB Investments. CORACREVI contributed parcels of land that it owned in La Suiza Gardens for construction of the housing complex in El Carpintero.

Greaterol CA. It was registered on 17 January 1978, with a capital of 250,000 bolivars. The company's purpose is to engage in advertising, radio and television programs and motion pictures, market planning and other activitives associated with advertising. The presidency was taken over by Hermes de Jesus Graterol Santander who acquired shares worth 75,000 bolivars. CORACREVI acquired 100,000 bolivars in shares and BANTRAB 75,000 bolivars. Finally, the capital was increased by 1.35 million bolivars. CORACREVI bought shares amounting to 540,000 bolivars. BANTRAB Investments bought 405,000 bolivars in shares and Graterol acquired 405,000 bolivars in shares. The total assets and liabilities shown by the company as of 31 December 1979 are 15,663,288.25 [bolivars], with accounts receivable amounting to 14,500,454.25 [bolivars].

Parcela del Caribe [Caribbean Development] CA. It was registered on 7 March 1978, with a capital of 3,472,000 bolivars, for the purpose of leasing real estate intended for ships for their arrival, anchoring, departure, maintenance. Juan Herrera contributed in representation of CORACREVI a parcel of land that it owned located in the El Morro tourist complex, Sotillo District, Anzoategui State.

Venezuela Ocean Freight Corporation CA (COMARVENCA). It was registered on 7 March 1978, with a capital of 3.66 million bolivars, for the purpose of loading and unloading ships anchored in open sea, transportation of goods to docks, port warehouses. Juan Herrera acquired shares worth 3,659,000 bolivars on behalf of CORACREVI and one 1,000-bolivar share in his own name. The CORACREVI contribution for establishment of the company consists of two ferryboats worth 3.66 million bolivars.

Torre Sur-Veinticinco [South Tower-25] CA. It was registered on 8 March 1978, with a capital of 3.69 million bolivars. The purpose of the company is to prepare studies, plans, construction, rental and sale of housing, subdivision and leasing. Juan Herrera, as president of CORACREVI, acquired shares amounting to 3,689,000 bolivars and one 1,000-bolivar share in his own name. CORACREVI contributed a parcel of land located in Candelaria Parish with an area of 2,626.67 square meters.

CORPOBAN SA. It was registered on 16 June 1978, with a capital of 30 million bolivars. The company's purpose is the purchase, sale, promotion, exchange of personal property and real estate, construction of housing, real estate developments, subdivisions and real estate management. As president of CORACREVI, Juan Herrera acquired shares worth 15 million bolivars and Eleazar Pinto, as president of BANTRAB Investments, acquired shares worth 15 million bolivars. CORACREVI contributed 23.33 percent of the industrial unit that it owned and that engaged in the production of 10 dwellings a day. The French SUPAE firm holds the patent for them. The total price of the plant is 38,800,707.72 [bolivars].

Complete Recreation SA (RECREINTESA). It was registered on 15 September 1978, with a capital of 2.5 million bolivars, for the purpose of promoting, developing, planning, building and managing tourist, recreation and vacation facilities. Lino Morales acquired shares worth 500,000 bolivars on behalf of INCRET [Workers Training and Recreation Institute]. The Workers Bank acquired shares worth 1 million bolivars and CORACREVI acquired shares worth 1 million bolivars. INCRET's contribution was a piece of real estate located in the Barlovento development, Rio Chico, Miranda State, in the Guaiqueri Recreational Colony, and 16 dwellings in process of construction.

Housing Management CA (ADVIENCA). It was registered on 18 August 1978, with a capital of 500,000 bolivars. Its purpose is to engage in personal property and real estate transactions, real estate development, brokerage, subdivision and loans. Juan Herrera, as president of CORACREVI, acquired shares worth 100,000 bolivars. Eleazar Pinto, representing BANTRAB Investments, acquired 500,000 bolivars in shares and he also acquired shares worth 350,000 bolivars as a representative of Valle Arriba de Charallave.

Machinebuilding and Motor Parts (COMAPASA). It was registered with a capital of 1.8 million bolivars, for the purpose of engaging in building special electromechanical machinery, design, repair, installation, sale and production of motor parts, dies, rebuilding heavy machinery.

As president of CORACREVI, Juan Herrera bought shares worth 1,799,000 [bolivars] and personally he acquired one 1,000-bolivar share. CORACREVI's contribution is a huge inventory of almost 100 machinery and equipment items like lathes, milling machines, grinders, platforms, drills, reamers, hydraulic presses, electric ovens and compressors.

La Tumerena Developments CA. It was registered on 29 November 1978, with a capital of 53 million bolivars. The company's purpose is to engage in development of a plot of land in the Pitahaya sector, Charallave Municipality, formerly El Zamuro Ranch, Urdaneta District, for subdivision into housing area of social interest, plans, studies and everything associated with building. Juan Herrera, as president of CORACREVI, acquired shares worth 52,999,000 bolivars and one 1,000-bolivar share for himself. The contribution by CORACREVI is three plots of land consisting of 269 hectares, today called La Tumerena and formerly El Zamuro.

10,042
CSO: 3010

CARLOS ANDRES PEREZ' POLITICAL PAST, FUTURE DISCUSSED

Caracas BOHEMIA in Spanish 29 Sep-5 Oct 80 pp 6-9

> [Text] Paradoxically turned by his opponents into the "sacred monster" of Venezuelan politics, Carlos Andres Perez is, at present, one of the leaders who causes most concern over all that he does and all that he might do.
>
> Firmly established in a leadership that no one disputes now, the prospects of the former president of the Republic give rise to constant analysis by political observers.
>
> Where is CAP [Carlos Andres Perez] headed? Has he changed his ideological orientation? Or, on the contrary, will he withdraw from Venezuela's political scene?

The mist brought in by the gentle breeze from the mountains dissipates with lazy slowness on the streets of Rubio, a quiet little village in Tachira State, inhabited by small businessmen, craftsmen and farmers. Antonio Perez and his wife, Julia Rodriguez de Perez, raised their 12 children on La Argentina, a modest coffee plantation, in the shade of that strange combination of the strong character of a patriarch and the infinite tenderness of the matriarch, so characteristic of the mountain people. The times were those in which Juan Vicente Gomez and his executioners, scattered all over the country, governed Venezuela with an iron hand. There was talk of democracy in the Perez-Rodriguez house, in the whisper of family conversation and the evening chats with friends.

The next to the youngest child, Carlos Andres, made contact, when scarcely 15 years old, with Leonardo Ruiz Pineda, who incorporated him in the political activism of the National Democratic Party (PDN), embryo of what we knew later as Democratic Action. In 1937, young Carlos Andres Perez became president of the Venezuelan Students Federation in Rubio. Two years later, spurred on by an eagerness to learn, he decided to move to Caracas, where he continued his senior high school studies.

Carlos Andres Perez had barely settled in the capital of the Republic, when he joined a PDN cell in San Agustin. Romulo Betancourt, who was granted amnesty by Gen Eleazar Lopez Contreras, returned from Chile and a group of young PDN members went to call on him. The young politican from Rubio was among them. Romulo observed him silently. He thought that this lad from the Andes, with sure expression, firm word, deep convictions, could become one of the great leaders in the cause promoted and stimulated by him.

In 1941, when Democratic Action was founded, Carlos Andres Perez was at the side of Romulo Betancourt. Later he was to go to San Cristobal, together with Leonardo Ruiz Pineda and Cesar Morales Carrero, to establish the party in Tachira State. He was appointed district secretary, but he was to remain anonymous, because he was still a minor. Later, he again returned to San Agustin, where he became a full-fledged member of the Youth Commando of Democratic Action and organized the establishment of the famous Youth Association of Venezuela (AJV), an organization that was to serve as an incubator in the training of many of the great future leaders of AD [Democratic Action].

When Romulo Betancourt became president of Venezuela, on 18 October 1945, CAP was at his side as private secretary. Later, he was appointed secretary of the Council of Ministers, a post that he gave up to work in the election campaign that brought Romulo Gallegos into the presidency of the Republic. Thus, he became secretary general of AD in Tachira State and was elected deputy to the National Congress from that state.

On 24 November 1948, when President Gallegos was deposed by the military coup that was to enthrone Marcos Perez Jimenez in power, subsequently, for 10 long years, Carlos Andres Perez was in Maracay, where he became part of the government being set up in the capital of Aragua State. This effort was to be of no avail, because the move toward a long night of obscurantism and violent suppression of the victories achieved by democracy during those scant 3 years of work, after the absolute negation of the Gomez regime.

Exile

Carlos Andres Perez went to Havana as a political exile, where he stayed until the fall of Prio Socarras. Long hours of conversation, consultation and studies came alongside Romulo Betancourt and other Democratic Action leaders. CAP worker enthsiastically on an AD commando in exile. In 1952, he moved to Costa Rica, where he was to stay for 6 years. He organized an AD resistance movement and engaged in journalism as coeditor of the daily newspaper LA REPUBLICA. Political activism did not diminish and the old dream of returning to his native land began to take shape gradually more firmly. Somewhere between Venezuela and Trinidad, he made contact with the representative of the underground movement that AD maintained in our country. Perez Jimenez was tottering. The hard years of ostracism and economic penalties seemed to reaching their end. Carlos Andres Perez had become hardened in the struggle and had become strengthened in politial wisdom and in his democratic convictions.

Return

The light of freedom spread timidly over the country with the dawn of 23 January 1958. The "Sacred Cow" took flight with a robust passenger who had been very careful to place on board the aircraft his voluminous baggage of suitcases full of dollars and negotiable securities. The dictatorship had fallen. On that same day, an aircraft brought Carlos Andres Perez from Costa Rica, but it was not allowed to land at Maiquetia and he had to return to Curacao, where he stayed until the next day, when he finally set foot again on Venezuelan soil. Behind him were 10 long years of struggles, suffering and austerity. CAP immediately devoted himself to organizing the reception that the Venezuelan people were to give to the founder of Democratic Action, Romulo Betnacourt.

Later, Carlos Andres Perez went on to Tachira, where he was appointed secretary general of Democratic Action and he immediately devoted himself to the election campaign that brought Romulo Betancourt into the presidency of the Republic. Again elected deputy to the National Congress from Tachira State, CAP returned to Caracas and Betancourt appointed him director general of the Ministry of Domestic Affairs, headed by Dr Luis August Dubuc. From that office, first as director general and later as minister (1961) he was to wage one of the greatest tactical and strategic battles against leftist subsersion that was threatening the Betancourt regime. For that reason, when he returned to Parliament in 1963, the communists attempted to block his admission to the Chamber of Deputies in a famous incident recorded by the nation's political history, but CAP held firm and finally succeeded with calm courage in taking his seat.

Again deputy from his native state, after the election that again favored Democratic Action and put the now deceased Dr Raul Leoni in the presidency of the Republic, CAP assumed the post of national secretary general of Democratic Action, in which he was to remain for 10 consecutive years, until 1973, when he himself was elected president of the Republic.

Nevertheless, it was not easy for him to become president of the Republic. It was the period of the COPEI [Social Christian Party] government, headed by Dr Rafael Caldera, and the social Christians made unheard of efforts to stay in power. Carlos Andres Perez conducted an unprecedented campaign. He traveled day and night all over the country. He popularized the slogan of "that man indeed travels." He promised a strong government, a "democracy with energy," and he did not rest a minute. His message, his vitality, his increasing leadership captivated the masses. He became president with the most enormous percentage of votes received so far by any democratic candidate.

Democracy With Energy

As president, Carlos Andres Perez began to shake up the country. He put in exhausting days of work, including Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. One Sunday, he would meet with industrialists. Another, with labor unionists. Another, with teachers. Another, with governors. He did not rest. His basic concern was focused on agriculture, livestock-raising and conservationism. He instrumented measures that stimulated Venezuela's economy to an unprecedented state of vigor, within a bold, visionary conception that was to be criticized subsequently by his opponents. He dictated decrees that the opposition described as socialist, but that undoubtedly benefited large sectors of the population. So much so, that there still are those who state that he governed backwards, because if he had issued them in his last 2 years of government, Democratic Action would have won the election again.

In the political field, the situation was different, because those who saw him -- when he became president -- as the submissive, obedient disciple of Romulo Betancourt were surprised by his independence and freedom of action, not only with regard to his teacher and political mentor, but also with regard to the very party that brought him into office. He governed with his own criterion and he even appointed assistants who did not completely please the old leader of the party. The names of Gumersindo Rodriguez, Diego Arria and Carmelo Lauria were pecked at in rumors in the National Headquarters of AD and talks in Pacairigua, but CAP kept them in their posts.

The Ghost of Corruption

The day on which he turned over the insignia of office to his successor, Dr Luis Herrera Campins, the new chief of state said, in his inaugural address, that he was receiving a "mortgaged country." Is it the beginning of the end? Possibly not. But then a campaign started directed by the followers of Caldera toward the personal destruction of Carlos Andres Perez and the possible disappearance of Democratic Action from the Venezuelan political scene. A strategy that was carefully defined and revised subsequently in "reflection sessions" in COPEI headquarters. First stage: accuse Carlos Andres Perez and a group of his assistants of administrative corruption, try them and put them in prison. The rest would be easy. Thus, the publicized Sierra Nevada scandal emerged and the rest of the story is familiar to everyone, because it is recent.

If the hands of Rafael Caldera and of Romulo Betancourt himself were present in the Sierra Nevada manipulation, in addition to the master plan, that is something that can be learned in time, to the extent to which history itself unravels the delicate threads that one day tried to involve the future and the destiny of CAP. What is certain is that he did not become disturbed at any time. He maintained a calm, proof against anything, and organized a defense whose results are also known. But he was alone momemtarily, dramatically alone, virtually isolated, with the sole friendship and company of a few persons who kept their faith in him intact. That is so true that even a limited number of friends went to his office in Las Delicias Tower. Only his small group of immediate assistants. And Carlos Andres Perez, who is a man with infinite patience, knew how to wait with heroic resignation.

The Human Profile

Who is this man who during 43 years of his life has done nothing other than dedicate himself completely to political struggle? What is Carlos Andres Perez like inside? What are his thoughts and what are his attitudes? Where is he headed now? The scapegoat chosen by the members of COPEI in their attempt to discredit Democratic Action and to become the sole valid alternative for exercising government authority in Venezuela is, basically, a man whose confidence in himself is the best guarantee in any undertaking that he tackles. If he has made mistakes in the exercise of government authority, certainly they were beyond his control and not his unlimited confidence in thinking that he was doing things well.

To tell the truth, those who think that during his long years at the side of Romulo Betancourt he had the skill of remaining in the shadow without trying at any time to exceed his teacher, awaiting an opportunity that came to him at the time when he was elected president of the Republic, may be right. It is demonstrated, probably, by his unconditional loyalty to the leader during the most dramatic moments in the history of Democratic Action, especially at those times that ended with painful excisions in the great party. Carlos Andres not only stayed in Democratic Action at both times, but also he sincerely did not allow himself to be touched by the temptation to personal leadership. In his opinion, his destiny has always been within Democratic Action. The rest, a matter of knowing how to wait. What more could be expected of a man trained in the wisdom of the father of Venezuelan democracy, of that man who founded one of the most powerful political parties in Latin America, of that man who became president of the Republic three times? Has he betrayed him now?

Definitely not. In the opinion of Carlos Andres Perez, leadership does not lie in renewal for the sake of renewal. Not in the old saying of "get out so that I can come in." His personal convictions lead him, rather than to a mere generation change, to a change of structures, to a replacement of obsolete methods and systems that are incompatible with the dynamics of the present-day world and the real situation of a changing society.

From the human point of view, he is usually described as "very friendly" owing to his exemplary devotion to friendship, his consistency toward those who at some time have shown him real solidarity and affection. Of mountain origin, he might be placed in that category of men with a reserved nature, those who we never know what they are thinking, so frequently attributed to persons from the Andes. Outwardly, he is a man who holds out his hand frankly and his smile is broad, extroverted, likable a leader who attracts masses and captivates multitudes.

Apotheosis and Triumph

After winning the battle of Sierra Nevada in the eyes of public opinion, Carlos Andres Perez desperately needed the great stellar moment that would return him to the heat of popular emotions and fanaticism. That great moment came to him with the events organized to celebrate the 39th anniversary of the founding of Democratic Action, during which he -- paradoxically turned into the "sacred monster" of Venezuelan politics by the members of COPEI -- became the top star of all the celebrations. In the anniversary toast, in the supper with the labor unionists in Romeria Blanca, Carlos Andres Perez was the five-star leader of the AD members. But the apotheosis was, undoubtedly, the mass event organized by AD in San Cristobal, where a delirious multitude, estimated at 80,000 persons, acclaimed him and cheered him with overflowing enthusiasm bordering on fanaticism. Thus, his leadership was firmly consolidated.

The Future

With the way cleared now, the future of Carlos Andres Perez now appears to be frankly illuminated by the most favorable prospects. Will he go in search of Third World leadership exclusively, withdrawing from the Venezuelan political situation, or, on the contrary, will he devote himself basically to internal work in his party? We would say both things. It should be recalled, in the first place, that at present he is president of the Latin American Committee of the Socialist International and that this coming 12 November he will be in Madrid, in the worldwide meeting of the Socialist International in which he will speak as reporter on the topic of the "North-South Controversy," one of the three points included on the agenda. There in the Spanish capital, if all turns out as some political observers think may happen, it is most likely that CAP will return to Caracas having become the new world president of the Socialist International.

On the national level the prospects for Carlos Andres Perez are no less promising. For the present, specifically with regard to Democratic Action, the irresistable advance of the Lusinchi movement all over the country is openly facilitating his task of strengthening and consolidating his leadership.

But the Lusinchi movement is a trend destined to die once Jaime Lusinchi becomes secretary general. This is demonstrated by the fact that many of the great "generals" of this movement, like David Morales Bello and Carlos Canache Mata, have stated publicly that their support of the physician from Anzoategui extends only to the post of secretary general, for the obvious fact that both, just like Octavio Lepage, nourish ambitions for presidential candidacy. Thus, it is easy to predict that, starting in November, the Lusinchi movement will dissolve, becoming a pure, absolute designation: the Perez movement.

Then who will support CAP as AD presidential candidate for the 1983 election? An important support, if we are guided by the facts and circumstances already presented in this report, which will give rise -- in due time -- to a more detailed analysus. With regard to CAP specifically, without the ghost of old physical ailments that might incapacitate him for the future, with a health as strong as iron, and in full enjoyment of vital energy, he will be 66 years old in 1988. Therefore, it is not presumptuous to imagine that, regardless of who may win the 1983 election, he is on the way to becoming the second Democratic Action leader capable to attaining the presidency of the Republic for the second time and the first one to do so both times by way of the ballot box.

10,042
CSO: 3010

CALDERON BERTI DISCUSSES 1981-85 ENERGY POLICY

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p D-5

[Article by Cayetano Ramirez]

[Text] Venezuela will organize and implement an integral energy policy during the 5-year period from 1981 to 1985 covered by the Sixth National Plan, reported the minister of energy and mining, Dr Humberto Calderon Berti.

In a speech before representatives of business, union, science and labor interests who met under the auspices of Pro-Venezuela, the minister explained the features of the energy plan, and commented on its principal elements.

Calderon Berti stressed the reorganization of the plan for the purpose of finding more orderly methods so that coherent policies can be coordinated and applied in the energy sector as a whole. Before, that sector dealt almost exclusively with petroleum, but now it includes electricity, coal and all energy resources in the country.

In another part of his speech, the minister emphasized the importance of the policy of overall negotiations linked to the supply of oil by Venezuela, through which the country could obtain not only dollar payments, but also goods, services, investments and new exchanges required by the population and by development considerations.

Dr Reinaldo Cervini gave a speech stressing the importance of energy planning in the new situation created by the nationalization of oil. "Nationalized oil requires that we also nationalize the Venezuelan mentality so that our conduct and actions will complement this significant and delicate effort."

Energy Sector Strategy and Policy

Explaining the broader features of the plan to develop the energy sector, the document presented, which is a preliminary version subject to consultation, points out that the government reserves for itself the administration of all primary energy resources on national territory.

After some generalities about the various sectors included in the energy sector, with a breakdown of each one, the document specifies new approaches in the petrochemical field. The stated goal is to "redefine national petrochemical policy in order to determine the terms under which national and international private capital will play a role in the different phases of processing."

There are also new proposals regarding coal, in that the use of coal will not be limited to the Zulia electricity plant, but will also be used to generate electricity in other plants, wherever possible. There will also be future exploration and exploitation of this previously untapped resource.

In the nuclear sector, there is a proposal to step up exploration and to take the necessary initiatives to make commitments to nuclear programs, including the training of specialized personnel and the support of scientific institutions in this field.

During the period covered by the Sixth Plan, a holding company will be created for the state electricity sector.

Dr Maritza Izaguirre, a commissioner appointed by the president, emphasized the importance of the plan to the extent that now it will have not only national repercussions, but also sectorial and regional repercussions. It will provide the coherence and depth necessary to involve the entire nation in the planned effort.

Here is a summary of the elements of the Energy Plan:

--Incorporate existing petrochemical facilities into production.
--Establish the control mechanisms that will be able to measure the operational and administrative efficiency of the industry.
--Create the necessary incentives for an adequate yield on investments in the petrochemical industry.
--Develop the necessary human resources, responding to a continual process of training.
--Quantify natural gas reserves, rich in ethane and propane, in order to develop an adequate production potential so as to guarantee the future operations of the industry.
--Take the necessary steps to ensure the availability of raw materials (naphtha) for special projects.
--Guarantee technical assistance and technology in all phases of development of the petrochemical industry. Along these lines, the role of Venezuelan engineering firms will be studied.
--Evaluate petrochemical programs in light of financial responsibility criteria as well as economic and social ones.
--Redefine national petrochemical policy in order to determine the terms under which national and international private capital will play a role in the different phases of processing.

--Meet the needs of small and isolated localities through small hydroenergy projects wherever possible.
--Increase the interconnective capacity of the national electric system among the large power generation centers.
--Improve the connection contracts among the electrical firms of the country.
--Reactivate the power generation units that are now out of service, if they are capable of being repaired.
--Improve preventive and corrective maintenance programs for thermal generation units so as to permit maximum utilization.
--Replace obsolete equipment and processes with more efficient ones.

Policies

--Support the Caroni Electricity Enterprise in order to avoid additional delays in the Guri project.
--Streamline the administrative procedures with a view to reducing the time required to put the Planta Centro thermal units into operation.
--Strengthen the administrative capacity of the Electrical Administration and Development Corporation (CADAFE), required for the construction of its projects, through the incorporation of trained professionals and qualified technical advisers.
--Support the ENELVEN [expansion unknown] project for the construction of a coal-fired electrical plant. Also, study the possibility of building new plants that will operate with coal, whenever technical conditions permit, all within a rational technical and economic development of coal mines and the transportation of the mineral.
--Guarantee the supply of oil and natural gas derivatives required by the additional power facilities that will begin operations after 1981, in order to overcome the deficit problems resulting from setbacks in the main projects under construction. For this purpose, there will be close cooperation among the purchasers, the electrical firms, and the suppliers, the oil industry.
--Ensure timely financing of generation, transmission and distribution projects implemented by the firms of the electrical subsector. Current electricity rates will also be reviewed in consideration of the fact that such programs involve high investment and operational costs, and also require capital contributions and loans, as well as resources provided by the enterprises themselves.
--Design a price system for the electricity sector that will consider the national use of the country's natural resources for the generation of electricity, such as water, oil and coal.
--Promote the creation of regional electric utility enterprises. For this purpose, the negotiations for transferring CADAFE facilities and equipment on the east coast of Lake Maracaibo to ENELVEN will be accelerated, and studies will begin to define the goals and objectives of the regional enterprises of other areas of the country.
--Raise public awareness of the need to change consumption habits and encourage the conservation of electricity.
--Develop an intensive human resources program.

--Proceed immediately to the establishment of the holding company for the electrical subsector in order to incorporate the state-run enterprises into a single national system capable of implementing the policy set forth by the Executive, that will coordinate, supervise and control the activities of any type undertaken by its subsidiaries so as to guarantee electricity service to the entire country.
--Create the legal means necessary to reorganize and equip the energy sector with adequate tools for development.
--Step up exploration for radioactive minerals through the implementation of a program with a budget sufficient to cover the areas that are potentially most attractive to the nation, such that by the end of the plan's period the areas where the resource will be quantified will have been defined.
--Promote experimental activities aired at determining the best methods of extraction and purification of uranium and thorium, and the manufacture of heavy water.
--Increase the sample testing capacity of the centers devoted to that activity as a means to support the uranium exploration activities.
--Intensify experimental activities oriented toward the manufacture of combustible elements that use uranium and thorium.
--Use the experimental reactor of the Venezuelan Institute of Scientific Research as a training tool to educate personnel for the energy industry.
--Promote the use of equipment in university and technological centers by means of the application of resources for the purchase and outfitting of that equipment.
--Sponsor the production of radioisotopes and radiopharmaceuticals in the country for the purpose of creating the necessary scientific and technical infrastructure to permit the short-term supply of national demand for products that are now imported.
--Gradually incorporate into experimental activities personnel that have been trained abroad in various nuclear disciplines.

For the upcoming 5-year period, the following policy and strategy guidelines have been set forth for the use of coal in the energy sector:

--Maintain exclusive state control over coal exploration and exploitation.
--Step up current coal exploration programs and proceed with the exploration of areas that have potential according to the Index Map, in order to determine the inventory of national coal resources and thus assess their energy role.
--Develop coal as a function of sidero-metallurgical and energy development needs.
--Develop coal-electricity programs in those regions of the country where conditions are conducive to the use of coal for the generation of electricity.
--Develop new markets for the energy use of coal in those industrial activities where it is feasible.
--Evaluate the Santo Domingo coal region for long-term development, in accordance with the national energy policy.
--Continue the coal development program in the state of Zulia in order to provide a convenient supply for the iron and steel complex and the coal-fired power plant that have been planned.

--Support the program to expand the Lobatera coal mines so as to guarantee the supply of regional demand.
--Continue the human resources training program abroad, which the National Council for the Development of the Nuclear Industry has been carrying out, through the sectorial programs of the Gran Mariscal de Ayacucho Foundation.
--Establish close ties between the national scientific and technological system and the development of nuclear projects, providing support for the various research projects that are taking place.
--Complement as soon as possible the legal, technical, industrial and safety norms that regulate nuclear activities in the country.
--Promote studies to evaluate the potential use of nuclear energy in Venezuela, especially with regard to the preselection of sites in coordination with territorial organization plans.
--Stimulate and motivate the industries and engineering concerns of the country to participate in future nuclear programs.
--Foment the development of the peaceful applications of nuclear energy in industry, medicine, agriculture and livestock, and food preservation.

8926
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

GAS DISCOVERED OFF LOS TESTIGOS--A new discovery of natural gas was just made by LAGOVEN at its Los Testigos 1 well, located to the northeast of the Los Testigos Islands. This confirms that there are gas reserves on the Venezuelan continental shelf. Testing yielded positive results, with a production of up to approximately 480,000 cubic meters of natural gas per day (about 18 million cubic feet). This product is used as a fuel, and in various processes in the petrochemical industry and in the hydrogenation of heavy crude. This well is the northernmost one drilled by LAGOVEN in its offshore program. The vessel Wodeco 9 was used for this purpose; it has been operating north of the Paria Peninsula. The firm also is using a floating platform, the "Rowan Odessa," which is operating in the Gulf of Paria, in its exploration program. The area assigned to LAGOVEN for the development of its offshore program includes the entire continental shelf across from the Orinoco Delta, the Gulf of Paria and the whole coast from the Paria Peninsula to the north, through the eastern portion of the Island of Margarita, to the Island of Aves, the northernmost point in Venezuelan territory. The Los Testigos 1 well is about 100 kilometers north of the coast of the State of Sucre, and a little more than 20 kilometers northeast of the islands bearing the same name. It is worth noting that this is the first discovery in the northern basin, because the others were made closer to the Paria Peninsula: Mejillones 1, gas and very light liquid hydrocarbons; and Patao 1 and Dragon 1, exclusively natural gas. Preliminary tests revealed that the natural gas discovered at Testogos 1 has a greater heating capacity than those discovered earlier. [Text] [Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 28 Sep 80 Sec 1 p 22] 8926

SAN ROQUE REFINERY--Barcelona, 29 Sep--The MENEVEN refinery in San Roque achieved a half million man-hours worked without any debilitating accident, as a result of constant concern by the district management, supervisers and supervisees for the basic and indispensable elements of safety on the job. The record 500,000 man-hours were worked between 22 May 1979 and 16 September 1980, a total of 483 work days. This accomplishment is due to the accident prevention programs put into practice by S. A. MENEVEN in the Puerto La Cruz District. It also shows that the San Roque personnel have always borne in mind safety measures, and are convinced that safe work habits yield benefits. During this period, the plants were brought to a halt occasionally because the complexities and risks of the work required that certain accident prevention norms and procedures be followed. Thus, with a clear awareness of safety and the cooperation of all refinery workers, operations have been carried out normally, without risks to personnel or to the facilities. [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 30 Sep 80 p D-17] 8926

LIGHT OIL DISCOVERED IN GUARICO--Maracaibo, 18 Sep--Deposits of light oil with a gravity of 41.3 API were discovered by MENEVEN in the state of Guarico, according to an official spokesman of that Venezuelan Petroleum Inc. (PETROVEN) subsidiary. He indicated that the discovery took place at the Jobal field in the municipality of Tucupido, Ribas District, in the state of Guarico. The well, MJOA-12, was drilled by the MENEVEN 4 drill to a depth of some 7,500 feet. The Chaguaramas formation was penetrated, and five likely sands were found. In Guarico, MENEVEN is carrying out a plan to determine the region's hydrocarbon potential, and for that purpose it will drill 24 wells in search of petroleum and gas. [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 19 Sep 80 p 1] 8926

ALCASA ALUMINUM PRODUCTION--Guayana City, 29 Sep (VENPRES)--This year ALCASA /Caroni Aluminum Company/ will produce 110,000 tons of aluminum as the plant becomes 90 percent operational, ALCASA president Francisco Layrisse said here today. By 1982 plans call for the expansion of a new line of reduction cells which will raise production to 240,000 tons, he adds. Following this expansion, aluminum will rank second in the nation in terms of revenues. Reynolds holds 50 percent of ALCASA's capital while CVG /Guayana Venezuelan Corporation/ holds 28 percent and the Venezuelan Investment Fund holds 22 percent. At present ALCASA, which was founded 13 years ago, is completely run by Venezuelans. Eleven new Venezuelan managers are on the board of directors and most of them have risen from the ranks. Although 13 U.S. citizens remain as advisers to the board, as of today the company is being run by Venezuelan professionals who have made their careers in the company. The company which experienced losses between 1974 and 1979 will close out the year with earnings of over 16 million bolivars. /Text/ /Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 27 Sep 80 p 9 Sec 2/ 8599

PRESUMED GUERRILLA ATTACK--Los Teques, 27 Sep--Two alleged guerrilla groups carrying high powered weapons last night attacked two buses loaded with passengers traveling east along an isolated section of the El Guapo Highway between Tapipa and Panaquire. The first attack occurred at 2000 hours when six men dressed in olive green uniforms and wearing hoods over their heads stopped a Mercedes Benz bus dirven by Fernando Garcia, 35. The men who were armed with FALs and submachine guns stripped the passengers of their possessions. The bus was on its way to Margarita Island. The driver resisted the attempts of the subversive group to take control of the frightened and surprised passengers and was hit in the head with the butt of a weapon. After the group collected the money and jewelry from the passengers, they fled in a blue Caprice. The second attack occurred near the site of the first one at 0400 hours. Four individuals wearing masks, dressed in olive green uniforms and armed with submachine guns and grenades stopped a Mercedes Benz bus belonging to the Drivers Union of Margarita which was driven by Eliseo Rafael Betancourt. There were 49 passengers on board. This group used the same method of operation as the earlier one . After taking control of the bus, they took the passengers' money, jewelry and other valuables and fled in a white

Nova. Miranda police officers reported that none of the passengers was injured in either attack and that a manhunt was underway for both groups of subversives. Defense Minister Maj Gen Tomas Abreu Rescaniere traveled to the capital of Miranda early this morning where he visited some military installations. The reasons for the trip were unknown. /Text/ /Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 28 Sep 80 p D-31/ 8599

DOUGLAS BRAVO ARRESTED IN PARIS--Former guerrilla leader Douglas Bravo and his wife were arrested in Paris by members of the French secret police, the Surete. According to Ramon Morales, a member of the PRV /Party of the Venezuelan Revolution/, the couple had just met with French cinematographer and revolutionary leader George Mattei who was also arrested. George Mattei directed the documentary on the Venezuelan guerrillas which was filmed in the 60's in the mountains of Yaracuy where Douglas Bravo was interviewed. Apparently the French police consider Mattei to be a member of the extreme left because of his support for the Palestinian cause. "For some strange reason the Surete learned of the meeting and arrested them as they were leaving. Bravo was in Paris after having visited China at the invitation of the Communist Party. He also traveled to Korea where he attended ceremonies commemorating the revolution." At the last minute it was reported that Douglas Bravo and his wife had been released but had been given a specific period of time in which to leave France. /Text/ /Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p D-28/ 8599

CSO: 3010

END

JPRS 76733

31 October 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2209

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76733

31 October 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2209

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

Energy Ministers Agree To Strengthen OLADE
(Cayetano Ramirez; EL NACIONAL, 11, 12 Sep 80) 1

Energy Cooperation
Concluding Document

Need for West Indian United Front Stressed
(Editorial; SUNDAY ADVOCATE-NEWS, 28 Sep 80) 9

Argentine, Brazilian Arms Export Capabilities Examined
(CONVICCION, 3 Oct 80) 11

Briefs
CAUS-El Salvador Solidarity 13

ARGENTINE

Naval Industry Seen Approaching International Levels
(Editorial; LA NACION, 22 Sep 80) 14

'LA PRENSA' Condemns Castro's Debasing of Cuban Refugees
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 21 Sep 80) 16

Supreme Court Rules in Favor of Jehovah's Witnesses
(CLARIN, 19 Sep 80) 18

Discontented Laotians Present Their Demands
(LA PRENSA, 22 Sep 80) 19

BAHAMAS

BBA Head Calls for Women Participation in Politics
(Anthony Forbes; THE TRIBUNE, 29 Sep 80) 21

SDP's Solomon Scores PM's Drug Trafficking Stand
(THE TRIBUNE, 30 Sep 80) 24

BARBADOS

More Israeli Agricultural Aid May Be Forthcoming
(ADVOCATE-NEWS, 29 Sep 80) 27

BOLIVIA

Interior Minister's Role in Cocaine Trade Noted
(Luiz Claudic Cunha; VEJA, 8 Oct 80) 28

COSTA RICA

Former President Figueres Discusses National Liberation Party, Economic Problems
(Jose Figueres Ferrer Interview; LA REPUBLICA, 24, 26 Sep 80) 30

CUBA

Acosta Notes Important Work Done by CDR
(Armando Acosta Interview; GRANMA, 8 Sep 80) 39

EXPEDIPORT Deputy Notes Port Unloading Difficulties
(Gabriel Roqueta Interview; JUVENTUD REBELDE, 26 Aug 80) 43

Study on Controlling Venereal Diseases in Country Reported
(Ronald K. St. John; REVISTA CUBANA DE HIGIENE Y EPIDEMIOLOGIA, Jan-Apr 80) 46

DOMINICA

Island's Bleak Economic Picture Discussed
(ADVOCATE-NEWS, 27 Sep 80) 60

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

PQD Leader Worried About Electoral Board Disorganization
(Hugo A. Ysalguez; LISTIN DIARIO, 1 Oct 80) 62

Pena Gomez Speaks Out on Various Topics
(EL CARIBE, 2 Oct 80, LISTIN DIARIO, 2 Oct 80) 64

Haitian Work Force, Reforestation,
by Nelson Encarnacion
Membership Increase Called For,
by Hugo A. Ysalguez

Paper Says Sugar Shortages Must Be Resolved
(Editorial; LISTIN DIARIO, 27 Sep 80) 68

GRENADA

Unconditional Ban of All South African Goods Announced
(ADVOCATE-NEWS, 27 Sep 80) 69

Prime Minister Lauds Launching of Cuban Cosmonaut
(ADVOCATE-NEWS, 27 Sep 80) 70

GUATEMALA

Church Document Protests Against Violent Treatment
(BARRICADA, 25 Sep 80) 71

JAMAICA

Government Examines Coal as Alternative to Oil
(Suzann Francis; SUNDAY ADVOCATE-NEWS, 28 Sep 80) . 75

NICARAGUA

Humberto Ortega Discusses Significance of Somoza's Death
(Humberto Ortega Interview; EL NUEVO DIARIO,
25 Sep 80) 76

Junta Member Ramirez Comments on World, Regional Issues
(Sergio Ramirez Mercado Interview; EL NUEVO DIARIO, 27 Sep 80) 80

Violeta Chamorro Comments on New Press Law
(Violeta de Chamorro Interview; LA PRENSA,
1 Sep 80) 85

Revolution Analyzed From Marxist Perspective
(Eddy Matute Ruiz; EL NUEVO DIARIO, 30 Aug 80) 86

ANDEN Extols Teachers Who Participated in Literacy Campaign
(Trinidad Vasquez; EL NUEVO DIARIO, 3 Sep 80) 89

URUGUAY

Interview With PCU Secretary General Rodney Arismendi
(Rodney Arismendi Interview; L'UNITA, 19 Sep 80) .. 90

VENEZUELA

Guerrillas Threaten Eastern Region Farmers
(EL NACIONAL, 4 Sep 80) 93

Briefs
Red Flag Members Sought 94
Alleged Guerrilla Contact Arrested 94
PCV Political Bureau Elected 94
MARAVEN Propane Line 95
Anzoategui Gas Production 95
MARAVEN Production Up 96

ENERGY MINISTERS AGREE TO STRENGTHEN OLADE

Energy Cooperation

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p D-15

[Article by Cayetano Ramirez]

[Text] The Inter-American Energy Cooperation Program proposed by Venezuela to develop the various energy sources of the different countries of the continent, with the aim of reducing their dependence on imported oil, received the full backing of the Latin American ministers meeting in Caracas.

The meeting of the ministers from Brazil, Mexico, Colombia, Ecuador, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Nicaragua and Venezuela opened yesterday morning in the Hilton, to consider the proposal to create a cooperation program that would address as a whole the development of the diverse potential energy sources of countries, whether or not they were members of the OLADE [Latin American Energy Organization] (which has 12 member countries).

The Venezuelan minister of energy and mines, Dr Humberto Calderon Berti, made the opening presentation, citing statistics on reserves, production and consumption of the different types of energy on the continent, with particular emphasis on the situation in the Latin American countries, in which production (1978 figures, which have already varied somewhat) totals 5,928,000 equivalent barrels of oil (meaning all forms of energy expressed in terms of energy value per barrel of oil) daily, and consumption totals 5 million equivalent barrels of oil daily. This leaves a favorable margin of 900,000 barrels a day. This figure, however, does not express reality, in that Mexico, Ecuador and Venezuela export large quantities of oil to North America and outside the hemisphere, so that the net energy balance in Latin America taken as a whole is a deficit.

The proposal submitted by Calderon Berti and outlined to reporters during a recess of the ministers' meeting seeks to combine the efforts of all the countries to carry out explorations for oil, gas, coal, geothermal and other resources and to set up plans for the development of these potentialities; it would also undertake programs to promote other energy sources such as hydroelectric, geothermal, biomass, wind, sun, etc.

The statistics on energy resources compiled by the United Nations show that in 1978 Latin America had reserves totaling 264 billion equivalent barrels of oil (in the various forms of energy). This potential remains far from having been developed and constitutes the goal of the joint efforts now to be instituted.

The individual countries together would form an organization at the policy (ministers) level, a coordinating body (Inter-American Energy Coordination Group[GICE]), and a secretariat.

Programs would be financed through a special fund centralized in an already existing institution, such as the Inter-American Development Bank, to avoid creating a new bureaucracy, and the supplying of the fund would be shared by the industrialized countries of the continent, the oil exporting countries and the relatively more developed countries. Other contributions could come from sources outside the continent, such as the industrialized countries of Europe and Asia, development agencies and other institutions.

Wisdom of Overall Energy Approach

The Latin American ministers of petroleum and energy who are attending the meeting expressed their agreement yesterday with the effort to approach the energy problem on an overall basis rather than referring it to oil alone. The existence of large potential resources in each of the Latin American countries indicates the wisdom of promoting their development in each case to produce energy of all kinds and free these countries of their dependence on foreign sources in this field.

According to engineer Cesar de Oliveira Cals, Brazilian minister of energy and mines:

"Brazil recognizes that Latin American energy cooperation is highly important. One of the essential points of this cooperation--Minister Oliveira told us during our interview--is to approach all energy resources globally and not each one separately, even if it is as important as oil.

"Brazil also recognizes that the quickest and cheapest approach to dealing with the energy problem is by way of conservation, which is an obligation of each and every one. Brazil also supports the viewpoint that Latin American consumers must be given priority by the continental producers."

Engineer Oliveira Cals said that it is his country's intent to cooperate as fully as possible with the other Latin American countries, as well as with other regions of the world, in promoting the development of the various forms of energy. In this regard, he indicated that his country is programing and is currently carrying out projects of this nature that will enable it to attain a production level of 1 million equivalent barrels of oil a day within 5 years, as follows: 500,000 barrels of oil; 170,000 barrels of ethanol; 170,000 equivalent barrels of coal; 120,000 equivalent barrels of wood; 25,000 equivalent barrels of bituminous shales; and 15,000 equivalent barrels of energy extracted from biogas, solar, wind and other sources.

Brazil currently produces 170,000 barrels of oil a day and is acutely self-insufficient, having to import 850,000 barrels a day of oil from foreign sources, especially the Middle East. Engineer Oliveira Cals explained that conservation efforts have enabled Brazil to reduce its energy consumption annual growth rate from a level of 7 percent to zero, and thus to reduce its oil imports from 970,000 barrels a day to 850,000 barrels a day this year, saving $1 billion this year.

The Brazilian minister considers it feasible to put into operation an energy cooperation program that will bring together technical, human and financial resources needed to undertake the required programs in the different countries.

Dr Andres Oteyza, Mexican secretary of patrimony and industrial development, had this to say:

"We view with interest the possibility of approaching energy problems on an overall basis."

The problems to be addressed are many--Dr Oteyza continued--and have their difficulties. He said however that if there is political willingness to address them and efficiency in what is done solutions will be found and success achieved. He added that organizations and mechanisms capable of enabling us to enact any programs on a continental or Latin American level are already in being, such as OLADE, the IDB and others.

"The underlying principle under consideration," he added, "is that of combining human, technical and financial resources to undertake the production of energy in all its forms. But these programs--whatever is done in regard to energy in the various countries--will require resources of different types as well as time, meaning that the training of technical cadres and work along the different lines must all begin now with our sights set on the years 1990-2000, because efforts in the field of energy must always be sustained and of a long-term nature for them to mature and bear fruit."

Mexico has become a top-ranking oil producer, and Minister Oteyza reported that its proved reserves are currently of the order of 60 billion barrels, with a production of 2.3 million barrels a day of which it consumes 1.2 million barrels a day and exports 1.1 million barrels a day.

Dr Humberto Avila Mora, Colombian minister of mines and energy, said:

"By addressing the energy question as a whole, solutions and aid can be found for everyone. Cooperation in this regard is possible and desirable."

Minister Avila Mora expressed his support of Minister Calderon Berti's proposal on the creation of an inter-American energy cooperation program.

Colombia--he reported--has a self-sufficiency deficit of some 40,000 barrels a day of oil that it must import; it produces 135,000 barrels a day. Most important is its exploratory effort, which is being carried out directly by ECOPETROL [Colombian Petroleum Enterprise] and through 40 contracts with international companies that are exploring in various inland regions and offshore in the Atlantic. The latter exploration is for gas, deposits of which are already in production.

Concluding Document

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p D-9

[Article by Cayetano Ramirez]

[Text] Diversification of energy supplies and gradual elimination of Latin American dependency for oil were agreed by the eight energy ministers who met in Caracas this week.

At the end of a 2-day meeting, Ministers Oliveira Cals (Brazil), Avila Mora (Colombia), Fernando Altmann (Costa Rica), Andres Oteyza (Mexico), Carlos Zarruk (Nicaragua), Fernandez Marmol (Santo Domingo), Calderon Berti (Venezuela), and Manuel Mejia Calderon representing Ecuador, resolved to adopt the principle of strengthening the OLADE [Latin American Energy Organization] as the instrumentality of a continental policy with specific aims which they want free of bureaucratic bottlenecks and on an effective footing leading to real solutions and efficient attainments. This idea emerges not only from the communique with which they concluded their work but also from the impressions that were gathered during the proceedings of their meetings and the reports they finally released to the press.

The ministers signed a concluding document to their work and began returning immediately yesterday to their respective countries. All of them found that the meeting had been highly positive and expect it to bear concrete results.

"We can say that the meeting was highly satisfactory," said Fernando Altmann of Costa Rica, "and a document was signed that reflects a new style of action and pragmatism, which are what Latin America needs at this time if it wants to arrive at the solution of the energy problems we now face and must resolve. The decision to strengthen the OLADE, as had already been agreed at the San Jose, Costa Rica meeting, and as a means of achieving our countries' goals in regard to energy, was also a good one."

The Nicaraguan minister of energy and mines, engineer Carlos Zarruk, said:

"We think it a very positive thing that the Latin American countries have joined in presenting a solid and viable position to the energy problem, a position that would be much weaker if based on individual action by each country separately.

"The decision to approach the energy problem in global form, with the possibilities this provides for developing the specific forms of energy that each country has, is also a very highly advantageous one."

A Five-Point Latin American Energy Policy

The ministers drew up the basic guidelines that will enable an interim organization to draft in a very short time--between now and November when the OLADE meets in Bogota--a Latin American energy policy and the mechanisms for implementing it. These guidelines are given in the concluding document, which says:

Informal Meeting of Latin American Energy Ministers

"Caracas, 10 and 11 September 1980

"By invitation of the Venezuelan minister of energy and mines, Dr Humberto Calderon Berti, an informal meeting of Latin American ministers of energy was held in Caracas, with the participation of: engineer Cesar Cals de Oliveira Filho, Brazilian minister of mines and energy; Dr Humberto Avila Mora, Colombian minister of mines and energy; Dr Fernando Altmann, Costa Rican minister of energy and mines; Dr Jose Andres Oteyza, national secretary of patrimony and industrial development; engineer Carlos Zarruk, Nicaraguan minister of mines and hydrocarbons; Dr Manuel Fernandez Marmol, Dominican secretary of state for industry and commerce; and, representing Ecuador, Dr Manuel Mejia Calderon, counsellor minister of the Ecuadorean Embassy in Venezuela; to consider the Inter-American Cooperation and Coordination Program proposed by Venezuela.

"The ministers studied and discussed the Venezuelan proposal and, as a result of this, agreed to submit for consideration by the ministers of the OLADE at its next meeting the following proposals:

1) Strengthen the OLADE.

2) Draw up policy lines for OLADE.

3) Define a specific program of action for OLADE.

4) Draw up a continental energy cooperation program.

5) Establish a mechanism for following up the work of OLADE.

"To this effect, they decided to form a working group made up of Venezuela, who will coordinate it, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador and Mexico, to draft, with the aid of the OLADE permanent secretariat, the working document corresponding to the above-indicated initiatives.

"This document will be submitted to the consideration of the next meeting of OLADE ministers to be held in Colombia toward the end of November. The draft document will be based on the following points of agreement:

I. Strengthening of OLADE.

1) Take specific action to bring about the incorporation in OLADE of the Latin American countries that are still not members.

2) Consolidation of OLADE as the principal body responsible for energy cooperation and coordination among its member states and with other organizations and countries, and as the organizing body for all actions necessary to achieve those ends.

3) Endowment of OLADE with financial and human resources commensurate with the exercise of its functions, as well as an adequate organization.

II. Policy Lines.

With regard to policy lines, the following priority points were identified:

1) Development of native energy sources with the object of achieving energy self-sufficiency of the Latin American countries together with a mastery of the corresponding technologies.

2) Formulation of national energy policies and plans.

3) Diversification of energy supplies, rationalization of energy production, marketing and consumption, with special emphasis on the gradual elimination of dependency with respect to hydrocarbons.

4) Increase and rechanneling of the financial resources made available by industrialized countries and international financial organizations, and creation of additional finds for the sufficient and timely financing of the region's energy development. Promote, at the same time, mechanisms to facilitate technology transfers under less restrictive conditions than current ones.

5) Stimulation of trade in energy products among countries of the region, through schemes that provide priorities and guarantee the supply of energy between exporters and importers of the region.

6) Implementation of mechanisms that enable the minimization of energy costs, through rationalization of the processing, transport, storage and distribution of the region's energy resources.

7) Creation of means to facilitate the development of the human and technological resources available in the region.

III. Plan of Action.

The plan of action must provide for the following:

1) Speeding up the establishment of energy balances in Latin America.

2) Latin American energy planning.

3) Training of human resources and transfers of technologies.

4) Evaluation and regional exploration of potential energy resources.

5) Diversification of energy supplies, with emphasis on the following renewable sources:

--hydroelectic

--geothermal

--solar

--biomass

and on nonrenewable sources, especially:

--hydrocarbons

--coal

--nuclear energy.

6) Transfer of technical, legal and administrative information among the member states.

IV. Continental Energy Cooperation Program.

Based on the agreements reached during this informal meeting, draw up a Continental Energy Cooperation Program.

V. Followup Mechanism.

Consider the establishment of a special committee of OLADE ministers to effect systematic followup of policies as well as programs and projects assigned to the Permanent Secretariat.

Signatories:

Engineer Cesar Cals de Oliveira Filho, Brazilian minister of mines and energy; Dr Humberto Avila Mora, Colombian minister of mines and energy; Dr Fernando Altmann, Cost Rican minister of energy and mines; Dr Jose Andres Oteyza, Mexican secretary of patrimony and industrial development; engineer Carlos Zarruk, Nicaraguan minister of mines and hydrocarbons; Dr Manuel Fernandez Marmol, Dominican secretary of state for industry and commerce; Dr Humberto Calderon Berti, Venezuelan minister of energy and mines; and Dr Manuel Mejia Calderon, counsellor minister of the Ecuadorean Embassy in Venezuela."

9238
CSO: 3010

NEED FOR WEST INDIAN UNITED FRONT STRESSED

Bridgetown SUNDAY ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 28 Sep 80 p 3

[Editorial: "WI Need a United Front"]

[Text] If anyone is in a position to know that the Caribbean needs to adopt a united stance in attacking its problems, that person is Barbados Minister of External Affairs Henry Forde. And Mr Forde showed last week that he knew the urgency of the need when he spoke to the 20th National Convention of the West Indies Jaycees.

The Minister emphasised that the Caribbean region needed a common front in attacking the problems of foreign private investment and the transfer of technology. He said that there would be a need for a common front through the Caribbean Community (Caricom) in negotiations with the European Economic Community (EEC), Canada, and other trade blocs, and for general politico-economic questions like the creation of political relations with Latin America and the mobilisation of external economic aid and technical assistance.

And he emphasised that the economic integration process required constant and even daily decisions at the national level on domestic economic policies and external actions. The Government could not pay lip service to the idea of Caribbean integration. Its adherence to the dream must be expressed in the reality of constantly, almost daily implementation of concrete measures and action. And in Mr Forde's opinion nowhere was the need to translate dream into reality more clearly seen than in the coordination of foreign policy.

Considering the small size of the unit territories of the Caribbean and the limited economic powers they possess, it is easy to see why Mr Forde emphasised once again the need for regional unity. Standing individually, each wields little political clout on the international scene. United they could together command a level of attention that could rapidly transform the world's regard for the region from that of poor islands with their hands always out for aid, to that of a regional entity that could transform hemispheric policy.

The history of unity in the Caribbean area is not rosy. The Federation of the West Indies broke up after a few brief years of squabbling and parochial political manoeuvring. But that had been put together on a political basis and the individual politicians were not sufficiently committed to regionalism to forego the exercise of power on their own home turf.

The longer lasting and more successful regional organisations--CARICOM with all its faults--has survived because political stances are overridden by economic necessity. And it has been repeatedly demonstrated that the Caribbean must develop economically as a region, or the units will stagnate or perish individually.

The interlocking nature of today's international affairs demands that territories with similar interests all over the world present a united front to protect themselves. If this is true on a global basis, where countries and governments on opposite sides of the world unite because their problems are similar, how much more necessary it must be for countries in one region to unite.

The nations of the Third World, into which category the Caribbean region falls, will inevitably depend on fair treatment and assistance from the powerful, rich nations of the developed world. Aid is largely a matter of individual choice or self-interest on the part of the donor. Trading and political links have more of a two-way flow of influence. Unity among small nations can give them a level of political clout that large countries or power blocs cannot ignore.

In the long run, Mr Forde's urging for unity in the Caribbean is in fact a recognition of the route we must take for self-preservation. And the sooner governments in this region accept this fact and act upon it, the more likely many of the outstanding problems will be solved.

CSO: 3020

ARGENTINE, BRAZILIAN ARMS EXPORT CAPABILITIES EXAMINED

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 3 Oct 80 p 10

[Passages enclosed in slantlines printed in boldface]

[Text] (AFP) Argentina, Brazil and potentially Mexico--which have the most important arms industries in Latin America--represent an /independent supply/ alternative for other countries of the Third World, according to the "Africa and Middle East Military Yearbook" published yesterday in Paris.

That 320-page document published by the JEUNE AFRIQUE press group to examine in-depth the military power and defense problems of the Third World is the equivalent of the report on military balance published annually by the International Institute for Strategic Studies in London and the "Sipri Yearbook" of the International Institute in Stockholm.

In a lengthy chapter on the arms industries in the Third World, the report devotes an important part to Latin America.

The desire for independence demonstrated by several countries on the continent through arms production programs has been manifested most particularly in Argentina, Brazil and the potential of Mexico, the document reported.

Those countries not only manufacture arms for their armed forces but in the last few years have also begun to export to other nations of the Third World and have become an independent supply alternative.

As an example /of the development attained by the Argentine aeronautical industry--which produces some 20 civilian and military models--the report mentioned the Pucara, an antiguerrilla fighter plane which was recently sold to Bolivia, Mauritius and Mauritania /.

The same success was achieved by the Bandeirantes plane, which manufactured by Brazil and exported to a dozen countries, including France, the United States and Great Britain.

The Brazilian aviation industry, which also produces 20 models, will be capable of quickly reaching a higher level of production as the transfer of technology agreements signed with the principal Western countries are implemented.

The report adds that /Argentina, which also has an advanced naval industry, in recent years has manufactured a destroyer of the Vickers-42 type, four frigates of the standard class and two German vessels of the 148 type which will be equipped with Gabriel missiles from Israel /.

The Brazilian naval industry which began nearly a half century ago, continues to equip most of the units bought abroad, manufactures light ships and plans to build submarines.

In addition, Brazil manufactures X-20, X-40 missiles and Sonda-2 and Sonda-3 rockets in collaboration with Taiwan, and Cobra antitank rockets in cooperation with Germany.

Finally, Brazil produces various models of the Cascavel tank, the Urutu amphibious transport vehicle, and the EE-17 and EE-3 Jararaca armored cars.

After having sold 20 Jararaca to Qatar in 1976 and 400 Urutu and Cascavel to Lybia, it also exported several units to Chad; however, /its most important operation was with Iraq, to which it sold 200 armored cars (EE-9, EE-11, and EE-17) and 2,000 military trucks/.

The Brazilian military industry, which just 6 years ago produced no equipment, exported materiel worth /$100 million/ in 1978; it is estimated that this year the figure will be /$1 billion/.

/For its part, Argentina also manufactures armored cars. It is preparing to mass-produce 200 units of the TAM (Argentine Medium Tank)/, in collaboration with the German company Thyssen Henschel and 300 VCTP (Combat Vehicle and Personnel Carrier).

Moreover, its national industry assembled most of the AMX-13 tanks purchased in France.

For its part, in recent years Mexico has begun to produce light arms and ammunition and light planes for civilian use in collaboration with Northrup. It is negotiating with Israel for the purchase of IAI Arava transport planes.

Its shipyards, which produced 15 ships for military use between 1959 and 1963, is now building 15 patrol boats of the Aztec class under a British license. According to the report, Mexico is in a position to quickly have a truck and military vehicles plant through the utilization of the experience and technological capacity of its automobile industry.

However, according to the experts who prepared this study, /Mexico is rejecting the possibility of exporting military equipment because it would affect its international image and would be contrary to the basic principles of its foreign policy/.

8143
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

CAUS-EL SALVADOR SOLIDARITY--The Nicaraguan Center for Labor Unity and Action [CAUS] recently announced the creation of the Commission of Solidarity With the Salvadoran People. The Commission is formed by the following organizations: the Communist Party (PC), the Revolutionary Labor Movement (MORE), the Union of Nicaraguan Peasants (UCN), the Labor Center for Social Studies (COES) and the CAUS. The Commission of Solidarity With the Salvadoran People immediately adopted the following work plan: to hold assemblies and motivation meetings in each work center, to mobilize the workers in the districts neighboring the factories and to carry out economic activities through various means. The work plan points out that it will strive to counteract interventionism; to make governments such as ours break relations with the Christian democratic Military Junta; and to fight for the recognition of the Unified Directorate of the Salvadoran Revolution and the Revolutionary Democratic Front as the true representatives of the Salvadoran people. [Text] [Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 20 Aug 80 p 5] 9341

CSO: 3010

NAVAL INDUSTRY SEEN APPROACHING INTERNATIONAL LEVELS

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 22 Sep 80 p 8

[Editorial: "The Argentine Naval Industry"]

[Text] A country such as ours, with such extensive Atlantic coastlines and such long and deep rivers, provides an excellent environment for the navigational transportation of passengers and cargo. It is therefore essential that we have a shipping industry capable of providing the necessary elements to fulfill this promise.

The adoption of a Naval Plan presupposes strict compliance with its programs, as well as serial production. In this manner, the above-mentioned industry will be able to function on an international scale. Official estimates, as reported to this newspaper by the secretary of state for maritime interests, now include an acceptable level of work, in the large shipyards as well as the small ones. The difficulties perceived in the repair sector, not difficult to overcome, do not change the optimistic view. If the large shipyards for the most part have work orders extending on into next year, the smaller businesses have no problems in their market either; they have now delivered about 6,000 vessels of all types, and have exported yachts to significant markets.

The Argentine shipping industry has not been immune to the dangerous fluctuations of official management of the economy. Short-lived policies and the resulting inconsistencies led to a drop in efficiency. The adoption of the Naval Plan will correct that problem in an orderly fashion so that the shipping industry may expand.

An overview of construction in this sector reveals that there are 148 shipyards in the nation, of which 25 turn out larger ships, 64 are engaged in the serial production of light craft, and 59 are engaged in the single-hull production of light craft. These enterprises employ about 10,000 workers, and of that total, 7,800 work in the heavier construction.

Multipurpose ships such as the "Presidente Castillo" and "Manuel Belgrano," each with a dead-weight tonnage of 14,450, are now working up; the "Ingeniero Huergo" is in the final stages of workup, and is 239 meters long and has a capacity of 60,000 tons, the largest dead-weight tonnage possible in our industry; another multipurpose cargo ship, suitable for grain and semicontainers, has a capacity of 19,200 tons and is 168 meters long; the missile destroyer "Santisima Trinidad" will be delivered to the navy, and is on the ways; two crude oil tankers 215 meters long and with 58,500-ton capacities, and six MEKO-140 corvettes with missile- and rocket-launching systems, all are under construction at State Shipyards and Naval Factories (AFNE) in Rio Santiago. Argentine River Plate Shipyards, Inc. (ASTARSA), on the Lujan in Tigre, is ready to begin testing navigational equipment and other facilities on the oil tanker "Ingeniero Julio Krause," a 6,000 ton vessel built for Government Oil Deposits (YPF). It is also testing the electronic instruments on the oceanographic ship "Puerto Deseado," which displaces 2,000 tons and was built for the National Council for Science and Technology (CONACYT). The grain tanker "Ciudad de San Fernando," 25,780 tons, is in the final registry stages, and work is beginning on the same process for another grain ship of the same tonnage, "Ciudad de Tigre," for the Secretariat of Merchant Marine. In addition, the company is about to sign a contract to build a 15,000-ton oil tanker for a private firm.

The president of the Argentine Naval Industry Federation (FINA), moderately optimistic, claims that this period is the most brilliant in the industry's history, as well as the most prosperous, in terms of the number of vessels produced and in tonnage and variety. His assertion contains a note of caution based on possible risks, already experienced on other occasions, as a result of a lack of continuity.

In conclusion, the progress of the Argentine shipping industry allows us to contemplate the future of this sector with satisfaction. Its priority in our country is undeniable, not just in economic terms.

8926
CSO: 3010

'LA PRENSA' CONDEMNS CASTRO'S DEBASING OF CUBAN REFUGEES

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 21 Sep 80 Sec 2 p 1

[Editorial: "False Image of the Cuban Exiles"]

[Text] From the very first, Latin American and world public opinion was aware that Fidel Castro's offer to grant visas to "all those who want to leave Cuba" was mitigated by certain curious--even suspicious--circumstances that suggested that the Cuban dictator might be playing dirty pool. This unprecedented event in the history of political asylum in Latin America, in which 10,000 Cubans stayed in the gardens and grounds of the Peruvian Embassy in Havana, was undoubtedly a true indication of the degree of discontent that existed in the island population, and of the consequent desire to emigrate. However, accredited diplomats in the Cuban capital were already aware that among the thousands who were clamoring to obtain a safe-conduct out of the country, the Castro regime had included several hundred undesirables and police personnel for the purpose of provoking incidents that would cast doubts on the quality of those who had decided to go into exile.

These provocations took on greater force when the "boatlift" between Havana and Miami began a month later. By the end of the lift, about 10,000 Cubans who had crossed the Caribbean in fragile vessels were admitted to the United States as exiles. Castro took advantage of the situation to launch the most vicious attack, both verbal and physical, against those who left Cuba day after day. At the same time, he opened the prisons to let out not a few felons, who along with drug addicts, thieves, henchmen and spies were lumped falsely with the exiles in the contingents that left the island.

Only a few weeks had passed when the "elements" began to reveal their true nature in the camps where they had been placed. Disciplinary problems, escape attempts, fights, aggression, attacks against the guards and facilities, thefts and rapes reflected a lamentable state of affairs. The perpetrators of these shameful acts were in the minority, but there were enough of them to create an atmosphere of suspicion regarding the behavior of all. Skilled in these matters, the Castro agents achieved great success in the first of their actions in the United States, giving rise to doubts and reservations about the majority of the exiles.

The incidents that took place at McCoy Camp, where 5,000 Cubans are living and where a group of criminals took over the place, reached indescribable excesses.

Meanwhile, another incident took place in Lima, this time for only a short period. This incident revealed the true colors of some of the elements Castro sent out of the country as so-called exiles. A group of more than 150 of them took over a plane for the purpose of going to Miami. They took 15 passengers and the crew hostage. When they refused to let the hostages go, the skyjackers were declared "air pirates" by the government in Lima, and the usual negotiations began immediately. After 24 hours the skyjackers gave up and were taken back to the camp where they were being housed.

These are unfortunate episodes whose spontaneity is doubtful. The events of McCoy Camp and the Lima Airport cannot be divorced from the circumstances that preceded the departure of the Cuban exiles for the United States and Peru. Castro's game has been exposed: it consisted of leading people to believe that the perpetrators of the incidents and those guilty of the most blatant outrages were the exiles, or as Castro says, "those who are fighting against me," those who "wanted to leave Cuba in order to escape the law."

That attempt to distort the facts was not limited to the legal sphere; it also extended to the ideological sphere, with false arguments. The main one is that, according to Castro, "Those who have remained in Cuba, . . . those who work and live there, are with me. They are peaceful, well-mannered people." For that reason, in line with the word from Havana, the Peruvian left has called the Cuban refugees "trash," all of them, without exception, and has asked that they be expelled from the country.

The false picture Castro has tried to paint for the world of the men and women who decided to shake off the oppression of tyranny and leave Cuba, should now be corrected by those--we are referring to the Cuban exiles in the United States, Latin America and Spain--who are able to organize a worldwide campaign to clear up this situation and put things in perspective.

8926
CSO: 3010

SUPREME COURT RULES IN FAVOR OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 19 Sep 80 p 10

[Text] The expulsion of students who belong to the religious sect Jehovah's Witnesses, all minors, "is objectively unreasonable, and therefore constitutes an invalid annulment of the right to education of the minors on whose behalf the suit has been filed," ruled the Supreme Court of Justice of the Province of Buenos Aires.

The ruling came in response to a suit filed by some parents, claiming that Resolution 9/78 of the Buenos Aires Ministry of Education is unconstitutional. The court upheld the complaint because the resolution "rigidly requires the expulsion of minor students."

The superior court objects to the first article of the resolution, which refers to the worship of paternal symbols, in that it contradicts Articles 31 and 190 of the provincial constitution.

In his ruling, Dr Emilio P. Gnecco stated that "the regulation of rights can not reach the extreme of distorting or annihilating them," and added that primary or common education has been established in the provincial constitution as a right and an obligation. The same thing is true of the national constitution and the Universal Declaration of the Rights of Man, approved by the United Nations General Assembly in 1948, and the American declaration of those rights.

Right to Education

The same minister of the court also indicated that "the obligation to provide elementary education is incumbent upon not only the students and their parents, who are required by the state to provide a certain degree of instruction for their children, but also upon public officials charged with guaranteeing education when necessary, thereby protecting the right of children to obtain education even against the wishes of their parents."

8926
CSO: 3010

DISCONTENTED LAOTIANS PRESENT THEIR DEMANDS

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 22 Sep 80 p 7

[Text] The regional representative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees from Southeast Asia, George Gordon Lennox, reported that he will ask the Argentine Government to study the possibility of providing new employment opportunities for the Laotian families who are living in rural areas and are not satisfied with their present occupations.

Gordon Lennox, in statements made to NOTICIAS ARGENTINAS, described the situation of Laotians who came to this country under the aid program implemented by the Ministry of the Interior, and claimed that "some of them are having problems now, either in adjusting to the new environment or in the wages they are earning."

The office of the UN High Commissioner in this city received a visit yesterday from 13 families of Laotians (some 50 people) who had left their homes in the agricultural areas of Santa Fe and had traveled to this city to request a transfer to other countries.

Three of the leaders of this group, who spoke acceptable Spanish, stated, "Our children go hungry because we earn barely 350,000 pesos for our agricultural work; moreover, we are not adjusting to this life."

The heads of these Laotian families stated that they want to go to the United States, but for that they need for the Argentine Government to issue them passports, process their visas and help them pay for the trip and their daily needs.

Gordon Lennox spoke with these heads of household, offering them economic assistance to solve their housing, clothing and health problems, as long as they would agree to go back to their homes in Santa Fe.

For now, the local office of the High Commissioner has taken charge of providing for the lodging of these families in a hotel in Zone 11, until an agreement is reached.

Some Laotians said they could get better jobs in this city, because they are trained for technical and electronic jobs, and they know a little of the language now.

Gordon Lennox pointed out that the aid program provided for the Laotians included work with housing, as is now offered in the agricultural areas. He said they would probably not be able to settle here "with the housing problems that exist."

Gordon Lennox was asked if there are problems only with those 13 families, and he said that there are other groups that are not adjusting and that "we are seeking a solution" to their problems.

He reported that two representatives of the United Nations office are on a tour of Misiones, implementing the aid program for a group of Laotians who are working in the harvest of mate and tea.

The representative of the High Commissioner was asked if there is any possibility that the dissatisfied Laotians will leave the country, and he said, "It is very difficult, because countries such as the United States, Canada, France and other European countries will not accept them immediately, since although they do have programs for refugees, they are designed for people who are still in Southeast Asia, not in other countries."

Gordon Lennox concluded by stating that he is maintaining constant contact with Argentine authorities in the hopes of helping the refugees, "as is our duty."

8926
CSO: 3010

BBA HEAD CALLS FOR WOMEN PARTICIPATION IN POLITICS

Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 29 Sep 80 p 1

[Article by Anthony Forbes]

[Text] Acting Magistrate Mrs Janet Bostwick Saturday urged Bahamian women to fight for seats in Parliament to become part of the most "effective and powerful" decision-making body in the nation.

Mrs Bostwick, the first female president of the Bahamas Bar Association, also challenged women to rehabilitate our society and restore old values.

"I call you to action. Fight inequality, fight immorality, fight the decadence of our society," Mrs Bostwick said during the Business and Professional Women's Association installation banquet at the Nassau Beach Hotel.

She told women: "Fig t for a place in the Lower House of our Legislature, for unless we are there, we are really not a part of what ought to be the most effective and powerful decision-making body in our country."

"It is time to get in there and show our men how it ought to be done," she said.

She said that the women have proven themselves to be more responsible than the men, yet still accept the second class citizenship imposed them.

"We have not agitated for the legislative reforms which were recognized as necessary more than two decades ago," she said, adding that matrimonial, inheritance and property laws with regard to women are most antiquated.

She said that each year there is talk of changing them. "They probably will, but have we said what we want?" she queried.

Mrs Bostwick said that young women must be taught that there are far more rewarding careers than attempting to snare a man who will thereafter take care of them.

"We must impress on our young men that truly great men achieve heights and retain them by diligent hard work which far surpasses the toil of the average man," she said.

She said the youth must be convinced it is wrong to prey on others, to benefit from taking advantage of others and that sooner or later we reap just what we sow in life.

"We must show the young that we refuse to honour or hold in esteem those who enrich themselves by crafty or dishonest means and by exploitation of the weak."

She said that for too long Bahamians have been content with orators and that there has been too much talk in our country, most of it by men.

"Talk has become repetitious espousing unrealistic programmes and lofty ideas, but there has been little action," Mrs Bostwick said.

She said that lack of achievement has sometimes been successfully, and at other times not so successfully, covered by a multitude of words.

"It is time for the orators to stop talking so that men and women of action can intervene," she added.

She said that the Bahamas has long relied on its women for stability and that the women are concerned about their homes, families, religion and future.

"More and more women are anxious to improve themselves," Mrs Bostwick said. "Usually they make more use of the education available to them. We are ambitious."

Of mounting concern to every citizen of our country, she said, should be the growing and frightening menace to life, personal safety, property, homes, on the streets, in schools, on the playground, in business places and in the church.

She said that the BPWA should be concerned because one of its objectives is to awaken and encourage a realization of women's responsibilities in the economic, political and social development of the Bahamas and in world affairs.

"But what can we do about it? You say, individually, probably nothing. But together and with the desire, the aspiration to do something about it, you can and you will," she said.

She pointed out that the women's civic pride and contributions to the community are praiseworthy, that they have volunteered for jury duty and are involved in rehabilitation of your girls.

"I invite you to look further ahead. I challenge you to rehabilitate our society," she said, noting that too often rehabilitation has been thought of as only helping persons convicted of criminal offences or those physically handicapped.

"But surely, if crime becomes rampant in a society, if there is little or no denouncement of corruption in highest offices, if there is too much aimlessness among the majority of our youth, if morality is the order of the day, if those who seek not after money and power but after greatness and the preservation of the dignity of man--if they despair; what other signs or symptoms do you need of a sick society which, unless rehabilitated, would become entirely decadent?" she asked.

"I suggest that we must restore old values," she said. "We must again instill self-pride and self-esteem in our people. The old fashioned virtues are still required--and we must restore them.

CSO: 3020

SDP'S SOLOMON SCORES PM'S DRUG TRAFFICKING STAND

Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 30 Sep 80 p 1

[Excerpts] The leader of the Official Opposition Social Democratic Party today questioned whether Prime Minister Pindling was serious in his intent to stamp out drug trafficking in the Bahamas.

Mr Norman Solomon said he could not accept the present "laissez-faire attitude" of Government to some of the things going on in the country "if the Prime Minister is really serious about it."

Mr Solomon agreed with the Prime Minister that the job (on drugs) can't be done with available Bahamian equipment. "Of course we need assistance from America if the job is to be done," he said.

But, he said, if Mr Pindling were serious about the statements made in Washington yesterday "then he is one of the most incapable of people."

Mr Solomon said that eight years or so ago the Drug Enforcement Administration in Florida was "actively engaged in work in the Bahamas," but not only were Bahamian authorities not being cooperative, but they were downright obstructive.

"There were people--agents in the field--who told me they found it impossible to work in the Bahamas," he charged. And he said this was confirmed by 'higher-ups' in the DEA. "They couldn't understand the non-cooperation of the Bahamian authorities," said Mr Solomon.

The SDP leader said he raised all this matter publicly at the time but nothing was done about it.

And Mr Solomon said he would like to ask the Prime Minister why Mr Joe Lehder of Norman's Cay had not been deported from the country when it was discovered what was going on at that tiny Exuma Cay? "Why was he not deported, but just put on the stop list?" Mr Solomon asked.

He said it was his information that Mr Lehder had been back in the country "often" and he wanted to know if the rumour were true that the Prime Minister, a Cabinet Minister and a government back-bencher had visited Norman's Cay as the guest of Mr Lehder?

"A government back-bencher told me he got the red carpet treatment when he visited," Mr Solomon said.

Mr Solomon said the MIAMI HERALD had published the record of Mr Lehder and government could hardly plead innocence that they had no idea of his background.

"Further, I would also like to ask the Prime Minister about Mr Frank Brady at Hawksnest, Cat Island," who, he said, was recently picked up on a drugs charge in the West Palm Beach area and had to post $250,000 bail.

"Why is he only on the stop list? Why wasn't he deported from the country?" asked Mr Solomon.

Mr Solomon wanted to know why the government was "just messing about" with Mr Lehder and Mr Brady and had not closed down their operations and thrown them out of the country.

"How can we believe the Prime Minister in his 'serious intent to stamp out this (drugs) when this is allowed to go on," said Mr Solomon.

Further, he said it was totally wrong to ascribe all the drug traffic to American gangsters. "What about the pushers on Bay Street?" he asked. Surely, he said, the police could do something about that!" "But, no, they still harass the tourists and give us a bad name, and letters get written to the press and to travel magazines both here and abroad."

"No, I just don't believe the Prime Minister is serious about it. There's too much of a laissez-faire attitude about the whole damn thing," he said.

Mr Ed Moxey, speaking as Administrative Officer of the People's National Council, said the remarks by the Prime Minister over the "Today" show would likely result in further damage to our already damaged Bahamian economy.

"By implication the PM has confirmed all that the US Congressman (Harry Yourell) had to say. But whereas the Congressman's revelation may have reached a few thousand, the PM's utterances have reached millions," he said today.

And he said "If what the Prime Minister said is correct, then the official opposition in Parliament should immediately request an emergency session of Parliament to deal with this very damaging revelation (that American gangsters are invading the country)."

Mr Moxey said the Prime Minister owes it to his colleagues, to the opposition and to the people of this country to explain exactly what is happening.

CSO: 5300

MORE ISRAELI AGRICULTURAL AID MAY BE FORTHCOMING

Bridgetown ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 29 Sep 80 p 1

[Text]

Barbados might get more technical assistance from Israel in the area of agriculture.

Isreal's Ambassador to Barbados, Mr. Moshe Melamed said that he had discussions with the Ministry of Agriculture with the possibility of giving technical assistance.

The diplomat who was due to leave Barbados yesterday after a one-week visit, said that there was increasing scope of Israeli technical assistance for Barbados.

He also had discussions with the Minister of External Affairs, Mr. Henry Forde and other officials of that Ministry.

According to Mr. Melamid who was on one of his periodic visits to Barbados, the discussions centred around the political development in the Middle East and in the Caribbean.

Mr. Melamed who has been the ambassador for the past two years, said that he observed a very big progress in Barbados in the field of economic social development and the increase in tourism.

The diplomat said that it is hoped to hold on-the-spot-courses in Barbados by Israeli lectures, in fields indicated by the local authorities.

Barbados has already benefitted from overseas courses in Israel in the areas of agriculture and community development.

Mr. Melamid also has responsibility for Jamaica, Dominica and Grenada.

From Barbados, he was expected to visit Dominica to discuss possible training in areas as pointed out by that country. He has already visited Jamaica.

CSO: 3020

INTERIOR MINISTER'S ROLE IN COCAINE TRADE NOTED

PY161745 Sao Paulo VEJA in Portuguese 8 Oct 80 p 72

[Exclusive report by Luiz Claudio Cunha, from La Paz]

[Text] During the first week in July of this year, a twin-engined Piper Aztec exploded over a populated area located 15 kilometers from La Paz. The plane's three occupants were killed. The Bolivian police found several grips containing $2 million in $50 and $100 bills. Intrigued, the police were examining the baggage, when a helicopter landed in the midst of the parts of the destroyed plane and the owner of the air taxi firm to which the Piper belonged descended: It was Col Luis Arce Gomez, at that time chief of the army's intelligence service (SIE). With harsh gestures Arce tore up the report drafted by the police and ordered them to return to La Paz and maintain absolute secrecy regarding this incident.

In this year alone, three of Arce's planes have been destroyed in accidents that have never been cleared up. In Bolivia, the deals of the colonel, who has been interior minister since Gen Luis Garcia Meza became president, are not within the reach of police investigations. "The madman" [El Loco"], as his comrades in arms call him, or "Arcesino" [play on his name and the Spanish word for murderer] to his innumerable enemies, Col Luis Arce Gomez, 42, is a veteran regarding contraventions. During the government of Rene Barrientos, when he was a captain, he got involved in the smuggling of leather [couro] and cigarettes to Paraguay. While climbing the ladder of honors, he was also climbing the ladder in clandestine traffic. Today Arce is the brain of the militarymen who are involved in the billion-dollar traffic of cocaine.

Arce's paramour, Rosario Poggi de Quesada, an attractive 37-year-old brunette, who during the 70's was one of the couriers between Spain and Bolivia, is officially the general secretary of the Interior Ministry, but unofficially she occupies the second place in the colonel's clandestine empire. Norberto "Bubby" Salomon, an air force colonel and Arce's partner in air transport enterprises, is also accumulating posts in the government and in the illegal organization while he is subordinated to the Interior Ministry. After the victorious coup headed by Garcia Meza, Bubby Salomon was rewarded with the post of military attache in Caracas. A plane belonging to Salomon crashed in May in an airport in Beni Department with 320 kilograms of cocaine on board.

The salary of a colonel in Bolivia is $800, and yet Salomon is the owner of three ranches and three houses in La Paz, which he rents out. Like the majority of the uniformed stars who trade in drugs, Salomon has served in Santa Cruz de La Sierra, the center of cocaine traffic in Bolivian territory. Rebellious generals leave Santa Cruz heading for La Paz, and cocaine paste leaves it headed for the rest of the world.

In a meeting last June with the Santa Cruz cocaine magnates, Gen Hugo Echeverria, commander of II Corps, which is based in the city, received a donation of $2.7 million so that he could overthrow the government and scare away the specter of repression against trafficking. Echeverria promised Garcia Meza that he and a group of friends, "my friends from Montero," according to the general, would in some way or another collect the necessary $3 billion in order to pay off the foreign debt. Montero, 45 kilometers from Santa Cruz, is virtually the top free cocaine zone in Bolivian territory.

Outside of Bolivia, Arce's friends are always exposed to sudden shocks. Alfredo "Cutuchi" Gutierrez, the owner of a landing strip located at Kilometer 7 of the Santa Cruz-Cochabamba highway, which is encircled by high walls and is equipped with searchlights that are perfect for landing at night, was arrested in Miami during May 1979 while in charge of a plane that was full of cocaine. He stayed no longer than 24 hours in jail, but this incident alerted Arce about the special care that must be taken regarding Miami, the main door through which drugs enter the United States.

Bolivia currently maintains six consuls in Miami, one of whom is Arce's father. All of them were picked personally by the interior minister, who is afraid of diplomatic slipups, but he seems to be convinced that he is not exposed to eventual economic reprisals from the U.S. Government.

During a party held recently by friends in La Paz, Arce, quite boldly summed up the points on which he bases his confidence. "Tin represents $400 million a year, but cocaine gives us $1.2 billion," the minister explained. "If the Americans suspend their aid, I do not make myself responsible for the swamping of the United States with cocaine."

CSO: 5300

FORMER PRESIDENT FIGUERES DISCUSSES NATIONAL LIBERATION PARTY, ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

San Jose LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 24, 26 Sep 80

[Interview with former Costa Rican President Jose Figueres Ferrer, by Wilmer Murillo in the column "Political Wednesdays in the Republic"; date and place not given]

[24 Sep 80, p 9]

[Text] I. One Must Decide Whether To Be Poor or Rich

Jose Figueres Ferrer (Don Pepe), regarded by many as an old man exhausted by power, continues to cause trouble in Costa Rica. Many say that he has no influence in his party, but he shrugs his shoulders and says, "I am too old to think of parties. I think of the country."

Don Pepe, as both his supporters and his opponents call him, is after all independent of spirit. He often says he came into politics unintentionally, and he has three times been president of Costa Rica.

At 86, Figueres devotes the greater part of his time to the study of the problems of the country, but his greatest desire is to devote himself to writing. In this exclusive interview, Jose Figueres explains to the readers of LA REPUBLICA many of his points of view. He says that Costa Ricans must decide now if they want to continue to enjoy the advantages of civilization or return to Franciscan poverty. The former choice will require that we undertake great enterprises and the latter that we give up much. The following is the first part of the interview.

[Question] Recently the country has seen Jose Figueres complaining of the seriousness of the economic and social situation because it afflicts the whole country. But tell me, what are the solutions Jose Figueres offers the country to help it retreat from the precipice and pursue a democratic plan?

[Answer] First of all, there are no easy nor speedy solutions. Secondly, one must ask what kind of country we want. We must decide if we want to continue to advance along the current path of material wealth or if we want the country to return to Franciscan poverty. If we want all of the conveniences which civilization is bringing us we have no alternative but to deal with the industrial countries. Not necessarily solely with the industrial countries of the West, but with all the industrial countries. But here there is a terrible opposition to large investments and large businesses. The people are accustomed to believing that we can produce abundantly with crumbs--with a little agriculture here and a little there. The country needs great investments of capital, three or four large enterprises without which no foreign investments can be developed.

[Question] What enterprises would you cite?

[Answer] For example, the exploitation of aluminum. We are paying with the consequences of the agitation created with regard to Alcoa. Today we would be a rich country if we had not committed the error of causing that contract to collapse. Now there are a number of possibilities for exploiting aluminum, which is very big business, and might bring in large investments rapidly. Another example. We have four gold mines, with veins which were not very profitable when the cost of gold was $28 an ounce. Today it would pay to exploit them to help the country speedily with the balance of payments and its enrichment in general. One can see that when there is talk of this opposition arises and the parades in the streets begin.

A pipeline should be built to carry oil from the Pacific to the Atlantic. But the emotional opposition to these projects is tremendous. They have to do with the violation of sovereignty, the possibility that the pipes will break and the crustaceans will be destroyed. Well. We have the possibility of exploiting copper. All of these require great expenditures for research and investments in the exploitation of these resources which a country of 2 million inhabitants cannot undertake. If we do not want to deal with the industrial countries, then let us say once and for all that we want to be poor and return to going barefoot. But the contradictions I see are enormous. We have what is a great and very expensive spiritual luxury--an expenditure on universities of about 1,100,000,000 a year. Increasing numbers of people want to go to the university. And how can we pay for this? I recently told a group of university students marching in the streets that if they do not want large investments, let them leave the universities, abandon their shoes and return to the fields. Because we cannot have both. It is like the girls who want to get married but who do not want to date men. I think it is possible to undertake great programs for national enrichment despite the blow oil has dealt us. But we must lose our fear of big business, and abandon the superstition that we Costa Ricans are not capable of negotiating advantageously for the country. In the farm sector, 100,000 hectares should be planted to trees speedily, because the natural forests are being exhausted. All of this requires the introduction of capital and technology, but above all value. In the case of sugarcane the technology is very simple. There is great knowledge in the sugar mills of the country. Many of the mills can even be built in this country. It would be a blessing from heaven if this were done. But again we come up against the fact that the owners of the mills are exploiters, and the country would not benefit. I do not understand. If these contradictions are not clarified, no one can commit himself to rescue the country from the pit into which it is sinking every day.

[Question] What in your view are the elements making Costa Rican society sick and feeding the conflicts contributing to its breakdown and disappearance?

[Answer] The same elements as contributed to the social development in the past 30 or 40 years, and which are responsible for the fact that we are less badly off than the rest of Central America. There has been a series of forces here which working together have proven wholesome. First the movement of the nationalists and reformists which culminated in the party of General Volio. Then the Calderon communist movement which began social reform. Then came the PLN [National Liberation Party], which for 30 years has been transforming Costa Rican society on the basis of consuming everything and more of it. These forces had a net positive balance. Now that we have reached the very edge of the blanket, as the saying goes, the effect is negative. We are experiencing the reverse of the crisis of the 1930s, when consumption reached a low. All of these renewing forces in society have been added together in the belief that the economy has no limits, and that a strike will suffice for wealth to emerge. What is emerging now is the paper which makes prices go up.

[Question] You have often been seen with President Carazo. Do you support his style of government?

[Answer] My thesis is that it is the only government the country has, the struggle is very hard and whether one agrees with the government or the president or not it is necessary to support them in this crisis. For example, with regard to the loans. I can tell you this is not the first government opposed to the PLN I have supported. I aided the Trejos administration considerably. As time passes I realize that the feelings called democratic opposition go to the extreme of blocking progress. This is a derangement of democracy.

[Question] Since you are constantly engaged in exhortations to national dialog and civic struggles to rescue the country from extremism, does this mean that you have lost influence in your party?

[Answer] I do not know, nor do I care. I am too old to think of parties. I am thinking of the country. If I lose influence or gain it, it will depend in large part on the wise approach to certain problems, and the luck I have in getting people to want to study them. I find that many people listen to me and often correct me. Often I am wrong, above all in economic matters, which are so difficult. But in general, many people still listen to me.

[Question] You have been accused of having launched a style of government of an imperial sort, of pursuing an all-concealing autocracy in politics. Do you believe this is a proper observation?

[Answer] It is difficult for one to know if criticisms of him are correct. Probably many people have said this in good faith.

[Question] Do you believe that the PLN has a mandate to win the coming elections?

[Answer] Well, it is a party, whose mission is presumably to govern. It also has a mandate to analyze the situation and prepare to assume power. Winning elections can mean nothing if there is no study of solutions or search for new paths. You have used the word mandate. There is one, but it is the mandate to know, for whoever wants to govern.

[Question] Do you believe that there is a split in the government ranks, and that this might possibly be a factor the PLN should be ready to exploit?

[Answer] Yes. I believe that there are a number of trends and possible candidates going to a convention following the roots established by the PLN, more or less. I believe that we continue to lead the nation as a party, and I am happy that our opponents are following this line and having an educational convention which will have a good effect on political education. This will produce a candidate. Would that he might be a good and responsible one. If he wins let him serve, and if he does not, let him not be a hindrance.

[Question] Various groups have been organized in the country which claim that this is being done to save democracy. Do you believe that this is a hypocritical action or one worthy of applause? Is democracy really threatened by foreign-inspired extremism?

[Answer] Well, yes. I would say that democracy is somewhat in crisis. Those who claim to be of the left and those who claim to be of the right are attacking it. It also depends on what is meant by democracy. It is frequently confused with the juridical system. We have a highly sophisticated one. But the fact is that we are too civilized in this country. There must be some of everything in these groups, people acting in good faith, and people working to the detriment of democracy. All extremist actions are steps backward in the juridical society to which we Costa Ricans aspire.

[Question] The communists often make distinctions in the old scholastic manner, between freedoms--that to die of hunger and that to exploit the people. Do you believe that freedom is something simple, unqualified? Do you think that this style applied by communism involves dangers for our country?

[Answer] In my view one extreme is as bad as the other. Unfortunately, the word communism is used today for everything. I would favor talk of the communists with a certain respect for a way of thinking, an economic and political system. Often the term is used in a way which proves offensive. I believe that among those who regard themselves as communists there is a wide range, from responsible people, intellectuals or idealists, to opportunists, just as there are in other trends of thinking. Above all, there is much dogma. Things are seen as each one wants in accordance with this or that document.

[Question] You have mentioned the Russians here. Do you believe they are working to put an end to our democracy?

[Answer] They are very busy in Afghanistan and with other things. Here we have expelled two Russian embassy employees who had been in Moscow 2 months before. There was a strike in Limon and they were blamed for the whole hullaballoo. It is ridiculous. The Soviet Union has a serious and capable government which does not commit idiocies. However some members of the Cuban government are still thinking of liberating these countries in their fashion. In my view this is a danger.

[Question] I have heard it said that this business of models of development is nothing but words. How do you conceive of a realistic attitude for dealing with problems? Do you believe that there are Costa Rican formulae which can produce a developmental explosion?

[Answer] This business of models is vast nonsense. One talks of models to conceal ignorance. It seems to me that there is enough practical sense in the country to seek a solution to the problems. This business of adapting to models is proceeding from one dogma to another. In addition, it is a constant contradiction. Under the present government there have been demonstrations urging adoption of a liberal model. And the same page which reports this announces that the minister of economy has fixed the price for onions. Everything which mixes into doctrinary affairs is contradictory, because life is stronger than doctrine.

[26 Sep 80, p 5]

[Text] It Is Dangerous To Believe That the PLN Has Victory Assured

In its Wednesday, 24 September issue, LA REPUBLICA provided its readers with a verbatim account of some of the views of former President of the Republic Don Jose Figueres, obtained in an exclusive interview on various national problems. In this second and final portion of the interview, the former president speaks of his dissatisfaction with the way in which his party has engaged in the opposition, and the style of the government in handling its relations with the legislative assembly.

It is often said that there is currently a growing trend toward loss of confidence and certainty. This creates fertile ground for the ever-present forces of division, ready to exploit those who are uncertain and to stir up those who are disturbed.

Despite everything, Don Pepe expresses the view that there is still, fortunately, a great deal of pragmatism in Costa Rica for seeking solutions to the political and social dilemmas. "I believe that after all there is some degree of consensus. Otherwise things would already have exploded."

Among other things, he says that "we must change our attitude, think more and try to become a more alert and informed nation."

The following are the main aspects of the interview.

[Question] Are you satisfied with the opposition being provided by the parliamentary faction of the National Liberation Party, and the party in general?

[Answer] No, sir. Neither has the government handled relations with the parliament well, nor has the faction focused on the country, above the party and petty desires.

[Question] Would you say that after what many have called the disaster of the Carazo administration, the PLN now has its triumph in the coming elections assured?

[Answer] That may be, but there is nothing more dangerous than finding victory easy. In the great real battles in history, the victory cry has often been the signal for rout, with everything ending in defeat.

[Question] Do you believe that despite the economic and social tension, we are advancing toward calm elections?

[Answer] It is not a matter of belief, but it is what I desire. With these strike movements and the battle between the assembly and the executive branch we are going into the elections in a turbulent atmosphere. The day payment of government employees is suspended, the day because of a banana strike, the company tells us that's enough--what will happen?

[Question] Don't you believe in the ability of the Costa Ricans to take charge of the banana plantations?

[Answer] Indeed there is much greater ability than 30 years ago, because there are more people and they are better trained. But when someone takes charge, this does not mean that everything goes smoothly. While things are being reorganized, there are some difficult years. And I think that this business of the company leaving may happen. We are tweaking the tail of the animal excessively.

[Question] Many place emphasis on the need for national dialog. In your view is there a dogma of self-sufficiency in the executive branch, as opposed to what could be a normal process of discussion with all groups, its own and its opponents, on resolution of the problems affecting the country?

[Answer] I have always supported every effort at understanding and discussion, but I understand how difficult it is. They are all full of prejudice.

[Question] Would you say then that the country is faced with an insoluble problem, deriving from the difficulty of making up groups with sufficient authority to deal with the crisis?

[Answer] What is an insoluble problem? When a patient has cancer he must resign himself to death. But a country cannot die. There must be solutions, not insoluble situations. You do not believe that the country will cease to exist tomorrow, nor do I.

[Question] Is the problem then a lack of competence?

[Answer] It is perfectly normal to have differences of opinion among human beings, above all in a democracy. I am not alarmed. We will see what direction the next government will take. I recall the crisis of the '30s. It was much more serious than that we have had to date. However, we survived. Here we are alive and kicking. Every day has its problems and its solutions. It is good for the people to suffer a little, above all those who oppose big business. If the Alcoa contract had been signed we would be in another world. But I believe that even the current president marched with the students to oppose it. Now he must be sorry.

[Question] Speaking of big business, Vice President Alfaro said that he was morally certain that there was oil in Costa Rica. Do you believe that there is oil here?

[Answer] I do not know what the relation between morality and geology is, but he certainly meant he had a presentiment. This is something about which I know a great deal. There is oil where there is oil, of that I am certain. Even expert geologists think so. It is very certain that there is oil in Venezuela.

[Question] Do you believe that the relaxation of the acute antagonisms existing today between the different blocs of mankind has been effectively achieved, or has the world been dangerously plunged into a new version of the cold war?

[Answer] There is nothing new in this. Just a mere 2000 years ago we had a great struggle between Rome and Carthage, culminating in the total destruction of the latter. In Europe we have had struggles between France and England, England and Spain. A number against Germany and Germany against a number of other countries. It has all culminated now in the division of power between two great superpowers baring their teeth at each other. In reality, this is an instinctive, biological matter. Each side disguises it with ideology. Some are fighting for social justice and others for freedom and democracy. This is the sad reality.

[Question] Do you believe that the revolutionary movements in Latin America have advanced or retreated? Where do you see the points of greatest tension?

[Answer] The word revolution has been worn out. There is even talk of revolutionary luncheons. These are nothing but absurdities. Because the ideals of the era were abandoned for half a century in Central America, there is a focus of great tension. Central American society, outside of Costa Rica, is in the hands of dictatorships. They have subjugated these peoples by the force of arms and they keep them in that situation. I see the danger of a massacre in Guatemala and El Salvador. In Latin America, the peasant population blocs of pre-Columbian origin are large. They still feel like conquered people. Here we do not have this.

[Question] What do you believe are the most urgent problems in Central America? How will they affect us?

[Answer] A period of a quarter or half a century of great suffering seems inevitable to me. The problems have been allowed to accumulate, just as those pertaining to oil were neglected. Guatemala and El Salvador have not developed at all. Nicaragua was under a dynasty for almost half a century. When evils are allowed to accumulate it is like the pressure in a boiler. Either the pressures are vented or it blows up. One can only put up an umbrella and pray to God that the consequences will be as minimal as possible.

[Question] Do you believe that communism is incompatible with freedom?

[Answer] It is a question of definition. If we replace the word communism with socialism, meaning a society in which the economy is state controlled, centralized and planned, it seems to me that the Scandinavian countries, England itself, and the countries of Western Europe have a high level of socialization with a high degree of freedom. Yes, they are compatible. What happens is that a handful of agitators in this country have their minds filled with dogma. But I believe that socialism and freedom are perfectly compatible, just as Christianity and modern political systems are.

[Question] Do you believe that the "gnashing of teeth" began with President Carazo's government, or that the crisis already existed and developed during the administrations you headed?

[Answer] Both. During the PLN administrations we accumulated problems. We let the people believe that it was possible to continue to improve indefinitely. Generally, a single 4-year government cannot do either much evil or much good. Probably this one, made up of people who have spent many years in the opposition, without government responsibility, has precipitated many evils. But I do not believe it invented new ones. They were already on the way. And I will tell you something else. It is September now, and I remember that after 2 years, in the governments which it fell to me to head, there were more tensions than now. Opposition to the government was generalized. Time will be needed to judge Carazo.

[Question] You have been president of Costa Rica three times. Would you like to be again?

[Answer] I understand how hypothetical the question is, not only because of the constitution, but due to my age. My dream would be to be able to devote myself to writing, but it is difficult for me. Many people, I do not know why, seek me out. My office is like a public place. In addition to domestic affairs, I have to deal with international problems. My office resembles a Cuban or Nicaraguan consulate. People from various countries pass through. I have been too busy to write and I have this ambition. I think I should put down certain things in writing.

[Question] Of the politicians aspiring to the presidency, which do you see as most capable of drafting a new, imaginative plan equal to resolving the economic and social crisis the country is experiencing?

[Answer] It seems to me it would be unwise to venture an opinion, either for the PLN or its opposition, but least of all in this coalition.

[Question] Do you believe that if the PLN wins in the 1982 elections it will have an obligation to seek a combination of forces in the country in order to carry out the needed structural reforms?

[Answer] I do not know what this business of structural reforms is about. These are words. The obligation of the PLN, if it wins, is to seek a pragmatic solution to the problems based on a long-term orientation, which will doubtless be democratic or perhaps social democratic. But this thing about structures annoys me, just as the business of the ECLA [Economic Commission for Latin America] and liberal models does. It is a way of saying one does not know. Of making an impression so others will believe one is wise. In Costa Rica, as everywhere else, what is most common is people who do not think, who have no solutions and who criticize a great deal. This is the most common thing, but we have no monopoly on it. What we must do is change our attitude, think more and seek to be a more alert and informed nation. The rest is abstract phrases designed to conceal ignorance.

[Question] Luis Alberto Monge said that he would back a great social pact to safeguard peace and democracy. What do you think about this?

[Answer] Carazo has also talked a great deal about this social pact. Perhaps it is thanks partly to this that the level of bellicosity is not greater. It is good to reiterate many ideals even if they cannot be achieved. Moreover, don't you believe that there is some degree of consensus? Otherwise things would already have exploded. You must realize that even in the strikes, the discussion was focused in the end on a juridical question. All of this presupposes a national consensus to the effect that we must live within the legal system. This is rather good in Costa Rica, despite everything.

[Question] Many believe that Monge presents the image of a defeated candidate and that this will affect the electorate. They say that the Orlich and Oduber situation will not be repeated. What reason would you give to the contrary?

[Answer] I do not understand this business of image. It is a foreign concept. Each individual is what he is. He projects one image to some and another to others. Monge was elected by democratic and proper methods. He should be supported as a candidate and as president if he wins.

[Question] It is said that Monge is in command in the PLN now. What role does he play in the liberation movement then, Jose Figueres?

[Answer] It seems to me that he should command in the PLN. He is the candidate and tomorrow I hope he will be the president. The others may be workers, ideologists, economists, what you will. May the Lord preserve us from central authority invested in the candidate.

Author's Note: Former President Jose Figueres had his 74th birthday yesterday. Due to a regrettable error, 12 years were added to his age in a statement published in the Wednesday portion of the interview. We offer our apologies to Don Pepe.

5157
CSO: 3010

ACOSTA NOTES IMPORTANT WORK DONE BY CDR

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 8 Sep 80 p 2

[Interview with Armando Acosta, National CDR Coordinator by Jesus Orta Ruiz: "The Committees for the Defense of the Revolution Emerged From Fidel's Trust in the People"]

[Text] The Committees for the Defense of the Revolution (CDR) are reaching their 20th anniversary with the same fighting spirit as on the historic occasion that marked their birth.

Counting their daily labor during these 20 years is a true epic. They were started as people's rearguard troops. They went on achieving such a degree of organization, such mobilizing capacity, that they have added to their basic task (revolutionary vigilance) numerous activities to support the economy, education, public health, institutionalization of the country and others.

On the eve of the CDR's 20th anniversary, an interview with Comrade Armando Acosta, member of the Central Committee of the party and national coordinator of the CDR's, is inevitable.

[Question] Comrade Armando Acosta, in your capacity as national coordinator of the CDR's, what aspect do you consider most important in the 20 years of existence of such a powerful organization of the masses?

[Answer] The 28th of this month will be exactly 20 years since that night on which our commander in chief called on the people to organize themselves into a system of revolutionary collective vigilance so that each block would be transformed into a solid and indestructible trench of the revolution. Since then many have been the battles and innumerable the struggles that the CDR members have carried out to defend the revolutionary process. But one thing becomes outstandingly evident: the deep trust of Fidel in the masses and the deep trust of the masses in Fidel.

I repeat, the CDR's arose from Fidel's faith in the people, a development that did not appear that day, but rather that was growing and becoming strong since the preparation of the attack on the Moncada barracks, where the full and total conviction is still demonstrated that the people longed for a true and final revolution, that the people could always be counted on in the certainty that they would answer: Present. Let us remember that in "History Will Absolve Me," Fidel states: "To this people whose anguished path is paved with deceptions and false promises, we were not going to say, 'We will give to you,' but rather, 'Here you are, fight now with all your strength so that freedom and happiness will be yours.'"

[Question] We know, Comrade Armando, that during these 20 years the committees have performed important tasks in various fields of social action. Has the plurality of fronts erased the basic character of the organization?

[Answer] In no way. The CDR's basic task continues to be the same: defense of the fatherland, constant surveillance of the enemy, always keeping our guard up. These 20 years are the best evidence of how the CDR members--counterpart of the Revolutionary Armed Forces and the Ministry of the Interior--have known how to fight against the criminal schemes of imperialism and its foreign and domestic agents, uselessly committed to destroying the revolution, killing its leaders and disturbing the safety and tranquillity of our working people. From the struggle of the rearguard when Playa Giron was attacked and in the October Crisis, to the vanguard action of the March of Fighting People, our organization has not let up in the daily battle against its enemies. That defense continues to be our basic task is specifically expressed in the motto of our 20th anniversary celebration: 'As in the mountains, as in Giron, as in war, without respite..."

[Question] However, we can say that the CDRs are accomplishing many tasks. Is that not true?

[Answer] In 1961, when our organization had completed its first year, Fidel was pointing out the extensive possibilities for it. "The CDRs," he said, "are bodies of the revolution; they are bodies of revolutionary power. Besides revolutionary tasks, as a revolutionary organization of the masses, you are called upon to fulfill various necessary and indispensable tasks for the revolution, that you must carry out with a great sense of responsibility, with a great sense of sacrifice." And he was correct. Our own structure, the arrangement of our organization, is the chief factor allowing the CDRs to be transformed into an effective mechanism for the participation of our organized people, from their own neighborhoods, to support economic, educational, cultural and social development in our country. The action of the CDR's has been outstanding in voluntary work, in the recovery of raw materials, in the movement of Model Fathers in Education, in the antipolio vaccine campaign, in blood donations and in bringing to each and every member of our organization the laws and principles that govern our society. Our organization is a powerful mobilizing tool, capable of taking on and fulfilling any task that the revolution entrusts to it, rapidly and enthusiastically. The CDRs have effectively contributed to the process of institutionalization of the country. From the early years they have offered solutions to various and important administrative tasks, at a time when the state did not have suitable mechanisms. The CDRs have contributed to establishing bodies of people's government.

[Question] What special meaning does the celebration of the 20th anniversary of the CDR's have?

[Answer] This 20th anniversary does have a special meaning, not only because of the number of years and the work achieved in this time, but because we are celebrating it in the year of the Second Party Congress. It is also significant that during this period we will hold the Second CDR Congress. For all these reasons, we propose to make our 20th anniversary the most enthusiastic, massive, fighting and patriotic celebration in the history of the CDRs. Every CDR member, as a symbol of the guerrilla spirit of our people, will wear a red beret, and the tricolor joy of our flag will appear everywhere, the purest emblem of our sovereignty, so stubbornly threatened by North American imperialism, the usurper of a piece of our territory--where the Yankee naval base is installed at Guantanamo Bay.

[Question] What objectives are the CDRs establishing to achieve the highest quality in the activities saluting the 20th anniversary?

[Answer] The main incentive toward this end is the massive and reliable CDR participation in our Second Special Emulation Party Congress and in the tasks that we have pledged ourselves to fulfill in saluting the extremely important meeting of the Cuban communists. Recently we delivered our commitments to the first secretary of the party Central Committee, and this document is a powerful spur for the CDR to fulfill with deep passion the specific goals that we have outlined to salute this great partisan event. We are also working to carry out the points made to us by the eighth plenary session of the party Central Committee, regarding increasing revolutionary vigilance, basically in the second shift for the guard, as well as surpassing our work in increasing blood donations, in supporting educational activity and in the self-financing of our organization.

[Question] What do you think has been the most outstanding act of the CDRs in the year of the Second Party Congress and of the 20th anniversary of the CDR?

[Answer] Without a doubt, their massive, enthusiastic and patriotic participation in the March of the Fighting People. The imperialist enemy imagined for awhile that our people had lowered their guard. He made contact with some proimperialist puppets in Latin America, and he believed the time was right to present a distorted image of the Cuban people to the world. In our country he relied on the only element that he could rely on, the lumpen, the antisocial, who found their cellars for the stateless in the embassies of Peru and Venezuela and in the U.S. interests office. But the world did not take long to realize that this scum was not our people. Hundreds of thousands of CDR members, in an organized manner, demonstrated their rejection of the antisocial and their condemnation of the imperialists. The marches, on 19 April and 17 May, were gigantic floods, as was the immense turnout for International Workers Day. The world was able to understand from that massive demonstration who are really the people of Cuba, and that the revolution lives--with more strength and determination every day, because our motto "Fatherland or Death" is not a rhetorical display but an irrevocable choice in the new Cuba. The turnout on 28 September will be a continuation of the March of the Fighting People, in which we will reaffirm our order that the antisocial get out of our society of workers; that the imperialist blockade of our country stop; that the marines on the Yankee naval base in Guantanamo be dismissed forever; that the Yankee spy flights that are violating our skies be terminated. The event will be magnificent and enthusiastic. It will be our salute to the great assembly of the party.

9545
CSO: 3010

EXPEDIPORT DEPUTY NOTES PORT UNLOADING DIFFICULTIES

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 26 Aug 80 p 2

[Interview with Gabriel Roqueta, EXPEDIPORT Deputy Director, by Vinas Alfonso]

[Text] The officially named Notice of Dispatch, better known as OPE-2, is a document that has brought many difficulties to the port-transport-domestic economy chain. To learn more details about this subject, JUVENTUD REBELDE prepared several questions for Gabriel Roqueta, deputy director of the Port Expediting Enterprise (EXPEDIPORT), in charge of dispatching cargos for import and export by sea as well as by air.

"OPE-2 is a document made up by the importing enterprises, those governed by the Ministry of Foreign Trade as well as by the State Committee for Economic Cooperation [CECE], the CEATM [State Committee for Technical and Material Supply] and others.

"The OPE-2 contains the basic details of a specific merchandise: consignee, contract number, brands, quantity of bundles, gross weight, name of ship, approximate date of arrival, etc. In the OPE-2 one also specifies if the product shipped is reactive, explosive, corrosive, poisonous, inflammable or refrigerated, in accordance with the various international codifications.

"Of course, through the OPE-2 the importing enterprise gives the order to the shipper so that, once the customs procedures have been taken care of, he is able to unload any product from the port area and have it reach the recipients in the domestic economy."

[Question] It would interest us to know through what channel or channels the enterprises receive all this information that is so necessary for making up the OPE-2.

[Answer] Just as it is established in the contracts of sale and purchase, the information msut reach the importing enterprises through cables that they may receive from the foreign suppliers or shippers in the various kinds of purchases. In the case of "free on board" the representatives of CUFLET [Cuban Freight Enterprise] in the foreign ports send this information to the importing enterprises.

With this information the enterprises prepare the OPE-2 and in accordance with what has been established, they must delvier it to us 7 days before the arrival of the ship (when the ship is coming from Europe or Asia), but the time period is decreased to 2 days when the ports of origin are near Cuba, as is the case of Mexico, the Caribbean area and the Atlantic coast of Canada.

[Question] Up to this point everything seems very easy. Where do the complications begin?

[Answer] They are many, but we might say that the failure to provide information on time to the various agents is the main complication. For example, the importing enterprises must deliver the OPE-2 to EXPEDIPORT and to the domestic economy so that it is returned 48 hours after having been received (except when it is a matter of shipments coming from ports near Cuba) with the distribution of the product, that is, its destination. Of course, this does not always happen.

In the best of cases, when EXPEDIPORT has in its hands all the information, it presents it to the various customs districts through several dispatching agencies that EXPEDIPORT has in all the country's ports, since it gives the final authorization for the unloading of the port. After the merchandise has been unloaded, the OPE-2 again returns to the importing enterprises with all the documents of proof to certify that the order given was fulfilled and that the merchandise was sent to its final destination.

[Question] Can you tell us about some more specific deficiencies?

[Answer] Yes. The information to the foreign trade enterprises is not the most correct. For example, the name of the merchandise is not recorded, the contract is not clear, and then one has to request clarification or wait for the original manifest, which arrives in advance or which is carried on board the ship and is written in English.

The manifest is translated at the Mambisa Shipping Agents and once translated becomes the official document of Customs. Using this translated manifest, they compare it with what the OPE-2 says; thus, one sees the type of merchandise, its weight, various specifications, and if there is any difference, the OPE-2 must be corrected. This, of course, brings about another series of complications and delays, including the translations' sometimes not agreeing completely and there being differences among the terms used by the translators.

But there are other issues. For instance, if a ship is destined for a certain place and for some unforeseen reason it has to unload in another port, the necessary information is received by telex, and the OPE-2 will have to follow to the location where the merchandise will be unloaded. This situation has its difficulties. First, every port has its manifest, and when there is a change of port a new manifest has to be made. This consequently brings a change in the number of the consignment and the manifest.

[Question] What do you think about this?

[Answer] Customs is studying the preparation of a manifest that will serve throughout the country, which is going to solve many problems. Moreover, we (EXPEDIPORT), are having difficulties in sending and circulating the OPE-2, and sometimes it is delayed.

As you will understand, this whole situation is complicated when in 1 month cargos arrive on ships not scheduled, or when the domestic enterprises claim they do not have the storage facilities for a specific product. Sometimes the OPE-2 procedures, the clarifications and the correcting of mistakes among all the agents involved have taken weeks. Naturally, in view of the present situation firm steps are being taken to avoid whatever may delay unloading the merchandise and also to achieve facilitating to the maximum all these procedures.

[Question] Can you give us a panoramic view of the specific tasks that EXPEDIPORT has?

[Answer] In the first place, it is a basic part of our work that all imported merchandise should have the correct documentation, and to recommend that merchandise be stowed in ships depending on the geographic destination of its distribution in Cuba. We also plan with the ports to unload the oldest merchandise and with Transport for this merchandise to arrive at its final destination. Also among our functions is making available to the importing enterprises all the documents for them to be able to establish insurance claims in the case of merchandise missing on unloading or damaged, as well as the documents authorizing the unloading of the merchandise.

EXPEDIPORT also is responsible for paying the demurrage on ships, as much in freely convertible currency as by contract, and collecting rapid settlement from foreign shipowners; also EXPEDIPORT has a department that takes care of the procedures for and dispatch of cargo that arrives by air and mail. Moreover, it handles procedures for the merchandise received by foreign technicians living in our country. Further, EXPEDIPORT has signed an agreement with Soviet shipowners for inspection of containers.

As you will have noticed, many factors enter into this whole issue and sometimes reconciling them all becomes bothersome, but knowing the importance for the national economy of the battle that is being waged to decongest the ports, the difficulties created by the OPE-2 have to finally disappear, and we are devoting our greatest effort to this objective.

9545
CSO: 3010

STUDY ON CONTROLLING VENEREAL DISEASES IN COUNTRY REPORTED

Havana REVISTA CUBANA DE HIGIENE Y EPIDEMIOLOGIA in Spanish Jan-Apr 80 pp 81-94

[Article by Dr Ronald K. St. John, adviser to PAHO (Pan American Health Organization)-WHO on venereal diseases (13-25 November 1978): "Control of Syphilis and Gonorrhea in Cuba"]

[Text] At the request of the Ministry of Public Health of the Republic of Cuba, the author, Dr Ronald K. St. John, deputy director of the Division of Disease Control (CDC), went to Havana, Cuba, as a short-term adviser to the Pan American Health Organization in order to make a study of the venereal disease control program and make recommendations for future actions. The study was made from 13 to 25 November 1978. The travel itinerary is attached hereto. The author especially wishes to thank Dr Leonardo Werthein, Dr Alfredo Abreu and Dr Olenia Hernandez for their assistance, frankness and inexhaustible patience. Without their support, it would not have been possible to prepare this report.

The author hopes that any errors found in this report will be of minor importance. They might be attributed to the relatively short time available to make the study and perhaps to certain difficulties in communicating subtle aspects of the country's health care system and activities relating to the control of venereal diseases.

Background

Health care system: It is essential to make a brief analysis of the health care system in Cuba in order to understand activities relating to the control of syphilis and gonorrhea. Over the past 20 years, Cuba has developed an overall system of basic health care based on a network of outpatient clinics for the people, with hospitals providing secondary and tertiary health care and specialized services for the referral of patients. An important role is played by preventive medicine, with special attention to neonatal and infant mortality. Health care services cover nearly 100 percent of the population and there has been an effective reduction in infant mortality, the incidence of preventable infectious diseases in children and the prevention of malnutrition.

The first level of primary health care is the outpatient clinic. Every outpatient clinic takes care of 30,000 people or less and has a staff of internists, pediatricians, obstetrician-gynecologists and odontologists so that it has available a specialist for a specific number of persons, for example, 1 pediatrician for 1,000 children and 1 obstetrician-gynecologist for 2,000 to 2,500 women. In this way, the staff at every outpatient clinic varies depending on the makeup of the population involved. Each clinic has auxiliary services: a statistical department, X-ray, nursing services, psychology, environmental health and a small laboratory where common analyses of hematology, urinalysis and general blood tests are done. It also performs certain serologic tests such as the VDRL [Venereal Disease Research Laboratories], but very few bacteriologic services are available at this level and those available are not always complete.

Each outpatient clinic is in close touch with community affairs and interrelates with the people. The medical group provides all basic care and refers patients to nearby hospitals for secondary and tertiary care when more complicated attention is required. For example, prenatal care is provided by obstetrician-gynecolosits at the outpatient clinic, but the delivery takes place at a nearby specialized (obstetrics-gynecology) hospital. Prenatal care for women with high-risk pregnancies is generally provided at one of these hospitals.

Patients may freely seek emergency attention at emergency rooms of local secondary-care hospitals or at any one of the clinics that provide emergency services after regular hours. Patients who go to emergency rooms may or may not receive treatment, depending on their disease.

Each outpatient clinic has a detailed data base oriented toward epidemiology in order to determine the state of health of the people being cared for. The clinic is in charge of making and updating the census of its population.

Outpatient clinics are supervised by the municipality where they are located and every municipality is in turn supervised by the province (equivalent to a state).

Physicians may request consultations with a specialist, for example, with a dermatologist, otorhinolaryngologist, oncologist, and so on. In general, the specialist meets with the patient during visits with the doctor at the clinic. Specialized clinics are located only at specialized hospitals, for example, pediatrics and gynecology-obstetrics. There are no single-purpose clinics such as for venereal diseases, family planning, hypertension, tuberculosis, and so on.

Control of syphilis and gonorrhea is completely incorporated into the general health care system. The same group procedure used for general basic care is applied to patients with syphilis or gonorrhea. The doctor in charge of basic care makes the diagnosis in consultation with a dermatologist and a registered nurse specially trained to be an interviewer and tracker of contacts. Every outpatient clinic (or group of clinics) has a nurse-interviewer to locate contacts.

Syphilis Control Program

In 1962, a national program for the control of syphilis was initiated.[1] Criteria for diagnosis were determined, free attention was provided and an improvement was made in reporting cases. Nevertheless, the coverage provided by health care services for people exposed was inadequate. Laboratory support work varied greatly and epidemiological techniques and the search for contacts were not effective. In 1972, the program was examined at the First National Seminar on Epidemiology and the Control of Venereal Diseases and general outlines were drawn up. The VDRL smear test was reported and determined to be the only serological proof for detection of syphilis. Nurse-interviewers were trained and assigned to different places in the health care system. In the absence of serologic tests confirming the presence of Treponema, the definition of a patient with latent syphilis was given as any asymptomatic person with a reaction to the VDRL and a clinical history of a typical syphilitic lesion (in other words, primary or secondary syphilis) or epidemiological proof confirming exposure.[2] Early latent syphilis was defined as latent syphilis with a duration of less than 2 year.

The following table summarizes the trend of the incidence of syphilis in different phases from 1960 to 1973:

Cases of Syphilis and Rates per 100,000 Inhabitants 1960-1973

Prim., Sec., Early Latent			Lat. and Late Latent		Total
Year	Cases	Rate	Cases	Rate	Cases	Rate
1960	295	3.6	287	3.5	590	7.1
1970	440	5.3	166	2.0	619	7.3
1971	757	8.8	212	2.4	969	11.2
1972	1,757	20.0	389	4.6	2,151	24.6
1973	3,585	40.5	832	9.0	4,417	49.6

Source: Reference 1

The spectacular increases in 1972 and 1973 reflect an improvement in detection, definition and the reporting of cases.

In 1973, 46.4 percent of the 3,585 cases of early syphilis detected were symptomatic (primary and secondary syphilis). In the initial phases of the new program, thanks to the detection of contacts, 35.7 percent of the new cases of early syphilis were diagnosed. In 1973, this percentage rose to 50.3 percent.[3]

Special attention was given to proper treatment of all cases diagnosed and to contacts with positive VDRL results for early syphilis, with a total dose of 6.0 megaunits (mu) of benzathine penicillin G (in doses divided as follows: 2.4 mu initially, followed by 1.2 mu on the 4th, 7th and 10th days). Pregnant women whose VDRL reaction was positive were also treated. More VDRL tests were administered in order to examine all pregnant women (two serological tests per pregnancy), blood donors, patients admitted to hospitals, military personnel, persons subject to periodic health examinations and special vulnerable groups (prisoners, persons seeking advice on birth control, women having abortions). Patients treated are observed for 2 years by means of serological tests performed the 1st, 3rd, 9th, 12th, 18th and 24th months. Great emphasis was placed on the prevention of congenital syphilis by means of extensive serological testing and treatment in the form already indicated. In addition, there was an investigation of spontaneous abortions and intrauterine deaths and cases of congenital syphilis were observed. In one study, Dr Hernandez et al[1] studied 94 cases of syphilis in pregnant women in Havana in 1973. In 89 cases, early syphilis was diagnosed, including 38 cases of primary or secondary syphilis. The prenatal serological examinations represented 70.2 percent of the cases, while 37.3 percent of the cases in mothers were diagnosed during the first 3 months, 40.4 percent in the second 3 months and 10.6 percent during the last 3 months. The period when the diagnosis was made was unknown in 11.7 percent of the women. In this group, the result of the pregnancies was three abortions, four premature births, 87 normal babies and one baby with congenital syphilis, born to a mother who was allergic to penicillin and who did not complete the oral treatment.

In the following 3 years (1974-1977), congenital syphilis dropped by 50 percent. At the present time, there are very few cases of the disease.

In June 1977, the program was once again examined during the Second National Seminar on Epidemiology and the Control of Venereal Diseases.[5] Greater use of the ATF-ABS [aluorescent treponemic antibodies] test was proposed, emphasis was placed on the importance of epidemiological analysis and integration of the program in the outpatient clinics was reaffirmed.

Program for Control of Gonorrhea

At the present time, there is no official program for the control of gonorrhea, but plans have been made to organize a program making it possible to measure the increase in gonorrhea and reduce its morbidity. Very few data are available and due to the nearly absolute lack of culture media, very little is known about the incidence of gonococcal infections in women. In the gynecology clinics of the obstetrics-gynecology hospitals, gonococcal complications are frequently observed, such as inflammation of the pelvis, but there is no systematic compilation of data about its incidence. Only a few data are available:

Year	Cases of Gonorrhea Reported	Year	Cases of Gonorrhea Reported
1965	697	1975	4,385
1972	703	1976	6,229
1973	870	1977	8,239
1974	3,233

Approximately 95 percent of all the cases of gonorrhea are found in men. An unknown percentage of those cases is diagnosed by means of Gram's method. Patients in whom positive results were obtained using that method are treated with a total dose of 14 million units of procaine penicillin G (1 million units twice a day for 7 days). Authorities admit that this is an excessive dose and when the gonorrhea control program is put into effect, changes will be made.

For the treatment of neonatal gonococcal ophthalmia, drops of silver nitrate or penicillin for the eye have been used; this problem is not seen.

Control of Syphilis: Observations and Recommendations, Clinical Aspects

The diagnosis of syphilis is made with great care. All patients with or without symptoms, contacts and companions are subjected to serological tests and quantitative VDRL tests. The laboratory service immediately notifies the doctor, who in turn consults with a dermatologist. As soon as the diagnosis is confirmed, treatment is initiated and the patient is interviewed. Darkfield microscopy is limited. Only at hospital laboratories does this service exist due to the fact that darkfield condensers that can be adjusted to the many different types of microscopes in outpatient clinic laboratories are not available, and only rarely are cases of genital lesions seen at most outpatient clinics. Patients with suspicious lesions are sent to the hospital for examination by darkfield microscopy. Since approximately 15 percent of the cases of early syphilis involve primary syphilis, if darkfield microscopy is used more at outpatient clinics where cases of genital ulcers are taken care of, diagnosis and treatment will be faster.

At certain hospital laboratories, the ATF-ABS test is used to confirm the disease. As a result, asymptomatic patients and contacts with a positive reaction to the VDRL are treated with the first dose of benzathine penicillin G. If during the examination -- that is, during the interview and consultation with the dermatologist -- it is determined that the patient has a positive clinical history or if there is proof that the patient was exposed to the infection, as shown by the epidemiological study or the search for contacts, a definitive diagnosis of early latent syphilis is made and the treatment with penicillin is continued until the plan of 6.0 mu is completed. If these criteria are not met, the report on the case is not complete and treatment is discontinued. In these cases and in pregnant women with positive serological results, the use of the ATF-ABS reaction to confirm the disease will make it possible to clarify the diagnosis more rapidly and will lead to faster epidemiological intervention. The method of group work for the diagnosis and treatment makes it possible to provide high-quality care. Very few patients who seek care fail to receive proper diagnosis or proper care.

Based on a thorough study of five medical histories and conversations with doctors and nurses acting as interviewers, the consultant came to the conclusion that the method of group work sometimes delays the final diagnosis and treatment. The patient is in no way affected by these delays with respect to final results because the follow-up at the outpatient clinic is very complete. However, from the standpoint of controlling the disease, delays could reduce the effectiveness of activities aimed at halting transmission of the disease by patients or their contacts.

The doses of penicillin used to treat syphilis are adequate for curing and preventing later complications. Patients allergic to penicillin who have syphilis are hospitalized and treated by oral means while under direct observation. Those with congenital syphilis receive proper doses of procaine penicillin G. The use of benzathine penicillin is being discontinued for the treatment of congenital syphilis, as is that of tetracycline for pregnant patients allergic to penicillin.

Recommendations

1 -- The criteria for diagnosis now being applied and plans of treatment are adequate and there is no need to change them.

2 -- Under the current system, there should be an attempt to reduce delays that could affect disease control activities. Regular analyses of common cases should be made at the local level in order to identify methods making it possible to reduce the time between the patient's first visit and final diagnosis.

3 -- All positive VDRL results in patients who it is suspected suffer from latent syphilis should be confirmed by a treponemic test. Before trying to expand the use of the ATF-ABS reaction, the Ministry of Public Health and the National Institute of Hygiene, Epidemiology and Microbiology must investigate the cost, benefits and possibility of performing the microhemagglutination test with Treponema pallidum (MHA-TP). This test is less costly and not as complicated. It does not require complicated equipment.

4 -- A study should be made of the possibility of using darkfield microscopy more at outpatient clinics and hospitals where patients very vulnerable to syphilis are seen -- that is, within certain areas of metropolitan Havana. We repeat: The purpose is to reduce the time between initial consultation and the diagnosis and final treatment.

Epidemiological Aspects

Some 200 to 210 nurses were specially trained to track contacts of patients with syphilis. The nurses are assigned to outpatient clinics all over the country. Their duties include: the initial interview in order to gather data concerning contacts, suspicious carriers and partners, future treatment (four injections), serological tests (over a period of 24 months) and the exchange of epidemiological information. For every patient with syphilis interviewed, it is expected that data will be obtained on some ten contacts, suspicious carriers and partners (4, 2 and 4 respectively). At the present time, the national average is 5.1 contacts, suspicious carriers and partners for every patient interviewed.

Over 3 months of experience, one interviewer-nurse found:

Category	April	May	June	Total
Number of cases of early syphilis	8	2	2	12
Number of cases treated completely	8	2	2	12
Number of contacts identified	7	4	6	17
Number of contacts treated	7	4	4*	15
Number of identified suspects	3	3	3	9
Number of partners	3	9	9	21

*Two contacts were outside the area.

At the present time, the interview concentrates on identifying contacts, suspects and partners -- that is, "Who it is" in tracking contacts. Importance is not given to the relation of time between the patient and contacts, the "when" question in tracking contacts. Consequently, there is no systematic analysis of cases by source of propagation. The analysis is hindered even further by the current methods of keeping records, for which the use of many books is required.

Due to the close cooperation between the dermatologist and the nurse-interviewer, patients are interviewed as soon as the diagnosis is made, generally, before it is completed.

There are certain major problems with respect to the exchange of information concerning the tracking of contacts outside municipal areas. Within the municipalities, the nurse-interviewer first of all sends epidemiological forms to the municipality or province where they are exchanged. The form then goes to the new nurse-interviewer. If possible, a more rapid method (such as telephone) is used).

The nurse-interviewer is supervised by another who has been promoted to the municipal level. Case study techniques and interview study techniques are not used. Other measurements of interviewing effectiveness are not being examined.

Recommendations

1 -- If possible, analytical capabilities should be developed in order to indentify the source of infection and propagation. The Venereal Disease Control Division of the CDC is willing to provide technical assistance in the form of the services of a high-level official who is an expert in epidemiology and contact tracking in order to train nurse-interviewers and their supervisors in techniques of case analysis and supervision now being used in the United States. Training would be more useful if it would be planned to coincide with courses for nurse-interviewers offered in the country.

2 -- There should be an exploration of methods to improve the exchange of information on the search for contacts. Nurse-interviewers should exchange information directly and send copies of information to higher levels. Such nurses could perhaps be provided with the names and addresses of their colleagues throughout the country in order to be able to send directly by mail the form for the report on the search for contacts when there is no telephone or more rapid method.

3 -- Consideration should be given to the establishment of a new medical records system permitting a thorough analysis of cases. When a patient is interviewed, a file in opened for all information corresponding to that case. An analogous system is now being used in the United States.

Serological Proof

Throughout the country, the VDRL test on slides is being used. Systematic tests are made of numerous groups to detect syphilis, even when such groups would have little exposure to the disease. There has been very little or no evaluation of the results of such tests. In 1974, Dr Werthein et al[6] analyzed the results of 159,212 serological tests in a specific zone. The percentage of positive results varied from .5 percent at some hospitals to 6.1 percent at certain outpatient clinics that were chosen. The serological tests required for health cards represented 46 percent of the total of 3,825 positive serological tests. Hospitals and general medical and surgical outpatient clinics represented 24.8 percent and 16.1 percent respectively. In analyzing 247 cases of early syphilis, it was observed that 45.1 percent of these cases were detected through serological tests. The tests required for health cards made it possible to identify 48 cases out of a total 662 (7.2 percent) with positive results and presented 43.2 percent (48/111) of all the cases identified by means of such tests. The tests made at outpatient clinics yielded positive results in 28 cases out of a total of 619 (4.5 percent) and represented 25.3 percent of the cases.

The VDRL test is carried out at laboratories located in the outpatient clinics and hospitals. In order to achieve greater effectiveness and improve the quality of tests, an attempt is being made to centralize the VDRL tests at hospital laboratories at the municipal or provincial level.

If a large number of tests is made, automated techniques could be applied. Tests are made one or more times a week, depending on volume.

Positive results are immediately reported. Reference serums for control purposes are prepared by the test laboratory itself and are tried before the customary tests. Such serums are prepared by combining reaction serums, which are sent to provincial laboratories for titration. The titrated serum is sent back to the local laboratory. At provincial laboratories, the test procedures of local laboratories are periodically examined.

During a visit to Fajardo Hospital, the consultant observed the procedure used in the VDRL test. The hospital is the reference center for new outpatient clinics. The VDRL test has been centralized at one of the new outpatient laboratories. These laboratories send tests that gave a weak positive result and 5 percent of the negative results to the Fajardo Hospital laboratory for quality control. This laboratory also does the VDRL tests for all hospitalized and ambulatory patients. It also does ATF-ABS tests with appropriate controls in cases of diagnostic difficulties. However, it does not participate in an outside quality control program to control the quality of its own tests.

All serological tests with weak positive results are quantified in order to eliminate prozonal reactions. At most outpatient clinic laboratories, slides with concavities are used, while at hospital and reference laboratories, plates with paraffin are used. Modern equipment is used at all laboratories: water bath, rotators, and so on. The consultant was very impressed with the success of the congenital syphilis control program. Approximately 100 percent of all pregnant women are subjected to two serological tests as a minimum during the prenatal care period. For want of confirmatory proof, the vigorous treatment is justified. Subsequent observation of patients treated is adequate, but a more conservative method would involve the completion of serological tests every month for the purpose of observing treated patients in order to ascertain whether there is an adequate serological response making it possible to guarantee the detection of a later reinfection during the pregnancy.

Recommendations

1 -- The consultant agrees with the current plans for centralizing VDRL tests. Testing in large quantities would make it possible to complete tests daily, thereby reducing delays between the obtention of the blood sample and the reporting of results. The use of the automatized reagent test could further improve effectiveness. This reaction is technically absorbent. Equipment breakdowns are relatively common and spare parts must be kept on hand.

2 -- Centralized serological tests usually require more complicated records in order to facilitate the rapid working out of test results. The flow of samples going through the laboratories analyzing large volumes of such samples must be watched to detect excessive delays in reporting results.

3 -- It is necessary to expand internal and external quality control systems so as to include all laboratories performing VDRL or ATF-ABS tests. Serum samples whose positive reactions are known should be sent without identification to the test laboratory. The nurse-interviewer can serve as an intermediary receiving the serum for the test, identifying it with a fictitious name and sending it through customary channels to the test laboratory.

4 -- The CDC welcomes the participation of laboratories of the National Institute of Hygiene, Epidemiology and Microbiology in the international outside quality control program.

5 -- Laboratories of the National Institute of Hygiene, Epidemiology and Microbiology or another appropriate laboratory should coordinate all outside quality control programs and quality control of tests. The centralized control would make it possible to produce well-defined control serums for daily use in the laboratories that do the VDRL test.

6 -- An expert in serological tests from a competent laboratory should be available to go to the CDC to study the current procedures used in serological testing and outside quality control programs. With this study, the application of quality control techniques in Cuba would be facilitated.

Statistics and Reporting System

The little time available prevented the completion of an extensive study of current or proposed reporting systems. Consequently, no important recommendations can be formulated.

All cases diagnosed are immediately reported and sent to the municipal, provincial and national levels. In addition, at the municipal level, 21 tables are completed, which are added to the national level for the completion of epidemiological analyses.

The reporting system is also used as a confirmation system for supervising the work of the nurse-interviewer, dermatologists and doctors in the outpatient clinics under the municipal level.

There are currently systems for the collection of data in the CDC for comparative purposes. Cuba's system was redesigned and will be set up shortly. In the future, it will be necessary to reexamine the usefulness of the proposed forms.

Control of Gonorrhea: Observations and Recommendations

Although no structured program for the control of gonorrhea has been set up, the consultant studied the most recent plan to control the disease. In the course of numerous discussions, various aspects of importance and problems that must be solved were identified.

Treatment of Diagnosed Cases

No data were available to determine the level of resistance of gonococci in the country. No attempt was made to detect the presence of strains that produce beta lactam. It is recognized that the treatment now recommended is excessive (14 mu of procaine penicillin G) and new courses of treatment will be selected.

Recommendations

1 -- Until data is collected, the Ministry of Public Health should consider the possibility of accepting the revised treatment recommendations of the CDC for gonococcal infections, both complicated and uncomplicated.

2 -- Until the National Institute of Hygiene Epidemiology and Microbiology can develop the capacity to control resistance to antibiotics and beta lactam tests, the Venereal Disease Control Division of the CDC is available to determine the sensitivity of a limited number of strains to antibiotics (50 to 100).

Diagnostic Techniques

Patients with gonorrhea are diagnosed and treated at outpatient clinics and hospital emergency rooms of the second level. All outpatient clinics are equipped with excellent microscopes and the equipment needed to do stains using Gram's method. Stains of urethral secretions from males using Gram's method are sensitive and specifically for the diagnosis of gonorrhea. The consultant was not able to determine the degree to which this test is used in emergency rooms or outpatient clinics where very few men with urethral secretions are treated, that is, two or three a month.

The venereal disease control program in Cuba has specially avoided the use of endocervical frotis by means of Gram's method. When this test is cautiously interpreted, it constitutes a diagnosis of gonorrhea. The use of this test makes rapid identification and treatment of the patient and contacts possible.

The existence of Thayer-Martin culture media for diagnostic or study purposes is extremely limited. When the country's culture capacity is improved, the use of such culture media should be closely examined. As planned, gonorrhea control activities will be integrated into the current outpatient clinic structure. In this way, patients with gonorrhea will be scattered over several clinics (approximately 70 in Havana alone). Cultures at clinics will be costly due to the low expected production and cannot be recommended. The use of cultures in services of an area of specialization such as in outpatient gynecology clinics or obstetrics-gynecology clinics will make it possible, however, to identify a larger number of gonorrhea infections, not only in symptomatic women and women with pelvic inflammations, but also in asymptomatic women (50 to 80 percent of all infected women), if the latter are included. The consultant was not able to determine whether hospital emergency rooms treat many symptomatic women, but it is known that such rooms do treat men with gonorrhea with some frequency.

Decisions must be made about the production, distribution and quality control of culture media. It is necessary to establish standards for the use of cultures for diagnostic purposes and subsequent observation and not for disease control. It is necessary to standardize and supervise sample obtention techniques. The means by which cultures are taken to laboratories must be set up.

Recommendations

1 -- At all outpatient clinics and emergency rooms, the preparation of frotis using Gram's method for samples from men with urethral secretions must be initiated. In men with a history of urethral secretions, the sample should be obtained from the anterior ureter with a bacteriologic instrument or cotton tipped swab.

2 -- At all outpatient clinics, emergency rooms and special clinics, endocervical frotis should be made using Gram's method for samples from women undergoing pelvic examinations. A cautious interpretation of the frotis must be made (that is, the presence of intracellular, gram-negative, typical diplococcus in the leucocytes). It will be necessary to train laboratory technicians. There are publications recommending the use of frotis by means of Gram's method in women.

3 -- In the beginning, the analysis of cultures should only be made at hospitals and clinics of an area of specialization, as in the case of obstetrics-gynecology, where laboratories are easily available and no messenger-mail systems are needed. The following aspects must be considered:

a -- Cultures must be inoculated the moment the examination is made.

b -- Cultures must be placed in an incubator in an atmosphere of carbon dioxide as soon as possible.

Inexpensive incubators and covered jars generally make incubation possible where the examination is conducted until the laboratory can gather the cultures from each day. In this way, all cultures must be available for the initial interpretation on the afternoon of the day following their preparation and for final reading on the afternoon of the second day (48 hours).

c -- An examination must be made of patients with positive cultures and with inflammation of the pelvis giving a positive reading in order to try to identify population groups with a relatively high rate of gonorrhea. Subsequently, the examination of cultures should extend to the clinics handling these high-risk groups.

d -- If, in the emergency rooms, many symptomatic women are seen, then the cultures must be prepared there in order to detect gonorrhea. Outpatient clinics should also try to identify high-risk groups in which systematic cultures yield 4-6 percent positive results.

e -- In all women treated for gonorrhea, a culture should be made for purposes of confirmation, whenever possible, 3 to 5 days after the last dose of antibiotics was administered in order to ensure that the infection was cured. This makes it possible to determine the efficacy of treatment. It would also be useful to obtain another confirmation culture 4 to 6 weeks after treatment in order to detect reinfection, perhaps through asymptomatic male contacts not treated.

f -- As the use of cultures expands, cultures should also be made from samples taken from women yielding positive results with Gram's stain, from contacts with gonorrhea and from men with a urethral secretion whose Gram stain is negative (in 5 percent of the cases, the cultures will be positive).

4 -- In order to maintain the quality of the culture media, centralized services must be set up for the production of cultures at the National Institute of Hygiene, Epidemiology and Microbiology and other suitable laboratories. Quality control techniques must be applied to every lot before it is distributed to places where it will be used. In these places, cultures should be made periodically from samples taken from men with a positive Gram stain as a quality control measure. A minimum of 95 percent of all men who are gram-positive should yield positive results. In approximately 50 percent of the women having contact with men suffering from gonorrhea, the cultures should be positive.

5 -- Before undertaking the production of culture media and culture control, a competent Cuban microbiologist should consult with the CDC in order to study basic bacteriological techniques for the isolation of gonococci, quality control systems, the production of culture media and sensitivity tests to antibiotics.

Epidemiological Aspects

Current plans recommend that nurse-interviewers conduct thorough interviews with all positive cases of gonorrhea. The program anticipates the treatment of 10,000 to 20,000 cases a year and it would perhaps not be possible to make thorough interviews. Based on experience in the United States, in interviews with women suffering frequently from gonorrhea without complications, they mention contacts that have already had symptoms and that were treated. Moreover, interviews with women having repeated pelvic inflammations and repeated infections might lead to the detection of asymptomatic infected male contacts.

Recommendations

1 -- Consideration should be given to interviewing techniques to take the place of those traditionally used. There are examples of other methods in which the patient refers his contact to a reference service.

2 -- Studies should be made of results of traditional techniques in specially selected groups such as women with pelvic inflammations.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

1. Werthein, L. J. et al: "Programa de Control de Enfermedades Venereas," REV CUB HIG EPID, 14: 93-98, 1976.

2. Zarate, S. R. et al: "Diagnostico de la Sifilis Latente," REV CUB HIG EPID, 14: 105-110, 1976.

3. Werthein, L. J., A. Ayrado: "La Entrevistadora Encuestadora: Soporte Fundamental de un Programa de Control de Enfermedades Venereas," REV CUB HIG EPID, 14: 99-104, 1976.

4. Hernandez, O. et al: "Sifilis en Embarazadas," REV CUB HIG EPID, 14: 111-116, 1976.

5. Werthein, L. J., A. Abreu: "II Seminario Nacional de Epidemiologia y Control de Enfermedades Venereas," REV CUB HIG EPID, 16: 73-86, 1978.

6. Werthein, L. L. et al: "Importancia de la Serologia en el Programa de Control de Enfermedades Venereas," REV CUB HIG EPID, 16: 113-121, 1978.

11,464
CSO: 3010

ISLAND'S BLEAK ECONOMIC PICTURE DISCUSSED

Bridgetown ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 27 Sep 80 p 10

[Text]

ROSEAU, Dominica, Thursday (CANA) — Dominicans have always known hard times, but some will tell you now that they could hardly have been worse than they are today.

In this poor, backward 289 square mile island, unemployment is estimated at a staggering 35 per cent the main export and foreign exchange earner, the banana industry is struggling and the state is recovering very slowly from the massive damage done by two hurricanes in the space of a year.

There is a deficit of more than EC$25 million (US$9.2 million) 1979-80 Budget and at the moment Dominica needs about EC$1.7 million (US$629 000) monthly to pay Government employees.

"...Because of the destruction of the hurricanes it prevents us from earning enough revenue to meet our current expenses, so that every month you are wondering where the salaries are coming from", Prime Minister Eugenia Charles who is Minister of Finance said during an interview on the problems facing her new administration.

Since 1977 the island has faced an average fall of over three per cent in its Gross Domestic Production (GDP) per year on the 1972 level. This compared with the modest real growth in the 1960s of two per cent.

"The island's poor performance of the 70s is attributable to a combination of factors including bad weather, domestic industrial unrest, international economic recession and a deteriorating investment climate", a report by the Barbados-owned Caribbean Development Bank said.

Miss Charles sees the international economic recession "as a serious setback for Dominica, at a time when the need for additional foreign aid has been so intensified by recent unfortunate events".

Agriculture, which has over the years been the mainstay of the island's fragile economy, continues to do so, with bananas being the main export crop.

1978 was the best ever year for banana production with nearly 48 000 tonnes being produced. This figure dropped substantially last year to 21 800 tonnes.

The dramatic slump was due almost entirely to killer Hurricane David in August 1979. The disaster was particularly difficult to swallow, since at the time bananas were fetching very high prices on the lucrative United Kingdom market.

The total effect of David on the island's economy was dramatic. During the presentation of her Budget Miss Charles said "total local revenue will therefore decrease by an estimated EC10.6 million (US$4 million) to EC$32.4 million (US$12 million) leaving a gap of EC$28.6 million dollars (US$10.5 million) between the recurrent revenue estimates and the recurrent expenditure estimates".

The depressing economic situation has been present everywhere and business activity has been slow.

"A number of businesses here have closed in the last few years others have gradually shrunk..." Parry Bellot, President of the Dominica Association of Industry and Commerce said.

"Inflation figures vary depending on where they originate, but using 1970 as a base year, inflation up to the present is easily up to 200 or 250 per cent", Mr. Bellot said adding "it has been difficult to make ends meet".

In 1979 Dominica's Gross Domestic Product (GDP) — the total value of all locally-produced goods and services — stood at just over EC$102 million (US$35 million) a drop of almost EC$13 million (US$5 million) over 1978, and this was the second highest figure recorded since 1975.

The 1979 figure showed a decline in all sectors of the island's revenue except the construction industry which recorded a marginal increase over the figures of 1978. But this is thought to be the effect of much repair work done after David knocked down thousands of houses and buildings.

"One would feel that we have basically seven key export items and if we use the 1978 figures we see that bananas is still the major revenue earner", Mr. Bellot said as he reviewed the performances of the coconut, bay oil, citrus, soap and agro industries, other vital revenue earners.

Unlike some other Caribbean islands, Dominica does not abound in beautiful white sand beaches and generates no meaningful tourism.

But even this negligible area is slipping, the second quarters figures for 1980 show there were 2 524 visitors to Dominica compared with the same period last year, which saw more than 7 000 tourists come here.

With unemployment running as high as 34.91 per cent, the private sector believes that some attempt should be made to lure major Western countries to set up factories here, with the hope of encouraging employment and improving Dominica's per capita income.

"These are the countries that have the money.... I think that we need a programme under which any development programme will involve money, manpower material and management", Bellot states.

"We feel that we can approach the developed countries to supply money and management and we in Dominica can supply materials and manpower".

The Government, aware of the financial burden faced by all non-oil producing developing countries and the seemingly united capacity of rich states to help is hoping that one of the materials which it can assist the private sector to develop the investment climate here is by providing cheap energy through the country's geo-interenergy potential.

With the abundance of rivers, there is said to be one for each day of the year, the island's new administration is hoping to seek financial aid from major lending institutions to finance extension of the island's hydro-electric potential.

"If we can do this, we will, at least lessen the overwhelming problems created by the petroleum war between the oil producing and industrialised countries", Miss Charles reasons.

But one problem which the Government still has to face is that of meeting salary increases to public servants, a perennial problem to successive administrations.

At present the Government has to pay out an estimated EC11 million (US$4 million) to civil servants in backpay. With very little revenue, the treasury is by Government admission, not able to pay.

"Unless we can borrow money to pay it we will bot be able to meet it and we have two or three measures we are thinking of, so that we can be able to borrow this money. We would like to pay it out and forget about it, but whether we will be able to raise the loan is something else", the Prime Minister has said.

CSO: 3020

PQD LEADER WORRIED ABOUT ELECTORAL BOARD DISORGANIZATION

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 1 Oct 80 pp 1, 12

[Article by Hugo A. Ysalguez]

[Text] The president of the Democratic Quisqueyan Party (PQD), retired Gen Elias Wessin y Wessin, yesterday expressed his concern regarding the "disorganization in the Central Electoral Board (JCE)," pointing out that unless the shortcomings are rectified in time, the upcoming elections "will be plagued with irregularities."

The political leader stated that if the general elections were held now, more than half of the voting population would not be able to go to the polls because they lack their election card and because the election boards where they would cast their ballots are too far away.

He indicated that the JCE intends to put the voter register in order if the government gives it enough funds to do so.

He added that "the government has turned a deaf ear to the JCE's calls for sufficient funds to insure that the upcoming elections are well organized and fair."

Wessin said that the PQD has an ongoing campaign to see to it that its members secure their election card in time, to avoid snags when election day arrives.

He expressed surprise that the other political organizations are not worried about the government giving the JCE the funds it needs to revamp the voter register.

Wessin stated that "the Reformist Party stripped thousands of persons of their election card, and therefore many Dominicans do not have this important document.

"After the 1978 election, the Reformist Party stripped hundreds of thousands of Dominicans of their election cards to contest that election," he stated.

The PQD leader indicated that many Dominicans moved after Hurricane David and thus do not know where they are supposed to cast their votes.

"We completely support the JCE in its call for more funds to organize the upcoming elections," he emphasized.

He then urged the other parties to call on the government to meet the JCE's request, because fair and free elections will benefit opposition parties.

"The next elections cannot be held unless the voter register is organized," Wessin stressed.

He pointed out that the PQD is preparing to run in the 1982 elections and to win, but he said that this depended on whether the primaries could be organized soon enough to avoid suspicions.

"I do not understand how the other political parties can remain silent and say nothing about the JCE request," Wessin underscored.

Separately, he said he was in favor of a bill to make the Bureau of Personal Identification Cards and Registry Office a branch of the Central Electoral Board. He added that the PQD was the first party to propose this move, so that elections would be as fair as possible.

"The Reformist Party now comes out with a really constructive bill, and they will realize that this step will guarantee free elections," he said.

He stated that during the 12 years that they were in power the Reformists did not venture to put forth and implement the idea, adding that now that they are in the opposition they realize that this is a constructive step.

8743
CSO: 3010

PENA GOMEZ SPEAKS OUT ON VARIOUS TOPICS

Haitian Work Force, Reforestation

Santo Domingo EL CARIBE in Spanish 2 Oct 80 pp 1, 4

[Article by Nelson Encarnacion]

[Text] Dr Jose Francisco Pena Gomez asserted yesterday that we should "abolish" the participation of foreigners in cane cutting, and it was his feeling that the country had sufficient manpower to do the work that "year after year" is performed by foreign cutters, who are thus creating a population problem.

The secretary general of the PRD said that due to the "appalling living conditions to which this thankless work dooms people," it is done only by "exploited foreigners."

Pena Gomez pointed out that the "population problem" is aggravated by the "selfishness of our powerful classes, who refuse to grant their workers their legitimate rights stemming from their role in creating the country's wealth."

The PRD leader added that we ought to abolish the participation of foreigners in cane cutting because this strenuous and poorly paid work has been performed "for many years now by aliens, with the resulting transfer of money overseas and the competition from cheap labor that is heightening our growing joblessness."

He went on to say that the cane cutting by Haitian laborers also creates "a situation of injustice and exploitation in our cane fields that has warranted international attention and is prompting condemnation of our country."

Pena Gomez discussed the issue of Haitian laborers whom the government hires every year to cut cane on the sugar plantations of the State Sugar Council (CEA), after analyzing the "Medical Campaign" held last week by PRD professionals in various spots in the southern region of the country.

He spoke yesterday on the program "Tribuna Democratica," the radio voice of the government party.

At another point in his speech Pena Gomez stated that "we can eradicate illiteracy, vaccinate all of our children and eliminate poliomyelitis."

He indicated that to do this "we have to dedicate ourselves to working for the country and we all have to make sacrifices, the people on top and the people on the bottom, the people in government and the people in the opposition."

He added that in particular "we PRD members have to shunt aside our internal strife and give priority to the struggle against poverty, disease, ignorance and hunger."

He pointed out that the PRD has stepped to the fore, and so have the professionals, who many thought were joining the party only to secure a position, "whereas many comrades who call themselves proletarians are proving to be engaged in 'corridor politics,' empty jabber, factional struggle and loafing."

"Let's all get to work to improve this country, because that is what the people elected us to do, to resolve their problems, not to go around looking for a revolver to wear on our belts, or to ride pompously in official cars, or to walk around with our chests puffed out in a false attitude of self-sufficiency and superiority," he stated.

He added that "this time the professionals have outdone the party's rank-and-file, which seems to be paralyzed and confused by the factional struggle, whereas the professionals are ignoring this and working solely on behalf of the party."

He asserted that "we have to hold down, regulate and control the internal struggle, and for this purpose we are going to visit all of the party's zonal committees in the National District, to preside at assemblies and determine who is working for the party and who is not."

The government party leader went on to say that the country has the wherewithal to cover our barren mountains "with green trees again and the sources of our rivers with thick woodlands and songbirds that will enrich our fauna, which are rapidly becoming extinct."

Pena Gomez also stressed in his speech the work that the government is doing in the field of public health, adding, however, that this job cannot be left just to the government, because all of the country's sectors have to take part.

He said that during the medical campaign staged by the PRD on the 12th, 13th and 14th of last month, 20,000 patients were seen by doctors in more than 15 towns in the southern region of the country.

He said that a truck loaded with medicines went around distributing them free of charge to persons requesting medical assistance.

Membership Increase Called For

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 2 Oct 80 pp 1, 14

[Article by Hugo A. Ysalguez]

[Text] The secretary general of the Dominican Revolutionary Party, Dr Jose Francisco Pena Gomez, said yesterday that his party does not deserve the people's trust if it is not able to utilize its grass roots strength in solving the country's problems.

Speaking on "Tribuna Democratica," the PRD leader stated that a political party must not be factory turning out candidates and officials.

"I have always said that the most important thing for a political party is to control the masses, but we have also repeated to the point of boredom that a program of social change cannot be carried out just with the masses," he stressed.

He pointed out that a party that lacks individuals capable of carrying out programs and changes aimed at bettering a nation's lot is doomed to failure.

Pena Gomez said that his silence over the last few days was due to health problems, adding that during this time some very important developments have taken place that warrant his attention and that are of interest to the nation and to the PRD.

"A political party cannot just issue press releases, make converts and prepare for elections every 4 years," he stated.

He added that the Dominican Republic is facing enormous problems, such as, for example, the one million Dominicans who do not know how to read or write, the poor health of a major portion of its population, and the ongoing destruction of its woodlands, which threatens to turn the country into a desert.

Another problem cited by Pena Gomez is sugarcane cutting. He said that this strenuous and poorly paid work has been done for many years by Haitian citizens, which has resulted in a transfer of money overseas and has brought in competition from cheap foreign labor, thus aggravating our mounting unemployment and creating a situation of injustice and exploitation in the country's cane fields.

"These are just some of the problems that the PRD can and will help to solve, but they cannot be solved just by government efforts or with the support of a single party," Pena Gomez stated.

He then clarified: "Reforesting the country, teaching our people to read and write, abolishing foreign participation in cane cutting, eradicating epidemics and providing health care to all Dominicans who need it are tasks that can be accomplished only with the cooperation of all Dominicans."

The PRD leader stated that during the most recent party convention he stressed that its doors would be opened to technicians and university professionals.

He recalled that on that occasion he proposed that university professionals be given a favored place in the PRD.

"Many national and municipal PRD leaders were afraid that the newly arrived professionals would take away their jobs, but the correctness of my proposal has been demonstrated as the months have gone by, and today we are witnessing the hoped-for merger of the PRD masses with the university professionals who had remained outside partisan political activity," he stated.

He asserted that aside from the 1,500 professionals who registered at two meetings organized in the National District, the interest in attracting professionals has spread to all PRD branches.

"As evidence of this interesting movement I would mention that on the 24th 103 agricultural professionals took the oath of party allegiance in the city of Santiago and on the 28th in Mao the oath was taken by 64 more out of a total of 100 who registered in the party, but the remaining 36 were unable to make it because of transportation difficulties," he indicated.

He asserted that this month in Moca a mass registration of 250 professionals was undertaken, while more than 70 professionals recently took the oath of party allegiance in Zone K of the National District, adding that in almost all PRD zones rank-and-file committees made up entirely of professionals are being organized, with Zone C already having one.

Separately, Pena Gomez said that the PRD recently staged a medical-social campaign in the southern region of the country during which more than 20,000 patients were treated.

"In staging the medical campaign, the Coordinating Committee collected a large amount of medicines thanks to the generous cooperation of several laboratories and pharmacies, as well as personal charitable donations," he stated.

He indicated that special congratulations are due the PRD branch in Puerto Rico, in particular the secretary general of the affiliate, Mr Tomas Gonzalez, and his wife Mary de Gonzalez, who as soon as they learned of the intention to stage the medical campaign, began collecting food and medicine, which they immediately shipped to our country and which our doctors were thus able to take with them to the provinces in the south.

"This is not the first time that our comrades in the Puerto Rico branch have acted quickly and efficiently to help our people. They also did so when hurricanes David and Frederick passed through and long before that, when heavy flooding caused serious damage in several provinces of the Cibao. This is how to help the party, with honest, disinterested work, not just with branch activities," Pena Gomez underscored.

In conclusion, he said that all of the country's leaders ought to take after the spirit of service shown by PRD member Tomas Gonzalez and the heads of the Puerto Rico branch.

8743
CSO: 3010

PAPER SAYS SUGAR SHORTAGES MUST BE RESOLVED

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 27 Sep 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Sugar"]

[Text] Hoarding does not create shortages; shortages cause hoarding.

When people notice that hoarding is going on because an item is in short supply, they tend to attribute the shortage to hoarding.

Hoarding is one of the ills that stem from shortages.

There is a real shortage of refined sugar simply because demand outstrips production.

This situation will seemingly last for years.

Neither low-price sales nor rationing to stores or distributor organizations will resolve the problem.

And there will be hoarding, because of the shortages.

It has been said that some sugar earmarked for domestic consumption has been exported clandestinely, and this is probably true.

On account of the price difference between sugar for domestic consumption and sugar on the world market, it is very tempting to clandestinely export sugar purchased for the home market.

This is an issue that warrants attention.

We Dominicans will have to consume more brown or cream sugar.

The consensus is that a purer cream sugar should be made available.

The problem of refined sugar is going to last quite a while, but we must seek a solution right now by boosting the production capacity of this kind of sugar.

Experts have pointed out that an intermediate variety of sugar could possibly be produced, with smaller investment requirements for equipment, which could be set up promptly. This approach should also be looked into.

8743
CSO: 3010

UNCONDITIONAL BAN OF ALL SOUTH AFRICAN GOODS ANNOUNCED

Bridgetown ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 27 Sep 80 p 3

[Text]

ST. GEORGES, Grenada, Friday (CANA) — The Grenada Government today announced an unconditional ban on all trade with South Africa, following the discovery on supermarket shelves here of canned fruit from the racially-divided African state.

A statement from the Legal Affairs Ministry said it had investigated the presence here of canned South African mushrooms following a story in the Government-owned "Free West Indian" newspaper.

The paper had quoted the owner of the supermarket where the goods were seen as saying that the fruit were supplied by a company in Canada and he was unaware of the fact that the imports had originated from South Africa.

The Government statement said: "The Ministry looked into the legal position relative to the importation of South African goods into Grenada and advised that goods can only be imported under and by virtue of laws existing before the (March 1979) revolution, if a special license was issued to an importer. There is no record of any licence having been issued for the importation of South African goods.

"The People's Revolutionary Government has decided to affect a total ban on all trade with South Africa and accordingly the Ministry of Legal Affairs has drafted the necessary legal documents.

"All importers are hereby advised that under no circumstances what so ever will the importation of goods originating in South Africa be allowed into Grenada and the People's Revolutionary Government and the people of Grenada totally condemn and deplore the racist and facist government of South Africa".

CSO: 3020

PRIME MINISTER LAUDS LAUNCHING OF CUBAN COSMONAUT

Bridgetown ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 27 Sep 80 p 3

[Text]

ST. GEORGE's, Grenada, Friday (CANA) —

Grenada's Prime Minister, Maurice Bishop, has said that the launching of Cuban Cosmonaut Arnaldo Tomayo Mendez into space "is very significant for Caribbean and Latin American countries in many respects."

The Government Information Service (GIS) quoted Mr. Bishop as saying "not only is Arnald Tomayo Mendez the first Cuban, first Latin American, first Caribbean man, first black man to be launched into space. For the Cuban people, and for all of us throughout the Caribbean and Latin America it is a great leap forward in the world of science and technology."

Mr. Bishop also noted that the Cuban and Soviet cosmonauts sent up last week will be carrying out a number of experiments designed by Cuban scientists, to benefit the Caribbean nations.

Bishop also said that "this event is also another indication on the part of the socialist countries of their willingness to share their experience in science and technology with the developing countries.

It should be noted, he said, a Vietnamese had recently accompanied the Soviets on a joint space flight.

"Continuing exploration of the peaceful use of outer space has been closely related to the advancement of the developing countries and was made possible by extensive co-operation among the ten socialist countries participating in the intercosmos programme," said Mr. Bishop.

"So we of revolutionary Grenada salute this latest manifestation of further co-operation between the socialist world and the developing countries.

"And we hail this, not only as a historic occasion for the Cuban people, but also as a great achievement for the entire Caribbean and Latin America, all of which stand to benefit from the peaceful use of outer space," he concluded.

CSO: 3020

CHURCH DOCUMENT PROTESTS AGAINST VIOLENT TREATMENT

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] A Canadian nuns' convent located in Morales, Izabal, in the northern part of the Republic of Guatemala, was recently subjected to an attack by individuals who threw hand grenades at the building where the nuns were sleeping. A similar attack occurred simultaneously at the parish house in the same locality.

These events come within the context of repression which the military dictatorship headed by Romeo Lucas Garcia has pursued against the Christians in Guatemala who have committed themselves to the cause of the people.

This type of attack has even extended to the murder of priests, both Guatemalan and foreign, in the El Quiche zone, a department situated in the northern part of Guatemala, in particular. In this area, all of the priests and nuns have been forced to leave in view of the refusal of the Guatemalan authorities to guarantee them a minimum of safety in the pursuit of their pastoral activities.

This document, drafted by the El Quiche diocese itself, objectively and without melodrama describes the harsh reality which exists as a result of the repression by the Guatemalan army.

I. Pastoral Background

Since the diocese of El Quiche was created, the bishops and workers in the pastorate of the diocese have tried to remain faithful to the doctrine of the second Vatican council. Throughout these years, the conscience of the faithful has been awakened to a greater commitment of love and solidarity to their brothers, especially the most needy. The Catholic Church, respectful of cultures, secular traditions and various levels of education, has patiently, with a mother's love, obtained excellent fruit in human and religious advancement.

The guidelines set forth by the bishops in Medellin and more recently in Puebla contributed to a better understanding of the will of God for His people. Catholics, like all human beings aware of universal brotherhood, have collaborated in the joint effort for progress, peace and advancement.

The diocese of El Quiche has since then done self-sacrificing work to offer the Lord more worthy, more just and more humane Guatemalans. It has never departed from the guidelines of the Catholic Church, within the framework of the Guatemalan constitution.

The Church, mother and teacher of the people, has pursued its cultural and spiritual calling with love. Aware that the fatherland needed good and well-trained Guatemalans, it undertook the arduous task, sparing no effort or sacrifice, in full generosity.

Regrettably, this evangelical work has been misunderstood and criticized by those who are terrified by the universal fate of the great family of God. In recent years, the Catholic Church has found itself hindered, cruelly persecuted and criticized in its work.

This contradictory situation has become more acute since 1976, when all of Guatemala suffered one of the greatest disasters in its history, the February earthquake. The diocese of El Quiche dedicated itself to aiding the needy, without restrictions of race, creed or social status. This social activity awakened baseless suspicions and it was consistently slandered and accused of reflecting partisan and political interests.

II. Tragic Events

This year, 1980, has been a Calvary for the Catholic people in the department. The wave of violence from which the entire world is suffering is an insufficient explanation. On various occasions the diocese of El Quiche has raised its voice in a demand for justice in view of the flagrant violations of the most basic human rights. It was our duty, as human beings, as Christians and as Guatemalans.

A. In May of this year, the diocese suffered the machinegunning of the Uspantan Convent. The priests and nuns in that parish and the parishes of Cunen and Chicaman had to withdraw in view of the difficult working conditions and the lack of personal safety.

B. In the month of June our diocese donned mourning when Father Jose Maria Gran Cirera and his sexton were murdered in Chajul, forcing the monks, nuns and priests of the parishes of Nebaj, Chajul and Cotzal to depart.

C. The entire northern part of El Quiche was left without spiritual aid. The bishop of the diocese attempted to launch a dialog with the authorities to ensure respect for the mission of the Church and the physical safety of Catholics. Nothing positive was achieved.

D. In the month of July, Father Faustino Villaneueva was assassinated in his Joyabaj parish office, and as in the preceding cases, this forced the nuns working in the area to depart.

There have been no investigations of the crimes involved in any of these events to date. The murderers are free to function.

The violence pursued in the department of El Quiche reached a humanly intolerable situation when plans for an attack on the life of the bishop of the diocese were revealed. To these terrible deeds of blood and violence are added the tragedy of the many poor families in our diocese who weep for the loss of their husbands, fathers or sons, and the death threats against various priests and nuns among those still remaining in the department, such that all were forced to depart, with the resulting closing of parish churches, seminaries, boarding schools and other aid projects.

III. Evaluation and Decision

The members of the pastorates headed by their bishop meditated in the light of their faith on what the best path for preventing this repression, persecution and the death of Christians would be. The Catholic faith, following the gospel of Christ loyally, is the basis of the scandalous motivation of the murderers' attacks. As when Jesus trod the path to Calvary carrying the cross, the forces of darkness will not accept the light of God. Hundreds of us Catholics are aware of this and live in hope. Christ came to the world to suffer a painful Good Friday in order to achieve the glory of the resurrection. Nothing can force the Christian spirit, nurtured by the blood of martyrs and saints, to bow. We protest that Catholics, as good Guatemalan Christians, have been martyred without reason. Lives useful to the fatherland have been lost because of slander and false interpretations of the word of God.

The conference of Guatemalan bishops attempted to correct this situation, establishing contacts and launching dialog with the authorities. No guarantees of respect or physical safety or of the lives of the members of the pastorate were given.

The conclusion which has been reached is that at this tragic moment in the history of Guatemala it is no longer possible to provide any kind of spiritual aid in the diocese of El Quiche, and that therefore a temporary withdrawal will be necessary. The bishop, priests and nuns have decided to leave the diocese awaiting minimally favorable conditions for returning. This forced absence does not mean abandonment or renunciation of service to the Christian people of El Quiche.

It represents a sincere decision reached in faith, which showed us the only path possible to aid our people, as witnesses to Guatemalan Christians of our protest against the current situation, and our energetic appeal to the authorities to do everything possible to resolve the problem which fills us with pain.

IV. Appeal to Hope

The Catholic Church has experienced difficult circumstances, persecution, death and misunderstanding throughout the 2,000 years of its existence. We beg of you to remain firm in your faith, to keep alive the light of hope and the flame of the love of God and one's neighbor.

We will never be alone if we have Christ and his mother the Virgin Mary as our guides. We cannot take the wrong path because we go hand in hand with the Good Shepherd. "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind" (II Timothy, I:7).

Circumstances change and we hope that soon the diocese of El Quiche will return to normalcy.

As the word of God tells us, we must be alert to the greedy wolves who will try to mislead, rob and murder the souls of Christians. Our best defense is to suffer with the Church, standing with our bishop, the head of the diocese. Painful though the present provisions may be, we are certain that following the torment and the violence which afflict us, the sun of the justice of God the bountiful Father will shine.

We are always with you.

5157
CSO: 3010

GOVERNMENT EXAMINES COAL AS ALTERNATIVE TO OIL

Bridgetown SUNDAY ADVOCATE-NEWS in English 28 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Suzann Francis]

[Text]

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Saturday, (CANA) — The Jamaican Government is examining the possibility of converting its main energy-consuming industries from oil to coal.

"It is clear," Prime Minister Michael Manley told a Press conference, "that the price of energy output relationship between coal and oil for industrial uses is now massively in favour of coal. The potential savings in foreign exchange in a conversion of major industries from oil to coal in Jamaica are correspondingly great".

And Barclay Ewart, head of the Government's Jamaica Industrial Development Corporation (JIDC) and chairman of a task force which the Government has established to look into the conversion, said Jamaica could possibly anticipate an annual savings of some US $[illegible] million by switching from oil to coal.

Jamaica currently uses some 1.5 million tonnes of oil per annum for power generation by the bauxite companies, the Jamaica Public Service Company (JPS) and the state-owned cement company, Mr. Ewart said.

He said the conversion rate was approximately seven [illegible] of oil to one tonne of coal and that the comparative cost was presently some [illegible] per tonne for coal landed in Jamaica.

Mr. Ewart noted that coal had only 70 per cent the heating value of oil, but said the cost comparison for equivalent heating value was still in favour of coal, at US $87 for coal and US $225 for oil — a saving of US $138 per tonne.

However, the Government has indicated that while price factors currently favoured a change to coal, it was necessary to look at long-term availability of supplies and reliability of price.

"Government wants to see if we can achieve a major saving, say over the next five years or so, in the energy bill," Prime Minister Manley said.

"Our view is that the coal thing looks very promising. But to really make it realisable option, we have to look at whether we can get reliable prices, assured supplies, all these things," he said.

Mr. Manley said the task force, which includes personnel from energy organisations locally as well as from industry, was to have a preliminary report ready within two months.

He said the committee would be charged with examining the feasibility of converting the JPS and the cement company, in the first instance, from oil to coal. These [illegible] state-owned operations together [illegible] some 30 per cent of Jamaica's energy requirement.

The task force will look into the possibility of developing a system of coal supply at the lowest possible cost, with a special look being taken at the possibility of working out joint shipping arrangement with the bauxite companies.

It will also look into the possibility of securing long-term supplies of coal at predictable prices, examine existing coal supply proposals of international organizations, and look into the environmental aspect of the matter.

Assuming that all the indications are favourable, Mr. Manley said, the task force would be then be asked to consider what other aspects of the economy could benefit from conversion to coal.

The task force report is to be made available for public discussion.

CSO: 3020

HUMBERTO ORTEGA DISCUSSES SIGNIFICANCE OF SOMOZA'S DEATH

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 6

[Interview with Humberto Ortega, minister of defense and commander in chief of the Sandinist People's Army (EPS), by Richard Izarra; in Managua, date not given]

[Text] Special report (UNO MAS UNO and DIARIO DE CARACAS)--When the current defense minister and commander in chief of the EPS was 19 years old, he and three companions mounted an operation to execute Anastasio Somoza Debayle, an operation very similar to the one on 17 September in Paraguay, but with the vast difference that in 1966 the Sandinist Movement was weak and feeble.

Heading up the young commando unit, Humberto Ortega did not have too many weapons to choose from: some tacks to stop the car in which Somoza was riding, two pistols and several Molotov cocktails that they themselves had put together. The place: the Leon Highway. The dictator would take this route back to Managua.

The commando unit was not in luck. They were discovered and arrested. Ortega was beginning to make a name for himself in the student movement, and Somoza did not want to create too many waves. Moreover, this was nothing more than a "student itch," and they were not going to undermine his mighty empire. Thus, Somoza released Ortega. Little did the dictator suspect that 14 years later that tall, thin young man with the sparse mustache would be sitting in his comfortable armchair in Somoza's own government office, while in the southern part of the continent the dictator was being blown to bits by a blast apparently from an "RPG4" like the ones that the Vietnamese used to destroy Yankee tanks.

Sooner or Later

As if in some fable (except that the pages and drawings have been brought to life by the actions of hundreds of thousands of people), "the bad" have been cut down by "the good." Sooner or later the hand of justice does its work. And sure enough, our defense minister, Commander Humberto Ortega, is sitting in the same chair in the same office that Somoza had built.

It was there that Humberto Ortega and I talked about Somoza's death. Our entire talk transpired in the midst of that very special smile that comes to one's lips at moments of triumph. There could be no doubt: the military strategist of the Sandinist Revolution had dealt another victorious blow. His joy was visible through his uniform. He had accomplished, 14 years later, that which had so often kept him awake at night.

[Question] Commander, was this a Sandinist operation?

[Answer] We Sandinists are envious of this operation because we were not personally pulling the trigger on the weapons used against the tyrant. We envy its boldness and perfect execution. We feel fulfilled by it. In this sense, we Sandinists identify with the spirit, bravery and boldness of the group that performed it.

Whatever He Decides

[Question] Commander, what do you think the future holds for Anastasio Somoza Portocarrero, the son of the executed Somoza?

[Answer] His destiny depends on whatever he decides to do. If he chooses to do what his father or grandfather did, he will wind up like his father and grandfather.

[Question] In your opinion, commander, which of the two Somozas (Somoza Garcia and Somoza Debayle) promoted the most "evil" in Nicaragua?

[Answer] That's like asking which ocean is saltier: the Atlantic or the Pacific. I think that they are equally salty. We could say that the two Somozas, "Tacho senior" (Somoza Garcia) and the other Tacho (Somoza Debayle) are part of a single dictatorial distortion and aberration of a system that was born of the worst reactionary imperialism. The Somoza dictatorship was a monstrous child of an equally monstrous mother: Gringo intervention in Nicaragua. It was this intervention that intensified the evil sentiments. But it was the Yankee Marines who taught the National Guard how to burn down ranches, how to toss children in the air and run them through with bayonets and how to cut off heads, arms and tongues. That was the school, the "West Point" for the Nicaraguan National Guard trained during the years of the intervention. That was what Somoza handed down to his sons, to his followers, who over time set up a dynasty, a clique. Thus it is not by chance that we have several thousand Somozaist prisoners here, because all of them were trained in that school and put its teachings into practice.

[Question] Where were you when the elder Somoza was killed?

[Answer] I was just a small boy. "Tacho senior," as we called him, was executed in 1956. I was born in 1947, so I was 9 years old, but I remember the incident well, also the fear-tinged joy that my parents and our people felt in hailing this historic event. I would compare that moment with now, when we are celebrating the execution of the other tyrant without fear. It cannot fail to move you, especially when you have gone through a lengthy struggle.

First Reaction

[Question] What was your first reaction, commander, upon learning of his execution?

[Answer] What first came to my mind was a prose poem by our national poet, Ruben Dario, written in 1892 and entitled "Why."

It is perhaps one of Dario's most social, most rebellious, most political and most anti-imperialist poems. At one point he asserts that the oppressed will sooner or later overthrow tyrannies. He mentions how the statues of bandits will be smashed to bits, which happened here in Nicaragua: the statues of Somoza were smashed to bits. Ruben Dario spoke about that in those days. Dario described everything that is coming to pass now, everything that was to happen in this century. At one point the poem says: "...fire will illuminate the ruins..." (this is talking about when the people will rise up) and then "...the heavens will see with fearful joy the supreme and terrible revenge of drunken poverty..." Our people really did get drunk with joy. It was the enthusiasm of the poor people whom Somoza bequeathed us that rose up on 17 September as they expressed their instinctive feelings of grass roots vengeance. The vanguard, the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN), does not encourage revenge but together with the people it experienced the relief of their vengeance in relation to what happened in Paraguay.

[Question] How many victims of Somozism have there been, commander?

[Answer] We are not engaging in propaganda when we talk of 100,000 victims during the Somoza era. Last century and at the beginning of this century, Nicaragua had almost three times as many people as Costa Rica and Panama. Now, however, we have almost the same population. Why? Because of the frightful social conditions and the continual bloodletting that interventionist wars caused in our country. We know that tens of thousands of people were either killed, wounded, maimed or exiled.

[Question] As far as you yourself are concerned, commander, how did you feel when you learned of Somoza's death, inasmuch as you occupy his office and even use the same chair that he did?

[Answer] I didn't feel anything special just because I sit in the same armchair in the same office. Everything was destroyed here in Nicaragua, not only because of the war but also because of the Somozist corruption together with the 1972 earthquake. What was left was a very poor, very limited infrastructure. That is why we are here in these offices; I mean, we're not going to leave them unused because of romantic notions. I'm particularly annoyed at having to use this cave of sorts, because this bunker is just that: a cave. There are no windows; it's all closed up. In the future we are going to transfer it to the university and the Ministry of Culture. I did not want to work here, but as the months have gone by, I have forgotten that "the man used to be here..."

[Question] One last question, commander. Who do you think carried out the operation in Paraguay?

[Answer] It does not matter so much which group it was. What really matters is that a monster is no longer alive. They were patriots, they were valiant men, they were men of peace.

8743
CSO: 3010

JUNTA MEMBER RAMIREZ COMMENTS ON WORLD, REGIONAL ISSUES

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 27 Sep 80 pp 1,9

[Interview with Dr Sergio Ramirez Mercado, member of the Government Junta of National Reconstruction; date and place not given]

[Text] Dr Sergio Ramirez Mercado, a member of the Government Junta of National Reconstruction, described as extremely regrettable the war between Iran and Iraq, adding that a worsening of the conflict would be a real disaster for the Nicaraguan economy because it would immediately trigger a steep jump in oil prices.

In an interview with EL NUEVO DIARIO, Dr Ramirez Mercado expressed the hope that the conflict can soon be settled peacefully.

The Interview

The following is the interview with Dr Ramirez Mercado, in which he discusses a variety of issues:

[Question] Does the Government Junta have any statement to make on the war between Iran and Iraq?

[Answer] We are monitoring with great concern this war between two members of the nonalined movement. It has caused us much grief that the war is between two countries seeking their own paths of development. The situation affects all nonalined countries, and we hope that it can be settled peacefully right away.

[Question] Do you feel that the hand of imperialism could be involved?

[Answer] That is very difficult to tell at the moment. This is an extremely tense and conflict-ridden zone because they are fighting over the Straits of Hormuz, which are of major strategic importance since the oil for the West passes through there. It is impossible to think that worldwide interests are not somehow involved in this war.

Repercussions Here

[Question] What repercussions would an intensification of the war have on Nicaragua?

[Answer] The destruction of the refineries would immediately trigger a shortage in world oil reserves. We are currently paying $32.50 a barrel. If prices jump to $50, for example, our economy would have a tough time handling that. It would be a disaster.

The Incident in Paraguay

[Question] What could you tell us about the Stroessner government's allegations that the Nicaraguan Government was involved in Somoza's execution?

[Answer] It was a major failure to Stroessner's dictatorship to see Somoza killed in the middle of the street in broad daylight without his police being able to do anything to prevent it.

Dictators boast that their countries are islands of peace, and such an incident had never before taken place in that country. It stands to reason that Stroessner should try to blame someone else, and that someone else is Nicaragua.

But the crazy lies of the Paraguayan police have been denied by the people whom they pointed to as participants in the attack, who were in Managua at the time of the incident. I think that his regime took this tack because it has been unable to bring its investigation to a close.

Regarding CELAM [Latin American Bishops Conference]

[Question] What could you tell us about Miguel Ernesto Vigil's report that CELAM is plotting against the Nicaraguan Revolution?

[Answer] CELAM is a political entity and, therefore, takes political stands. When Monsignor Lopez Trujillo says without grounds that "if Nicaragua were to become a Marxist-Leninist state, there would be problems for the Church," it is as if I were to say that if the Church reverts to the days of the Inquisition, it would be a problem for Christians.

The Whole Thing Is Made Up

That, of course, would be an equally subjective correct assertion and just as groundless. The reactionary papers here printed headlines like "CELAM sees serious problems in Nicaragua," but the whole thing is made up.

So then, as a politician, Mr Lopez Trujillo takes a stand opposed to the revolution, and therefore we have to respond to him politically, because we cannot assume that his stand is eminently religious.

He is coming to the defense of the Church in Nicaragua at a time when parishioners, Catholics and the hierarchy know very well that the Church is not under attack; on the contrary, we are striving to create the best climate for relations, and the Church is witness to this endeavor.

Work-Study

[Question] A local paper has begun a campaign against the work-study program. What comments do you have in this respect?

[Answer] They are looking at it from an anticommunist, anti-Sandinist and antirevolutionary perspective.

I think that they are talking from the darkness of caves, because the work-study combination was not invented by regimes with a Marxist-Leninist ideology. Under this concept, capitalist countries reached their highest level of development in the 19th century when they radically altered their Thomist concept of education, based on an eminently theoretical and ecclesiastical approach, and linked it to labor.

We cannot say that Truman was a communist because he set up the agricultural schools in which students worked hard and learned to respect the value of labor.

It is our hope that here in Nicaragua we do not have a rift between the peasant farmers and the intellectuals who attend school or university to get away from the working people and later exploit them without any sense of guilt.

The people who want to create this rift are the same ones who are now saying that the peasant farmers do not want to work, that they are loafers. We can see clearly that if the farmers were not working and if the workers were not operating the machines, we would not have 150,000 manzanas [1 manzana=1 3/4 acres] of cotton and 200,000 manzanas of corn growing, nor would we be on the verge of harvesting our coffee.

So then, the people who say that the peasant farmers are not working are the ones who have never stooped down to work in a furrow and who look with scorn on students who get their shoes dirty and get calluses on their hands from using machetes.

Somozism

[Question] Did Somozism die with Somoza?

[Answer] We cannot say that Somozism died with the physical disappearance of Somoza, because it is a system, an attitude. There are Somozists inside and outside the country. There are some who did not used to be but who are now and are against the revolution because they want to preserve a system that the revolution did away with on 19 July.

We cannot say that it has disappeared because when the United States wanted to declare Somoza's civil death, the aim was to preserve Somozaism intact.

[Question] What do you have to say about Somoza Portocarrero apparently inheriting the leadership from him?

[Answer] Every counterrevolution has a head, some close friends and some followers. Somozism is the thousand-headed snake that we still have here: the people who oppose the revolution and lie to damage it, the people who want to bring back the past.

[Question] People are saying that now that Somoza is dead, you can no longer accuse anyone of being a Somozist, just a counterrevolutionary. What do have to say about this?

[Answer] The revolution does not invent, search out or go digging for descriptions. They are determined by people's attitudes. We could not describe as counterrevolutionaries the people who want the poor to have higher living standards, who are for education, health care centers, etc and who are willing to fight to the utmost consequences to achieve these things. But resorting to systematic lies against the revolution to oppose these changes is Somozism.

[Question] Do you think that Somozism has lost strength with Somoza's death?

[Answer] I think that it is more important to ask how strong the revolution is, because the stronger it is, the more organized it is and the more weapons it has, it will be able to turn back and crush any invasions or terrorist acts that Somozists come here to undertake, and the revolution has the strength to do this now.

Infiltrators

[Question] Cordova Rivas said recently that Somozists had infiltrated the Sandinist Movement. What about this?

[Answer] Well, a person who voted for Somoza because he was hungry or because he was afraid of losing his job is not a Somozist. Somozists are the people who still hold the attitudes that Somozism engendered and sheltered, who are haughty even though they work in government, who look scornfully on someone because he is poor and who rob from the Treasury. The revolution has to pursue these people to the death, and that is what we are doing. We currently have more than 50 cases before the regular courts of individuals who have stolen from the Treasury.

[Question] Cordova Rivas also says that a number of conservatives have been jailed on charges of being Somozist infiltrators, which creates problems for pluralism and, in particular, for his party.

[Answer] I would not go as far as he does. We have to qualify things a bit. Some people have abused their uniforms and government jobs, and the revolution has been implacable with them. Many of them are in jail; others have been fired, and others are before the courts.

There could be cases such as the ones that Dr Cordova Rivas is talking about, but they are isolated, not systematic cases. I think that the people who have been unjustly imprisoned should be released, but the people who are in jail for counterrevolutionary acts have to be held accountable, whether they are conservatives, liberals or whatever.

8743
CSO: 3010

VIOLETA CHAMORRO COMMENTS ON NEW PRESS LAW

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 1 Sep 80 pp 1, 12

[Interview with Mrs Violeta de Chamorro, former member of the Government Junta, at the A. C. Sandino Airport; date not given]

> [Text] Mrs Violeta de Chamorro left Sunday for Houston, in the United States, for reasons of health. Since she broke her right foot some 6 months ago, Mrs Chamorro has been suffering from constant pain in her foot.
>
> Before leaving for the United States, Mrs Chamorro was approached at the A. C. Sandino Airport by a LA PRENSA reporter to whom she granted an interview concerning the three new decrees issued by the Government Junta which, according to a local newspaper, are "to guarantee freedom of expression."

[Question] Mrs Chamorro: What is your opinion of the three new decrees issued by the JGRN [National Reconstruction Government Junta] which, according to a local newspaper, "guarantee the freedom of expression?"

[Answer] Well, I understand freedom of expression to mean my husband's struggle. During the 27 years I spent with him, I was able to see that he defended everybody, rich and poor, guerrillas, journalists and peasants against the Somoza dictatorship. He always fought for the broadest freedom of expression.

One would have to understand these "little things" that have been promulgated today; I do not understand how they guarantee freedom of expression and I believe that they should be consistent. If there are going to be restrictive laws, they should be applied to all the means of communication.

All the means of communication have a guiding function, including that of guiding the government as to where its faults lie, helping in that way to improve government to the benefit of all Nicaragua.

Pedro, my husband, fought through LA PRENSA so that our people could free themselves from the Somoza dictatorship and in great measure contributed to that liberation with his life and with his death.

Freedom of expression is basic to the existence of all other freedoms. Before, the IAPA was good because it struggled to defend freedom of the press and defended jailed journalists. I cannot understand why now some of the journalists who benefited from that great labor of the IAPA, attack it with hatred.

9341
CSO: 3010

REVOLUTION ANALYZED FROM MARXIST PERSPECTIVE

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 30 Aug 80 p 2

[Article by Eddy Matute Ruiz: "A Marxist Analysis of the Sandinist Revolution"]

[Text] This article has the express objective of viewing the Sandinist government from a Marxist methodological perspective. In so doing we scrupulously respect the ideological premises which, translated into Lenin's diverse writings and the official documentation of the Marxist Unification Labor Party (POUM) drawn up by its secretary Andres Nin during the Spanish Civil War, are the basis of that doctrine and applicable to the Nicaraguan case.

This analytical approach applied to the Nicaraguan reality tells us that the People's Sandinist Revolution, from the point of view of the methods of taking power and the demands expressed in the government program, acquires the classic form of the proletarian revolution started in the Soviet Union in 1917, adopting its own peculiar nuances due to the local structure of its social classes and of the insurrection, in a specific geopolitical situation which determines the alliances and the rythm of social change.

To examine the character of the Nicaraguan Government as expressed in its social action programs and alliances, we will use as historic reference Lenin's 1905 theses, a series of considerations which he developed when the labor masses in Czarist Russia were undertaking their first historical attempt to attack the citadel of power. In that situation, Lenin was saying that the government which would eventually be established in Russia would be a revolutionary democratic government of workers and peasants. In essence that meant that the triumphant proletariat together with the peasants would have to develop democratic changes, such as the agrarian reform and the nationalization of the banks. This implied, in Lenin's judgement, the participation of some employers in the government.

However, the defeat of the proletariat in 1905 and its subsequent disappearance from the political scene offered the Czarist autocracy the possibility of maintaining the bourgeoisie relatively unified, until this unity was severely damaged by the proletariat offensive at the end of 1916. This offensive, in its unstoppable advance, demonstrated that the correlation of forces between the bourgeoisie and the proletariat had gone through a historic turning point, wherein it was possible to observe that the democratic employers did not intend or have the strength to support the path of change, and had to confront workers and peasants who in 1917, led by the Bolshevik Party, ousted them from power by means of an insurrection.

This armed event raised the Bolshevik Party to the position of leader of all society, with the resulting acute and radical polarity between the social classes as a consequence of the taking of power and the difficulties created in the administration of this process. This compelled the Bolsheviks to establish a sort of proletarian dictatorship which meant the concentration of political power in the hands of the party, a concentration of power which did not imply the total expropriation of the bourgeoisie.

This expropriation increased when the Russian employers abandoned this factories, businesses and land holdings, taking for granted that the counterrevolutionary armies would restore the hegemony of capital. However, the Red Army led by Trostky crushed the counterrevolution with the harshness typical of the Bolsheviks, closing off for a long time the process of restoring capital.

The above statements lead us to draw the main political conclusions.

The concentration of political and economic power carried out by the Bolshevik Party in Russia was not a consequence of its program but rather of the situation provoked by reactionary forces, which made them become harsher. In other works, in the field of Marxism, it is the specific situation that determines the form of government.

The above implies that each revolution has a form of government which reflects the peculiarities of its historical and political context.

An examination of the Nicaraguan revolution on the basis of the processes mentioned above, which are a good example of the social history of the class struggle, tells us that the Nicaraguan process in this stage can be interpreted according to Lenin's 1905 methodology; obviously in doing so we keep in mind the historical and time differences.

This analysis shows that in Nicaragua there is a democratic government of workers and peasants, which having hegemony over the economy and politics, does not try to control all the social life of the nation, promoting in practice a government of mixed economy and pluralist politics, a fact which is reflected in the composition of the Council of State.

That is to say that Sandinism is trying to develop a program of deep social changes without giving up a vast democratic alliance, an objective reflected in the tendencies of those who form the National Patriotic Front.

However, this pluralist objective of Sandinism is being seriously affected by the terrorist offensive unleashed during the last week of July by a small number who are resisting social change, a fact which, at this level in the analysis, suggest a basic question.

To answer this question in the Nicaraguan case, we must consider two of the aspects present in the Marxist concept of proletarian dictatorship.

a) The main aspect of the concept analyzed tells us that the concept of proletarian dictatorship refers to the vanguard's hegemony over the economy, a scheme which, by affecting the distribution of surpluses, facilitates leadership in political conflicts.

b) Political conflicts, in turn, can acquire two forms: authoritarian and democratic. These forms of government are not defined beforehand by the vanguard but take form according to the activity of counterrevolutionary forces, which will be determining by their acts the social and political answer of the vanguard.

9341
CSO: 3010

ANDEN EXTOLS TEACHERS WHO PARTICIPATED IN LITERACY CAMPAIGN

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 3 Sep 80 p 7

[Article by Trinidad Vasquez]

[Excerpts] The Nicaraguan teachers who participated in the glorious literacy campaign, especially those who worked in the rural areas and the red-black brigades which were sent to the most remote areas of the country, now deserve to be called with dignity teachers and it was they who restored the reputation of the national teaching profession in this new revolutionary age.

And this has been recognized by ANDEN [National Association of Nicaraguan Educators] in an excensive communique which in one of its most outstanding parts says: "Our brothers the teachers were subjected this time to their hardest trial and restored with their presence in the literacy campaign the dignity of the teaching profession, vilified by the Somoza regime and rescued by our teaching organization wisely led by the vanguard theory, which is the Sandinist theory."

For that reason Professor Emilio Caldera, ANDEN acting president, is now demanding greater participation by the teachers in the drafting of the new educational plans and programs, since they are the authorized voice in the field of education. He is also asking that the Sandinist Youth be taken into account.

Up to now, the teachers have participated in commissions as observers in the discussion of transitional plans and programs. Almost 20,000 elementary and secondary school teachers took part in the National Literacy Crusade.

9341
CSO: 3010

INTERVIEW WITH PCU SECRETARY GENERAL RODNEY ARISMENDI

Rome L'UNITA in Italian 19 Sep 80 p 15

[Interview with Rodney Arismendi by Mario Ronchi, in Rome date not given]

[Text] We met with Comrade Rodney Arismendi, the secretary general of the Communist Party of Uruguay, who is at present in Rome, and we asked him to give us some idea about the most recent developments in the situation of his country, which has been oppressed for 7 years (June 1973) by a harsh fascist military dictatorship and on the Latin American subcontinent. What is happening is the small republic of the "Southern Cone?" Have new prospects and new possibilities for struggle opened up?

[Answer] "Yes," Arismendi answered. "The regime, in its attempt to break out of the isolation in which it had come to find itself on the international level and to face in some way its internal opposition, has announced for next November a 'constitutional referendum.' It is an operation 'a la Pinochet,' a 'trick through which the military would like to "institutionalize" their dictatorship and at the same time give themselves a patina of 'legitimacy' and make themselves a little more 'presentable.' This 'referendum' on a drastically authoritarian constitution is to be the first stage in the so-called 'political chronogram' devised by the leaders of the coup; the second stage is to unfold in 1981, with the direct election of a sole candidate for the presidency of the republic, chosen by the military themselves.

"The political seriousness of such a maneuver, its raw instrumental character," emphasized the secretary of the Uruguayan PC, "are very obvious. The intention is to force the people--voting, among other things, would be obligatory, with heavy sanctions for those who abstain--to swallow the 'status quo,' fascism. The coup leaders' plan, however, is encountering strong resistance, being rejected not only by the Broad Front (the coalition presided over by General Liber Seregni, who is still held in a prison camp, and in which all the democratic and progressive forces in Uruguay participate: from the PC to the Socialist Party, to numerous personalities in political and cultural life, to the DC and by the National Convention of Workers (this one also outlawed), but also by the two 'traditional' parties: the White (or National) Party and the Colored one."

The opposition today brings together even the solid sectors of the middle class--and this is explained, among other things, by the inability demonstrated by the regime to deal with the economic crisis, which is ruining medium-sized and small industries and craft activities which once flourished--, a good number of students and intellectuals, of the clergy itself and it is tending to broaden."

Arismendi recalled, in particular, the "nature," in so many ways "new," of the constitution, in New York, last April, at the headquarters of the United Nations, of the Group for Democratic Convergence of Uruguay, an organization formed by acknowledged representatives of the three main political currents (the White party, the Colored party and the Fronte Ampio) and which represents, before the government and international public opinion, the united will of antifascism. "Democratic convergence is the expression of very broad forces, it has the support of various Latin American countries (such as Mexico, Cuba, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Jamaica), of COPAL (which groups all the Latin American democratic parties) and, also, of American political and parliamentary personalities of democratic orientation. Precisely because its constitution has marked an important step forward in the common struggle against dictatorship, reinforcing the unity of the antifascist components in their respective autonomy and giving thus a new impetus also to the opposition movement within the country, the military have reached hysterically and that is by intensifying repression, multiplying the arrests (recently, the 77-year old socialist leader, Comrade Cardoso, was even imprisoned), worsening the conditions of the thousands of political prisoners."

The situation is, therefore, changing. The difficulties are certainly enormous: but the possibilities for making the reactionary plan of the coup leaders fail, by imposing the restoration of political and union freedoms and of civil rights, general amnesty for all the prisoners and for those exiled (among whom is Comrade Arismendi himself, expelled from his country in 1974, after a year of prison), the beginning of a process of free popular participation in the political and social life of the country, does not appear unrealistic or "remote" today.

[Question] Up to what point, therefore, can the recent, serious events which have occurred on the Latin American subcontinent influence Uruguay?

[Answer] "From the 'coup' carried out in 1973 first in my country, then in Chile," affirmed Arismendi, "there have begun, even though with difficulty and contradictions, new processes of great political importance in Latin America. We are thinking of the slow but progressive crumbling of the dictatorship in Brazil and of the success obtained last June by Herman Siles Zuazo in Bolivia, also of the victorious armed revolutionary struggle of the Sandinists and of the patriots in Nicaragua.

The democratic trends and forces have struggled and they have become reinforced on the whole. Certainly, the situations are different from country to country, each of which has its own national specific needs; and different, therefore, are the ways which the progressive and revolutionary movements can take. But the renewal has gone forward."

"Naturally," adds Arismendi, "these are not pointless processes. The 'coup' by the military in Bolivia, after the victory of Siles Zuazo (whom the Uruguayan regime has not actively supported by chance) represents, in particular, a threat, a danger for the entire subcontinent. The attempt to consolidate by every means the dictatorship of the 'Southern Cone' (Uruguay, Argentina, Chile, Paraguay) and to implant others (as is happening right now in Bolivia) is in fact directed against every democratic prospect of development, of transformation and it inserts itself, by exploiting them, into the difficulties which today the line of detente on the international level is encountering. The fascist military want to present themselves as the main force of support for U.S. imperialism in Latin America and on a world scale. Because of this, today more than ever, a concrete, incisive international solidarity with the struggle of our people is necessary."

Tomorrow, Demonstration in Rome

Rome--Through the initiative of the Group in Italy of the Communist Party of Uruguay, there will be held tomorrow at the Central Theater (Via Celsea 6) of Rome, a celebratory demonstration of the 60th anniversary of the founding of the PCU. Comrades Rodney Arismendi, the secretary of the Uruguayan PC and Gian Carlo Pajetta, of the PCI leadership, will speak. Comrade Maurizio Ferrara, regional secretary of the PCI, will preside.

8956
CSO: 3104

GUERRILLAS THREATEN EASTERN REGION FARMERS

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 4 Sep 80 p D-19

[Text] "The growing lack of safety in rural areas is seriously threatening the property and life of the agriculture and livestock farmers," the president of the National Federation of Cattlemen warned yesterday on announcing that this subject will be given priority consideration by the administrative council that the organization is convoking on 16 September.

Rafael Marcial Garmendia stated that the cattlemen's associations have been reporting to the appropriate authorities and to the federation itself a series of events that disturb them because they threaten food production for the Venezuelan population.

Cattlemen and leaders of several of the country's regions frequently report lack of safety, robbery and fear in the eastern farms, where groups of guerrillas operate constantly, despoiling and threatening the cattlemen's lives and hindering free access to their work locations and the continuation of their agricultural and livestock labors.

Garmendia said that the stealing of cattle has spread throughout the country and in some regions it has become serious, as in Portuguesa, where there have been million-dollar robberies.

Garmendia emphasized that the proliferation of meat sales along highways is highly disturbing because this not only facilitates selling animals of doubtful origin but threatens the people's health, since most of these places do not maintain minimal sanitary requirements.

More than 500 delegates from the 130 affiliated associations will attend the National Administrative Council of Federation Cattlemen, according to Garmendia.

"We also hope that by 16 September we will have been received by the minister of interior, whom we have asked for a hearing to explain to him the details of the insecurity in the countryside, which is placing restrictions on agriculture and livestock production," he said.

9545
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

RED FLAG MEMBERS SOUGHT--Fourteen alleged guerrillas accused of being part of a subversive cell that is reportedly operating in the mountains of Carabobo, and who belong to the Red Flag group and to the Americo Silva Front, are being energetically sought in the region by the DISIP (Directorate of Intelligence and Prevention Services) and the PTJ (Judicial Technical Police) forces, according to information obtained from completely reliable sources. The DISIP, say the sources, has distributed among state security entities a poster with the photographs of the 14 persons sought, with the warning that they are "dangerous subjects armed with very powerful weapons; thus full caution must be exercised in capturing them." The list of persons sought is the following: Gabriel Puerta Aponte, Andres Villarreal Baris, Jovito Faustino Lugo, Roberto Rincon Cabrera, Jose Luis Dominguez, Emperatriz Guzman, Andres Cova Mata, Jose Asdrubal Cordero, Francisco Javier Jimenez, Oscar Cedeno, Manual Gonzalez Mayer, Jesus Ramon Rodriguez, Fernando Valdivieso and Daniel Hernandez Lopez. [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 5 Sep 80 p D-24] 9545

ALLEGED GUERRILLA CONTACT ARRESTED--Casanay, 27 Aug--The alleged guerrilla contact arrested on his ranch in La Pena, near the site of the last skirmish between the government and guerrilla forces, is a Social Christian Party [COPEI] member and former policeman. The army arrested him after surprising him up a high tree, while soldiers were tracking through the outskirts of Santa Maria de Cariaco. The 60-year-old man's name is Francisco Vicente Jimenez. His relatives stated they are "sure he is not a guerrilla contact. He is a sick man, and we fear for his health. He was much loved on the docks of Cariaco and has always been in contact with the police there." Jimenez was a policeman in Cumana and a COPEI member, according to a card provided by his relatives. A neighbor who witnessed the arrest said Jimenez had gone out with a bucket full of fish heads for his dogs. He then climbed a tree to throw out some of the fish heads, when the dogs started to bark. Immediately thereafter the soldiers arrived. From that very moment Jimenez has been missing. His relatives want to know his whereabouts. [Text] [Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 28 Aug 80 Sec 2 p 30] 9545

PCV POLITICAL BUREAU ELECTED--The second plenary meeting of the Central Committee, which met on Friday, 22 August, elected the new Political Bureau consisting of 11 members and 5 alternates and approved in their posts the directors of TRIBUNA

POPULAR. The members of the Political Bureau are Comrades Gustavo Machado, president; Jesus Faria, general secretary; Alonso Ojeda Olaechea, Pedro Ortega Diaz, Radames Larrazabal, Rafael Jose Cortes, Eduardo Gallegos Mancera, Hector Mujica, Noel Sirit, Lino Perez Loyo and Jorge Santana, members; Trino Melean, Luis Ciano, Silvino Varela, Pedro Gutierrez and Ali Morales, alternate members. At the head of TRIBUNA POPULAR will be Comrades Gustavo Machado, director, and Americo Diaz Nunez, editor in chief. The plenary meeting also heard a report on the Polish situation and another on the danger of China's warlike attitude. The Central Committee of the PCV (Communist Party of Venezuela) unanimously approved a statement of support for the striking workers in the textile industry, the text of which is being published in this edition. [Text] [Caracas TRIBUNA POPULAR in Spanish 29 Aug-4 Sep 80 p 11] 9545

MARAVEN PROPANE LINE--Maracaibo, 11 Sep--The MARAVEN operating company is currently building a propane line from Puerto Miranda to the Zulia Petrochemical Complex that will facilitate the delivery of propane to the El Tablazo olefin plant. An authorized spokesman for the PDVSA [Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc] subsidiary said the project calls for the installation of 5 kilometers of 4-inch pipeline, with meteuing and control facilities. "This propane line," the spokesman said, "will carry all the production received from the La Paz and Mara plants, which ranges between 1,500 and 2,000 barrels a day." As is known, the El Tablazo operating installations are the site of CORPOVEN's LPG plant, which processes and supplies natural gas as a raw material to the PEQUIVEN [Petrochemical Company of Venezuela] olefin plant, the backbone of the El Tablazo Petrochemical Complex, but since demand exceeds CORPOVEN's supply, the MARAVEN operating company is building this project that will help reduce propane transportation costs. The propane is currently being transported in ships. [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 14 Sep 80 p D-7] 9238

ANZOATEGUI GAS PRODUCTION--Caracas, 5 Sep (VENPRES)--With the construction of the El Toco and Santa Rosa II gas plants in the state of Anzoategui, MENEVEN will be able to produce an additional 155 million cubic feet of gas a day. The PDVSA [Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc] subsidiary revealed that the El Toco plant will be equipped with three, 2,600-hp each, reciprocating compressors, with a total processing capacity of 75 million cubic feet of gas a day. The Santa Rosa II plant will have three, 4,500-hp each, compressors that will handle 80 million cubic feet of gas a day. Both plants are a part of the Aragua-Norte project in its second phase, which includes dehydration systems installed in the El Tono and Santa Rosa areas and the San Joaquin metering station. According to information released by MENEVEN, the El Toco gas plant will be in operation by the second half of 1981, and the Santa Rosa II plant by the first quarter of 1982. The additional 155 million cubic feet of gas a day to be produced by these two plants will all be supplied to CORPOVEN for industrial and household uses. [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 6 Sep 80 p D-6] 9238

MARAVEN PRODUCTION UP--Maracaibo, 14 Sep--The project being implemented by the operating company MARAVEN, replacing the compressors in the La Paz field to increase production in the area, is in its final phase. The installation of the four turbocompressor units, an authorized spokesman of that company said, comes to 38 million bolivars. Two turbocompressors will compress the gas that goes directly to the field to higher pressures to obtain an estimated production increase of some 5,000 barrels a day of oil and an estimated increase of 10 million cubic feet of gas a day. The other two units are fundamentally for the purpose of compressing the gas to be injected into the field. This project was designed in September 1977, under the Engineering and Development Coordination unit of the Production Operations Division, and construction started in September 1979. At the same time, a number of additional projects have been completed in the La Paz field, such as the installation of air compressors, the increase of electric power generation by the plant, and the construction of 15 miles of pipeline. The compressor was procured from the American firm Elliot and the turbine from the British firm Rouston; the installation was done entirely by Venezuelan personnel. Currently, the stabilizing system of the installed units is being checked out in full detail, and the final acceptance test is scheduled for the current month of September. The said test will be attended by personnel from the American and British factories and personnel of the MARAVEN Instrumentation and Equipment unit. [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 15 Sep 80 p D-12] 9238

3010 END

JPRS 76748

3 November 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2210

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76748

3 November 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2210

CONTENTS

BOLIVIA

Siles Zuazo Says Coup Related to Drug Trafficking
(EL CARIBE, 1 Oct 80)..... 1

New Projects Aimed at Revitalizing Economic Sector
(Various sources, various dates)..... 3

Prefabricated Housing Industry
Projects to Benefit Farmers
Government Credits
Construction of New Airport
Production Incentive

CHILE

New 'Civic-Military Movement' Analyzed
(Various sources, various dates)..... 8

Pinochet's Motives Questioned, by Jaime Moreno Laval
Willoughby Interviewed

Future Plans of 'Group of 24' Discussed
(Ignacio Balbontin Arteaga Interview; HOY, 24-30 Sep 80). 16

Leader of Antifascist Committee in Cuba Interviewed
(Cristian Gonzalez Interview; JUVENTUD REBELDE, 11
Sep 80)..... 19

COLOMBIA

Life in FARC Stronghold Described
(Fernan Martinez Mahecha; EL TIEMPO, 8, 9 Sep 80)..... 21

Corruption of Government Officials Discussed
(Hector Sanchez P.; EL TIEMPO, 26 Sep 80)..... 31

Turbay, Others Laud Virgilio Barco
(EL TIEMPO, 26 Sep 80)..... 34

President's Letter
Liberal Support for Barco, by Jaime Calderon

Proposed Nuclear Energy Law Analyzed
(Jairo Saravia H.; EL TIEMPO, 26 Sep 80)..... 37

Elimination of Stamped Paper Proposed
(Raul Rodriguez; EL SIGLO, 9 Sep 80)..... 39

CUBA

Construction Aid Activities in Angola Reported
(TRABAJADORES, various dates)..... 41

Construction Pledges Announced
Brigade Activities, Arrival Home, by Edith Martin

Cosmonaut Tamayo Interviewed on Flight Preparations
(Arnaldo Tamayo Mendez Interview; JUVENTUD REBELDE,
18 Sep 80)..... 45

Machado Ventura Closes National Seminar on Sugarcane
(Jose Ramon Machado Ventura; GRANMA, 10 Sep 80)..... 58

Risquet Closes Portworkers National Meeting
(Jorge Risquet; GRANMA, 16 Sep 80)..... 68

PCC Provincial Evaluation Meetings Conclude
(Various sources, various dates)..... 73

Miret at Guantanamo, by Pablo Soroa
Valdes Valdes at Ciego de Avila
Garcia at Havana, by Ariel Rojas, Reinold Rassi

Psychology of Combat Readiness Explained
(Roberto Echevarria; VERDE OLIVO, 14 Sep 80)..... 76

Eastern Army Border Brigade Initiates Emulation
(Pablo Noa; VERDE OLIVO, 17 Sep 80)..... 81

'Productive' Use of Farm Machinery Discussed
(Magda Martinez; BOHEMIA, 12 Sep 80)..... 85

HONDURAS

Students Repudiate Salvadoran Foreign Minister's Visit
(Radio Sandino; 17 Oct 80)..... 99

Briefs
Charge Troops Helping Salvadoran Regime 101

NICARAGUA

'BARRICADA' Says 'LA PRENSA' Abusing Freedom of Press
(Editorial; BARRICADA, 8 Oct 80)..... 102

Station Hails Pardons as Sign of Human Rights Climate (Carlos Jose Guadamuz; Managua Domestic Service, 14 Oct 80)..... 104

Briefs
'NEUVO DIARIO' Not To Join IAPA 106

PANAMA

Paper Praises U.S. Ambassador's Statements
(Editorial; LA ESTRELLA DE PANAMA, 9 Oct 80)..... 107

Turbay's Congratulations to Royo Described as 'Calculated'
(Julio E. Linares; LA PRENSA, 8 Oct 80)..... 108

PDC Official Says Election Results Prove People Want Change
(Milciades A. Ortiz, Jr; LA PRENSA, 8 Oct 80)..... 110

Former Envoy to U.S. Discusses Election Results, Economic Problems
(Carlos Lopez Guevara Interview; LA PRENSA, 5 Oct 80).... 113

Interview With Former Guerrilla Hugo Spadafora
(Hugo Spadafora Interview; LA PRENSA, 16, 17 Oct 80)..... 117

SURINAME

Netherlands Government Studies Suriname Treaty Request
(ALGEMEEN NEDERLANDS PERSBUREAU, 3 Oct 80)..... 127

SILES ZUAZO SAYS COUP RELATED TO DRUG TRAFFICKING

Santo Domingo EL CARIBE in Spanish 1 Oct 80 p 10

[Text] New York, 30 Sep—Hernan Siles Zuazo, former president of Bolivia, today described Gen Luis Garcia Meza's takeover last July as "the first coup d'etat caused by drug trafficking."

Siles Zuazo, head of the Democratic and Popular Unity which won 37 percent of the popular vote in the 29 June elections, had the chance to become president of Bolivia on 4 August. He made this comment during a press conference sponsored by the Council on Hemispheric Affairs.

The former Bolivian president denounced "the participation of Argentine military advisers in planning the conspiracy" and said that "we have received reports that those advisers also participated in interrogations and, unfortunately, torture."

Siles Zuazo indicated that Bolivian exports total about $650 million annually while drug traffic income is estimated at $700 to $800 million a year.

He said that, during the brief administration of President Lidia Gueiler who was overthrown by Garcia Meza, "the Ministry of Interior had investigated drug traffic in order to start legal procedures." It "revealed many of the connections between the drug traffic and the military who took over."

He cited the present minister of interior, Col Luis Arce, as an example. He "owns the main transportation enterprise that transports narcotics; this is important since the transportation of narcotics brings in as much income as drug production."

He added that "as a precaution, Arce announced the death penalty for drug traffickers and subversives. However, that only insures the continuation of the repressive system."

Siles Zuazo read parts of a document written last August by the Bolivian Episcopal Conference, citing the cases of Father Julio Tumiri, head of the Human Rights Assembly, and Father Juan Envis, a Jesuit, director of the "Faith and Joy" movement and a member of the Human Rights Assembly.

According to the document, Father Tumiri, 69 years old, wrote his testimony on toilet paper while he was in jail. According to that document and the testimony of other prisoners, Father Tumiri was "horribly tortured."

Father Envis, who went to the authorities to inquire about the whereabouts of other Jesuits, was also arrested and tortured, according to the document.

A letter accompanied the document. It was from "the mothers in the town of Caracoles" some 100 kilometers south of La Paz. They denounced "looting, rapes, mass arrests and other atrocities committed by the armed forces."

The former president said that "the Bolivian people are fighting against the monopoly of the communications media and weapons by work slowdowns and civil disobedience."

Siles Zuazo predicted that, before the end of the year, "that movement will have created total isolation and internal dissent within the armed forces. opening the way for a return to democracy."

Meanwhile, it was reported from La Paz that the Permanent Bolivian Episcopal Council was convoked for an urgent meeting to analyze the deterioration of relations between the Catholic Church and the military government.

The secretary general of the episcopal conference, Monsignor Alejandro Mestre, did not set a date but church sources thought the meeting would be held this week.

The sources said that the government has not complied with agreements with the church hierarchy concerning the arrest of priests, raids of religious orders and aid to political prisoners.

The meeting would study the case of Father Alvaro Puente, study prefect at the main Jesuit school in this city, who was arrested on Friday by a group of civilians and exiled to Buenos Aires over the weekend, according to Jesuit superiors in Bolivia.

Victor Blajot, superior of the Jesuit order, and Vicente Beneyto, rector of San Calixto School, stated that Father Alvaro Puente's arrest "violates the verbal agreement between church authorities and the military that no priest, monk or sister can be arrested without an agreement between both authorities."

7717
CSO: 3010

NEW PROJECTS AIMED AT REVITALIZING ECONOMIC SECTOR

Prefabricated Housing Industry

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 1 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] With an investment of $5 million, an industrial plant for prefabricated wood houses will be installed in Santa Cruz, according to Dr Oscar Ramirez Pacheco, director of the PROINTERCONT [Promoters of Continental Trade] consortium.

That consortium recently installed a tractor factory in Santa Cruz for agricultural, forestry and road projects.

Ramirez Pacheco said that the prefabricated housing plant will have a special section for treatment of multipurpose lumber which will mean a higher aggregate value for national lumber production.

The prefabricated houses will be marketed within the country but there are plans to expand to foreign markets.

He indicated that the investments made in that plant will permit our country to produce prefabricated wood houses with all the conveniences and installable in any part of the country in an exceptionally short time.

He noted that prefabricated houses are not only used in the rural area but in large cities in the United States and Europe.

He indicated that the designs and plans for prefabricated houses will make that housing system very acceptable in Bolivia, especially considering its low cost compared to traditional houses.

He referred to the great problem of the national housing shortage which this factory will try to help solve.

He said: "The prefabricated housing plant will be installed with the objective of producing finished lumber which has a higher marketing value. Through the construction of wood housing, the country will save foreign currency which it needs for other vital things."

He indicated that once the prefabricated housing plant begins production, the consortium that he represents will install a marketing enterprise that will help develop national forestry activities.

The consortium brought foreign capital to the country to be invested in strictly productive activities, according to Ramirez Pacheco.

Projects to Benefit Farmers

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 1 Sep 80 p 2

[Text] Oruro, 30 Aug--The Regional Development Program for Oruro Communities invested 4 million pesos in more than 34 projects in different rural sectors of that department.

Engineer Jose Soto, director of the development organization, revealed: "The rural infrastructure program has been carried out in communities in the department of Oruro and the northern part of Potosi within its jurisdiction. This is part of a social program whose objective is to improve the environment, especially in depressed and border areas."

The construction includes schools, sanitation offices, potable water reservoirs, filtration systems, irrigation dams, levees, etc.

The economic objective of these projects is to increase rural agricultural and livestock productivity and to increase the low income of these workers. He reported that, along with these community projects, there were also projects to improve highways, bridges, small irrigation systems and agricultural construction.

The projects listed by engineer Soto Fernandez were: a school in Chiquiriyo; a potable water reservoir in Puqui; a sanitation office in Huardana; a medical post in Sorachi; an irrigation reservoir and levees in Anocariri; a cooperative center and agricultural construction in Llallagua; a potable water reservoir in Cacachaca; a filtration system in Callumalliri; a potable water reservoir in Pacariza; a potable water reservoir in Agua Rica; an irrigation dam in Cruz de Macha; a school in Turaquiri; a school in Huancanapi; a medical post in Santiago de Ajencha; a potable water reservoir in Clacha; a potable water reservoir in Villa Candelaria; an irrigation dam in Pilani; an irrigation dam in Buena Vista; and schools in Vinaya, Finca Esquema, Bombury, Collana, Tuica, Jarana, Ravelo, Sauta, Colcoma, Maraca, Patacalasaya, Choco, Chilcapalca and Yurimata.

The funds for this construction came from USAID Bolivia and the Bolivian General Treasury.

Government Credits

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 24 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] "The armed forces are aware of the important role of the agricultural workers. Therefore, the Military-Campesino Pact has been ratified as a symbol of national unity and integration," said Col Julio Molina, minister of agriculture and campesino affairs, during a campesino rally yesterday in Montero, Santa Cruz.

He said that nature has given us highly productive soil, the furrow is waiting and we only have to go out and plant.

He added: "Let us go, then, and produce more and better; we have the ability. Today national reconstruction is in full swing. Let us all work to meet that great challenge we have ahead of us: the true political, social and economic independence of our beloved fatherland."

Colonel Molina added that if the campesino wants to produce more, the government, through the appropriate channels, will offer him the necessary and timely aid so that he will improve his production. Agricultural insurance has already been implemented to protect the small farmer against possible changes in weather, insect infestation or bad crops.

He said: "The agricultural insurance will also permit the campesino to request and obtain credit since he will have endorsement for his production. This insurance is already available in the Cochabamba valley; it will later be available throughout national territory."

Colonel Molina met with the campesinos to organize them in responsible and representative groups, cooperatives or precooperatives. "That way, it will be easier for them to present their problems which, in general, are common to a region and the government can take care of those problems better."

Finally, he pointed out that self-help programs still exist under the Armed Forces Civic Action and the National Community Development Service.

Construction of New Airport

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 22 Sep 80 p 2

[Text] The final studies for the construction of the new Cochabamba airport are in the hands of the World Bank which is studying financing for that project. It will cost about $70 million and will take 4 years, according to the AASANA [Auxiliary Air Navigation Services Administration].

According to the information supplied by the AASANA, the new landing strip 13-31 is a major objective and will become reality "with the cooperation of the World Bank which is studying the project for financing."

The new strip will be 3,000 meters long and 45 meters wide and can even be used by the Jumbo Jet 747's "which are the largest in the world."

The final studies, designs and other documents for the construction of that new landing strip were drawn up by AASANA professionals and technicians. According to what was reported, they have already been given to the international finance organization for study.

They said that the present landing strip at Jorge Wilsterman Airport is limited due to increased technology and modernization. It is also dangerous for the city and has already been the object of protests, petitions and other complaints by civic organizations in Cochabamba.

They said: "The construction of a new landing strip, designated 13-31 by AASANA, is an aspiration of that department which AASANA will make a reality."

They explained that, according to the studies, construction of that mammoth project will cost $70 million which the World Bank can provide, according to its representatives. The Bolivian Government would contribute a lesser sum.

They said that the project will take 3 to 4 years so it is considered a long-term project.

Reinforcement

AASANA spokesmen indicated that in the meantime, as an emergency measure because of air traffic, there has been reinforcement of the asphalt area of the present field at Jorge Wilsterman Airport. This will permit the LAB [Lloyd Bolivian Air Line] to operate all its airplanes.

They said that work on this field consisted of an asphalt area 8 centimeters thick and 2,650 meters long "which will permit the operation of 727-200 airplanes with a weight of 155,000 pounds."

This work done on the 04-22 landing strip cost 45 million pesos. It was totally financed by the Bolivian General Treasury, according to AASANA executives.

They added that this reinforcement project made it possible for the Jorge Wilsterman Airport to return to normalcy; its air operations are no longer restricted.

Production Incentive

La Paz EL DIARIO in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] The Huanuni mining enterprise under COMIBOL [Mining Corporation of Bolivia] will pay its workers production bonuses for August of between $7,000 to $20,000, according to sources in that state enterprise.

The payment will start on Saturday. The indicated production bonus is 182 percent of the cash wages which do not include family subsidies, extra work, overtime, contracts, etc.

The source remarked that the Huanuni workers in general responded positively to the call of the government and executives of COMIBOL to increase production rates within the framework of peace and discipline that has existed in the country for 2 months.

In this way, Huanuni remains the most profitable enterprise in the state mining system through its continually increasing production rate of tin.

This contrasts with July when Huanuni lost more than $600,000 because of its low production after 15 years. Now that the road to normalcy and constructive work has been taken again, there are better results particularly for the workers who received additional income as they had months ago, according to the sources.

7717
CSO: 3010

NEW 'CIVIC-MILITARY MOVEMENT' ANALYZED

Pinochet's Motives Questioned

Santiago HOY in Spanish 24-30 Sep 80 pp 9-10

[Article by Jaime Moreno Laval]

[Text] Gen Augusto Pinochet was the father and the godfather. However, the birth and baptism of the Civic-Military Movement (MCM)--which came into the world the night of 11 September--have been on its progenitor's mind for several years.

In his message to the country in 1975, the chief of state called for the formation of such a movement. It had an echo. A group of civilians met in the La Leonera Hotel, and there arose a single, laconic bellow: MUN, the National Unity Movement. It died from a lack of interest in survival. In July 1978, the boyish cry of Ignacio Astete was heard in La Serena. He called upon Chileans to close ranks "around a civic movement that will turn Pinochetism into the overwhelming force . . ."

The summons went in one ear and out the other. The leader was praised for his "generosity" (EL MERCURIO), but not for his political astuteness. Many supporters of the government thought it was inappropriate for the era of a "caudillo" to begin.

It is possible that, after 7 years in power, Pinochet has concluded that only he--and in an atmosphere of victory--could at last set in motion what he had already proposed 5 years before. And thus it was that he directly asked men, women and children to sign up, starting on the following day, in the local communities to "form the great Chilean Civic-Military Movement." Bemused, the towns improvised registers for those who might answer the president's call. It was still not known very well what the MCM was all about.

Apolitical--Among "liberal" or "soft" junta supporters concern was noted. They wondered whether General Pinochet's initiative was political. Within a few hours they were calmed by the chief of state himself: "The movement will involve labor, not politics."

Some thought that behind the MCM was the hand of Pablo Rodriquez. The latter, on discussing the plebiscite, concluded that the majority of the people do not want to return the monopoly on generation and exercise of power to the political parties.

Pondering the results of the 11 September voting, journalist Silvia Pinto expressed the opinion that it marks a transition between an administrative government and a regime "with a civic-military movement."

Minister of the Interior Sergio Fernandez also stripped the political label from the newly announced product. He stated that the political parties are in abeyance, and the government could scarcely sponsor one, "particularly when it had the character of a single party, which is a sad sign of totalitarian regimes." According to Fernandez, the MCM will only try to bring organization to efforts to mobilize the citizenry to serve Chile.

Thus far, the most fervent advocate of the MCM is General Pinochet's former press secretary, Federico Willoughby, who knows the general's personality well. To Willoughby, it is clear that Pinochet is seeking a means of civic-military unification with the political support that he has received. He also does not want the groups supporting him to be in a position of engaging in disputes. Moreover, the chief of state probably thinks that only a political route can provide the stability that the economic model requires; and there is nothing better for this than unification at the local level, with a single objective: to achieve the regime's goals.

Although they don't like it--the man who worked closely with General Pinochet told HOY that the groups supporting the government have been guilty of inertia while "the opposition has never stopped mobilizing." He does not doubt that the leader of the MCM will be its creator, "although there are people who may not like him to exercise both civilian and military leadership."

The "liberals" expressed their satisfaction with the MCM only after General Pinochet's clarification concerning its apolitical purpose. Jaime Guzman stated that he interpreted it as an intensification of social action at the community level, given the importance that local government has in the new institutionality. A political party? In response to this question, Guzman said that the concept of a military government is opposed to the existence of a political movement.

Roberto Pulido, chairman of the group New Democracy--a body with close ties with Guzman--told HOY that, to the extent that the MCM was not a political organization, "We like it a great deal because it will serve to strengthen social action at the municipal level." To Pulido, the structure of the MCM should be only local--not national--and its actual leader will be the local mayor. He said, too, that to transform it into a political party "is totalitarianism, fascism," and that observation of other countries that have attempted that suggests that they are "false fronts that attract no one."

The representative of New Democracy does not believe that the MCM has arisen to eliminate differences and unite, once and for all, heterogeneous groups that support the regime. He spoke categorically on this point: "Before, there was a struggle concerning the institutional line to be taken by the regime; but that has now been determined. They have said 'No' to the corporate state and 'Yes' to an institutionality aimed toward democracy."

From this mold?--Despite the president's explanations concerning the nature of the MCM, doubts persist because its potential members are not wholly in agreement.

Specialists in Latin-American militarism believe that the stage of Paraguayan-style bossism (Stroessner) has passed. Today, the military regimes are more institutional, they add, and their style is not that of the Nazis and Fascists of prewar Europe. That is because they seek mass apathy, fearing mobilization of their followers, and thus they do away with political parties as an organized link between civilian society and the state.

These same analysts have observed that the new Latin-American military authoritarians prefer the technical relationship between the government and social groups. Could the Chilean military regime be coming from this mold with the MCM?

As of the end of last week, in the municipality of Santiago 600 people had registered; in La Reina, 30; in Las Condes, 120; and in Nunoa, 114. Of those registering, 60 percent were women.

An unemployed man who was waiting his turn in line to register in the municipality of Nunoa told HOY: "I'm doing it to place myself at the disposal of the authorities and to work for Chile." An employed man, Fernando Reyes, said: "I'll sign up with the entire family because President Pinochet needs support."

None of the towns visited by HOY was certain how the MCM will operate, nor when it will officially begin. It is a movement full of surprises. But, like any movement, it will reveal itself as it goes. . . .

Willoughby Interviewed

Santiago QUE PASA in Spanish 25 Sep-1 Oct 80 pp 6-8

[Interview with Federico Willoughby, former press secretary to President Pinochet, by M. Angelica Bulnes]

> [Text] Federico Willoughby (41 years old, married to journalist Martita Olivos and father of three children) was an Alessandrist--and a personal friend of the former president--an ardent fighter against Popular Unity, and, since 11 September 1973, press secretary to President Pinochet, a post which he resigned because of ill health. At present, he calls himself an independent man, devoted, in addition to his work, to safeguarding his health, and retired from politics. "I consider myself a conservative. I belonged to the Conservative Party, and when it started to become a hybrid, I left it. What I liked about the conservatives and the rightists was that they were an absolutely indigenous expression of Chilean public sentiment, a distillation of the spirit of Portales."

[Question] Although you've retired from politics, you're engaged in it through your articles in the press, calling for the resignation of ministers, proposing a political movement . . .

[Answer] No; I'm practicing more journalism than politics. Public affairs interest me; and the perspective that I get from trying to influence people's political views while having no personal ambition is a very interesting perspective. I have a limitation that prevents me from actively participating in any public matter, and this gives me a unique opportunity, a very rich experience that can scarcely be described.

Political Movement

[Question] For 4 years you have been asserting that the government should be supported by a civic-military movement that is political. President Pinochet--in his speech of the 11th--gave a green light for the movement to become a reality. Do you think that he is also proposing it as a form of political support?

[Answer] I think so because where the president needs political support is among the rank and file, and it is there where unification has to take place; and by the rank and file I mean the local communities. This movement has to mature and win itself a place in the national political scene. It is a movement called upon to go about acquiring greater distinction as it develops. And this is very important because the idea of creating a "Pinochetist" political party or of converting a group of personal friends into a party, which was called "national unity," failed because it did not have a true structure.

Willoughby does not accept the idea that this movement can be identified--owing to known historical experiences--with a movement of the Francoist or Fascist type. In his opinion, the Chilean Government does not fit historical patterns. It is a political experiment, and the experiences of other countries are not applicable to it.

[Question] How does a political movement function in a country where political activity officially does not take place?

[Answer] The lack of activity is due to the need to prevent action by the antidemocratic parties, a situation which has been fairly well remedied, judging from the results of the plebiscite. It was also to counteract the influence of international groups that had achieved preponderance in Chile, and to exclude from political activity those demagogs who collaborated in creating the crisis. For just as there are responsible former legislators who contributed to the good of Chile, there was a large number of former legislators and people who were parasites on public life. They lived from the wealth, activities and privileges of the parties.

[Question] And what part would be played in this movement by the people you called good former legislators?

[Answer] It is an individual problem; but I believe that when President Pinochet says, "Come and stand under the wing of the government," it is an invitation.

[Question] The opposition disagrees with most of the reforms carried out by the government. Is it realistic to expect them to take part in actions that they censure?

[Answer] It will depend on the seriousness or power of the movement. If it has sufficient power to carry along the rank and file, the latter will carry along the leaders.

Minister of the Interior: Mission accomplished?

[Question] There are those who think a movement that represents the regime's supporters is interesting, but they believe that it should not be organized by the government. On the other hand, you are proposing that the minister of the interior organize

[Answer] Perhaps he should at the outset, and after . . . I think that the minister of the interior has to be the organizer not only of the backing by the government's supporters, but also he should assume the ongoing task of conciliating all the people who are partly in agreement; that is, approach the Church, union leaders, the parties that declare themselves in opposition, and attract them to the government to produce effects within them themselves.

[Question] But the government in turn criticizes opposition groups a great deal.

[Answer] Well, then a person is needed who has a certain political skill, because he will have to navigate in turbulent waters.

[Question] However, once a "reconciliation party" was planned, and apparently it was disallowed.

[Answer] Then the problem should have been solved right there, there was one solution. Besides, that was a special incident that went beyond politics.

[Question] In your column in the daily LA TERCERA you have clearly sought changes in the cabinet, and you have specifically referred to the minister of the interior. Why?

[Answer] More than the change of a minister or of a cabinet, the important thing is that the country accepted a political formula that is a transition for adaptation to a constitutional solution. That period begins in March 1981. During this period, the president of the republic, with the powers granted him by the citizenry, can observe his cabinet members' capability for adapting to these new conditions.

[Question] Why wouldn't they adapt if they have worked together all these years on the government's program and within its framework?

[Answer] Because the conditions are different. I'm referring to the political ministers and not to those who have specific jobs related to modern needs such as labor, health and justice. The minister of the interior has the president's confidence and can continue permanently in his post. However, I think that the functions for which he was summoned to serve in the government have been carried out. He can serve the country in other tasks, if indeed the chief of state has a more suitable solution. Minister Fernandez has performed excellently; but this is a problem of political circumstances.

Nonexclusive Political Solution

[Question] Some people wonder if they would have to participate in this movement with such people as Gen Manuel Contreras (Ret).

[Answer] I don't know. Personally, I think I would choose who I was going to work with. In any case, if the movement is a political solution, it requires a greater degree of generosity than an exclusive, restrictive solution, which in my opinion is negative and leads to a flaw. For while the Marxists are preparing their cadres with dialectics, the people who support the government are burning themselves up with intrigues and speculations; and this has a serious long-term cost. This movement has a greater depth that goes beyond the daily skirmishes that enliven Chilean politics so much.

[Question] But it seems to be a rather vague depth. . . .

[Answer] That's how deep things are sometimes, a little vague. Politics and love bear a close resemblance.

[Question] Don't you think that this type of movement goes against the sober grain of the Chilean, who, it has been shown, does not actively participate in politics, much less in partisan organizations, except in times of crisis?

[Answer] I don't think this country is so sober. Issues have always been contested between men whose names were given to political movements: the Carrerists, the O'Higginsists; coming down to the Alessandrists and Freiists. This is a country that endorses a man. I do not agree that we are politically sober; on the contrary, we are very flighty.

[Question] The political leaders are flighty. . . .

[Answer] The Chilean, who is not very excitable, gets excited about soccer and politics. The people have a natural tendency to be interested in public affairs.

Joining Forces

[Question] And what is the basic purpose of this movement? A long life for the military regime?

[Answer] The purpose is to unite the armed forces and civilians in pursuit of the goals that have been set by the government.

[Question] Isn't that politicizing the armed forces?

[Answer] No, because the armed forces, by taking part in specific tasks (literacy campaign, for example), are carrying out social, not political, work.

[Question] But they're already doing this. . . .

[Answer] Of course, but in coordinating this with the people who are volunteering or who want to colloborate more closely, they are joining forces. The problem that I began stating 4 years ago is that of avoiding dispersion; for otherwise groups arise, the elites, the people engaged in corridor politics, the distorted images. What is important that all this feeling expressing the Chilean reaction to Marxism have a political interpretation that outlives people. After the experience of Marxism in Chile and the experience of the Christian Democrats, the idea that processes are irreversible has ceased to be a dogma for me.

[Question] You have asserted that the differences among supporters of the government are problems of cliques. Don't you think that the problem is more fundamental and that it concerns the fact that some want Chile to take the democratic road and others want to perpetuate the military government?

[Answer] Possibly, but I don't know of anyone in the government who is opposed to President Pinochet's continuing in his work for another 10 years; and if they feel that way, they don't say so. It seems to me that they are all quarrels over power; that, perhaps, following calm analysis and under the powerful authority imposed by unity, those positions should disappear.

[Question] Did you favor a gradual transition?

[Answer] Yes, extremely gradual, so that the model could make its own place.

[Question] Do you think we are moving toward a fully democratic regime?

[Answer] I think that this is a democratic regime, a democratic experiment of a different sort.

[Question] And the future?

[Answer] This is a country capable of adjusting to itself and of seeking its own solutions. I think our task is in the medium term, because medium-term political conditions will offer a perspective of the long term. Chile will always be democratic. He who believes otherwise is wasting his money and his time.

[Question] And what regime would you like for Chile?

[Answer] The one we have.

9085
CSO: 3010

FUTURE PLANS OF 'GROUP OF 24' DISCUSSED

Santiago HOY in Spanish 24-30 Sep 80 p 17

[Interview with Ignacio Balbontin Arteaga, member of the executive committee of "The 24," by Patricia Verdugo]

[Text] For 7 years he focused his sociological research on "the institutional crisis in Chile," and now he has shifted to "social mobilization in democratic terms." That is, in simpler words, Ignacio Balbontin Arteaga (40, married, three daughters) appears to be a good representative of the dissidents who have spent 7 years wondering why what is happening is happening and recently have decided to move down a path that is not mere reaction to what the Pinochet government decides to do.

Balbontin says that, in his case, it is "neither so much nor so little." He was one of 13 Christian Democrats who, on that same 11 September 1973, signed a declaration that they would never cease fighting for the return of democracy. Between January and March of 1978 he was one of the 12 who were punished with exile to the northern altiplano. He was a university professor, and now he is a researcher for the FLACSO [Latin-American School of Social Sciences] (on the project undertaken with the Academy of Christian Humanism) and 1 of the 10 members of the executive committee of the group "The 24."

[Question] On 9 September, "The 24" issued a call to all Chileans "to undertake the commitment to democracy." Is that summons intended to lead to the formation of a movement?

[Answer] Without invading the political parties' territory, we want to form a great Movement for a Commitment to Democracy, a social movement that -- first of all -- seeks to have Chileans who voted "No" explain, in positive terms, what their position was. Just as the experience of "The 24" proved that, despite ideological differences, it was possible to come to terms because of social needs. With this call we are trying to create a framework within which millions of Chileans can begin to act. For the major "achievement" of the government with its "plebiscite," in quotes, was to divide Chileans in half. Previously, the political deadlock was among the famous three thirds. Today we are in a deadlock between two groups, and that is very dangerous. . . .

[Question] But the official figures didn't indicate any sort of deadlock.

[Answer] They were juggled. There is a scientific sample, obtained with a completely proper methodology, that proves a 10 percent statistical fraud. It is the result of exaggerating the size of an indeterminate universe because of the lack of electoral registers. Add to this the fraud at many polling places owing to the absence of representatives watching over the "No" votes; and add the Chileans who live in exile, between 500,000 and 700,000 over the age of 18. For something very strange emerges from the official figures: Every Chilean who lives in Chile voted; no one failed to vote. For you have to eliminate those in exile from the universe of citizens, 6,750,000, according to official statistics. Since 6,268,000 voted, no one at home could have failed to vote.

[Question] Supposing that you were right, the third of rightists grew until it became one-half supporting Pinochet, and that is quite an accomplishment. . . .

[Answer] The difference is that our 50 percent is stronger because it consists of committed Chileans who ran the risk of voting "No," of being repressed and persecuted. And although they are ideologically heterogeneous, they are prepared to take risks, to different degrees, to achieve their goal of a democratic way of life.

[Question] Lately there has been increasing criticism behind closed doors of the immobility of the top leaders of the political parties. Do you think that the action of a social movement could overcome the problem?

[Answer] Unfortunately, all partisan organizations have devoted themselves to the defense of their own outdated ideological positions. And, despite their efforts, have not been able to deal with this crisis, uniting the common will. Nor will this fraudently approved constitution relieve the institutional crisis. Before, the polarization was among three groupings, and now there are two.

Before, democracy operated only in political matters, and not in the other facets of the system (social, economic and cultural). Now a society of apartheid, a discriminatory one, has been formed.

The time has now arrived to challenge the partisan organizations. What I propose is a program of social mobilization that begins by taking upon itself expression of the will of the majority and making it effective. And those who undertake the commitment should not only be prepared, in the future, to support a democratic government in operation but to live democratically from then on in all their social organizations.

[Question] Just as some think that all the little dictatorships explain the birth and flourishing of a dictatorial government, do you think that all the little democracies will give rise to the great big democracy?

[Answer] Yes, adding in all the middle-size democracies and everyone's personal commitment to democracy, it is really possible to construct a great big democracy because for us democracy is an end and a means at the same time. It is an end to the extent that it constitutes a space in which the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is possible. And it is a means because it constitutes a procedure for majority rule with respect to minorities. That is, a commitment to conduct consistent with the goal.

[Question] Now, in practical terms, what does the call by "The 24" come to?

[Answer] It calls upon people and organizations to sign the Declaration of Commitment to Democracy as a first step. Then, to support the actions of the vicariates, the Chilean Committee on Human Rights and the work of "The 24."

Signers have before them three obstacles to overcome: 1) Fear of repression: They must defeat it, denouncing any assault, organizing and mobilizing; 2) Consumerism: They must not consume more than necessary because to the extent that a person becomes indebted he ceases to be free, and he ceases to be capable of criticism (said in another way, this means rejecting the fact that Chile today has a foreign debt of $10 billion and rejecting the speculative economy that transfers goods already created by the government to a group or individual); and 3) Fear of freedom: The product of being accustomed to the existing situation, which causes one to think that he is incapable of creating a future, to believe the story that only Pinochet can prevent chaos. They must think that all of us Chileans are building the future, and they must again have confidence in our own abilities.

9085
CSO: 3010

LEADER OF ANTIFASCIST COMMITTEE IN CUBA INTERVIEWED

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p 4

[Interview with Cristian Gonzalez, chairman of the Chilean Antifascist Resistance Committee in Cuba, by Marcy Garcia]

[Text] Pinochet has called for a rigged plebiscite as a supposed response to the struggle of the Chilean people. This struggle has been steadily growing since early 1978, and it has intensified during the last few months.

The response by that fellow people in the Southern Cone to the farcical plebiscite was described by Cristian Gonzalez, chairman of the Chilean Antifascist Resistance Committee in Cuba (CRA) in an interview with JUVENTUD REBELDE. He was completing another tour in search of solidarity with the open struggle against fascism in that country.

"It is important," the Chilean leader said, "to bear in mind that this call for a plebiscite demonstrates the increasing internal weakening of the dictatorship. The dispute between 'hard' fascists and 'soft' fascists has recently become a public issue in Chile."

According to Gonzalez, there is no group within the ruling clique that embodies the aspirations of the people, let alone takes interest in restoring a democratic system. It is simply a dispute in which continued domination by the monopolies, the multinationals -- at the cost of the people's frustrated wish for freedom -- is assumed.

At the same time, the ruling clique is attempting to reaffirm its power to control the dissenting groups in the pro-imperialist bourgeois alliance, and to neutralize the criticism that is beginning to arise from within the armed forces.

The fascists say, "Destroy them!" The traditional right, in turn, says, "No, relax controls!" Thus, they say such things as this: "If you shut the doors, the Communists are the ones who will benefit." The fascists respond, "These proposals have to be opposed. Otherwise, this group will become useful to the communists." That is the reality of the issue between the so-called "hard" and "soft" fascists, the Chilean leader indicated.

Gonzalez said, "The tyrant is attempting to take advantage of the repressive conditions and of his control over the communications media. He is not taking into account the people's power, the determination of the working class, of the democratic groups, not to permit the charade to take place."

And thus, as all the organizations and groups in the country have spoken, manifesting the determination to oppose Pinochet's farce, unity among those in opposition has been achieved as never before during the 7 years of fascism in Chile.

The chairman of the CRA in our country said further that the absurdity of the dictator's measure has spurred the combativeness of the masses, for the people have ceased to be afraid. The repudiation is expressed in the streets, where people shout without fear, "Down with Pinochet! Democracy now!" "United, the people will never be defeated!" These are slogans heard daily, and there are also posters, murals and other expressions of opposition and protest that have never been seen before.

All this is occurring despite the fact that since early this year there has been a renewal of repressive activities: constant military maneuvers, sweeps in towns, searches, mass arrests. It is under these conditions that the plebiscite is taking place.

Asked about the Chilean people's choices, the chairman of the CRA answered: All resources have to be mobilized for the active struggle to overthrow the dictatorship, for establishment of a provisional government including all democratic and antifascist groups, and the convening of a constituent assembly that will guarantee restoration of liberty.

Because of the farcical plebiscite, there has been a de facto coming-together. In fact, the democratic and antifascist groups are now in a new phase. The only task left to the Chilean people is a direct assault on the dictatorship involving all forms of combat, including the most intense violence, the chairman of the Chilean Antifascist Resistance Committee said in closing.

9085
CSO: 3010

LIFE IN FARC STRONGHOLD DESCRIBED

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 8, 9 Sep 80

[Article by Fernan Martinez Mahecha]

[8 Sep 80, p 2-B: Three Days in El Pato]

[Text] Newsman Fernan Martinez Mahecha spent 3 days in the El Pato region, where he spoke with members of the FARC [Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia] and with settlers fleeing from there to Neiva.

In the heart of Colombia there is another completely independent "country" covering 3,000 square kilometers; it is called El Pato.

There is not so much as a single police inspector here. The settlers do not know what a ballot box is. The law is enforced by more than 1,200 men who go by the name of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia.

If a person steals, kills, rapes, smokes marihuana or commits any other crime, the FARC try him, and he will most likely be sentenced to death, exile or forced labor on his victim's farm.

All of the children born over the last 15 years have been treated by guerrilla doctors, and guerrilla instructors have taught them how to read and write, but not with the "Joy of Reading" primer; they have used "The Origin of the Family, Private Property and the State" by Friedrich Engels.

El Pato has three main access routes: Balsillas (Huila), Piedra Marcada (Huila) and San Vicente del Caguan (Caqueta). Everyone passing through is checked out by the guerrillas, who hide in the woodlands with their camouflaged uniforms and stop travelers to ask why they are there. If it is a new settler with a wife and children, they might let him through, but if it is a government official, he will not make it 10 kilometers before they have forced him to return, if he is lucky; they might simply shoot him with their rifles.

The authorities were only too familiar with this situation and had allowed this sleeping monster to lie undisturbed for several years until this past 24 August. On that day at 1550 hours, the army decided to take over a semiabandoned landing strip at Las Perlas in Lower Pato that was used by the small planes that came in to pay the seven-figure ransoms for the individuals that the guerrilla group had kidnaped. This was not an easy military operation. They knew that several guerrillas were entrenched there with powerful weapons, and therefore they had to initiate the operation by hurling several bombs in the vicinity of the strip to prevent potential troop losses, as happened 2 years ago when a helicopter tried to land at that same spot.

Peasant Farmer Exodus

When the tenant farmers heard the exploding bombs, they were quite rightly frightened and as quickly as the noise of the explosion could travel, they decided to leave for Neiva to ask the government to halt military operations in this fertile zone. By the next day, El Pato was almost deserted. Houses were abandoned. The settlers left with their wives, children, dogs and mules and were in Balsillas 12 days later. Today, Monday, they could well be in the capital of Huila.

The authorities are convinced that this exodus was organized by the guerrillas themselves in a bid to halt the army's onslaught. This stands to reason because the settlers and the guerrillas have magnificent relations. There are two ways people can live in El Pato: as friends or as enemies of the guerrillas. Their enemies do not live long.

This reporter spoke with tenant farmers whose flight had taken them to Santa Helena, 45 kilometers from Neiva. Their makeshift camps consisted of plastic tents. Babes in arms, women and old people were making their way on foot. There could have been as many as 1,500 persons, accompanied by 120 mules, 80 dogs, a parrot and a long-tailed monkey.

"The dogs came because they always follow you, and we needed the mules to take the kids," says a woman of about 50 eating a stew out of a smoked pot; she gives a spoonful to each of her six children and to the two dogs following her.

The march is headed up by a Colombian flag and another white one. In Balsillas, they filed between the soldiers of the battalion there; no one said a single word. It looked like a silent film.

"This is a peaceful march, and I hope they let us talk in Neiva," says Humberto Moncada, the main leader of this movement, whom the authorities of the Ninth Brigade brand the guerrillas' main helper under the pretext of stocking a cooperative that he heads up.

The women wash their children's clothes in a nearby stream, while others prepare meals under their makeshift tents. The men, all of them with machetes in their belts, help to cut up two steers and give a half pound to each adult and a quarter pound to each child. They call their names as they appear on a list, and the father takes the meat for each family.

Stool Pigeons

All of these peasant farmers are quite familiar with the guerrillas. They come across "the boys" every day as they walk along the trails. Although many of them deny having seen guerrillas, others talk about them as calmly as a child in a city talks about having seen policemen and soldiers.

"The guerrillas never come into your house unless you call them," says Cesar Tobar, who has an 800-plaza farm in Upper Pato near Andalucia, Jorge Villamil's estate.

As long as the peasants do not "snitch" on the guerrillas, they never have problems with them, but if they do, they are executed.

The commander of the Ninth Brigade gave newsmen a detailed account of peasants slain by the guerrillas. They had placed handwritten sentences on top of their bodies. One of them read verbatim: "The Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, FARC, applies revolutionary justice to Algemiro Grazon because he was a stool pigeon, because he informed on us to the army. This made him a parasite against the struggle fought by poor peasant farmers and students who see poverty and hunger in this system. The people are applying justice and will apply justice to their class enemies who are using the army to torture and massacre our people. But the FARC distinguishes between the high military commands, including the reactionary Camacho Leyva and company, and the rank-and-file."

Las Perlas and the Jungle

Before talking with the El Pato peasants who are evacuating the area, EL TIEMPO flew over the entire region and visited Las Perlas, which is in the jungle and under the full control of the guerrillas.

There is a landing strip here in very poor condition; seen from the air, it looks like a 5-centimeter pencil line in Bolivar Plaza. The troops that have been left there put the pieces of the helicopter that the guerrillas shot down in a bamboo structure, and the sentries use them as seats, holding powerful machine guns behind makeshift trenches.

You can also see the remains of a light plane that crashed as it was trying to land with the ransom money for rancher Gilbero Ramirez Bejerano.

The landing strip was built 18 years ago by settler Martiniano Gonzalez, who later sold it to another family. Since the guerrillas give and take away lands as they see fit, it is thought that Las Perlas was expropriated from its last owner for the exclusive use of the guerrillas. Richard Star was kept at a ranch there.

The takeover of this strip was the largest loss of terrain for the guerrillas, and therefore they are thought to have pushed the peasant farmers into leaving. The army has expressed its intention of leaving troops here indefinitely and of continuing to penetrate throughout El Pato.

This is what the settlers are afraid of, as they would be caught in a veritable combat zone, since the guerrillas have their main leaders and their largest number of men in arms here.

Guerrillas are sent out from El Pato to the rest of the country. All of the rebels are trained here for the other fronts in the Darien region, the Caldas mountains, Santander, La Macarena and the western part of the Cauca. "The cancer spreads from here throughout Colombia," says Gen Luis Enrique Rodriguez Botiva, the commander of the Ninth Brigade.

The climate and the land in this region are among the best in the entire nation. The guerrillas own livestock and grow crops, according to the people heading for Neiva. Besides the Pato River, there are dozens of others winding through the territory taken over by the guerrillas, who follow the Moscow line of the Communist Party.

Twice in previous years the region has been evacuated because of the same problem with guerrillas, or bandits as they used to be called. The settlers returned when amnesty was declared. The people there now came in with the aid of official agencies and the army itself. The road that military engineers are building from Neiva to San Vicente del Caguan, though Balsillas, has received just 5 million in government aid in 18 years. This road, it is thought, could transform the region.

Those Who Remain Behind

At Gibraltar, 50 kilometers from Las Perlas, where the Lower Pato ends, EL TIEMPO spoke with more than 400 settlers who refused to leave the area like their comrades. They agree that the army has helped them and that it represents a sort of guarantee for their lives. Gibraltar is closer to the site of the bombardment than to where the settlers heading for the Huila capital live.

Some of the settlers heading for Neiva as they were resting at Santa Helena, 45 kilometers from the capital of Huila. They have with them their wives and children, as well as several mules and dogs. They are calling for the withdrawal of the army or a 30-day truce to get out all their belongings.

"The odd thing is that people from the Upper Pato, more than 100 kilometers from Las Perlas, are leaving," says a high-level officer from the Rapid Maneuvers Battalion [Batallon Cazadores] headquartered in San Vicente del Caguan.

Have Them Send Buses

Because the settlers heading for the capital of Huila were weary and ill, they asked the authorities for several buses to take people from Santa Helena to Neiva. The army authorized the passage of the vehicles that normally travel these areas. The peasant farmers do not want to break up and are therefore asking for buses just for themselves. They are afraid that the hot and rock-strewn road from Santa Helena to Neiva might do serious harm to the walkers, who are used to the jungle, not to roads. People are showing solidarity with them and asking for aid in schools and universities. As of now, no one knows where they are going to stay in Neiva.

"If they don't fix things up for us there, we'll move on to Bogota," the leaders of the march told EL TIEMPO.

"That land is so good that you can live on the weather alone. Just look at my kids, not a single one sick. That's why we love the region so much," one of the women commented.

When asked whether some subversives might have infiltrated among them, they all stated that they were willing to identify themselves so that the army, which has done a head count on them all, can check whether they are guerrillas or laborers.

"Look at our hands and you'll see that we're all people who work the land. The guerrillas' hands are not like that because rifles don't give you calluses," says one of them, showing his wrinkled, thick-fingered, black-nailed hands.

[9 Sep 80, p 2-B: Guerrilla Lifestyle]

[Text] El Pato, Huila--The guerrillas called him Esteban; family names are not used. For 2 years he carried a 50-pound knapsack on his back, a loose rifle in his hands and in his head the fixed idea that he was going to be slain by an army or a guerrilla bullet.

He had his happy times in the jungle too, especially when at night he would sneak off to the bed of a guerrilla girl. He made love to a different one each night. There were 26 women, and he had sex with 25 of them; the other one was very ugly.

The women who join up live just like the men. They march like them, eat like them, obey the same laws, wear the same camouflaged uniforms and carry the same equipment, plus two extra things: birth control pills and sanitary napkins.

Free love is practiced. Each person sleeps with whomever he or she likes. When they go to bathe in the rivers, the men and women walk around in the nude. They never wash in exposed ponds, for fear that they might be seen by army light planes and helicopters searching for their hideouts.

The largest FARC groups live in the El Pato jungle, located in Huila, Meta and Caqueta. All of the rebels who are to leave for other fronts scattered around Colombia's mountains train there.

In order for a person to join the guerrilla movement, they first monitor all of his activities in the city or town in which he lives. Then, little by little, they begin telling him about the jungle and their political intentions. If the candidate accepts, two guerrillas arrive on the least expected day and take him away. No one can be notified of the departure, not even a person's mother. Esteban was sleeping at his farm in Paujil when they came to get him. He did not even have time to get a picture of his girlfriend or his toothbrush.

They then spend 6, 10, 20 days walking through the forest until they reach the spot where other comrades have been recruited to begin the training course. The instruction is imparted in large, wall-less, tree-branch-covered houses with mattress-less bamboo beds. They are first taught how to handle weapons, cross ravines, march through the undergrowth and crawl when wounded, and they fight mock battles with wooden rifles.

They are also trained to endure hunger and to live on water and a piece of brown sugar loaf for several days. When the guerrillas take flight, they do not stop, not even to pick up the dead who fell in combat. Guerrillas usually escape in pairs, not in groups. Before the ambush, they agree to meet at a certain bend in the river or at a place where there are five cinnamon tree stalks in a straight line. A few of them say prayers.

While at rest, they study and discuss surplus value, the class struggle, the role of the worker in the various systems of production, the laws of historic materialism and the secrets of the dialectic. Marx, Engels, Lenin, Trotsky, Mandel and other Marxist thinkers become their only friends outside the people in their column. "In 6 days you'll have to explain the postulates of Leon Trotsky's Permanent Revolution," they told Esteban 5 weeks after he left his farm.

They also learn how to make bombs out of cookie, butter or deodorant jars. For this they use clamps, nails, pieces of glass and powder. They activate them with an automatic detonator when they see troops walking over others that they have previously buried. They also use them to ambush vehicles, usually at a curve or after a bad stretch of road when they have to slow their pace. The first rule is to shoot the driver and the people in the cab. Then the guerrillas in charge of blowing out the tires shoot, and lastly they fire on the troops, who for 20 seconds or so after the explosion are in disorder. Shots are exchanged for 2 or 3 minutes, and then they begin fleeing along the predetermined paths. Six guerrillas remain at the mouth of the ambush site to fire back in the event of a counterattack.

The Guerrilla Code

The death penalty is meted out, without appeal, for raping the daughters of settlers, divulging secrets, leaving a wounded person on the ground, smoking marihuana, stealing and mistreating a comrade either by word or by deed. Such a trial lasts no more than a half-hour, and the guilty party is tied to a tree in front of all his comrades and shot once, because ammunition is precious to them.

No one can return to everyday life on his own initiative. A person who agrees to join the guerrillas knows that he cannot leave the jungle.

The commander of each front has the personal records of each guerrilla under him. All of their mistakes and successes are written down in notebooks. The children carry these files on their backs, files that also contain information on ammunition and food supplies. Each guerrilla receives an annual salary of 300 pesos.

They can grow beards if they like. When shaving, they use the mirrors that some women carry in the pockets of their fatigues or they look at their reflection in the water. The women use deodorant, and some men put talcum powder on their feet.

The children are also armed. The offspring of either settlers or guerrillas, they start working at age 4 as informers or lookouts. They are given short weapons and put in charge of picking up papers and garbage that get left behind so that their trail cannot be followed.

When they sense that the army is very near, they never light a fire to cook; they just eat dry fish with brown sugar loaf and water. They remove the bark from the sticks they burn so that no smoke will be emitted.

The guerrilla groups in El Pato own farms and grow bananas, yucca and fruits and raise hogs and cattle there. They distribute the land themselves, and there are some areas in which the settlers are not allowed for any reason whatsoever. The peasant farmers working there sometimes see them pass by in groups of up to 400 men, but they do not know which one is the leader.

They hide their belongings high up in the trees. Weapons, bullets, powder, food, clothing, drugs and books are fastened there, and each guerrilla has to remember where he left his things without making any sort of a mark. At times they climb up the trees while troops file past below. They do not so much as breathe.

They sleep on canvas hammocks strung out between trees. They make love in these hammocks. They use cords smeared with repellent to keep snakes out. Everyone sleeps with his rifle by his head. Whoever leaves aside his weapon for even a minute is severely punished.

Ambushes Recorded

They are not allowed to use swear words among themselves, but when they ambush an army patrol, they shout out the ones they have not been able to utter in several months. These ambushes are recorded, and they later play back the shouts, machine gun fire and moans of the wounded while commenting on the details of the battle.

Sometimes they stage parties, dance and drink fermented sugar cane juice. They celebrate 1 May with great discipline and raise their yellow, blue and red flag with the letters FARC painted in black.

"When they played 'brillar hebella,' we had a real good time," Esteban comments in reference to their dances.

Argemiro, the commander of the Third Front, has a lover named Rosa. They say she is very beautiful. She had a son by Argemiro. When she found out that she was pregnant, she came to Bogota to look after herself. She is used as a decoy for attacks on various spots. A year ago she went to the town of La Macarena and flirted with the commander of the police station, who was unable to refuse the requests of this guerrilla "Mata Hari" and took her to see the facilities at his headquarters and told her about the movements of his agents. Two months later, Rosa commanded an assault on the town and fired her rifle at the policeman to whom she had sworn eternal love.

When there has been a battle, the guerrillas are skilled in removing the clothes from slain soldiers. Many of the FARC members wear uniforms riddled with their own bullets, uniforms that they removed from dead army troops. The first thing that they do when they find a slain soldier is to break the boot laces so that they can be removed readily. The belt with the grenades, canteen and ammunition has by this time been taken off. If they have time, they turn the body face up and push in the stomach to tear the pants along the zipper. "You can make the dead bodies 'suck in' their guts real easy," says Esteban, the former guerrilla who now works with the army. He escaped one night when everyone thought that he was slipping off to a guerrilla girl's hammock, as he had done so very often.

8743
CSO: 3010

CORRUPTION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS DISCUSSED

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p 2-F

[Article by Hector Sanchez P.]

[Text] The rash of government official downfalls seems to be increasing, as EL MUNDO has now pounced on a governor.

In giving a brief account of government official downfalls under the present administration, we could say that bitter political revenge has gathered momentum, and those in opposition have set up a watchtower from which they can detect any false move by administrators.

The oddest incidents, such as the appointment of a few overseers or paying for a cocktail party with funds earmarked for education, have brought down these public servants as quickly as mangoes are harvested from trees.

One of the institutions hardest hit by the fall of its directors has been the Social Security Fund. Ever since 1972, when its director Hernando Cuevas was fined a ludicrous 1,000 pesos, supposedly for disobedience, the fund has not managed to secure acceptable leadership, and its image is the most tarnished among government agencies.

One downfall that was long in the works (in the Social Security Fund once again) was Ernesto Arango Palacio's. He was, in fact, arrested by detectives in his very own office and put behind bars; a few days later he was forced to resign when charged with misrepresentation, corruption and bribery. Arango was unable to parry the attack against him, despite having wealthy godfathers.

The Arango affair was one of the strangest in the wide range of traps that the enemy sets to bring down officials. The fund director defended himself even by bringing death into the picture, because at a press conference at the Bogota Journalists Club he warned that his life was in jeopardy on account of his adversaries and that his heart could not take all these attacks.

Nevertheless, a few days later the government received his resignation, which was, of course, prompted by the tight squeeze that his opponents had put on him.

The Social Security Fund is now in the midst of another crisis, as its director, Rodrigo Salas, is being swamped by an avalanche of criticism by hundreds of doctors calling for his resignation. They are accusing him of taking possession of patient medical records and of violating professional ethics. In short, it is this fund that has suffered the most setbacks, and as always, its beneficiaries will be the ones who suffer.

A Few Overseers

The appointment of a few overseers, according to the defendant, gave rise to a lengthy battle initiated by a former president against a manager of the Institute of Territorial Credit (ICT). This later culminated with the resignation of the ICT chief in light of the intolerable situation that he was faced with.

ICT manager Rodrigo Garavito was swamped by a mounting wave of criticism over the swelling of the institute's bureaucracy, which the former chief executive had detected.

Cocktails Charged to Education Funds

It can happen in the jungle, in the capital or in any province, and in fact it happened not long ago to a commissioner of Guainia who staged a banquet at which expensive brands of liquor were served and which lasted far into the night. The generous host, without the slightest discretion, paid for the bash with the budget funds earmarked for the construction of schools in the territory and was quite pleased with himself.

But the host of enemies appeared on the scene, and when the drinking spree was over, the Federal Government was already apprised of the commissioner's frivolity. A few days later, the presidential palace issued a message whose most important section read: "Decree removing the commissioner of..."

And thus continue the blunder-prompted removals of officials, the intrigues and the political jealousy of a number of unsuccessful office-seekers in their regions, who cannot rest until they see their rivals out in the street.

The most talked-about case recently involves the governor of Del Valle, Jaime Arizabaleta, who took a kingly trip to the Old World. Upon his return, he was caught up in a whirlwind of criticism that swept away all that he had done in his 2 years as governor. Arizabaleta, who besides being invited by European governments had a per diem allowance of $280 (some 13,000 pesos), compared to just $180 for the president of the republic, tried to justify his princely tour, but a powerful address by a legislator reduced his defense to rubble. Some days later, the former governor was telling his friends how enchanting the nights are under the bridges of Paris and the nostalgia that one feels on the banks of the Thames.

So then, the enemy lies in ambush when someone like Arizabaleta takes such a trip, when some old friends are invited over for drinks or when the mayor of an obscure town "feathers his nest," and there will always be personal or political accounts to render.

8743
CSO: 3010

TURBAY, OTHERS LAUD VIRGILIO BARCO

President's Letter

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p 9-A

[Text] President Turbay Ayala yesterday accepted the resignation of Colombia's ambassador in Washington, Virgilio Barco, describing as "brilliant" his efforts in the post over the last 3 years.

In particular, Turbay underscored Barco's efforts to have a U.S. Senate committee approve the treaty acknowledging Colombia's jurisdiction over the keys of Roncador, Quitasueno and Serrana. The treaty is now awaiting action by the full Senate.

Barco resigned 3 weeks ago and according to his recent announcement, is taking care of a few last things and "preparing to return" to Bogota by the end of October.

He will be replaced by Liberal leader Jorge Mario Eastman, who plans to head for Washington next month also.

Virgilio Barco will be arriving here to head up a major Liberal movement seeking his nomination as the official Liberal candidate for the 1982 presidential election. Yesterday, several Liberal factions in Norte de Santander (not including Public Works Minister Enrique Vargas's group) formally backed Barco's candidacy.

President Turbay's letter to Ambassador Barco reads:

Esteemed doctor and friend,

It was with real sorrow that I learned of your resignation as Colombia's ambassador to the United States of America.

I was very pleased to have enjoyed your effective and loyal cooperation during the time that I have been president. From the ongoing contacts that I had with you, I can gladly assert that your performance as ambassador was brilliant, not just satisfactory.

You undertook many efforts with the U.S. Government, and almost all of them were crowned with success. It would be unfair if I did not underscore your persistent efforts to have ratified the treaty that the authorized representatives of the United States and Colombia signed in good faith in 1972, acknowledging our country's jurisdiction over the keys of Roncador, Quitasueno and Serrana. You succeeded in getting the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to approve the treaty unanimously, and it is now awaiting State Department clearance for final passage by the full Senate. We hope that it can be ratified before the close of the regular session of the U.S. Congress.

I understand very well the powerful reasons why you are returning to our country and your desire to participate more actively in national politics. I do not doubt that your presence in our country will promote understanding among the various factions of the party that you have represented several times in our Congress.

It is only because I realize that it would be useless to ask you to remain as ambassador to Washington that I accept your resignation, while once again expressing my appreciation for the valuable cooperation that you lent the government that I head and wishing you and your family personal well-being and success in your new undertakings.

Your fellow countryman and friend,
Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala

Liberal Support for Barco

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p 9-A

[Article by Jaime Calderon]

[Text] Cucuta, 24 Sep--A document indicative of strong Liberal unity in Norte de Santander around the presidential candidacy of Virgilio Barco Vargas was disclosed here today when departmental congressmen and deputies and Cucuta councilmen from the various Liberal Party factions sent a message to the ambassador in Washington underscoring his exceptional personal qualifications and offering enthusiastic and resolute support for his nomination.

The message is signed by the visible leaders of the various political factions, who ran on separate lists at the last two elections. The document reads as follows:

Cucuta, 24 September 1980
Virgilio Barco V.
Embassy of Colombia, Washington

Realizing how important it would be for the country if a man of your political, intellectual and moral qualifications were nominated as our party's candidate for president and then elected to that post, we wanted to inform you, as Liberal Party leaders in this section of the country, of our decision to support you actively and enthusiastically in this endeavor, the successful culmination of which we regard as good for the country, for the party and, obviously, for our region.

In making this decision, we are absolutely certain that as leaders of the Liberal Party in Norte de Santander, we have the total and enthusiastic backing of the rank-and-file, who have repeatedly asked us to formalize this sentiment as convincing proof of the recognition that Norte de Santander Liberalism owes to an individual of your proven abilities, who has demonstrated to the country by each of your public and private actions that you are more interested in the organization of the party and the welfare of the nation than any honor you might obtain under the current circumstances.

We acknowledge that this prudent and circumspect approach reaffirms the excellent record of your public life, which has been devoted to serving the nation's most cherished interests.

You can rest assured, Dr Barco, that the Liberal Party in Norte de Santander will not spare any effort to rally together as in our best and hardest times, with the full awareness that once again our department is giving the country its finest and best qualified son, certain that his performence will never disappoint it.

Your friends and fellow party members,
Eustorgio Colmenares, Gustavo Silva G., Jorge Cristo S., Carlos Celis C., Clemente Montanez, Hector Casas, Alfonso Chamie, Gabino Hernandez, Marco C. Leyva, Enrique Cuadros, Ismael Quintero P., Yezmin Colmenares de Zahn, Eduardo Assai, Alberto Ramirez M., Francisco Varela, Margarita de Luna, Max Rincon, Carlos Eduardo Ramirez, Gisela de Morales, Hernando Acevedo, Justo Castellanos.

Virgilio Barco

8743
CSO: 3010

PROPOSED NUCLEAR ENERGY LAW ANALYZED

Bogota EL TIEMPO in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p 10-A

[Article by Jairo Saravia H.]

[Text] Bucaramanga, 25 Sep--Mines Minister Humberto Avila Mora will preside for the first time this Friday over the Board of Directors of Coluranio.

The board will undertake a wideranging analysis of its input into the nuclear energy bill that the administration will be submitting to Congress.

It will also attempt to formulate an administrative policy and a new administrative structure for the company.

The general manager of Coluranio, Jaime Garcia Pena, will introduce a preliminary model for the economic appraisal of uranium projects.

It will also consider the transfer by the Mineton Company of France, a partner of Coluranio, of 40 percent of its interests in the country to the Italian company Agip.

The board meeting will be attended by the minister; the manager of ECOPETROL [Colombian Petroleum Enterprise], Jose Fernando Isaza; the manager of ISA, German Jaramillo Bendek; the director of IAN [Nuclear Affairs Institute], Ernesto Villareal; the manager of CORELCA [Electric Corporation of the Atlantic Coast], Jacobo Acosta, and the representative of the president of the republic, Jorge Reyes Puyana.

After the meeting, which will start at 900 hours, Minister Avila Mora will attend the signing of electrification contracts for Santander.

At 1600 hours he will preside over the energy forum organized by the Santander Association of Engineers. He will be received there as an honorary member of the Engineers Association and will swear in its new Board of Directors.

This ceremony will also be attended by the president of the Colombian Engineers Association, Felipe Estrada.

At 1900 hours, accompanied by the governor of Santander, Alfonso Gomez Gomez, he will close the meeting of the Engineering Departments currently being held at the Industrial University of Santander.

At the Coluranio meeting they will approve the proposals that will be sent to President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala and that will subsequently be formulated into a bill that will seek to prepare the country to undertake the development of nuclear energy.

In addition, the appraisal of economic projects will in the future enable the Federal Government, through Coluranio, to be in a position to decide whether a uranium deposit is commercially feasible or not.

Garcia Pena told EL TIEMPO that at present the results from all of the projects that the company is carrying forward show that radioactive minerals are present in various areas of the country.

He went on to say that since an exploration period lasts about 4 to 8 years, these results can be considered acceptable as part of Coluranio's initial stage of development.

The Colombian Uranium Company was created in March 1978 as a state-run commercial and industrial enterprise to explore for, develop, refine, process and market every kind of radioactive mineral and by-product.

Board of Director meetings have previously been held in Bogota. This is the first time that the minister of mines is holding one in the capital of Santander.

8743
CSO: 3010

ELIMINATION OF STAMPED PAPER PROPOSED

Bogota EL SIGLO in Spanish 9 Sep 80 pp 1, 2

[Article by Raul Rodriguez]

[Text] Finance Minister Jaime Garcia Parra has reported that the administration will submit to the Senate a bill to eliminate the use of stamped paper.

At the opening of a new federal tax collection unit in Bogota, Garcia Parra said that the elimination of stamped paper is another government measure to simplify the complicated administrative procedures that Colombian citizens have to follow.

The minister commented that stamped paper is an age-old system in our country, that it is no longer functional and that it thus causes problems for citizens and the public administration.

Colombians will be able to use regular paper for all of the formalities that currently require stamped paper; this will eliminate an unnecessary expense and streamline the handling of red tape, which represents a headache for the people today, Garcia Parra added.

Stamped paper does not bring in much revenue for the nation, since its production costs total 350 million pesos while receipts from its sale amount to 380 million.

A sheet of stamped paper currently costs 10 pesos and it costs 6 pesos to produce; this is profitable neither to the government nor to users, Garcia Parra stated.

Decentralization Program

The finance minister unveiled a new tax collection office in the Siete de Agosto section of Bogota. It is part of the decentralization program begun by the Federal Tax Administration throughout the nation.

Federal tax director Max Rodriguez reported that Bogota would have a total of 15 tax collection offices to serve the 400,000 taxpayers living in the capital.

The Tax Administration signed an agreement with the Banco Popular to open up six new collection offices in the Special District.

The federal tax director maintained that this decentralization program would spread throughout the country. Its goal is to simplify the tax process by streamlining procedures and providing better service to the community.

8743
CSO: 3010

CONSTRUCTION AID ACTIVITIES IN ANGOLA REPORTED

Construction Pledges Announced

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 26 Aug 80 p 1

[Article by E.M.]

[Text] The completion of 60 five-story buildings and the rehabilitation of 26 are basic pledges of the internationalist construction brigades working in the beautiful country of Angola in salute to the Second Party Congress and to Construction Workers Day.

This was announced at a press conference held at the SNTC [National Construction Workers Union] headquarters by Ivo Conde, secretary general of the Construction Workers Union in the Cuban Construction Enterprise based in Luanda. Expanding the water distribution plant in Kifandongo is another project of the Cuban workers. This work is being done at the request of President Eduardo Dos Santos by 47 workers from our country and 162 Angolan workers, and it has a significant historical value, since it was there, in 1975, that the victory offensive was carried out against South African intervention.

Four special brigades were formed for the construction of the 60 buildings--which are being built near the central airport. The Assault on Moncada Barracks group, composed of 116 men--who have returned to Cuba--completed 12 of the planned buildings 35 days ahead of schedule.

The Heroes of Bolivia brigade, made up of 241 workers, is trying to achieve a similar goal--12 buildings--by 8 October, date of the fall in combat of the Heroic Guerrilla.

Another group, the Embarkation of the Granma, with 442 construction workers, hopes to complete 23 buildings before 5 December.

The 22d Anniversary group, consisting of 198 members, is located in the Viana area, outside Luanda, and has set 30 November as the deadline for finishing their proposed quota of 13 buildings.

At this time, 95 internationalist construction workers have finished the first stage of the rehabilitation of the area known as "Brazil 1 and 2," and that of the hospital in the capital.

This group pledged to complete the improvement work and to finish 60 buildings. There are 2,431 construction workers in the brother country at present. A 500-student military vocational school is being constructed in Huambo through Cuban-Angolan cooperation.

They are also building the Dalas Dam on the Chimbe River in eastern Angola, and they are already finishing a bridge over the Cutalo River and another in Dusso, in the department of Huambo.

In addition, they are building two water distribution plants in Luanda and a like number in Mulema and Paluca, near the capital.

Brigade Activities, Arrival Home

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 2 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Edith Martin]

[Text] Several beautiful examples of our country's workers who have completed internationalist missions in other latitudes can be pointed out, among them, the construction workers who have distinguished themselves in the People's Republic of Angola.

The work being done by the men in the white hats in the African region is beginning to transform its geographical landscape and at the same time to give impetus to its economic and social development, started by the Angolan Revolution.

At this time there are 2,431 Cuban internationalist construction workers building bridges, schools and apartment buildings and developing inhospitable areas--all of this without sparing their concern and always with the firm attitude of solidarity which is typical of our people.

Some of the Projects

In Dala, a settlement in eastern Angola, 92 construction workers headed by engineer Andres Diaz of the Cuban Construction Enterprise, are doing the civil engineering work on what will be a hydroelectric complex which will utilize the natural resources of the Chimbe River waterfall.

The complex will supply electric power to the provinces of Moxico and Lunda Sur and in its primary stages will generate some 5,000 kilowatts.

Here the Cuban workers are working chiefly on the entry channel of the complex, on the intake level and on construction of the concrete wall of the spillway, which will be 143.5 meters long.

To construct the wall our workers partially changed the course of the Chimbe, rerouting it to the right bank in order to work from the center toward the left bank.

As part of the project, this brigade will also construct three bridges between the Saurimo and Mocanda regions, one, 38 meters long, on the Chimbe River; one over the Mombo, 72 meters in length; and the third, 84 meters long, over the Lupige River.

Salute to Second Party Congress

Four internationalist construction brigades, bearing glorious names from out fatherland--Assault on Moncada Barracks, Embarkation of the Granma, 22d Anniversary and Heroes of Bolivia--have, since the beginning of 1979, taken upon themselves volunteer work days without pay to complete 60 buildings, each with 5 stories and 20 apartments, as a salute to the Second Party Congress, as well as the rehabilition of 26 such buildings located in areas near the Luanda international airport.

Recently the Assault on Moncada Barracks group, with 116 construction workers, arrived home, the first to complete their task--2 model E-15 and Luanda 1 buildings--which they did 35 days ahead of schedule.

In an emotional farewell ceremony, Rafael Francia Mestre, a member of our party Central Committee and Cuban ambassador in the brother country of Angola, spoke of them, of their attitude toward work, of their self-denial and spirit of sacrifice for the sake of internationalism and of labor discipline.

On this occasion Francia Mestre delivered to the winning brigade its insignia flag, to be given to Roberto Veiga, secretary general of the CTC [Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions] and a member of the party Central Committee, who, on receiving the banners of the remaining groups--as symbols of duty accomplished--will take them to the Second Party Congress when it begins.

Union Organization in Luanda

Since the struggle for discipline began in our country, basically in the productive sphere, the Construction Workers Union in Luanda has begun the task of applying to the internationalist brigades the connection between labor and output, beginning with the time required for execution of the projects.

"We began the task of linking work to output with a pilot plan in the projects being constructed in the airport area," explained Ivo Conde, secretary general of the SNTC [National Construction Workers Union] in the Cuban Construction Enterprise in Luanda. We saw the results immediately. In the first 5 months of the year, per worker productivity was 941 pesos per month, and production only reached 547,941 pesos.

"After the new form of payment was implemented, productivity rose to 1,642 pesos per month and the value of the product reached 1,239,128 pesos. The quality rose more than 50 percent."

Angola is the first country in which Cuban internationalists are working to apply the labor-output connection to the time required to execute the projects. Previously it was tried out on the worker contracted for 1 or 2 year periods. Now it is done on the basis of the least time utilized in the completion of the buildings.

This experience represented a savings of 1,185 workers needed in October and November of this year to finish the buildings and developments already completed, project goals which were planned for 1981.

The Construction Workers Union in Angola has a committee made up of 13 cadres, 23 union sections in which 151 rank and file leaders work. They hold monthly meetings to check the progress of the projects, anything related to personnel cited for negligence or other reasons and the number of warnings issued.

There is a close relationship between the Cuban workers organization and the Construction and Dwellings Workers Union of the People's Republic of Angola. Their members participate in SNTC activities through interoffice meetings and political, sports and recreational activities.

The Angolan National Workers Union (UNTA) gives a quarterly prize to encourage the Cuban internationalist construction brigade to greater and better successes.

8735
CSO: 3010

COSMONAUT TAMAYO INTERVIEWED ON FLIGHT PREPARATIONS

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 18 Sep 80 p 4-5

[Interview with Lt Col Arnaldo Tamayo Mendez by Jacinto Grande]

> [Text] During his past vacation in Cuba, Lt Col Arnaldo Tamayo Mendez met with famous Cuban newsmen to whom he related some of the impressions of his training, his relations with his counterparts and the solidarity encountered at all times in order to make possible this transcendent reality which today, Thursday, 18 September 1980, shakes our fatherland: a Cuban has arrived in outer space. This press conference was also attended by Capt Jose Armando Lopez Falcon, a cosmonaut candidate, who was a member of the two-man team during training for this flight. Here is the conversation with Lt Col Arnaldo Tamayo Mendez.

Newsman: Comrade Tamayo, we would like to learn something about the steps that were taken in picking you as a cosmonaut candidate.

Tamayo: The selection process to make up the detachment of Cuban cosmonaut candidates began first of all with the phase during the party organizations, where an opportunity was provided for all fellow pilots, who are on duty in our glorious Air Force, either in a leadership capacity or in meeting some initial requirements, such as the ability to speak Russian. Another one of the requirements was preferably a university education; if not, they had to be at least high school graduates.

Yet another requirement was being an active pilot in the FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces], preferably a first-category pilot; if not, they were going to take second-category flying personnel. Quite logically, you had to be in good physical condition and that was also an indispensable requirement. On the basis of these requirements, commissions were set up to evaluate this work on the level of our Air Force unit and at HQ, Antiaircraft Defense and Revolutionary Air Force; taking all this into account, they selected, from among the large number of pilots, the group who met those requirements and each case was evaluated separately.

From this initial phase they went on to the brigade commission and the latter, in turn, sent the application on to the higher commission.

The next step was selection from the medical viewpoint. Each of us, as a career pilot, as a military pilot, has a medical record but during this step they went more directly into the medical examination of the candidates proposed by each air brigade.

Until that moment, nobody knew who was going to make up the preliminary candidate detachment because three groups of pilots were being processed. There were about 50 of us; and from that number, approximately nine comrades had to be chosen.

Our group of nine comrades went to an air unit where we trained from the viewpoint of physical preparation, improving our knowledge of the Russian language, and they also taught us special classes on space travel. The four comrades were then selected by decision of the DAAFAR [Air Defense and Revolutionary Air Force] in keeping with all of the requirements.

We arrived in the Soviet Union in January 1978, approximately on 20 January. We passed the medical checkup--more rigorous than at the Luis Diaz Soto Central Military Hospital--with various different requirements and specialized tests relating to the medical requirements which a candidate for space flight would have to meet.

After that examination, which took about a month over there, in Moscow, we returned. With the results worked out by the Soviet medical commission, the opinions and recommendations forwarded, the DAAFAR then decided on selecting two out of the four comrades and those two were the ones who had to go to study in the USSR under the control of space flight training.

The two of us selected were Capt Jose Armando Lopez Falcon and I.

After a month in Cuba, we returned to the USSR in February to start our studies in March. Our official training thus began on 22 or 23 March 1978. That was the end of the selection phase which was very strict.

Newsman: When they gave the news that you were one of the two cosmonaut candidates, what were your feelings?

Tamayo: This was a moment of such great joy that tears almost came to my eyes. If you are a professional pilot, the fact that you are selected to constitute a detachment of cosmonaut candidates is one of the great aspirations from the professional viewpoint. And then of course it was a moment of considerable joy, considerable happiness, a very moving moment when the commander of the DAAFAR gave the names of the two candidates who were going to take the course at the meeting of that group of preliminary candidates.

Newsman: We would like you to explain to us what your life was like when you were a child, during your early youth, where you were born, what you were doing when Gagarin made his first space flight.

Tamayo: I was born on 29 January 1942. I come from Guantanamo, from the town by that name. I spent my first years of education in a rural school and later on went through the other grades in public school in the city itself. I studied up to the eighth grade, approximately. I was 12 or 13 years old, I was studying and working at the same time, such as shining shoes, selling vegetables and fruits, anything possible just to get along. Later on I began to work in a carpentry shop as apprentice, until the end of 1959, and then I went through the eighth grade.

The FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces] minister issued an appeal to all youngsters to join the Youth Labor Columns which initially and later on were called AJR [Rebel Youth Association]; I joined that outfit in March of that year. The call was issued in January 1960 in connection with the birth of Our Lord; they called upon those youngsters who for one reason or another had not been able to finish their studies. I joined the AJR in the city of Guantanamo where I stayed approximately until May or June. Then I had an opportunity to join the 1st Brigade in the Sierra Maestra, I climbed the Cinco Picos, and at the end of December, we went to Pinares de Mayari. Throughout this entire phase in the Sierra Maestra and Pinares de Mayari, our brigades had the mission of building housing, roads, and camps, on top of the physical effort it took to climb those mountain peaks. On the basis of a call that was issued for various courses among the mass of Young Rebels, I went to Mayari in December 1960; here we also had a chance to study technical careers, aviation, diplomacy, and I decided to study technology and in December of that same year I went to Havana and started my studies all over again, adding to my general education at a school of the Rebel Army in Jaimanitas. I stayed there approximately until February 1961. That year we paraded in the Square during the first general rally. I was a member of a company of Young Rebels.

Then the school issued a new appeal because they still needed some comrades to complete the group of those who were supposed to go to the USSR and study aviation; in response to this new call, I decided to pursue a career in aviation and this is how, after the eucalyptus and pine planting drive, in Guane, Pinar del Rio, I was sent to the USSR to study aviation.

The course was rather fast; that was right after the mercenary attack in the Bay of Pigs. We went to the USSR in May with an emerging plan for pilot training; as you know, in the beginning of the revolution, our Air Force was very poor; we had very few aircraft and very few pilots and our plan precisely involved this fast, initial course for rated personnel, technicians, pilots, to beef up our service and to strengthen our FAR.

The course lasted one year; during that year, we flew two types of aircraft in the USSR--a piston aircraft, for basic training, and later a jet.

On returning from the USSR, I was first of all, in May 1962, assigned to the Playa Giron Guards Air Brigade; I stayed there until 1963 when I was sent to a fighter unit in the Central Region. I stayed with that unit until I was selected to join the detachment of preliminary cosmonaut candidates.

At the time of Gagarin's flight, I was planting eucalyptus in Pinar del Rio. I was selected as a member of the group that was going to study flying in the USSR.

Newsman: What did the triumph of the revolution mean to you and your family?

Tamayo: I remember there, in Guantanamo, which was where I was able to experience that moment, with what jubilation and emotion the people received the revolutionary triumph. For me and for my family, as for any poor family at that time, the means of subsistence really were very scarce and the triumph of the revolution for us meant the improvement of our living conditions, it gave me an opportunity personally to pursue my desire for studying because before 1959 I was unable to do so; I was able to study only up to the eighth grade. I always wanted to go on and study more and the triumph of the revolution opened new doors for me; a new perspective of development opened up for me and I really believe that I managed to utilize the opportunity which the revolution gave me.

For my family this also meant shaking off the chains of an old society that kept us shackled and subjected to discrimination.

Newsman: Taking up the problem of the Cosmos, could you give us a general idea of what your activities might have been in outer space, for example, how many orbits around the earth, how many hours could the flight last.

Tamayo: The flight involving composite crews, made up of Soviet citizens and citizens from the socialist camp, is programmed to last approximately 8 days.

During that period of time, plans call for conducting a series of experiments proposed by Cuban and Soviet scientists; as a member of the composite crew, our mission will be to perform activities as pilot-investigator. The pilot-investigator is busy helping the ship's commander and he must also carry out scientific investigations. In other words, he has a twin function: an investigative function involving certain experiments carried out on board and the control function over the work being done in the spaceship.

Newsman: What do you think of the development achieved by the USSR in the field of space science and what could you tell us about your comrades in training as well as your instructors.

Tamayo: You know that, following the first cosmic flight in 1957, over a little more than 20 years, Soviet science and technology has taken truly gigantic strides, truly phenomenal, ever since the first Sputnik, ever since the first man who flew in space, that is, Yuriy Gagarin, and later on we saw the great advances of Soviet science. The work that was done is truly admirable; the work which is being planned with a view to the exploration of outer space for peaceful purposes, for the employment, by man, of those advantages deriving from cosmic investigation for peaceful purposes. It is really astonishing how Soviet scientists, technicians, and specialists in general are working tirelessly to achieve the objectives which are being set up for peaceful purposes in space research.

Starting with our rival at the Yuriy Gagarin Cosmonaut Center, our training was realy quite active; the minutes and the seconds of our stay there were planned for the sake of the accomplishment of the entire flight program. I must really stress the help and the relations we had with the flight personnel, the Soviet personnel who had flown in space earlier, with personnel who have not yet flown, with the engineers, the doctors, the scientists, the technicians, and the personnel in general. Without that help we would not have been able to achieve the training level we did attain. In other words, in the USSR we received selfless aid, intended to make sure that our flight would be accomplished according to the established program, the Intercosmos Program, and to make sure likewise that our training would be as complete as possible. The instructors spared no time, neither during the day, nor at night, in helping us clear up any doubts we might have had; the engineers, the comrades who are in charge of training, the instructors themselves, including the language teachers, because initially language was a barrier--they all really helped us in learning the Russian language which, as you know, is a rather complicated language. In summary, from language all the way to the most complex activities, we received extraordinary help.

Newsman: What was one day of training like in your life as cosmonaut candidate?

Tamayo: I must begin by saying that no day there seems like any other day; every day brings a rather strong physical and psychological stress; I must tell you that no day seems like the day before because different activities are involved, you study theory and practice, you get physical and medical training; and then of course there are the group and social activities.

Our activities began early in the morning; that of course meant early morning calisthenics. Those exercises were directed by a professor of physical education and involved running, warmup exercises and a series of tasks which enabled the organism to begin to develop optimum condition for the rest of the day's programs.

Then you have breakfast and after that you start the morning's activities. We had two work and study sessions which lasted until 1800. Those 8 hours of activity, during the initial phase of our training, were basically theoretical; there was a certain volume of theory which we had to absorb so that, when we started our practical training, we would already have an idea of what a spaceship is, what the systems are like, what a linkup is like, what a launch means, and what outer space is. After that general course we pursued theory and practical activities at the same time.

We went to the laboratories and there, with the instructors and engineers, we inspected the spaceship because sometimes you have a theoretical idea of a spaceship, in the classroom, but you have to get confirmation of your knowledge through personal inspection.

Physical training was carried out simultaneously on a preliminary basis three times a week, lasting 2 hours, each time.

Physical training is quite strongly emphasized; we generally did that during the afternoon session. We also engaged in medical activities, such as periodic checkups. Social activities were reserved for the weekend, preferably on Sunday, although when training gets real rough, you have to subordinate recreation to the need for study and that is generally the way it is.

Regardless of the lecture hours designed to give us a deeper knowledge of this new technology, this new line of work, we continued independent study during night-time hours, using the laboratories at the training center, the mockups, the instructors and we did that in our own homes or, since instruction normally ends at 1800, we would continue studying elsewhere, sometimes in preparation for examinations and other teaching activities so that our program extended into the night-time hours.

Newsman: Two questions. First of all, tell us a little more about the training. What did you find most interesting here and how did your life, your experience as a pilot help you in coping with this new task facing you?

Tamayo: In the profession of cosmonaut, you have a series of emotional phenomena which involve great physical tension, which really imply very complex preparation and training; well, among that pile of complex activities, there is always one that stands out and I might say that in my case in particular the most complex one was the initial phase when I realized that my Russian was quite deficient although right now it is good and up to the required level.

Basic scientific instruction was quite tough for me. Right now, with the help of Jose Armando (the Cuban backup cosmonaut) as well as the other comrades and professors, that difficulty was removed. Another problem is the study of the professional aspect, a new technology, a new foundation which exists in space flight, which requires knowledge and calls for basic information. Another question involved the medical tests which are quite strict; these are control and analysis which are recommended by the medical commission, even though there may be no problem whatsoever.

The centrifuge, for example, is a quite tough test which requires resistance from the organism and the latter must respond to the physical overload developing in this device.

Newsman: Talking about the excess stress generated in the centrifuge, do you recall some occasion in Cinco Picos that could be an antecedent for the training you later on got in the USSR.

Tamayo: I believe that I was still quite young at that time, much younger, and I had greater strength from the physical viewpoint. The fact is that Cinco Picos required a tremendous effort on my part. Although, when I went into the Sierra Maestra, from childhood on, I had a certain amount of physical training, if you will, due to my living conditions, I did find myself in a rather tense environment, a rather tough way of life, and this is perhaps why climbing Cinco Picos was not as difficult for me, although these were tough trials requiring good resistance to climb up those various peaks which are on the way, as well as in the course of the various work functions we performed; but in cosmonaut training, the overload stress tests which you get are much more violent. I imagine in this centrifuge test, the maximum overload we received is 8 G; that means that your weight is multiplied eight times and you are practically pressed against your seat; all of the organism's work systems are changed, you pulse rate changes, your cardiovascular system functions differently and you need a good physical foundation to be able to stand up under those tests. We had comrades, for example, who had spent many years in aviation but who nevertheless were not able to pass those tests even though normally, as pilots, they were subjected to high temperatures and changes in pressure.

But these are specialized tests which are performed to find organisms that can really meet the stiff requirements of space flight.

Newsman: The other question deals with your visit to Vietnam during the United States aggression. I would like you to tell us something about that.

Tamayo: I had an opportunity to be selected to make up a military delegation from our FAR which visited the RDV [Democratic Republic of Vietnam] in March 1967. The purpose of that delegation was to exchange, with Vietnamese military personnel, our experiences in the management and development of modern technology and tactics in the fight against enemy aviation, in this case, United States aircraft. Our experiences were much less than theirs since they had for many years been involved in this task of defending their fatherland. For our part, the experience we had to offer was what little we had; however, we got a large amount of experience from them in the fight against United States aircraft which were indiscriminately bombing Vietnam, with the subsequent devastation of resources and buildings, including even the indescriminate bombing of the civilian population in villages, residential sections, even the capital of Hanoi. For those of us in this group, this was realy a very great experience which helped us much in our training as military personnel, as aviation specialists. Besides, we had an opportunity to see how the population responded to this cruel aggression in the north as well as against the intervention by American troops in the south, how the people fought shoulder to shoulder, tenaciously, to eliminate United States aggression; we saw the heroism of that people because we were able to see acts of impressive heroism.

Newsman: We would like to know more about you individually, as a cosmonaut; we would like to know whether you are married or single, whether you have children, in other words, we would like to know you personally, as cosmonaut.

Tamayo: I can tell you that I have been married since 1967, I have two boys, one going on 11 and the other one going on 10, in other words, they are about 16 months apart. The older has the same name as I, the mother's name, and the younger one is called Orlando. I kept my matrimonial relations within normal conditions and I really received great help from my wife, both as pilot in the FAR and in my new task of preparing myself for space flight. She was really a big help and she was one of the persons who assisted me much. She constantly watched over my training.

Newsman: The cosmonauts are getting training so that they may work in outer space but logically they must get some training so that they can rest out there. I would like you to tell us a little bit about training for sleeping because I imagine that, in a space ship, things are not as comfortable as when it comes to sleeping as they are here on earth.

Tamayo: This really is an answer which in practice you get during flight itself because the state of weightlessness is very difficult to simulate on earth. There are reports on that, there are assumptions, there are the stories told by comrades who have flown and they all tell us how the organism performed in a state of weightlessness. You know that there is mass in a state of weightlessness but no weight. The systems and the normal functions of the organism are changed. This kind of training you cannot get in practice on the ground because the conditions of weightlessness do not exist; but you do get instructions which you have to follow in order to perform the act of sleeping, in other words, how to get into a kind of bag so as not to be floating around because otherwise you would be floating all over the inside of the spaceship. The training we got in reality which respect to that is rather more theoretical and you have to experiment with the practical aspect during the flight itself. These are interesting things; you are accustomed to sleeping in a bed, with a matress and some people use pillows; besides, a spaceship would have to be quite big if we were to fit in those things which we are accustomed to having on the ground; in the beginning, this adaptation is quite uncomfortable but after several days of flight you manage to settle down and sleep, according to the experience of the other Soviet comrades.

Newsman: Could you tell us something about the experiments which you are going to perform during the joint Cuban-Soviet flight as part of the Intercosmos Program?

Tamayo: Our Academy of Sciences is directing the scientific work involved in the experiments which are going to be conducted during our flight or during other subsequent flights to be made. There is a series of studies which are to be conducted from the viewpoint of medical and general research.

As part of them, it is very important to explore the natural resources of the earth which can be used or which can be discovered by our personnel, along with the observation of areas adjacent to ours, their fishing regions. We also are planning and we already have taken some photographs for the purpose of studying our relief, the structural formation of our territory, and our adjacent waters.

Newsman: Getting back to the training, we would like to know something about the diet you get. I would like you to tell us something about that.

Tamayo: Regarding the diet which we are going to take along during the flight, they first of all gave us a general overview of the consumption required during the state of weightlessness. During the training process itself, we consume those food items for one week. The basic objective was for us to get used to those foods which certainly are different from what we are accustomed to eating. These are foods which are in small cans, tubes, or under a system which is called sublimation, which involves completely dehydrated food and which does not lose its flavor. Once we are out in space, the only thing the pilot has to do with that food in the spaceship is to activate it with water and this is how you eat.

During that week we consumed all of the food items in order to check them out and so that we might give our opinions from the taste viewpoint because it has been found that everybody has a different palate; some people like soup and others like stew or various kinds of meat; during that week we consumed those food items in order to measure them; and then they prepared a menu which each and everyone of us requested for the flight, in other words, we got the menu which we were going to take along on the flight.

Newsman: And what menu did you pick for the flight?

Tamayo: The breakfast which I picked, for example, included coffee with cream, bread, meat in a tube with seasoning. For lunch, I started off with soup, Russian soup, in this particular case I recall that it was borshch, a very flavorful soup with much seasoning; my second course included puree with meat, bread, and for desert I had picked a fruit bar. I proposed various dishes in the dining room; it is difficult to remember just exactly what I proposed on the various days but I basically suggested meats since soup is the first course for lunch. And for afternoon snacks I mostly wanted sweets.

Newsman: What importance do you assign to the Intercosmos Program?

Tamayo: The Intercosmos Program has opened up vast prospects of scientific investigation on outer space for the socialist community, headed by the USSR.

Before the creation of this program, which is being carried out by the socialist countries together, there had been no other possibility of investigation. Just imagine Cuba, with its scarce resources, with a scientific level that is certainly not up to the levels of the European countries, for Cuba it was practically impossible to perform experiments in outer space and even less so to send a Cuban citizen to conduct research during space flight. The creation of this program in the USSR was truly a gesture of collaboration among our socialist countries, of brotherhood among our scientists and peoples. And the fundamental aspect is that the USSR has managed to internationalize outer space in order to achieve greater results in research and exploration which are currently being carried out. The Intercosmos Program provides possibilities for our countries to be able to investigate and to make contributions to world science from the results of studies on cosmic space.

Newsman: What are your impressions of the group at Star City and what factor do you consider permits that international spirit of union where the national character of the participants is preserved?

Tamayo: It is really a very beautiful spectacle to see how the representatives of the the various nationalities, independently of the geographic location, maintain profoundly brotherly human and revolutionary relations. This is understandable because above all there, among the comrades who are training, there is a strong desire for help and profoundly brotherly human and revolutionary relations are being maintained and there was really strong cohesion in terms of work and study. It is an impressive thing to achieve that. Of course, during the training program, under the direction of the Space Flight Training Center, we did perform certain activities which sometimes are individual whereas at other times they are group activities; and these basic experiences are obtained in the group activities which we engaged in, with the Soviets and with the other representatives of the socialist countries; here you find manifested this kind of cohesion in our work as a part of the training effort.

An example of this cohesion is that, for the first time in history, Soviet communists and communists from eight countries who are in the training phase now are getting together in a party aktiv. Here we are developing a kind of aktiv prior to the launch and indeed everybody speaks out as a communist about the training of the other comrade who is going to fly but who was not of his nationality. This gives you an indication as to how we achieve work cohesion there among all nationalities.

Newsman: Getting back to the aspect of brotherhood and comradeship and noting that your cosmonaut teammate Capt Jose Armando Lopez Falcon is also here, we would like Lieutenant Colonel Tamayo to give us his impression about the other Cuban cosmonaut candidate.

Tamayo: About Jose Armando, first of all, I must tell you that we have known each other for a long time, much longer than our joint training. He is a jovial fellow, a good companion, a revolutionary, and I believe I must say that, during the pre-flight phase, both in his training and mine, he has always played a very fundamental role as far as I am concerned by virtue of his training, because he is intelligent, because he is younger, more dynamic, and really we managed to create a strong working group, a working group where there is no individualism; a group where our basic principle is the fact that a Cuban citizen is going out into space, be it he or I. On the basis of that principle we helped each other and in the training we got, in the general training and in all activities, Jose Armando was fundamental. In other words, we created a team on the basis of the principle that one of us two is going to have to fly and we must help each other, without letting either one of us make mistakes which the other one could help correct. During the stiff theoretical training phase, the phase I talked to you about, during the Russian-language training phase, we reviewed the materials together late into the night.

Newsman: We think that Capt Jose Armando Lopez has the right to reply and we ask him briefly to express his opinion on his comrade, Lieutenant Colonel Tamayo.

Lopez Falcon: As Tamayo said, we have known each other for quite some time, even before this process of preparation for the Intercosmos Program. When we met in Cuba as pilots, I was his subordinate, in other words, he was my boss there, and he continued to be my boss here, and I believe that he is going to be my boss for a long time. Relations with the comrade lieutenant colonel always were excellent, he is a comrade who is very easy to have access to. For any younger comrade, such as me, in this case, because, when I joined the FAR, I had no experience, I was not an experienced pilot, whereas he was, I had much confidence in him, because of his personal abilities, not only because of his achievements as a pilot and as an officer but also because of his personal characteristics, as a comrade, as a brother, as a friend. In any activity, within this training phase under the Intercosmos Program, we worked closely together and he helped me and I helped him in some parts but in other parts we went more or less half-and-half, although I also received help from him, not only from the specifically technical viewpoint but also some basic aspects, the problem of staying calm, of evaluating the most difficult situations, of grasping the most important directions; together with him we always formed a team in which our mission always was to be ready in the best possible way, without sparing any effort. This common objective and these relations likewise are the things that enabled us to overcome all difficulties and solve all problems which we had in taking on the unique objective of making this flight a success.

Newsman: I believe that I summarize the feeling of all comrades when I say that this has been an example of human solidarity, of friendship among two Cuban cosmonaut candidates. But now I would like to direct a specific question to Lieutenant Colonel Tamayo. We would like to know something about an aspect which you have not yet covered, your spare time, your preferences, your books, and whether you were free to take some specific books out into space, as other comrade cosmonauts have done before, and we would also like you to tell us about what you did not have in the way of free time.

Tamayo: Over there, free time is rather short; recreation activities thus are programmed within that context so that you practically have very little time left for this sort of thing; and what little spare time you have, you must use in studying. This is why it is difficult to answer what I was doing during my time off. But there is always some little thing there that you can do by way of personal activities; I can tell you that, during that short free time, usually on weekend, I preferred, for example, to read some books. When I had a little more time in Cuba, I liked to dance and to go to parties. In the USSR there is of course singing and you can also dance because the Soviets very much like to dance; sometimes we spent our free time in this way. We also engaged in our own family activities, we visited each other, and we had to give some of our time to the boys. We went to Moscow, we saw some museums and some movies, we went for walks, we visited some historical sites and that is how we spent that spare time.

As for taking books on the mission, as part of our objectives, we had some historical documents. We took along a very much reduced version of "La historia me absolvera," as well as the Program Platform of our Party and the Montecristi Manifesto. These are three documents which we are going to take on board. Of course, any other type of literature is quite limited because it goes against the weight limit. The weight is programmed in terms of so many kilograms per activities of this type; and once you have reached the weight limit, it is very difficult to add anything else. We picked those three documents as a form of historical demonstration; they undoubtedly helped us perform a fundamental role so that a Cuban citizen might be able to travel to outer space and they are basic documents for our political ideology and our party.

Newsman: After a trip into outer space, what will a journey to your hometown, Guantanamo, be like?

Tamayo: I have some very intimate memories of my hometown. Especially during the hard times. It will be a very emotional thing, if the flight comes off successfully, because I will once again meet the people of Guantanamo.

Newsman: There has been talk of Cuba, of the first cosmonaut of Latin America. How could you come to be the carrier of the Latin American ideal and in a certain sense, through this journey, could you also move Latin America closer to outer space?

Tamayo: I believe that we must place this success, this great event, in a broader context, in this case, the context of the peoples of Latin America, since Cuba is a part of the peoples making up Latin America, since Cuba a little more than 20 years ago lived in the same circumstances, the same characteristics as we find among all Latin American peoples. For Latin America this will also be an extremely important event which demonstrates the possibility of sending a Latin American citizen out into space. It opens the doors for Latin America and it shows that only through profound socialist scientific collaboration, such as the one which we are implementing with the rest of the countries of the socialist community, especially with the USSR, we can achieve this exploit. This is why this will not only be a success for Cuba but for the peoples of Latin America who will also view this as a success of theirs.

Newsman: Now all that remains for us to do is to wish you, Comrade Tamayo, success and a happy journey to outer space.

5058
CSO:3010

MACHADO VENTURA CLOSES NATIONAL SEMINAR ON SUGARCANE

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 10 Sep 80 p 2

[Speech by Jose Ramon Machado Ventura, member of the Political Bureau of the Communist Party, at closing session of the Fifth National Sugarcane Information and Propaganda Seminar, held in Holguin on 8-9 September 1980]

[Text] Comrades:

As we have every year, we have again followed with great interest this National Sugarcane Propaganda and Information Seminar, which on this occasion has as its scenario one of the country's leading sugarcane producing provinces. The event has gradually grown in quality and depth. This can be seen both in its organization and in the content of the subjects analyzed and discussed, subjects that have laid the groundwork for taking up tasks of dissemination relating to the current sugarcane season.

Since sugarcane propaganda involves the country's major economic activity, it constitutes a sphere of vital importance in ideological work requiring systematic, priority attention from the party, the UJC [Union of Young Communists], the trade unions, state offices and other elements, especially when the circumstances in which we shall have to complete the current harvest compel us to mobilize all our forces and make the necessary efforts, both in industry as well as in agriculture, so as to obtain an optimum harvest responding to the country's needs.

Sugarcane is our country's most important economic activity every year. It is a task whose success depends on many factors involving organization, leadership, discipline, responsibility and the enthusiasm of the people who participate in it, and on the degree of exigency, auditing and control exercised by cadres and organizations in charge of the task, all under the leadership of our party and convinced that its successful completion will determine to a great extent the future economic and social progress of the country.

For that reason, we believe it is very useful to speak to you about certain considerations relating to preparations for the current sugarcane harvest and other tasks of which, because of their importance, you should be aware in order to carry on your propaganda work.

In the current phase, there are certain tasks of vital importance to sugarcane growing and to the sugarcane industry.

In order to check the negative effects of rust, an enormous effort was made when the cane was planted during the first 6 months, which made it possible to complete the plan we outlined for that phase. At the same time, we waged a gigantic sugarcane cleanup campaign in response to the appeal made by Comrade Fidel. The massive mobilization of hundreds of thousands of men and women throughout the country made it possible to clear 154,680 caballerias [1 caballeria = 33.2 acres] by the end of August, 75,000 more than during the same period in 1979. With the current rainfall, this should mean a better yield than originally predicted. Despite this achievement, we must point out that there are still places with weedy fields and that some weeding operations were completed late.

Nevertheless, we must use our experience to see what it is possible to do when the masses, motivated by such a need, give a categorical response to the call of Fidel and the party and in an organized fashion, face the battle and emerge victorious. We must emphasize that all the mass organizations participated in this production success and propaganda played a role in mobilizing the people.

Looking to the next harvest, we must guarantee the repair of farm equipment used in the harvest: the combines, loading machinery, lifts and other equipment, and we must ensure the repair and maintenance of sugarcane roads.

In the industrial sector, efforts are directed toward investments and expansions, the setting up of new collection centers, the overhauling and repair of railroad equipment and track and repairs in industry itself.

We wish to emphasize, in this connection, that on the negative side of the ledger, we still have organizational and material and technical supply problems to which we must continue to give all the attention required so that agriculture and industry will complete their repairs by the dates set and with the quality making it possible to complete the harvest under better conditions than last year.

In addition to these activities, a sustained effort has been made to complete the cold-weather planting plan for this phase. However, one must point out that there are some delays, especially in the provinces of Sancti Spiritus, Ciego de Avila, Pinar del Rio, Camaguey, Havana, Granma, Villa Clara and Las Tunas, which must double their efforts in ground preparation and planting, thereby avoiding the last-minute marathons that hurt quality.

Simultaneously with these tasks, work is being done on organizing the next sugarcane season. This takes on special importance since the strategy that will be followed is that all mills will begin on the set date and from the very beginning, will mill at maximum capacity. In order to do so, it is indispensable that the cutting, hauling and loading be done with the required objectivity, permitting an uninterrupted supply of raw material to industry. We hope to complete this harvest efficiently and process all cane that can be milled.

In order to guarantee compliance with this goal, it is necessary that technicians, specialists and cadres in sugarcane agriculture make objective estimates of cane, including all millable cane and avoiding by all means any significant deviation, due to poor estimates, in the amount of cane to be milled. This would have the negative effect of disrupting the entire sugarcane program. In addition to this, we must work on an optimum cutting program in order to mill the cane when it has reached peak maturity.

This important aspect which we have underlined is part of the strategy of completing the harvest early and on the scheduled dates in order to be able to concentrate all human and technical efforts freed from the harvest on the spring planning and clearing operations.

Comrades:

In speaking about measures being adopted for the coming harvest, we believe it is necessary to dwell on a subjective factor of great importance, which fundamentally depends on the leadership cadres which at the different levels are responsible for planning, execution and control. We are talking about the organization of the harvest.

On many occasions, our press, the communications media and our people speak of the sugarcane harvest, referring to it as a great battle. Indeed, I believe that no term could be more accurate to describe the combination of activities, tasks and efforts being made to complete this operation.

In order to have an idea of what this means, it is enough to say that participating in the harvest are over 350,000 men who throughout our country make it possible. These men have different responsibilities and jobs, from the cutters and combine operators to those who load and haul the cane, those who work in receiving centers, those who haul it to the mills and those who then turn it into sugar, after which our vital product goes to the shipping zones for export.

It is impressive to see the number of links in this productive chain, the quantity of factors the intervene in the different phases of the process. It is truly a complex activity to organize this battle in which, in addition to the men, are thousands of machines: tractors, combines, lifts, trucks, hundreds of locomotives and thousands of railroad cars, in short, an immense ensemble of men and machinery that move in unison like the gears of an enormous machine.

This ensemble of men and machines has to be united by a single plan in which the task which every worker participating in the harvest must be clearly outlined. In addition, systematic control and daily standards are required.

The responsibility for drawing up the plan, carrying it out and enforcing compliance has been given to the Ministry of the Sugar Industry, its provincial delegates and its cane and sugar enterprises. They receive the valuable support of the Workers Movement, ANAP [National Association of Small Farmers], the EJT [Youth Labor Army], the UJC, the FMC [Federation of Cuban Women] and the CDR's [Committees for the Defense of the Revolution], all under the guidance and leadership of our party.

The Sugarcane Union must play a valuable and decisive role in this great production task. October is the month of the Sugarcane Union Congress, which brings cane workers together with mill workers under the banners of the Jesus Menendez Union, which achieved so many victories in the fight against imperialism and capitalist exploitation. We repeat that because of the importance of this task, the CTC [Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions] and the party must lend all the required attention so that this union will emerge at maximum strength to face the great tasks it has ahead.

That is why I wish to emphasize that propaganda must first of all be directed toward the correct planning of the sugarcane harvest and then toward ensuring that every worker, leader, technician, and so on, completes the task assigned to him.

Concerning organizational measures, I should like to dwell on a number of particular aspects.

During this phase, the workers movement, the administration and the party are working on the selection of cutters to participate in the next harvest. I believe it is a fitting time to express certain important considerations. We must follow the principle that our comrades who go to work in the harvest at the different work centers, mobilized as volunteers by the CTC and its unions, must truly be the most productive men from each place. The results of previous harvests must be taken into account, as well as commitments to the current harvest. Those picked must be the most disciplined comrades and in general, those who contribute the most to the harvest.

It is very important that in the heat of the assemblies held to pick the cutters, the unions must take their organization into brigades into account. It is also indispensable to talk with workers about the forms of payment applied for the harvest, explaining in detail these aspects so that the workers choose the type they prefer.

Even now, new forms of payment are being analyzed to stimulate this activity economically, thereby ensuring the success of the entire process.

Another aspect to bear in mind in the system of rest for the men. It is necessary to remember two important factors, first of all, that the men participating in the harvest must rest in an organized fashion and second, that the harvest is an uninterrupted process demanding the volumes of cane planned for delivery every day. We must not view these factors as negative but rather, as necessary elements of the same process. For example, one can observe that the inadequate planning of rest for the men causes drops in milling at the beginning and end of the week because of an insufficient supply of cane. This situation must be resolved in an intelligent and organized fashion. That is why, at meetings with brigades, leaders of the workers movement should discuss this with cutters so that their leaves do not interrupt the supply of cane to the mills. During the past harvest, some provinces took measures to spread out the rest periods of cutters and thereby obtained positive results in stabilizing the delivery of cane daily.

Propaganda has a great responsibility here since it is necessary to change deep-rooted habits of workers in agriculture, who customarily rest on weekends.

Another important aspect we wish to emphasize has to do with the millionaire movement. In his report to our party's First Congress, Comrade Fidel said that it was "one of the fundamental pillars of our battle for productivity and our fight to reduce the amount of labor required for the harvest to a minimum, while advancing toward complete mechanization of cane cutting."

Without a doubt, the Millionaire Movement has become the most productive and organized form of manual cane cutting. It is enough to point out that the men in the Millionaire Movement have higher productivity than the rest of the cutting crews not in the movement. On the average, the amount of cane cut for every "millionaire" is two and one-half times that cut by other cutters.

And yet, we must say that we still have a long way to go here. During the past sugar harvest, some 130,000 men from all labor sectors participated: from the CTC, regular workers, ANAP, the EJT, and of these, only 41 percent, 52,995 men, won the millionaire prize. For these reasons, it is indispensable for the party to devote special attention to these forces during this phase, to discussion with cutters in order to bring them into this honorable millionaire movement and help them achieve the objective during the sugar harvest. This task requires greater support and dissemination by our press and the communications media, which helps create greater awareness of the country's need to save on human resources.

I also believe that specialists must see why all propaganda is aimed at emphasizing the achievements of the millionaire brigades but without directing propaganda toward the goal of incorporating more cutters into the movement and toward emphasizing the causes keeping them from it.

In my judgment, the low membership in the Millionaire Movement is due to organizational deficiencies and to poor ideological work.

One topic deserving of special attention has to do with socialist emulation during the harvest period. There is no satisfactory explanation of why there is weak work regarding the harvest emulation when there is a mechanism set up and when it has been in place for years. The crux of the problem seems to be the lack of organization, the little supervision, the absence of individual and collective commitments, deficiencies in the inspection of results and the late awarding of incentives to winners -- sometimes they did not even receive them -- and the need to improve the plan of incentives now followed. There is also insufficient support and attention from the party, the government, trade unions and other organizations connected with this activity. Sometimes there is not enough information.

In my opinion, emulation should be an objective reflection of the results of work. Our harvests have suffered from serious organizational problems and we therefore believe that this factor has had a negative effect on emulation.

A recent survey among cane workers showed that when asked if they were involved in emulation, negative responses were received from 32 percent of the cutters and manual workers, 44 percent of loading operators connected with manual cutting and 42 percent of mechanized lift workers. We believe that these data are eloquent and show that it is necessary to give a vigorous boost to this vital activity, breaking with traditional schemes and molds of work and bringing about a radical change in this situation.

We have spoken of certain tasks and activities in which we are now engaged and of others that we shall soon take up.

Within this context is the Study and Application of Wage Reform in Industry and Agriculture, along with new forms of economic incentives through the payment of bonuses in these activities.

The consistent and timely application of these new forms of payment are set forth in the Economic Guidelines that will be analyzed at the Second Congress of our party.

We must prepare ourselves to disseminate economic measures adopted to all workers in this sector. It will be necessary, in connection with these important measures, to do far-reaching political work by the party, trade unions, the UJC and the government, reaching all sugar workers so that no matter what decisions are adopted on wage increases, there must be improvements in discipline at work, efficiency and productivity and these questions must complement each other.

Comrade propaganda workers:

We have described to you briefly the projection of work in this phase in sugarcane harvest activities so that you may have all the elements you need for your work. We should now like to emphasize certain ideas about how we should disseminate these ideas and how we can emphasize certain problems in particular through propaganda.

Sugarcane harvest propaganda must not be limited to the time of the harvest only. Rather, it must take in all phases of the agroindustrial process and take into consideration the many interrelated elements in every phase.

In future work, we must remember that already for 1981, over 45 percent of the cutting will be done by machine. This demands a great effort on the part of all administrative organizations responsible for this task in order to guarantee optimum conditions in preparing areas that can be handled with machines, creating procedures making it possible to train and retrain personnel in charge of operating, maintaining and repairing this costly equipment.

At the same time, we must ensure a supply of spare parts and the materials needed to maintain and repair combines so as to keep all stock ready and avoid the loss of time because of breakdowns that sometimes last longer than is reasonable. We must see that workshops that build and rebuild spare parts have the materials, equipment, tools and technical means needed for their work and that they overcome organizational deficiencies that have considerable influence of the output of equipment. Consequently, propaganda must be aimed at ensuring that the men who perform these tasks are aware of the need to comply with established norms for mechanized cutting, and the government must be very strict in order to achieve good results.

Along with mechanization, there are plans to expand irrigated areas, another of the fundamental programs being carried out, based on the need to overcome the imponderables stemming from the great fluctuations in rainfall characterizing our country.

However, the importance and scope of the application of techniques to our sugarcane agriculture are not properly reflected in our work of dissemination. Above all, local means and resources are not sufficiently used and not enough attention is paid to the development of activism and direct propaganda.

Without a doubt, the need to develop increased productivity and improved efficiency in production and to achieve optimum results in management cannot be resolved simply through propaganda; on this we all agree. But no one can deny that the production propagandist and especially the sugarcane propagandist can, once aware of each and every problem, help to localize them and isolate them, whether in the mill, at the center of collection, the transport base or the area where the cutters live and work together. then create conditions for their solution. This can only be achieved when the propagandist is closely linked to the men to whom his message is directed so that it will be materialized in concrete actions, expressed in convictions that lead to the maximum contribution with full awareness of the importance of the contribution to the national economy.

The press has an important role to play in this effort, especially with respect to information, an objective analysis of the progress of sugarcane work and an objective and critical examination of deficiencies, which is an economic, political and social imperative. We are now on the right path.

We believe that information on the sugarcane crop is quite satisfactory in our written press. It meets its commitment and helps create a harvest atmosphere throughout the country. This is good, comrades. We hope that further work will be done along these same lines.

Regarding the need to disseminate the policy of encouraging sugarcane workers, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that that policy must be directed to the proper place and in the proper manner. Many of you are aware that propaganda has not always been adequately directed and that on occasion, what has been viewed as a labor feat or something outstanding has not always had a favorable result for production and the economy as a whole. On occasion, partial production results, the results of a day or a short period of time, have been praised. This has sometimes caused us to evaluate results subjectively and to form a good idea of something that actually is not going well. We must emphasize the feats of our cutters and operators, just as of those who mill the sugar and perform the rest of the activities of the sugarcane harvest, but always on the basis of not merely pointing up the exceptional achievements of one day, but the daily effort which in the long run is what provides a solid support for the economy and the nation.

We want to repeat the concept that sugarcane propaganda must stress to collectives and workers the fact that they must complete the tasks planned in each link of this important process on a stable, daily basis.

We must continue to put out sugarcane propaganda throughout the year and in an intelligent manner, see that it responds to the requirements of each phase. In this sense, it is fitting to reiterate that for every phase, we must use adequate means and suitable language, ensuring the necessary cover during planting, weeding, harvesting, the industrial process and export.

This is a requirement for all of us who in one way or another are involved in the task and the sugarcane agroindustrial process, trying to create a suitable atmosphere in the country in order to face this work with the enthusiasm, fighting spirit and responsibility it implies.

The sugarcane crop is a mass activity and as such, propaganda must play its role as an element to mobilize the masses, a vehicle to spread the best experience and incentives for workers participating in it. They are subject to the work of propaganda and agitation since it is they who must see themselves reflected in the propaganda aimed at them so that they can feel that they are what they truly are: protagonists in the national undertaking which every sugarcane harvest signifies.

As the years have gone by, substantial changes have taken place in the thinking of sugarcane farm workers. Many of those who were cutters years ago have now been promoted and efficiently operate combines. It is obvious that propaganda must be adapted to these changes taking place in the men and adopt new forms and content. The message reaching every man must be in harmony with the work he does. It must be clear and direct and take up the very questions in which the worker is involved. That is why we insist that sugarcane propaganda must be characterized by a high level of specialization and be perfectly suited to the different problems and areas.

We cannot lose sight of the fact that the level of development of our society demands work that is more lasting, well-thought-out and not improvised. Our propaganda must also be that way in order to inspire men to achieve results corresponding to the progress of our process.

In the Proposed Economic and Social Guidelines for the 1981-1985 Period, which were recently discussed in the country and submitted for the approval of the Second Congress of the party, the need to improve yield to 70,000 or 80,000 arrobas [1 arroba = 25 pounds] per caballeria and to 90,000 arrobas in some provinces is expressed. We must also increase the capacity of the sugar industry. These are measures aimed at the objective of producing between 10 and 10.5 million tons of sugar by 1985.

These aspirations will only become a reality if we start now to lay the objective, concrete foundations both in agriculture and industry. Once the cement has been poured, we need but the proper attitude, systematic demands, rigorous control and the anticipation of every step to be taken to guarantee high and stable yields, quality in sugar, savings on raw materials and other factors that mean greater efficiency in production.

Comrades:

We have taken the opportunity provided by this meeting to speak about a whole series of general problems in which propaganda work can play an important role. We must continue to pay proper attention to the adaptation of the sugarcane propaganda campaign in rank-and-file party organizations and its related organizations, in keeping with the specific characteristics of the work of each one. This is a task of extreme importance because it will determine whether we can truly take up the problems emerging in practice, fight difficulties, emphasize successes and properly support this fundamental economic management.

I believe it is valid to emphasize the meritorious work done in relation to the need to maintain and improve the quality of sugar and recently, of cleaning operations.

At this seminar, there has been discussion of several experiments of the UJC, the Youth Labor Army and mass organizations and it is our opinion that the discussions have been beneficial because they have emphasized the ever closer ties of these organizations to sugarcane propaganda and agitation tasks.

Concerning means of dissemination, it is worthwhile to emphasize the need to step up efforts, improve organization, so as to make a positive contribution to victory in this battle, based on established schedules and with improved quality. That is why, from this moment forward, we must think about how in every area we can support the sugarcane harvests of the coming years, which are essential to the future development of the national economy.

We wish to remind you that the coming harvest will begin days before the holding of the Second Congress of our party, meaning that the beginning of cutting, milling at the plants, and so on, must constitute a summons and a commitment of workers to achieve an optimum harvest in the year of the Second Congress.

We are completely sure that in this approaching battle of our economy, the 1981 season, every individual will do his duty. An honorable task awaits all those of you who have the responsibility of reporting to all our people on the results of the harvest, to the workers, party organizations, the UJC, the trade unions, ANAP, the EJT, the government and other organizations connected with the harvest. We are fully confident that the results will reward the efforts, dedication and revolutionary passion with which our people respond to every task which the party and Fidel place in their hands.

Thank you.

11,464
CSO: 3010

RISQUET CLOSES PORTWORKERS NATIONAL MEETING

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 16 Sep 80 p 2

[Speech by Central Committee Secretariat member Jorge Risquet in Havana on 11 September 1980 delivered at a meeting of union leaders and port enterprise managers; passages enclosed in slantlines printed in boldface or caps]

[Text] At the end of May when the issue of the situation the ports will be facing during the next few months was raised in the Political Bureau, there really existed a serious threat to the national economy.

On the one hand, June was to begin with 540,000 tons of immobilized merchandise afloat and 248,000 in warehouses and port yards.

During these 3 months of port emergency, cargos amounting to about 2.044 million tons arrived. The unloading plan for these 3 months covered 1.792 million tons.

This means that arrivals exceeded the unloading plan by 252,000 tons, a figure which was to rise to 540,000 by 1 June. If we had worked as usual, keeping up with the plan, we would now, on 1 September, have had no less than 792,000 tons afloat and over /a million/ tons immobilized between ships and ports.

This would have had a disastrous effect on the economy. On the one hand, it would have meant the expenditure of an estimated 46 million pesos in demurrage costs from June to December.

Secondly, immobilization of the Cuban fleet, the fleet leased by CUFLET [Cuban Freight Enterprise] and the Soviet fleet would have forced us to charter more ships to carry the merchandise acquired during the year at the time of a big jump in freight rates, an increase that would have been even bigger if Cuba were to appear on the market with such a big demand for charter services.

Thirdly, such a large volume of merchandise immobilized in the ports would impose heavy financial burdens on industry, agriculture, construction and transport, leading to shortages of raw materials, equipment, accessories, fertilizers and complete installations necessary for the execution of production plans.

And it would also have inflicted shortages on the people, who would have needed the food and other consumer items tied up in the ports.

The fact that this posed a grave danger to the economy, one that had to be quickly and energetically averted, did not escape the notice of our party leadership.

Comrade Fidel directed the party to explain the situation to the workers and take all the steps necessary to set in motion an urgent and vigorous mobilization of all workers involved in the port-transport-national economy chain. And he instructed the government to study and immediately implement a whole series of measures designed to provide the necessary material resources.

The response of the workers was enormous. During those 3 months, 2,217,900 tons were unloaded from ships in port, transported and deposited in national economy warehouses. That is, the plan schedule was exceeded by 23.7 percent. In comparison with the same quarter last year, the increase amounted to 40.6 percent.

This was the achievement of the port workers, who belong to the Mambisa Terminals Enterprises Union and the grain and mining terminals. It was the work of the truck and rail transport workers as well as of MITRANS [Ministry of Transport] enterprises and other state organizations. It was the work of the national economy warehouse workers. And it was the work of many thousands of other workers who volunteered their efforts to achieve this labor victory.

Now what is the situation at the start of this September?

At the beginning of the month, we had 367,000 tons afloat. Anticipated arrivals amount to less than 600,000 tons. We should be unloading 700,000 and, in so doing, reduce the amount afloat to about 250,000 tons, a figure which may be considered normal for maintaining an unloading volume of 700,000 tons a month and not having to pay demurrage charges.

If we work hard in September — and that involves unloading 700,000 tons and getting a larger figure out of port operations — we will be facing a normal situation in the ports. Arrivals anticipated during the last quarter of the year will not exceed 2 million tons. So, maintaining the cumulative average of 700,000 tons a month, or 4.9 million tons from June to December, will permit us to normalize the situation and maintain a stable production flow in the ports throughout the whole chain of operations.

If we succeed in doing this, as early as October we will have achieved a positive balance in terms of demurrage and prompt shipments. During the 3 months in question we paid out 7 million pesos in demurrage charges. If we work hard during the rest of the year, by the end of the year that figure should be less than 10 million for June through December. That is, what was estimated to come to 46 million should not amount to 10 million. The 30 odd million thus saved will be thanks to you, the port and chain-of-delivery workers.

This will enable us to begin 1981, the first year of the next 5-year plan, with less than 250,000 tons afloat and less than 150 million tons in transit through the ports.

In 1981 the average monthly volume of goods that have to be unloaded will come to about 750,000 tons since, according to preliminary figures, the national economy should be receiving about 9 million tons of dry cargo during the year.

It is now up to us to consolidate this victory. In concrete terms, consolidating the victory means unloading, without demurrage charges, an average 750,000 tons a month, transporting them and depositing them in national economy warehouses during the coming year.

Next year we can count on more equipment, spare-part and accessory resources than we had this year, in the ports as well as in cargo transport and the receiving centers. New national economy port installations, cold-storage plants and warehouses will be completed by construction enterprises. There are still numerous organizational reserves to be utilized. There is every reason to believe that we can continue to cut down the cost in pesos, maintain the increase in productivity regardless of the average wage, increase our profits and create bonus funds.

The key to port-transport-national economy chain efficiency lies in organizing the flow of cargo as a /constant activity/.

Activity in the ports, the cargo-transport sector and the receiving centers /is constant: day and night, from Monday through Sunday/.

The as yet partial application of this elementary truth is what has made it possible to increase our volume of unloading and transport of imported goods by 23.7 percent over that called for in the plan, by 24.6 percent over that achieved during the first 5 months and by 40.6 percent over that of the same quarter last year.

The chief task consists of the general application of this principle.

In the ports, we have to set up night shifts and Sunday as a workday for as long as there is cargo to be handled.

Truck and rail cargo-transport equipment must roll 24 hours a day every day. Maintenance and repair shops for this equipment must meet the challenge of this constant flow. In the national economy warehouses, we must organize personnel so that cargo is immediately unloaded as soon as it arrives.

Of course, this neither can nor should mean that workers in this chain of delivery have to give up their weekly day of rest. We must organize a labor turnover system. In some cases, we will have to increase the number of workers. In others, elimination of the time lost waiting for the arrival of carriers or waiting to load or unload cargo will increase productivity and additional personnel will not be necessary. In still others, especially in national economy warehouses, whenever necessary personnel may be hired whose wages will be based on standard wage scales.

All this must be very well organized with attention to economic efficiency. The cost of a ton unloaded at the port, of a ton transported per kilometer, of a ton unloaded at its ultimate destination should not go up, rather down. Perhaps, if we had said this months ago many people would not have believed what we were saying.

But what I am saying now has been achieved by the working masses in many of the country's working districts. In response to an appeal by the party, the labor-union movement took on this job. Throughout the whole province of Pinar del Rio, every truck or freight car is unloaded within the prescribed time. In the province of Las Tunas too, they have achieved this and even better: Trucks are unloaded in an average time of 1 hour and 54 minutes, that is, in 63 percent of the prescribed time. The same is true with freight cars.

Granma and Cienfuegos are also provinces where neither ships nor trucks nor freight cars are allowed to accumulate demurrage charges.

However, we have not yet reached this point in all the provinces and all our enterprises and organizations are working toward this. There are still provinces where freight cars wait 3.82 days, 2.99 days to be unloaded. Then there is an extreme case, a province where last week an average delay of 7 days in the unloading of boxcars was recorded. This is shameless, a crime against the economy!

Cargo still arrives without /advance notice/. Advance notice is an indispensable organizational factor, of enormous importance. Because it is out of the question to keep idle warehouse stevedores waiting for a possible delivery. That would be an unacceptably wasteful procedure.

Cargo still arrives at warehouses that are not in a position to receive it: irresponsibility on the part of the organization or enterprise that ordered the shipment without checking and coordinating matters beforehand.

Ships still arrive in port without OPB-2, that is, the cargo manifest, listing the cargo the ship is carrying and the appropriate plan for distributing it to those to whom it is addressed: irresponsibility on the part of the organization or enterprise whose job it is to do precisely that.

Lots of raw materials are still acquired and shipped to a plant that has no storage facilities and will take 3 years to consume them, to cite an extreme but actual example.

Cuban ships still arrive in port which cannot dock or unload cargo because their cranes or rudders are broken due to a lack of suitable maintenance.

These organizational shortcomings and irresponsible actions, the bureaucracy, laziness and the lack of a sense of urgency still exist. The success we have had these past 3 months was achieved despite the existence of these faults and errors which, while they have been reduced, are still far from having been eliminated.

If we had eliminated these failings and this negligence, these subjective factors, I have not the slightest doubt that, instead of some 700,000, we would have unloaded 800,000 tons a month.

I also have no doubt that we must reduce these shortcomings to a minimum. We declare war on them, without quarter. Furthermore, allocated material resources will begin to flow. And workers' awareness and attitudes will continue to improve. Emulation of this model will extend the entire length of the chain of delivery and will be a powerful instrument of mobilization.

We are going to devote special attention to the improvement of port working conditions. The Labor Union-Enterprise Union Commission we have today created should present us with a detailed report on the problems that exist by February.

We optimistically face these final months of the year and our task in the coming year. With the 700,000-ton-per-month average we have achieved, we can, at its second congress, assure our party that in 1981 the labor force involved in this chain of delivery will be prepared to efficiently absorb up to 750,000 tons a month, up to 9 million in that year, while at the same time guaranteeing shipment of all the millions of tons of sugar, honey, cement, minerals, citrus fruit and other products the country exports.

The port workers, their union leaders and enterprise management are attacking the jobs assigned to them with energy and revolutionary zeal. We are certain that this will also be the case in the future. At the pace set by you, the transport workers, and the national economy has responded to it vigorously. The chain-of-delivery workers have launched the offensive!

11,466
CSO: 3010

PCC PROVINCIAL EVALUATION MEETINGS CONCLUDE

Miret at Guantanamo

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 7 Sep 80 p 1

[Article by Pablo Soroa]

[Text] Guantanamo--The party assembly for evaluation, election and reelection of officers, culmination of the assembly process from the rank and file to the provincial level prior to the second congress, met here, with 268 delegates under the chairmanship of Pedro Miret Prieto, member of the Central Committee's Political Bureau and of the Council of State.

Also present were members of the Central Committee Manuel Diaz Gonzalez and Alfonso Hodge--who was reelected first secretary of the party in the province and who read the central report--officials of the Central Committee, leaders of the party and the people's government and representatives of the political and mass organizations.

The report included a brief summary of the results of the work of the 3 years which have passed since the last assembly and of the implementation of the resolutions of the first congress and the plans of the higher organism, which were the object of periodic study by the executive bureau and the provincial committee.

The delegates elected the new provincial committee, consisting of 69 active and 7 alternate members, by secret and direct ballot.

Among the work objectives approved by the delegates for the period just beginning, on the basis of compliance with the resolutions of the meeting, as well as the theme and resolutions which will be decided at the congress and other directives of the higher organs, are the strengthening of the housing construction policy for coffee workers, the construction of highways to stimulate development of that production, the encouragement of greater productivity of saline soils and the use of coastal vessels as a means of transportation, etc.

In concluding, Pedro Miret emphasized that work with the Union of Young Communists, which is the "connecting thread of party work with the youth masses," must be undertaken with even greater intensity.

After pointing out that the process of deepening the awareness of students in the province has been meritorious, he called upon the assembly to continue improving the worker composition of the membership and to strengthen its ties with young workers.

In the economic sphere--"abundantly debated today"--Pedro Miret exhorted the assembly to avoid imports, to create the maximum exportable funds and to improve the quality of production.

Valdes Valdes at Ciego de Avila

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 7 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Ciego de Avila (AIN)--Rafael Valdes Valdes, first secretary of the party here, read the central report of the party's assembly for evaluation, election and reelection of officers, which met in the Principal Theater here.

The document pointed out how significant it was for the province to be designated by the political bureau as the seat of the central activities for the 27th anniversary of the assault on Moncada Barracks, giving a definite impetus to the social and economic tasks ahead.

The report listed and evaluated the successes, difficulties and experiences in the work since the last assembly, and indicated as one of the principal tasks that of increasing the worker membership in the party rank and file.

In the area of economic activity, the important advances achieved in the implementation of the Economic Management and Planning System and the 2.8 percent rate of increase in production are outstanding.

The document gave an important role to the Union of Young Communists and to the mass youth organizations in the formation of the younger generations. In addition, it analyzed the activities related to culture and improvement, which have been carried out in the organs of the People's Government, and the importance of daily improvement in the efficiency of its activities.

The report also emphasized the role played by the FMC [Cuban Women's Federation], ANAP [National Association of Small Farmers], CDR [Committees for the Defense of the Revolution], and the CTC [Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions] in the province's struggle for social and economic development and the need to improve socialist emulation as a motor force for that activity.

Garcia at Havana

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 22 Sep 80 p 3

[Article by Ariel Rojas and Reinold Rassi]

[Text] In closing the party's provincial evaluation assembly in Havana Province, Commander of the Revolution Guillermo Garcia, a member of the political bureau, recognized and saluted the efforts of the party and the workers in that province to comply with the various production plans, particularly in the agricultural and livestock area.

Presiding at the assembly along with Guillermo Garcia were Jose R. Machado Ventura, also a member of the Political Bureau; Julio Camacho Aguilera, a member of the Secretariat and first secretary of the party in City of Havana; Brigade Gen Calixto Garcia and Emilio Loo, members of the Central Committee; Luis Alvarez de la Nuez, first secretary of the party in Havana Province; and other leaders of the party and of state agencies.

The 405 delegates present at the assembly reelected Luis Alvarez de la Nuez first secretary of the party in the province.

There was broad and critical discussion by the delegates of the central report, which was read by Luis Alvarez de la Nuez.

The assembly approved a resolution in salute to the joint Soviet-Cuban space flight and congratulated cosmonauts Col Yuriy Romanenko and Lt Col Arnaldo Tamayo.

In concluding, Guillermo Garcia emphasized the quality, depth, organization and control of the entire assembly process, which ended with this party assembly in Havana, and the importance of the various tasks to be carried out in this new phase by the communists in this province.

8735
CSO: 3010

PSYCHOLOGY OF COMBAT READINESS EXPLAINED

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 14 Sep 80 pp 36-37

[Article by Maj Roberto Echevarria: "Psychology of Combat Readiness"]

[Text] Among the tasks of military psychology already explained in VERDE OLIVO (No 6 10/2/80), a prominent place is occupied by the psychological description of military activities in peacetime.

Socialist military psychology in recent years has acquired notable advances in the psychological analysis of the content of activities. In this article we shall explain some considerations on the psychological characteristics of combat readiness and the training of troops, the main objective of our work in peacetime.

Combat readiness is that which allows units and small units at any time, and in a brief period, to enter into combat in an organized manner and win a victory over the enemy. It is the result of merging objective factors (weaponry, combat equipment and so forth) and subjective factors provided by the contents of the psyche of man, which in the final instance is the important thing. That is why if personnel are not ready to act at any moment as required, there is no combat readiness.

From the point of view of its psychological characteristics, it has two basic indexes: external and internal. The former is determined by the place where personnel are located and their occupation. The interior index is the important one and indicates whether the man and the collective unit have the necessary readiness and training for action.

On the psychological plane, the interior index has its characteristics classified by form and content.

Depending on the form of existence of psychological characteristics of combat readiness, they can be divided into two groups. The first merges the stable peculiarities existing in a soldier (hopes, interests, traditions, cooperation and so forth). This group characterizes the degree of training and potential for action under the difficult conditions of combat and it determines the initial readiness of the man and the unit.

The second group refers to the dynamic peculiarities of the psyche, among which are the hopes, motivations, thinking, concerns, suffering, degree of attention, internal mobilization and control of oneself at a given moment. In the case of the collective unit, needs, opinions, state of spirit which predominates at that moment, are also considered. This group determines the immediate readiness to accomplish combat actions as well as possible at a given moment.

Stable psychological phenomenons are something typical, which are repeated and characterize each soldier and unit. Their presence indicates the possibilities of the emergence of various psychic processes and states, but it is necessary to emphasize that the latter only materialize due to dynamic phenomenons. That is the reason for the importance of the close relationship between initial and immediate combat readiness.

The fact that the stable components are not an absolute guarantee of the emergence of the necessary psychological states is primarily due to the fact that the manifestations of the potential of man are not an automatic thing without contradictions and uniform. It is, rather, a complex internal process very much related with all the psychic processes and requires time. Research made shows that man, in the first 10 to 15 minutes of having gone from a normal, tranquil activity into a complex and difficult activity, does not show all his potential. An example of this is when there is a mobilization during an emergency.

In the second place, it is necessary to recognize that the emergence of certain psychological processes depend not only on the potential of man but also on events and the situation and conditions under which they take place.

This shows the need to instill into the soldier those qualities which allow him to shorten the time required for mobilizing all internal strengths.

Combat experience and research show that the greater the difference between the state required under combat conditions and that which is manifested by personnel in activities of combat training, guard service and so forth, the more difficult it will be for them to mobilize all their potential at the required time.

That is why it is important to maintain a high immediate combat readiness which should be characterized by high political-moral feelings, understanding of the tasks ahead, difficulties and processes for accomplishing them, desire to fight the enemy, self-confidence and high emotional state and readiness.

After having determined the stable and the dynamic psychological components of combat readiness by their form, we shall now do so by their content. Here also we shall divide the elements into two groups: the first being the basic (general) and the second the complementary (specific).

Basic psychological phenomenons are those which show the readiness of the soldier to perform any task and maintain his composure toward any critical situation.

These depend on the political awareness, responsibility, discipline and will of the man. These qualities are based on the Marxist-Leninist concept of the world, the ideas of the interests of the individual, a profound knowledge of the policy of our party and a developed feeling of duty.

Internal combat readiness, however, is also insured by complementary (specific) elements because men in the performance of their service, in the use of weapons and in the fight against tanks or aircraft must at all times show the maximum limits of the specific elements of their readiness and training. Among these elements must be a constant alertness, a deep understanding of individual responsibilities for the security of the country, proper application of procedures and ways and means for achieving a complete readiness. Psychological and special training, continuous and skillful observation, ability to pass from standby to action status quickly, high degree of stability so as to withstand sudden and unexpected tensions produced by responsibility, danger, risks and temporary failures, are also necessary. A decisive role is also played by qualities of will such as initiative, independence, composure, clarity of objectives,determination, courage, self-control, as well as qualities of thought, among which cunning, ingenuity, quickness, profundity, broadness and intuition are prominent. The listed components of the specific content of combat readiness have their peculiarities in the commanders, political workers, soldiers, pilots, sailors and so forth, that is, in each type of military occupation.

The fundamental contents and stable elements which make up the internal readiness of personnel are formed under the influence of the entire system of instruction, education, psychological training and service in general.

The work oriented toward a concrete objective under the conditions of instruction, education, psychological training, guard service and so forth have a great influence on the specific content.

The complex structure of the internal combat readiness of personnel objectively reflects the requirements asked of the members of the FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces], particularly of the command structure and officers, who not only have to maintain a high internal combat readiness but must also obtain it from their subordinates as a basic condition for the high combat capabilities of our troops in the defense of the Socialist Homeland.

Key:

1. Psychological characteristics of combat readiness
2. External index
3. Place and occupation of personnel
4. External index
5. Readiness and training
6. By its form
7. Group I--Stable peculiarities
8. Man--Convictions, knowledge, habits, skills, customs and others
9. Unit--Hopes, interests, traditions, cooperation and others

10. This group determines initial readiness
11. Group II--Dynamic peculiarities
12. Man--Aspirations, motives, thoughts, concerns, degree of attention, mobilization, self-control, all this at a given moment.
13. Unit--Needs, opinions, state of spirit and others, all at a given moment.
14. This group determines immediate readiness
15. By their content
16. Group 1--Basic (general)
17. Political awareness, high degree of responsibility, discipline, will and so forth
18. Group II--complementary (specific)
19. Constant alertness, understanding of the need for a high combat readiness.
    High sense of individual responsibility
    Proper application of processes, way and means for reaching a high combat readiness.
    Special psychological training
    Continuous and skillful observation
    Ability to go from standby to action
    Stability for withstanding high tensions and overloads produced by danger, risks, responsibility and temporary failures
    Qualities of will (initiative, independence, steadfastness, clarity of objectives, courage and self-control).
    Qualities of thought (cunning, ingeniousness, quickness, depth, broadness and intuition).

8908
CSO: 3010

EASTERN ARMY BORDER BRIGADE INITIATES EMULATION

Havana VERDE OLIVO in Spanish 17 Sep 80 pp 52-54

[Article by Pablo Noa: "And The Desire of The Border Guards Was Fulfilled"]

[Text] The beginning of the training year brought pleasant news: the Eastern Army Border Brigade declared itself "Socialist Emulation Initiating Unit in the FAR [Revolutionary Armed Forces]."

The news caused no surprise among us who know the characteristics and the quality of the commanders, officers, warrant officers, sergeants and privates which make it up. It did, however, lead to a festive and enthusiastic atmosphere.

Soldiers who for years have faced the aggressions of the imperialist enemy from the front lines of the revolution, now received the honor and recognition to the old desire to be initiators of emulation.

And it was precisely there, scant kilometers from the place where the Yankee beast sinks its claws that the beautiful military ceremony in which the unit proclaimed itself an initiator took place.

With the voice of steadfast men, presided over by Div Gen Sixto Batista Santana, chief of the Central Political Directorate of the FAR; Alfonso Hodge, Guantanamo Provincial Party Committee First secretary, both members of the Central Committee; Div Gen Julio Casas, chief of the Eastern Army and alternate member of the Central Committee, commanders, officers and representatives of the political and mass organizations, the ceremony took place.

It is extraordinarily symbolic that at the same place that the soldiers of the Border Brigade have for almost 20 years heroically and with exemplary calm faced many provocations and acts of aggression, there is now its proclamation as "Socialist Emulation Initiating Unit in the FAR," an honor which falls upon the Eastern Army for the first time.

The words of Col Orgelino Perez Pena, as he read the pledge-challenge, filled the parade ground, carrying to those in attendance the spirit of the members of the unit and their determination to comply with it completely.

Joy was visible in the young soldiers, perfectly formed into squares. Undoubtedly this event is already part of life on the border, like so many others which enrich their fighting tradition.

This brigade has a beautiful and rich fighting history. It was formed during the early years of the revolution of workers, peasants, youths of the five peaks [jovenes cinco picos], members of the Rebel Army and the National Revolutionary Militia. When aggressions were a sort of daily occurance, and the hostility of imperialism against our young revolution was becoming greater every day, the unit had an active participation during those years in the operations of the fight against bandits and other important fighting activities. It remained on the front lines together with our people during the hard and difficult days of the October Crisis. Firm and determined, showing its great daring and courage, it faced imperialist aggressions and provocations in which self-sacrificing comrades lost their lives.

All this contributed to the fighting spirit of this group, whose soldiers have been characterized by their determination, loyalty to the revolution and socialism and discipline and a high sense of honor which makes them deserving of the admiration and respect of the FAR and all the people.

In its salute, the Provincial Party Committee expressed its support and determination to collaborate with the brigade in complying with the important aspects which make up the pledge-challenge referring to raising and maintaining combat and mobilization readiness, political and Marxist-Leninist training, maintenance, conservation and use of equipment and weaponry, living conditions, recreation, culture and sports, civilian worker activities, and others...

The solemn moment brought to mind past events with their heroes and martyrs, who invariably are evoked in this combination of efforts and accomplishments.

"It is impossible on a day like today, when the unit, in deserved recognition of its efforts and brilliant execution, receives an honor which distinguishes it, not to remember the brave comrades, who in a gesture which immortalizes them, died in the performance of their duty. We feel the physical absence of Ramon Lopez Pena and Luiz Ramirez Lopez today, but we feel their presence and their demand: Work and fight for the same work in which they and thousands of Cubans have given their precious lives: the Revolution!"

With the Border Guards

Although the ceremony ended with the closing speech made by Brig Gen Jesus Bermudiz Cutino, we began a brief talk with some of the members of the unit.

Col Orgelino Perez Pena was the first to answer the question: "How did the members of the brigade feel when they learned it had been accepted as an initiator?"

"When the favorably reply to our request was received, allowing us to be Socialist Emulation Initiatin Unit in the FAR, there was a great enthusiasm in the brigade which led to meetings and gatherings in the small units and to continuous demonstrations of joy among all personnel."

Around us are other officers and soldiers, so we decided to make a sort of collective interview in which all would participate. In keeping with this, we asked the question to Lt Col Carlos C Galan, political worker in the unit.

"This is an old hope. There was broad participation in the preparation of the document. Everyone contributed elements to be considered in the pledge-challenge. Generally it reflects the main aspects of the life of the unit. Because of the support by the members of the unit from the beginning, we are sure that we shall fulfill it and next year we shall have another ceremony in which we shall be given the banner of Socialist Emulation Initiating Unit in the FAR for fulfilling its pledge," he said.

We took advantage of the presence of 1st Lt Jose Antonio Santana, Party leader, to learn of the communist organization activity with respect to the pledge.

"For the communists the pledge-challenge is a task for all. We are ready to give everything humanly possible, whatever is necessary, in efforts to successfully fulfill it. I also wish to point out that these activities will be accomplished together with those already planned and with those we are accomplishing to hail the Second Congress of the Communist Party of Cuba."

"And what will the Young Communists Union [UJC] do?"

The reply was provided by Sgt 1st Class Nelson Lobaine, secretary general of a rank and file organization.

"Truly, for the members of the UJC this proclamation is a great stimulus which makes us very happy. We have to be demanding in the accomplishment of our work and must work seriously to guarantee victory in the tasks the unit has set for itself. We shall demonstrate with our attitude and activities that we are deserving of this high responsibility and recognition."

Two soldiers have been listening carefully to the conversation. Before turning to them, Lieutenant Colonel Galan told me that they are FAR vanguards in the unit this year.

Luis Enrique Almeida and Victor Rodriguez Suarez are young men who by their behavior symbolize the feeling of determination and seriousness of the rest of their comrades.

"All the comrades of the brigade have the certainty and the confidence that we shall keep our pledge," begins Luiz Enrique. "The results achieved in the checks and inspection visits demonstrate this. We are in the best of shape."

We asked Victor what it means to him to be initiators.

"It means a lot that my unit proclaimed itself Socialist Emulation Initiating Unit of the FAR because we are a very few steps from the Yankee Naval Base and it is a high honor for every revolutionary soldier who occupies a post in the anti-imperialist front lines, who is the vanguard leader in emulation in the FAR."

The gathering, which was truly small exchange of ideas, corroborated the initial evaluation: They are decidedly certain that they will keep their pledge. The words of General of the Army Raul Castro, minister of the FAR, when he visited the Border Brigade in February 1965 are a spur and the main slogan for them: "While the Cuban Socialist Revolution is the vanguard in America, this military unit occupies the frontline as the spearhead of the vanguard of socialism in this continent. This unit must be exemplary among the exemplary."

8908
CSO: 3010

'PRODUCTIVE' USE OF FARM MACHINERY DISCUSSED

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 12 Sep 80 pp 16-23

[Article by Magda Martinez on discussions with officials and workers at the Melanio Ortiz Miscellaneous Crops Enterprise in Las Tunas]

[Text] Is It or Isn't It Productive?

Such a question is ambiguous when posed this way, but it makes all the difference if we clarify that we are talking about farm machinery, doesn't it, because this is a much-talked-about topic. For better or for worse. Whether it is utilized properly. Whether there is too much equipment because of the ingrained habit of always asking for more. Whether at times it is used for activities other than farming. In a nutshell, countless doubts could exist. For this reason, the BOHEMIA Economic Section visited Las Tunas, the land of patriot Vicente Garcia, to conduct a survey on the following questions: Is the machinery being utilized properly at present? What is the ratio between equipment and operators? Are there fuel consumption standards? Do equipment operators receive adequate incentives? The survey yielded interesting results. Of course, the Melanio Ortiz Miscellaneous Crops Enterprise in Las Tunas does not present the bleakest outlook in terms of equipment use. It is also fair to report that a month ago its situation was not the same as today. Why, then, has it improved? This is a valid question. This article provides that kind of information. I have a firm commitment to return within 6 months. Everyone agreed, and in fact, a thought-provoking plan was decided on.

As we were flying to Las Tunas, countless things were going through my mind. I remembered passages from Fidel's speech at the opening of the health care complex in the province. I was familiar with the province from what I had heard or from what I had read in the papers about it, but as far as a real personal experience was concerned, I had had none. This was, in fact, my first visit to the province in all of my travels around the country reporting on its economy. My assignment was clear-cut: to conduct a survey on farm equipment, which as a colleague accurately stated, is the backbone of agriculture. Thus, my job was important enough to keep me busy all the time.

It would not be odd for someone to question the reason for such concern. Already during the initial descent I was thinking about the somewhat widespread view that farm machinery was not being properly utilized, from an economic standpoint, of course. Thus, with a sheaf of papers containing very simple questions under my arm, I toured the six districts of the Melanio Ortiz Miscellaneous Crops Enterprise in the municipality of Jobabo. There, I went about surveying all machinery operators and their bosses. My goal: to learn the facts from the grass roots. What do all these men think?

By now I was engaged in a whirlwind of activity, because it was not as simple as talk of a mere survey might imply, even though I questioned 57 individuals day after after and district by district. My questions were neither complicated nor tricky; on the contrary, they were simple and straightforward.

If my job had involved just this, there would have been no problem. But aside from the survey, I conversed with a heavy equipment platoon and with the union section from the Ciruelitos District (the enterprise's largest district and the one with the most manpower problems) and, to round things out, I met with the expanded Board of Directors. The questions were the same at each and every one of the talks: Is the machinery being properly used? Are equipment operators being given incentives? How are social problems being dealt with?

I was given an exhaustive report by the Melanio Ortiz Enterprise itself. It provides a thorough analysis of issues relating to the use of equipment, from the economic angle, naturally.

I was satisfied when I completed my job, because I was able to discuss countless things as I toured the enterprise with Antonio Couso, the head of equipment of its subdivision. The conversation always revolved around the origin of the name Las Tunas [tuna=prickly pear] and the famous battle that was fought on a hill covered with these plants. My host also took me one evening to see the "El Cornito" tourist center, and I saw the famous birthplace of El Cucalambe. Here, of course, we spoke at length about the poet. We then returned to the topic of machinery. Couso, I should point out, was a first class colleague and, like the others, he never tried to keep me in the dark. My companions were always helpful. At times, during our tour we caught people red-handed with equipment on the highway. No excuses were ever given. On the contrary, I was asked to get on with the questioning. I would then get out and start asking. This was the spirit, and none other, that prevailed during my 6-day stay in Las Tunas.

I will mention one initial piece of information so that readers do not become confused. The chronological order of my interviews is going to be reversed in this article, whose content, however, will not be altered.

A Union Section Speaks

As I was in the midst of organizing my survey, I told my companions that I wanted to meet with a district union section to look into the farm machinery issue and other topics of interest from the grass roots level.

BOHEMIA's talk with the union began early in the morning and lasted until noon. We touched on interesting issues, including many that can indirectly have a negative or positive impact on how an enterprise is run and, therefore, on how machinery is used.

Our discussion was wideranging, and each person said what he had to, without sugar-coating or rose-colored glasses, simply and plainly. These are their opinions, expressed with absolute honesty and with that incredible sensitivity that the rank-and-file have in focusing on problems, especially these genuine representatives of the working class in the Ciruelitos District.

Question: What are your views concerning the utilization of farm machinery?

Armando Almaguer, organizer: The biggest difficulty is supplying spare parts. Sometimes there really aren't any, and other times it's because of snags. The central repair shop does not pick up at the platoon.

Question: Why?

Armando: They say that the machinery has to go into the shop. Can you imagine? Sometimes a team loses a couple of days just because of a simple little thing, because they have to use their shift to take it to the shop. Now then, if the platoon were given the chance to do it, I could take care of it right away because I'm a mechanic. They have made it obligatory to send everything to the shop. Just think about it, a piece of equipment breaks down because of steering defects, and you tow it into the shop. By the time you get there, of course, it's not only the steering but the battery, the generator, etc too.

Wilder Acosta, secretary general of the enterprise bureau: Even if an operator can do an item of repair work, it still has to go into the shop. But he isn't paid for the 4 hours that he has to stay there, and that interferes with work. The shop doesn't do the best repair work either. You go to pick up a harrow, and something goes wrong with it right away. The BOHEMIA survey could help this enterprise a lot. Quality is what is lacking. For example, we have just one welding machine...

Armando, who is, after all, a mechanic and a fiery leader, comes out with an idea that he has brought up before: "We once asked for a portable welder, so that we could cover the entire enterprise. You say you have to weld a harrow? Well, get a tractor with a trailer and take it to the shop. What a waste of time!"

Question: How are equipment operators treated?

Silvio Estupinan, emulation front: There is emulation in the district, and the best operators come from there, but it doesn't go beyond that level. They are not encouraged. They have held their little parties, but with their own funds. The winners encourage themselves.

There is just one woman leader in the union section. Her name is Magdalena Perez and she heads up the work organization front. Her comment was: "The same thing happens with something as necessary as lunch. It doesn't arrive, and the claim is that there is nothing to bring it in. That is quite discouraging."

The intrepid Armando then emphasizes: "We don't need millions. The situation is easily handled. For example, we can take the best platoon to the beach. We have two or three trucks here, and the folks who went that Sunday are battling to earn the right to go again.

Magdalena Perez: I remember that in the livestock section the best worker was given a saddle and a pair of boots was raffled off among 12 others. That is an incentive for them to keep working hard.

Armando: Some workers are not familiar with "El Cornito."

We tested this assertion among the six comrades who were there. Only three of them had visited this tourist spot, and they had done so on their own.

Wilder Acosta: It's nice going to "El Cornito."

Armando replies like lightning: "But being taken there because you won a trip is not the same as going by yourself. No one here wants to have his expenses paid; we only want to have the trip organized.

Wilder Acosta: The union doesn't have a budget, and apparently the workers have to pay for any excursion. There are districts in which the equipment operators are taken care of properly. They ought to have lunch brought to them in the field.

Silverio Salazar, secretary general of the union section: We have discussed the lunch problem with the administration here.

Silvio Estupinan: There is no control with the workers' lunch. At times the services chief takes some of the breakfast portion and takes care of them that way.

Armando: The lunch problem is an old one. It's been around since Adam.

Magdalena Perez: Since part of the breakfast portion is used for lunch, sometimes we've been left without rations.

Armando: We've gone without tubers here. You say it, but you still don't believe it. Where are they grown, anyway! And the reason given is this: there is not enough equipment to go back there and get it.

Wilder Acosta: If there are not enough tubers here to eat in this district, it's because of negligence.

I have to get back to the original question: Is the machinery being properly used or not? At times, three pieces of equipment are sent to the same place to do the same three things when one can do them just as well. They also have to get organized to condense information because otherwise, the equipment will never get the job done in the districts.

A parenthetical remark: they have obviously been talking about services, not production activities.

Armando does not lose his train of thought: "There used to be just one person to take those papers, and they took him away."

Wilder: This enterprise is not profitable. Last year it cost 3 pesos to produce 1. It all went into conservation. I agree nevertheless. At times we have wound up spending more by trying to save. We have not been analytical. The list of regular staff has not broken down by function; it is not even up-to-date.

Faustino Rodriguez: That's why the machinery is running around all over the place. For the sake of economy we got rid of the fellow who did the reports. But we sent out a tractor operator who earns 4 pesos a day, plus the 100-odd peso salary of the other. He used to do both and earn 96. He went around on horseback and did it all himself. We paid a lot of pesos to save a little work.

The Ciruelitos District is short 300 men for its production activities, and this shortfall is made up with personal from another district, Aguas Blancas. These men have to commute 30 kilometers a day over bad roads. If we want to be realistic from an economic standpoint, how should we resolve this situation?

Silverio Salazar: Trying to get the men settled in is complicated.

Magdalena Perez: There is a solution. You build housing for them and bring them in here. That is the most obvious possibility.

Silvio Estupinan: The most practical, at least. When they go home now and get caught by a rain shower, they say to themselves: "I'm not coming tomorrow." Also, if we add it all up, when they come in from over there, they work 4 or 5 hours. If they lived here, they would work 8.

Silverio: When the irrigation gets here, we'll be able to make do with fewer people.

Armando: These are people with a small plot of farm land, and it won't be easy to get them to leave their region. We have to give them guarantees here.

You can now see why I altered the sequence in this article, and it will become even clearer later on. It's simple. The survey results show that most people thought that the machinery was being used as it was supposed to be used. We should logically ask: Why do these problems exist. Although, I repeat, I could not confront the enterprise with analytical indices of equipment use, I noticed during my talks that a number of very real problems were brought up.

Here is the rest of the article.

Facts and Figures on the Enterprise

I mentioned previously that the Melanio Ortiz Enterprise is located in the municipality of Jobabo. It has a farm acreage of 220.5 caballerias [1 caballeria=33.2 acres] and a staff of 1,449 workers.

A little bit above, I explained the method I used for this BOHEMIA economic section article. I was giving basic information. A breakdown of the survey responses shows that almost 70 percent of those polled thought that the machinery was being used properly.

Try to follow my approach carefully. Here are the facts on the enterprise, as reflected in the sruvey. Let's take a close look at certain indicators.

The enterprise has 100 pieces of equipment for its production work. The following are the percentage utilizations of the machinery by type:

C-100	19 percent
DT-75	20 percent
MTZ-80	63 percent
JUNZ-6	58 percent
MTZ	87 percent
T-25	57 percent
T-28x3	90 percent

If catepillar tractors are supposed to show 50 percent utilization and wheel tractors, 70 percent, we can see right away that we are not up to standards. The equipment earmarked for non-production use is only at 87 and 96 percent.

The average number of equipment work hours (in terms of the active fleet) was 7.1 enterprise/hours. However, prior to my visit, the average was just 4 or 5 hours. The picture has changed substantially after the system of pay linked to a completed field was instituted. This has been a major gain, as revealed in the positive responses in the survey, although my talks still brought out a number of shortcomings.

The figures revealed by the question concerning equipment used for staff transportation and services are not alarming on paper. Nevertheless, the union mentioned some facts to be kept in mind. Perhaps this can be clarified when I come back in 6 months.

Tractors for services	9 percent
Tractors for transportation	7 percent

Here is a fact that grabbed my attention: the enterprise has 100 tractors and 79 operators.

These are the figures. I am quoting them just as they were supplied. I am now giving the floor to the

Expanded Board of Directors

I was about 30 kilometers from the main office and arrived a half-hour later for my meeting with the Board of Directors because the enterprise's roads were in such poor condition. They had been waiting outside, under a big, leafy tree. I proposed that we remain there. Here at least we could feel the cool, lazy breeze.

The circle widened, and then the usual thing happened: people could not break the ice. How hard it is for people to loosen up! A number of them did, however, speak up on a variety of topics.

They were at all times receptive to what I said about a number of irregularities that I noticed on the roads. The following is a summary of our conversation as it transpired:

Dario Posada, enterprise director: If we look at things in perspective, the machinery has to do a lot more work. We are just fair in technique. We do not meet the guidelines. Nevertheless, what we get planted now is because of the equipment.

Question: Why does the machinery foreman also have to be held accountable for breaking up new ground?

Dario: The machinery head should be working on the technology and organization of the equipment. Basically, he should be allocating the tractors by district. The production foremen should be in charge of their utilization.

A parenthetical remark: I asked this question because the machinery foreman himself had told me about this situation. Regrettably, however, when it came his turn to speak, he did not delve further into the matter.

Solitude and melancholy, as Nicola de Beri would say in one of his songs. This detail lodged itself readily in my mental file. As soon as I arrived, Couso the engineer began talking about the spot known as La Soledad. So I visited it. It's an enormous plain of about 60 caballerias. That's all. The enterprise had planted 18 caballerias of sweet potatoes and harvested just 2.5; the rains ruined the rest.

La Soledad and La Soledad...Go see La Soledad. The name itself does not tell the whole story. It does not take much effort to imagine what it is like. It is lonely. I counted only three dwellings in the vicinity. That's all. This is lowland, and proper access roads are urgently needed to prevent flooding when it rains. Manpower and materials were wasted when it rained. If its future is not assured, it will continue to be dependent on the weather, like a sword of Damocles over its head. But let's be optimistic. The weather was good, and they were able to prepare the land. Then they planted, and when the harvest was being gathered, it began raining. What could they do?

They were again preparing the fields at the time to plant sweet potatoes. You could not help thinking about their mental torture. What if it rains? Will we lose everything again? Life involves such things, however. Suddenly, the deserted plain was brightened by a starling, a bird with normal plumage on top and a pretty contrast between glassy blue and yellow on its breast.

I almost had to write the above lines, to introduce the reader to the core of the following debate:

Dario: La Soledad is supposed to have irrigation over 33 caballerias. We have done a lot of earthmoving work, but the system has still not arrived. It was supposed to be here in April.

We were planning to grow bananas in La Soledad. It's common in this region.

A finished field policy is to an extent a solution, because this is the problem with farming: we do planting that is not really planting, the same with clearing. We have to do programming that reaches everyone. We have to go further: pay for what is done.

Question: Why are there more pieces of equipment than operators?

Dario: The roll says one man per machine, but we're really at 0.79. Our technical utilization level is below average. That number doesn't matter, but we have to cover everything anyway. It's poor organization not to have a full staff and to have that many undeveloped caballerias.

Wilfredo Arenas, machinery foreman, then spoke up along the same lines: "In 1979 we had only one welding machine, and our shops did not really meet the needs of our equipment. The machines will yield benefits when the facilities are completed."

"We have serious problems with parts. For example, the DT-75's have been in use for 2 years and they still lack basic parts. Three of them are out of order for this reason.

"Roads are extremely important for equipment performance. In two districts we have had to put two tractors on a trailer with tubers to help it get going. This is a violation of technical standards, and equipment can get broken.

"We have to focus attention on direct mechanization. This will cut costs and work time."

Question: Are machinery operators being given incentives?

Arenas: We have held ceremonies for them, along with the union, a dinner and an awards ceremony. We held another one when the spring farm season ended. I don't mean to say that we are doing all we can, but we have been trying to carry out our plans.

Dario wants to point out one detail: "We pick out the best ones and take them to the enterprise. After an annual evaluation, we give a dining room set as a prize, and at the half-year mark we're going to give away some other furniture."

Question: Something worries me. What is going on with the operators' lunches?

Dario: Lunch is not part of the planning, and we have to work on it. We have come up with internal solutions. But this is a shortcoming of ours. We had a cassave bread bakery, and it fell apart. It's all an organizational problem.

Wilder Acosta: There have been problems with the incentives. This semester we have not been able to do evaluations.

Wilder continued his comments with determination: "We normally do not give incentives. We do not pick the best workers. From a material standpoint, we should take them to the beach. Some have not been to 'El Cornito' but spend 8 or 10 hours sitting in top of a piece of equipment."

All of the district chiefs agreed that the most disciplined group was the machinery operators.

In a talk with the DT-75 platoon we analyzed their comments about how hard it was to meet the quotas. So, I moved on to this issue. Angel Pacheco, from human resources, provided a reply: "The DT-75 quotas are nationwide, and they are based on the book estimates, taking into account the soil and the activity. I don't know why they are bringing this up. When adjustments are needed, the person who sets the quota tells us about them."

Antonio Couso wanted to say something before we concluded: "There is one major concern with regard to the equipment: it should really be productive and it should not be where it is not supposed to be. Nevertheless, we cannot say this about all of them. For example, we have found production tractors being used for personal matters. We have fought against this, but it is still going on. The situation is worst in the districts. Here, our comrades pick up the document and voucher for a DT-75 and unload a sack of tubers at a house."

"We have executed the machinery use program, but we could do more. Because of this, some machinery is kept out of service and production."

The Results of the Survey

Just a few hours after landing I met with the comrades of the agricultural and livestock department of the Provincial PCC [Communist Party of Cuba] and with Hector San Juan, the deputy delegate of the Miscellaneous Crops Section. After I explained the purposes of my work, San Juan immediately gave me all the support he could. What is more, he commented to me that they had just overhauled and set up a new schedule for the equipment and that the survey would complement these efforts.

I spoke with San Juan and then, at the enterprise, with Dario about the almost 2 months of uninterrupted rains and the losses in land preparation. The planting had thus been adversely affected. By the time I arrived, intensive work was going on to recover lost time. So I was asked to try and interrupt work as little as possible. We reached an agreement. I was supposed to go to places where the equipment was preparing the land, and I kept my word. I didn't stop anyone from working. BOHEMIA's economics section got right into the furrows.

The poll covered 57 machinery workers from the Melanio Ortiz Enterprise, with the following breakdown: 27 operators; 20 mechanics, route planners [pisteros] and others; 10 district leaders.

The following were their levels of education: 5 had a first to third grade education; 30, from fourth to sixth grade, and 17 with more than a sixth grade education.

Adding these figures up, we find that there is a difference of five individuals. This is because they left the box in question blank. This was not the only time. Other significant data had to do with the experience of the participants: 16 had between 1 and 10 years, and 34 had from 10 to 20 years.

The staff gave the following answers to the question about the use of equipment: 39 said that it was being used well; 6 said it was not, and 3 said that they didn't know.

As far as tractor work hours were concerned, 11 said 8 hours; 33 said 10, and 9 said more than 10.

I then asked how many hours were actually worked. Twenty-six said 8 hours; 15 said 10, and 3 said more than 10.

The wide range of answers from the staff is not to be ignored: 7 hours, 6.5, 7.5, 9.5 and fewer than 12. This is an interesting mix. The enterprise itself mentions 7.1 enterprise/hours in its general report. Why don't the workers know what the work day really is and what its breakdown is like?

I had already mentioned that 70 percent of them regarded as proper the utilization of the equipment. From the outset, my curiosity was aroused by this percentage. That is why I reversed the order, to place myself in the proper context. Monitoring-related aspects were also dealt with in the survey. In this regard, I asked the following questions: Who reports the work? Who monitors the quality of work? Who monitors maintenance? Who monitors fuel consumption?

The wide range of diverging responses is noteworthy. Is that really how the monitoring is done? Is that conforming to standards? Do the answers really reflect how things are? Is it because the participants don't know? If the monitoring is so far from standardized, how can it contribute to internal organization in the enterprise?

In reply to the first question, 11 said the platoon chief; 21 said the plot foreman and 21 said the machinery foreman. In answer to the second question, 5 mentioned the platoon chief; 24, the plot foreman; 4, the production foreman; 16, the machinery foreman; 1, the human resources foreman and another the person setting production quotas. As far as the third question is concerned, maintenance monitoring, 47 said the technical foreman and 2 said the mechanic. With regard to the person monitoring fuel consumption, there was a wide range of answers: 8 pointed to the technical foreman; 41 to the route planners; 1 to the operator homself, and another to the machinery foreman.

I must repeat a previous comment. A certain number of those I polled mentioned nothing or no one in their answers to almost all questions. Those who are curious and take the time to add up the numbers, should remember this when they notice discrepancies in totals.

Something to Conclude

The Melanio Ortiz Enterprise is large, and its problems stem from its own territorial structure. They have been incorporating small sections, and a district could just as well cover 30 as 100 caballerias.

In addition, the districts are widely scattered. I was unable to tour the entire enterprise in a day. It is a somewhat troublesome situation, both from the standpoint of management and organizing and utilizing resources.

Throughout this article I have referred to the conditions of roads. How, then, do they resolve the difficulties of getting the crops out over those roads? On occasions they have had to resort to oxen. I often came across them during my visit.

I must stress once again: locally speaking, the Melanio Ortiz Enterprise is not the only one, nor is it in the worst shape. Frankly, however, there are organizational snags in the districts, and there is no widespread concern as to the best use of the equipment.

There are no consumption standards for how many gallons are supposed to be used for such and such activity. Only in the Pozo Salado District did the machinery foreman show me on his own what he has been doing to draw some conlcusions. He is making somewhat rough estimates. This is, however, a quite widespread practice. Since there are no standards, consumption levels are quite unclear, of course.

During the lengthy talk with the Board of Directors, Dario replied thus to the question about consumption: "If we are producers, I think that we ought to set up a fuel filling spot to meet our needs. Otherwise, we would turn into a distributor, and that is complicated." This is his respectable viewpoint. I, however, disagree, though my modest judgment is, of course, not infallible. I think that the enterprise could do a fine job in this regard. As the old adage goes, you always look after your own things best. We have covered this well-worn path before. Man is more productive when he feels that his needs are met.

Man thinks according to how he lives, Karl Marx correctly stated. It is undeniable that lifestyles influence productivity. As people's basic problems are taken care of for them, all of their reserve strength will unavoidably emerge.

Couso told me about recreational activities. There are few options. The problem is similar with housing. Here is another fact: when the technicians and professionals complete their social service, they leave.

That is why I clearly remember Fidel's words at the opening of the health care complex in Las Tunas. How much remains to be done! These working people are battling to overcome their difficulties, because they realize that part of the solution is in their power. I do not doubt that they will be resolved, because they plunge every day with such eagerness and concern into the battle to prove that they are worthy of the site of 26 July.

Views of the DT-75 Platoon

I was told a great deal about this heavy equipment platoon. They have an important job to do. They have to constantly travel around the enterprise and shoulder the most difficult work. It was they who worked in the discouraging surroundings of La Soledad. These operators were in charge of preparing the 18 caballerias that were later lost.

The entire platoon was there, but not all of them spoke up. Only Ramon Carreno, Eduardo Rojas, Leonardo Ortiz and Orlando Figueredo made comments. The rest remained silent, their arms crossed.

The following were the general comments:

--A lot of land is prepared, but the work force is unable to cover it.

--An awful lot of land has been lost. We have brought this up, and their answer is that these are the plans.

--Some lands have been prepared more than four times.

--We ought to be planting according to our manpower, not the plans.

--The production quota book is out of touch with reality: hard soil, weeds, rocks. The land is not evaluated.

--The production quotas are being met, but we have to work hard.

Some individuals comments were:

Eduardo Rojas: If the production quota is for 6 hours, and we work 8, something's not right. This wears out the equipment and the tools and is not the right way to farm.

Ramon Carreno: The machinery operators at the Melanio Ortiz Enterprise are worried about the loss of land, which is due to several causes. We work hard to get the most out of it, and you can see this readily in what gets done.

Leonardo Ortiz: The basic secondary schools are a big help, but our needs are still not being met.

PHOTO CAPTIONS

1. p 17. The Melanio Ortiz Enterprise planned to plant 207 caballerias as follows: 162 in the spring and 45 in winter. They were nearing 100 in April when they had to stop to take care of the areas that were already planted, which would otherwise have been lost.

2. p 17 This small tractor is a T-25, a very effective piece of equipment in growing bananas. It has been out of service for 5 months because of a factory defect. It is warrantied, but the part has not arrived. Thus, it has not done its work on 100 caballerias.

3. p 18 At this parts warehouse in the main shop I saw for myself the tight supervision of stock through file checks and stock card verifications. I did a random sample, and everything checked out perfectly.

4. pp 18-19 Enterprise tool mechanic Eduardo Rojas is shown driving a tractor along the highway with a companion. This is a clear-cut violation of the rules.

5. p 21 One of the Melanio Ortiz Enterprise's permanent goals is to grow yucca, sweet potatoes, malanga and bananas.

8743
CSO: 3010

STUDENTS REPUDIATE SALVADORAN FOREIGN MINISTER'S VISIT

PA171614 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 0300 GMT 17 Oct 80

[Communique of Honduran University Students Federation dated 16 October; read by unidentified student leader in telephone call from Tegucigalpa—broadcast in progress; recorded]

[Text] ...The foreign minister of the Salvadoran tyranny. The Honduran University Students Federation [FEUH], [words indistinct] a member of the National Coordinating Commission of Solidarity With the Salvadoran People, expresses with indignation its repudiation of the visit to our country, or better said, to the government of our country, of the foreign minister of the Salvadoran bloody tyranny.

The Salvadoran foreign minister cannot be welcomed in our country. On the contrary, his presence is an insult to Honduran youths and people because it is part of the machinations of U.S. imperialism and the Central American oligarchies in detriment to the national interests and dignity of people, particularly of our people who, in 1969, were the target of a cowardly aggression by the Salvadoran armed forces in the service of the Salvadoran oligarchy.

One of those machinations seeks to hasten a solution of the Honduran-Salvadoran dispute, completely disregarding Honduras' national interests and betraying the official position held up to a short time ago which called for the overall and simultaneous resolution of the issues involved in the conflict between the two countries. The objective of all this is to smooth the way for the coordination of the counterrevolutionary forces manipulated and led by the U.S. interventionists who were the accomplices of the 1969 aggression in view of the relations they have always had with the Salvadoran oligarchy.

The Salvadoran foreign minister represents a government which is not representative of the desires or interests of the Salvadoran people. Instead he represents a small, exploitative and repressive minority which is currently waging a counterrevolutionary war against that brother people. It uses brutal slaughter and fierce repressive methods to keep itself in power and to defeat the rebellion of the popular masses, which heroically resist in an unequal battle for democracy, justice and national liberation.

In view of the aforementioned, the FEUH repudiates the visit of the Salvadoran foreign minister and calls on all patriotic sectors to raise the banner in demand of an overall and simultaneous settlement of the conflict with El Salvador and to unite to defeat the traitorous maneuver of an agreement that is harmful to the national interests. Workers, peasants, students, patriotic soldiers, all of us will repudiate the anti-Honduran and antipopular maneuvers of the Salvadoran oligarchy and the U.S. interventionists.

FEUH to victory always. 16 October 1980

CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

CHARGE TROOPS HELPING SALVADORAN REGIME--The National Coordinating Board of Solidarity With El Salvador has charged in Tegucigalpa that Honduran troops helped the Salvadoran regime in war actions carried out in several towns in Morazan Department. For its part, the Central American Independent News Agency reported that Honduran military units have cordoned off the San Antonio River to prevent the entry of Salvadoran refugees. It added that El Salvador and Honduras will sign a peace treaty this month as part of the counterrevolutionary strategy planned and supported by the United States. It noted that revolutionary forces occupied Mejicanos and Cuscatansingo neighborhoods in San Salvador over the past few hours. The revolutionaries gave military training, including lessons on how to make home-made bombs, to the residents. [Excerpt] [PA182019 Havana International Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 18 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

'BARRICADA' SAYS 'LA PRENSA' ABUSING FREEDOM OF PRESS

PA170142 Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 8 Oct 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Why Does LA PRENSA Talk of 'Censorship'?"]

[Text] It is necessary to establish once and for all the reason why LA PRENSA has in practice adopted a negative posture that runs contrary to the legal system which the revolution has implemented as the source of power to preserve and deepen the country's socioeconomic transformations. Its posture is due to the fact that it seeks to deny the legitimacy of the junta of the government of national reconstruction by indicating veiled similarities between the junta and the Somozist government.

In recent days, it has been LA PRENSA's policy of information to challenge the revolutionary government. Its editorials say one thing, but it practices another in daily work. All this is designed to undermine the legitimacy of the revolutionary government, because this is a class government that represents the interests of the workers.

But the shameful thing is that it tries to hide these maneuvers behind the upright figure of Dr Pedro Joaquin Chamorro by harking back to editorials and articles which he wrote, with his characteristic bravery and honesty, against the Somozist military dictatorship. In other words, LA PRENSA manipulates the figure of its martyred director, extrapolating his thoughts and reducing him to the ploy of the reactionaries. The truth is that most of those who are presently on the news staff have nothing in common with the LA PRENSA of the Nicaraguans that was edited by Pedro Joaquin Chamorro. And if this is not the truth, we hope they will contradict us.

It was one thing to defend Nicaraguans against the Somoza dictatorship in the past, and another to defend one's own interests and those of the reactionaries. However, it is not satisfied with rolling down this dangerous incline. It has also taken on the task of defending counterrevolutionary sectors, assuming extreme and dishonest positions as in the case of Bernardino Larios, who plotted the mass assassination of the leaders of the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN). Shamelessly distorting the facts as usual, LA PRENSA, in a sensationalist headline, sought to have Cmdr Tomas Borge appear not as the victim, but as the culprit.

LA PRENSA refuses to investigate or confirm a report in order to give a complete account of the facts, alleging that to do so would restrict freedom of the press. However, its systematic use and abuse of this freedom, earned by our people in arms on 19 July, has led it to issue erroneous, distorted reports on a large number of events. We challenge the paper to correct us if it is not true that never in its history has it been refuted as much as it has been from May to the present. Its falsehoods have been uncovered.

Precisely this refusal to turn to the official sources of information led the paper to charge insidiously that the cattlemen in Boaco had been arrested simply because they are cattlemen, thus insinuating that this was a crime in Nicaragua. Our people learned from the very cattlemen under arrest, however, that they were arrested because they had been linked to counterrevolutionary activities.

Calling itself independent (?), it seeks to practice unrestrained journalism, disregarding the legal provisions promulgated by the revolution, but seeking their protection when it is expedient to do so. It talks of respect for laws, but on the other hand refuses to obey them, particularly in the case of reports linked to the security of the revolutionary state, since it is not really interested in seeing that state consolidated.

How can one be independent, if one exists by virtue of and is nourished by the sectors that, one way or another, impugn the revolutionary government? Just to read its pages provides a perfect understanding of its policy of information and an indication of who subsidizes the paper.

However, with great hypocrisy, this paper, whose norm has been misinformation, manipulation and disregard for the revolutionary government, has been posing as the victim.

It calls daily for laws to be issued to define the rules of the game. Yet, when the laws are issued, it refuses to respect them.

CSO: 3010

STATION HAILS PARDONS AS SIGN OF HUMAN RIGHTS CLIMATE

PA150347 Managua Domestic Service in Spanish 0500 GMT 14 Oct 80

[Station commentary by Carlos Jose Guadamuz]

[Text] Our revolution, through the junta of the government of national reconstruction, last week granted a pardon to 70 women jailed for their links to or actions in conjunction with Somoxism.

In granting this pardon, several factors were considered, including age, health and the seriousness of the crime. In every case, very flexible criteria were used to make the measure more extensive. The pardon was not influenced by the presence in our country of the International [as heard] Human Rights Commission since the need to grant this pardon had been noted several weeks before.

This does not rule out the possibility of other pardons. BARRICADA already announced today that there will be another pardon by the end of the year. These are measures which, without verbosity, clearly speak of the true existence of human rights in our country. In this regard, our revolution has been completely different from other revolutions and periods of human upheaval in which severe punishment was swiftly meted out to the enemies of the people.

We are not referring here to fascist regimes which, upon overthrowing progressive governments or movements, have cut off as many heads as they could and destroyed the progressive forces by blood and fire. Close at hand is the memory of Chile, where Pinochet's fascists assassinated and caused the disappearance of thousands of activists and sympathizers of Salvador Allende's government; of the Dominican Republic, where, to crush the people's movement, U.S. soldiers killed thousands of Dominicans; of Bolivia, where the overthrow of Juan Jose Torres and recently of President Gueiler were accompanied by a torrent of the people's blood. We are referring to those governments that are presently repressing popular movements struggling for their liberations.

It is enough, therefore, to analyze this picture to realize that in Nicaragua, the exercise of human rights is unrestricted and applies to everyone. Only those who criticize us by profession, by instruction or because of commercial interests, that is, those who, in order to contradict us do not mind saying that it is nighttime even if it is high noon, only such persons, I repeat, can talk--without foundation or reason--of alleged violations of human rights. They are individuals who wish to ignore the fact that, only because of our generosity as well as our tolerance, has it been possible for there to be the extremes of provocation and harassment in Nicaragua that are not permitted in any other country, not even in Switzerland.

The problem is that those individuals confuse the concept of human rights with their (?former) rights which ranged from the exploitation and humiliation of our workers to the yielding of our sovereignty to the interests of the world imperialist system and which included the rigid censure and repression of newsmen who work for radio stations that today are complaining of an alleged limitation of freedom of expression.

Unfortunately for them, such rights will never again prevail in Nicaragua because the only thing which shines here today is the sun of freedom, the sun of the workers, of the peasants, of the students, of the children, of our heroic women. This is the only sun that will shine forever.

CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

'NUEVO DIARIO' NOT TO JOIN IAPA--Dr Danilo Aguirre Solis, president of the Union of Nicaraguan Journalists, UPN, and assistant director of EL NUEVO DIARIO, said the newspaper definitely will not join the IAPA. In a brief interview with local reporters, Dr Aguirre Solis said the newspaper cannot associate with news merchants such as IAPA because EL NUEVO DIARIO serves exclusively the interests of the Nicaraguan people and consequently interprets the concept of freedom of expression within a totally revolutionary mechanism. IAPA, on the other hand, he added, merely publishes news for commercial purposes and exercises the freedom of expression as a business; that is, that freedom of expression that best suits its members' interests by handling those news items which are suitable to them politically and economically, with which we fully disagree. [Excerpt] [PA171701 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1200 GMT 17 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

PAPER PRAISES U.S. AMBASSADOR'S STATEMENTS

PA101953 Panama City LA ESTRELLA DE PANAMA in Spanish 9 Oct 80 p A-4

[Editorial: "Ambassador Moss' Statements"]

[Text] When U.S. Secretary of State Muskie spoke at the UN General Assembly 2 weeks ago, he did not mention Latin America. This surprised most of the Latin American and other delegations which are perfectly aware of the seriousness of the situation in this area of the world and the U.S. interest in it.

However, U.S. Ambassador to Panama Ambler Moss delivered a speech at the Center for Inter-American Relations in New York in which he dealt with the subject of the Central American area and Panama. He not only showed great knowledge of the subject but expressed a number of courageous thoughts.

It is evident that the Carter administration has brought about an in-depth change in the way the Latin American situation is viewed. A fundamental factor has been its policy in favor of human rights which has been widely criticized by several governments of the region.

No one doubts that there is communist penetration but to believe that this atheist doctrine is the cause of all evils is to hide the sun with one hand and to seek an easy excuse to commit all kinds of abuses. Ambassador Moss clearly said--and we share his views--that "despite Cuba's evident interest in the area, what we are seeing in Central America today would not be very different if Fidel Castro and the Soviet Union did not exist." The U.S. diplomat added that "the political and social changes that we are now seeing are natural and inevitable, and the instability and violence which are shaking the region are mainly the result of internal factors."

Regarding Panama, the ambassador mentioned the relationship which has been established between Panama and the United States as result of the Torrijos-Carter treaties. We think it was a very opportune moment to discuss this subject because Republican candidate Reagan has referred several times to the canal treaties in a way which shows his ignorance.

One does not frequently find high-ranking U.S. Government officials who view and focus on Latin American problems, particularly those of Central America, with the frankness which characterizes Ambassador Moss. We hope that his statements will find support in the State Department since the United States must, of necessity, play an important role in the region whether for good or evil.

CSO: 3010

TURBAY'S CONGRATULATIONS TO ROYO DESCRIBED AS 'CALCULATED'

PA121510 Panama City LA PRENSA in Spanish 8 Oct 80 p 8

[Article by Julio E. Linares: "Turbay Ayala and the Monteria Treaty"]

[Text] Although it is a known fact that state funds were used to favor certain candidates, especially from the Revolutionary Democratic Party [PRD], we will not state here that the elections of Sunday, 28 September, were a fraud. As mere observers of these elections, we do not have, at least for now, enough facts to maintain such a charge. Because of our education and temperament, we refrain from making statements which we cannot prove even if we could obtain personal or political benefits from them.

However, there is a reality which has been charged and even admitted by those who participated in the elections, including the top PRD hierarchy. This reality lies in "the blunders and deficiencies in the organization of the elections which prevented thousands of citizens from voting," to use the words of a PRD communique published on 3 October in MATUTINO. These blunders and deficiencies were "harshly" criticized by the government itself in this communique.

If according to the dictionary of the Royal Spanish Academy the adjective "irreproachable" means that "admitting or deserving no criticism" and if the noun "flaw" means "defect found on something which makes it imperfect," the 28 September elections were far from "irreproachable" or "flawless."

If this is so, for those who are not familiar with international relations, the dispatch that Colombian President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala sent to President Royo the day after the elections to "congratulate him for the democratic elections" held here "to elect one-third of the members of the National Legislation Council in an 'irreproachable' process," is, to say the least, a foolish act.

Let us not be deceived. Turbay Ayala is not a scatterbrain who is accustomed to speaking or acting thoughtlessly. He is not misinformed about the Panamanian situation either. It is just the opposite. He is not only very well informed but he talks and acts with sound judgment. His statements and actions are aimed at one objective which is more than just considered, it is premeditated: Panamanian ratification of the Monteria treaty.

It is a well-known fact that with the Contadora declaration and the subsequent signing of the Monteria treaty, Colombia obtained the possibility of continuing to enjoy most of the colonialist rights that the Thompson-Urrutia treaty granted to it regarding the Panama Canal and railroad. This is a treaty that was repudiated by the Panamanian governments prior to 11 October 1968. The Monteria treaty debate was suspended, as it may be recalled, in an act of patriotic rebelliousness by the National Assembly of Corregimiento representatives.

As long as Panama does not define its stand regarding the Monteria treaty, we cannot expect anything but "solidarity," "sympathy," "cooperation," "understanding" and so forth from Turbay Ayala so that we ratify that ill-fated treaty. What is more, he will support, as he is already doing and as his predecessor, Alfonso Lopez Michelsen did, the legal-political system which has been imposed on us in order to win over and keep the friendship of those who are ruling us. It will be a different story once the treaty is ratified or rejected. Meanwhile, the Panamanian Government will always find a valuable ally in Colombia which will back all its initiatives and domestic policies regardless of how undemocratic they may be. The national interest of Colombia demands it be thus.

Consequently, we must be on the alert. Let us not be seduced with congratulations and compliments. Let us not be naive in believing that "the message that the Colombian president sent to Panamanian President Aristides Royo Sanchez congratulating not only him but Panama for this new reaffirmation of liberty and civism acquires greater importance" in the face of the Panamanian opposition's doubts about the government impartiality in the past elections as was stated in an editorial of a morning newspaper.

These congratulations are calculated...and calculated actions are insincere.

CSO: 3010

PDC OFFICIAL SAYS ELECTION RESULTS PROVE PEOPLE WANT CHANGE

PA122303 Panama City LA PRENSA in Spanish 8 Oct 80 p 4C

[Article by Milciades A. Ortiz, Jr; quotation marks as published]

[Text] The election has proven that the majority of the people here are in the opposition and want institutional change so we can have real democracy, Dr Ricardo Arias Calderon, president of the Christian Democratic Party (PDC) Political Commission, has stated.

"The PDC had three goals in mind upon registering for and participating in the election: First, political participation by a growing number of people, particularly young people who have not had the experience of political democracy in the past 12 years," Dr Arias Calderon said in a mellow voice.

He added that: "On 9 October [1979] it was verified that the thinking of the Panamanian people is contrary to that of the regime. But a way had to be found to express the opposition of the average citizen politically, since the average citizen is at the core of democracy. This is one reason why we decided to register and participate in the election."

Dr Arias Calderon paused and then went on with his methodic discourse.

"Another objective was to further organize the PDC. Democracy requires extensively organized parties, parties that are geographically and socially involved in integration work. Without 'integrating' parties in this twofold way there can be no effective democracy."

We briefly interrupted him to ask about the word "integrating." The doctor in philosophy, professor at the University of Panama and former academic vice president of the International University of Florida, replied directly:

"The best way to explain this is to sum up the Christian Democrats' experience in the past 6 months. We were about 1,500 to 2,000 strong, although we thought we had many other anonymous sympathizers.

The registration process permitted us to recruit 35,875 people and the PDC candidates got approximately 160,000 votes--20 percent of the total votes cast. The interesting thing is that the registration figures and the votes came from all over the country and so our organization is present throughout the republic. Our membership encompasses various social strata: from banana workers in Baru, where we got a majority vote, to middle-class professionals in San Francisco [neighborhood] and Panama City where the voter turnout was very high, and it includes important peasant sectors in Veraguas.

"The PDC was a party of middle-class professionals and small groups from other sectors in the 1960's. It has become a party with a broad popular base. Its provincial leadership has been renewed. It has gained experience through the registration and the election. This has left us a strong, broadly based organization."

"The third goal was to exert ever stronger twofold pressure on the regime: to take away elements of its sociopolitical power and also to unmask its abuse of power. We have been able to draw away segments of the population from under the wing of the regime and we have also compelled the government to demonstrate its incompetence while organizing the electoral process and show its effort to manipulate the process in an arbitrary fashion."

It was almost impossible to get a word in because Dr Arias seemed to be ecstatic as he answers the question. It is obvious he has a lot to say about the PDC to which he has devoted 16 years.

About the meaning of the recent election, he said: "In our opinion, 53 percent of the voters voted for the opposition: 19 to 20 percent voted for the PDC, 13 percent for the Liberal Party and 20 percent for independent opposition candidates, while a mere 48 percent voted for the government in some way (41 percent voted for the Democratic Revolutionary Party (PRD), 4 percent for the Popular Broad Front and 4 percent for independent candidates linked to the regime)."

The meaning then is that the majority voted against the regime.

About the abstention rate, Dr Arias Calderon said: "I think 40 percent didn't vote in one of three ways: Through /political indifference/ [slantlines denote boldface as published]--as happens in every election. In Panama's electoral history this has never been below 10 to 15 percent. Through /involuntary abstention/ by those who wanted to vote but due to the disastrous electoral lists were unable to do so because their names were not properly listed, their identification card numbers were wrong, their assigned booths were too distant and so forth. Involuntary abstention may have totaled 5 to 8 percent. Finally, through /voluntary/ abstention with full political conscience which is at least half the total abstention rate, 20 percent. If this percentage of opponents to the regime is added to the votes against the government, we have to conclude that the election was an /outright defeat/ not only for the PRD, but for the regime itself.

The methods of the people in opposition who voted and those who abstained were different, but not their objectives. Both agree on the fundamental objective that a change is necessary not just of the people who are in power or in their policies but in the political institutions."

"Everybody saw the incredible disorganization of the electoral process. I think the election has dramatically posed two basic tasks to the nation: the revamping of the electoral legislation and the electoral apparatus, and the waging and intensifying of the struggle for institutional change in Panama.

Without giving the reporter an opportunity to rest, Dr Arias went on: "About the first task it is necessary for the electoral tribunal to limit itself to settling disputes regarding the interpretation and application of the electoral law. A superior electoral council must be created with the participation of the parties and independent figures who would be in charge of the electoral organization as such; that is, the identification cards, the voting lists and the effective performance of the voting booths. The present system which leaves this up to three magistrates has failed."

"Regarding the second task, the opposition sectors, backed by the broad majority of their supporters, must clearly establish the way to exert more pressure on the regime and make a specific proposal for change to the nation.

What do you think General Torrijos' attitude should be now?

"In General Torrijos' own words in a document entitled 'The Final Objective,' the regime is based on three things: the PRD, the official legislators and the National Guard. The first two have made a poor showing during the election. This means that the regime's component parts have failed. The National Guard in a way has been left out in the cold, politically speaking.

"It engendered and still backs this regime. It cannot evade the responsibility of admitting that the people want a different regime so as to live in genuine democracy."

As a final word, Dr Arias Calderon said that: The role played by the young people is noteworthy. The most significant victory in this regard is that of Nestor Gutierrez in Chiriqui. I must also highlight the role played by women, not in the traditional "political kitchen" but in direct political activity.

"The support given us by these two groups makes us feel proud and a tremendous responsibility," he stated.

CSO: 3010

FORMER ENVOY TO U.S. DISCUSSES ELECTION RESULTS, ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

PA060026 Panama City LA PRENSA in Spanish 5 Oct 80 p 8C

["Counterparty" column interview with Carlos Lopez Guevara, former Panamanian ambassador to the United States and canal treaties negotiator, by Milciades A. Ortiz; no date or place given]

[Text] Panama needs a radical change. This was said in a peaceful way by the people on 28 September elections, in which the leaders "were led" by the citizens, Carlos Alfredo Lopez Guevara says in an extensive and profound interview which deals with current and future political and economic matters.

Elections: Serious Warning

The distinguished Panamanian lawyer, diplomat and public man told LA PRENSA:

"One should never govern without the people's approval. Ours is a people which believes in Judeo-Christian values and resents any measure which is suspected, even slightly, of being influenced by communist elements. That is why the educational reform was rejected. Last October the people held a march. In the recent elections, the people once again of their own free will went to the polls to tell General Torrijos and the National Guard high command that it is time to give the state apparatus a democratic tuneup."

He then continues to analyze the significance of last Sunday's elections, without a question from the interviewer.

"It is still too early to make a final statement because I do not have the final figures. But the vote by the opposition as well as the opposition expressed through abstention are clear indications of the need for radical changes in the constitutional structure."

As if he were giving a lecture at the university, the former treaty negotiations adviser continues expressing his views, some of which he has prepared in writing to help the interviewer. Now he talks about national development matters closely related to politics:

"The elections proved that development should not occur by sacrificing freedom. This is what the people of Colon said despite the $130 million program the government approved for Colon. The people of Colon resented the fact that the project was imposed on them and they were never consulted even up to the point where, in the ceremony which initiated the project, Colon had no representative on the main board."

Lopez Guevara summarizes his views on last Sunday's elections:

"The people in a peaceful manner and high civic spirit have given a serious warning which I am sure the National Guard high command and its commander in chief are still considering and which is probably encouraging them to think responsibly and profoundly. The National Guard will listen to the people's message for peaceful measures leading to a government of national unity which will facilitate the reforms to the constitutional structures."

The Foreign Debt Problem

Lopez Guevara discloses to the reporter an interest in matters related to Panama's economic development. In this area as in the legal, diplomatic and the canal fields, he is an expert with definite ideas on the topic. That is why he says:

"There are serious problems affecting the entire republic and future generations. The public debt, through which many public works have been carried out, is almost $3 billion. At present 50 percent of the nation's budget goes to pay the interest on the debt. When interest goes up 1 percent, the debt increases by $30 million. This is serious.

"There are flagrant violations of the canal treaty which can only be dealt with categorically if we have national unity. There are 100,000 unemployed. Can we create 20,000 new jobs per year? Cerro Colorado is a development alternative."

He tries to incorporate the political aspect in what he has said by adding in a low but firm voice:

"The aforementioned problems are very serious. These are not the government's or the opposition's problems. These are the problems of Panama and of all Panamanians. They mainly affect the large mass of peasants, Indians and workers, who lack the means to cope with the crisis and unemployment."

National Unity the Only Way Out

In keeping with his meticulous manner, Lopez Guevara summarizes his thoughts once he has completed his exposition. Thus he adds:

"All these problems are waiting for an adequate solution. The best chance for a solution is through national unity which I trust our local leaders can carry out in cooperation with the National Guard."

Not satisfied with this, Lopez Guevara explains his view to clear up any doubts:

"We should hold open and permanent meetings to try to find solutions in a brotherly attitude, inspired by our flag, which every Panamanian can see permanently atop Ancon Hill, and which proves that only through a unity of views are the nation's great strategic objectives achieved."

At the risk of being a little indiscreet, we ask Lopez Guevara, former Panamanian ambassador to the United States, his opinion about Gen Omar Torrijos. There is a pause, Lopez Guevara meditates for an instant, looks at the ceiling as if trying to find the adequate words and with a smile which immediately disappears, he gives his opinion:

"Torrijos has proven to have great political acumen. He is definitely analyzing the people's message contained in the voting and abstention of the recent semi-elections."

Lopez Guevara may have noticed that what he has just said has caused a negative reaction which I cannot keep from showing in my face and he adds, trying to explain his view:

"The situation in Panama cannot remain unchangeable and General Torrijos' political acumen will cause him to seek better formulas for political coexistence for Panama, free of the social upheavals which are currently affecting Central America at a tremendous social cost."

I cannot remain silent and, setting aside the role of interviewer, I let Lopez Guevara know my opinion about the negative influence that General Torrijos has had on the nation's life. I ask him to forgive me for my brashness and with a smile and with great diplomacy, he accepts my apology.

I go over portions of Lopez Guevara's written notes and I go over what he says about communism.

Flirting With Communism

"I wish to point out emphatically that the government's flirtation with the communists is hurting the economy. This flirtation scares away investors and is a deadweight holding back the economic takeoff we all expected after the treaties were signed. The latest election proves that the popular masses reject the communists and only vote for them when they are disguised as lambs."

"Communists are like the shade of the chamomile tree; they are harmful for one's health. Poland best demonstrates that communism is not the best promoter of workers' rights. Guided by Valeza in Gdansk, the workers of Poland invoked the Virgin Mary in order to win over the omnipotent communist state, and they achieved their goal. The photographs that appeared in the factories were not of Lenin or Stalin, but of the Virgin Mary and Pope John Paul II. Flirting with the communists brings us nearer to the climate of violence in Central America.

People's Wish Should Be Considered

Once again, the interview is channeled. I insist on solutions to the nation's problems and Lopez Guevara outlines concrete action:

"We are still in time to find solution formulas. One could be a constituent [assembly] following a broad discussion to choose the candidates and to agree on the main issues of the reform, both legal and political. The nation is demanding a radical change and has said so peacefully. Our leaders were led by the citizens in the recent partial popular consultation. It is time the leaders got in tune with the will of the people."

"I hope so," I say with a sigh. Lopez Guevara shows optimism and smiles, willing to continue to speak, but this is not possible because there is work to do on the newspaper.

CSO: 3010

INTERVIEW WITH FORMER GUERRILLA HUGO SPADAFORA

PA180402 Panama City LA PRENSA in Spanish 16, 17 Oct 80

[Interview with Dr Hugo Spadafora, former deputy minister of public health and commander of the Victoriano Lorenzo Brigade--date not given]

[16 Oct 80 p 8C]

[Text] Dr Spadafora had been in Panama for 24 hours. Because of that extra sense journalists have, we knew that he had returned to the country and that he would stay only briefly.

After talking to a few people, we were able to find the guerrilla doctor, if he could be called that. He gave us an appointment at his residence and we were there on time. One of his bodyguards received us.

We are told the person who greeted us is not a bodyguard but one of the fighters of the Victoriano Lorenzo Brigade that the brigade puts at Spadafora's disposal when he is in Panama. We went up to his residence and one of his assistants was waiting for us. We were announced and then Commander Hugo appeared smiling and cheerful happy. He greeted us warmly and appeared surprised we were there on time. "One of the greatest sins of we Latins, is tardiness," he told us. He looked for a chair. Then we sat down and the conversation began without agenda. It was an informal talk during which we discussed a little of everything. He was happy to be in Panama "although for a very short time," he told us. "I came to see my children, my parents and some close friends," he noted. Dr Spadafora looked thinner than usual. He told us he keeps in shape because he maintains a diet and exercises. He told us: "The truth is that I did not want it to be known that I am in Panama and I wanted an interview even less."

After the opening informal conversation, we asked him the first question.

LA PRENSA: Doctor, according to international reports you have been involved in revolutionary movements in some Central American countries. Particularly in El Salvador. You are also being linked to the trafficking of arms to those countries. What can you tell us about that?

Spadafora: I have always said I am a leftist militant with an internationalist awareness. I am also a man of action. With these two ingredients, and knowing that I struggle in order to be consistent with my ideas, it is impossible not to link me to the liberation struggles being waged and that will be waged in this continent. I will always cooperate as much as I can with this type of struggle. Regarding my activities or any detail I will say nothing. I will remain loyal to my position as a militant of the revolution in Latin America.

LA PRENSA: Then you admit you have direct links with the groups that are struggling in neighbor countries?

Spadafora: I have never denied that. Never. Regarding the arms traffic, I give this word a commercial connotation. I have never trafficked in arms. However, I would like to have many weapons to give to the revolutionary groups struggling in Latin America.

LA PRENSA: You have been out of the country approximately 3 and 1/2 months. Could you tell us where you have been all this time? Did you visit Central American countries where revolutionary groups are struggling?

Spadafora: I will give that question a general answer. I came to the country to see my children and to say hello to some friends. I have visited some countries and in some of them I have worked in favor of my revolutionary ideals. However, I have not broken any law in any of the countries I have visited.

LA PRENSA: In those trips you have carried out in the past few weeks, have you had a chance to visit Nicaragua and see how the Nicaraguan revolution is doing?

Spadafora: I have visited Nicaragua. I consider Nicaragua as another fatherland and whenever I have an opportunity to visit it, I do it. I believe despite all the errors and deficiencies natural in any human-led process, the Nicaraguan revolution maintains the popular support it earned from the very beginning. I also believe that the Nicaraguan people are the true makers of that revolution.

Blind and emotional anticommunism is overwhelming many and prevents them from seeing the true situation of the Nicaraguan process. For example, not long ago, statements by Monsignor Obando, bishop of Nicaragua, defending the right of Nicaragua to carry out its revolution, even if it is socialist, were published here. However, this had been published in Panama as a paid advertisement approximately 2 months ago. Those statements were published together with a document from more than 200 clergymen of El Salvador denouncing the crimes committed daily in that country by the so-called Military-Christian Democratic Junta.

LA PRENSA: To what do you think caused the recent disturbances and complaints, such as in Bluefields concerning the involvement of Cuban teachers and technicians in that revolution? It has been mentioned that the revolution is going communist.

Spadafora: There is something inherent to every revolution: the fears that stem from prejudice or created interests which are endangered. There is a famous phrase that every revolution carries with it, its own counterrevolution. In Nicaragua's case there are many fears from bona fide individuals who, due to their anticommunist prejudices, see the danger of having the Soviets or Cuban troops in Nicaraguan territory in every progressive and radical action. There are also the fears of those who see their privileges in danger because of the revolutionary victory. Considering the ignorance into which the dictatorship plunged the Nicaraguan people—illiteracy, political ignorance, misinformation--the least one can expect from such a movement is that some popular sectors can be mobilized because of those fears, prejudices, misinformation and so forth.

That to me explains the demonstrations and unrest occurring in Nicaragua and any that may occur in the future. However, even publications such as TIME magazine admit that the revolutionary process is being carried out in a rather balanced way. Now then it is true there are many Cuban teachers and technicians there. But those technicians don't cost the Nicaraguan people a penny.

The Nicaraguan Government asked all nations, including the United States of America, for help. The only country that responded with largess was Cuba. There are, however, teachers and technicians from many other countries, for instance, Mexico; not as many as there are Cubans but there are some. However, we know that when Cuba is mentioned everybody shivers. In fact there is a Latin American army of peace in Nicaragua helping the revolution rebuild a half-destroyed nation.

LA PRENSA: Don't you think that group of Latin Americans who have gone to Nicaragua is a leftwing group interested in promoting a leftist revolution?

Spadafora: I would say most of them are. That is to be commended. They are being consistent with their ideas. Let's not forget that when one wants to criticize, one criticizes. I have heard much criticism of the left because it doesn't work and just puts forth ideas. However, now it is being criticized because it is working for its ideals. Then what's the score? We should commend these people who work for their ideals even if they are leftwingers.

LA PRENSA: Doctor, what was your impression of the assassination of General Somoza?

Spadafora: I was glad, like all the people of Nicaragua who celebrated. I was in no condition to celebrate since I was neither in Panama, nor in Nicaragua. I was very glad, however, and I shared the joy expressed by the government and people of Nicaragua.

LA PRENSA: Who do you think assassinated him?

Spadafora: The truth is that the Paraguayan Government has handled this whole thing very poorly and has given so many contradictory versions that I do not dare give an opinion. I hope and expect it was revolutionaries who did it.

LA PRENSA: Rumors, which sometimes go faster than press reports, have it that you were linked with the plane that crashed in El Salvador with a load of arms in which pilot Cesar Rodriguez was injured. It was later rumored that you were traveling in the second plane that picked up Captain Rodriguez and brought him to Panama? [as published]

Spadafora: I am used to this type of rumor. In December 1978, a magazine in Panama published a report that I had died along with guerrilla priest Gaspar Garcia Laviana.

Several months later, General Somoza himself announced my death on radio and television in Managua, but today, he is the one that is dead.

Now I am being linked with the plane crash and two other air accidents. The truth is that I have never been linked to any of these flights.

LA PRENSA: About 2 weeks [ago], a plane was lost on the Atlantic coast, between Veraguas and Colon provinces in which four persons originally only identified by pseudonyms were traveling. It was later learned that they were Salvadoran leftist leaders. The international press only identified three of the four passengers. It was rumored that you were the fourth, although his identity was later learned. Did you know anything about this flight?

Spadafora: I really do not know anything about it since I was in another country and I knew nothing of the whole thing. I only knew about it later and I do not know the slightest thing about the flight.

LA PRENSA: Why did this plane, which, it was said, was going from Costa Rica to Panama and, therefore, should have been flying on the Pacific side, get lost in the Atlantic?

Spadafora: Sincerely, I know nothing of this matter. I know nothing.

LA PRENSA: Will you be returning again to your revolutionary activities?

Spadafora: I shall be leaving soon. I am returning to my international militant revolutionary activities.

LA PRENSA: Does this mean you are going to take up a flag? Will you fight again? Are you going to organize a new battalion? What kind of militancy will you be involved in?

Spadafora: Let us allow time to reply to this question with future events.

LA PRENSA: What is your impression of the elections held a few days ago in Panama?

Spadafora: Generally speaking, I heard that voting was fairly evenly shared by the opposition and the government. The Democratic Revolutionary Party got a majority, but not what it expected. That is, a large percentage of the people voted with candidates of the opposition. This result is in line with the observations I made more than 1 year ago to the effect that the nation is fairly divided between government forces, that is pro-Torrijos forces, and the forces of the opposition.

This gives more validity to the line I have proposed to promote and serve as a simple citizen: the quest for national unity. The nation cannot be ruled, broken in two between forces that view each other as mortal enemies; this does not work. I think that these elections, among other elections [as published] it offers us, shows that there is need to seek unity and national concord. Not in an abstract way, however, but based on concrete development programs. These certainly are not difficult to achieve if discussed at a negotiation table in a positive way and in good faith, setting aside egotism and biases, which bring forth the uncontrolled ambition that for a long time has moved politics in this country. We must put forth a little more patriotism and unselfishness and true patriotic fervor to rebuild this country. If not, I believe we are on the path to disaster.

PA181922 [17 Oct 80 p 6]

[Text] LA PRENSA: Over a year ago you were one of the first persons to mention the need for all groups to join in national unity to save the country from the crisis it was facing at the time and which still persists. Do you still feel the same?

Spadafora: I have always felt that way. I have said so in every meeting and place I have been and, for my own satisfaction, I have been congratulated by many persons, by the humblest and by all socioeconomic groups.

Besides, I have observed that neither Dr Arnulfo Arias nor Gen Omar Torrijos have said anything against my thesis. It would have been very easy for Dr Arnulfo Arias, who has a very peculiar political style, to have ridiculed my thesis. I feel that Dr Arias has acted very prudently by not criticizing me, not even in private as far as I know. Neither from General Torrijos, of whom I am a follower and friend, have I received any opposition to my thesis.

I have met with leaders from the opposition and from the party in power and I have not heard opinions against the thesis from them. We all agree that it is very difficult, but they do not question the logic behind my thesis.

LA PRENSA: You talk as if General Torrijos were the country's current ruler. Why?

Spadafora: I insist on what I have always said. There are only two leaders in this country, Dr Arnulfo Arias and Gen Omar Torrijos. Dr Arias is followed by a large sector, perhaps the majority of the Panamanian people. General Torrijos is followed by a large sector of the civilian population, among whom I count myself. This I reiterate. Besides, he is the political and military leader of this country's army.

LA PRENSA: Do you refer to the leader in the sense of political power, or in the spiritual sense, that is, the leader who holds together and commands the masses?

Spadafora: President Royo from the first day as president of the republic and at all times, has always recognized that the leader of the revolutionary process is General Torrijos. This is accepted by all of us who participate in this process. I insist that General Torrijos is a political leader of domestic and international stature. Besides, he is also the commander in chief of this country's army, which is very important.

We must admit, at least this is my opinion, that the National Guard under the command of General Torrijos, is a factor of stability in this country, if we compare Panama with other typical Latin American countries, in which we observe cycles in which coups alternate with democratic elections, widening the divisions in those countries more each day.

Here we have a leader who observes a civil attitude. General Torrijos can be strongly criticized as a ruler for his mistakes and shortcomings, the same as any other ruler. But we cannot deny, at least this is my opinion, that he does maintain a civil attitude and that he tries to find civilian solutions to the country's problems. I think that the opposition as well as official sectors should take advantage of this. We must seek this historic meeting--and I repeat what I said a year ago--we must seek the great historic meeting between the Panamenist, liberal and other opposition groups with the Torrijist groups.

LA PRENSA: We continue stressing national unity, but at the same time we see that instead of national unity, the chasm between the government and the opposition is widening each day. For instance, we see it in the treaties which are criticized more and more each day and fewer persons want to get involved in this problem to find a solution which should serve to unite all Panamanians. What do you think about this?

Spadafora: I think the North Americans have much to be faulted for regarding the treaties. In fact, not just the opposition, but our own sectors strongly criticize the treaties. I think it is due more than anything else to the fact that what was already agreed upon and signed is not being complied with. This stirs the flame of discontent from both sectors. Criticism within the government is as harsh as that expressed by the opposition.

LA PRENSA: Do you think there is less unity today than before the treaties were approved?

Spadafora: In relation to the treaties, I do not think there are big differences. At least, they are not so hard to solve. I think that what we have here is a process that in politics as well as in medicine is known as a feverish state prior to a resolution. That is, there are illnesses which are cured through a fever, a high temperature. In the same manner, there are political processes which are also cured through big events. We are heading toward a political crisis which will require this historic understanding and in which the National Guard and a strong and balanced leadership as that of General Torrijos, will be key elements.

LA PRENSA: Regarding this process of purification, if it can be called that, don't you believe that one of the greatest problems we are facing is the corruption of this process? How can there be any purification if there is so much corruption?

Spadafora: The corruption has historical roots in these countries. It started with the corruption imported from Spain in colonial times and it continued throughout the Colombian administration.

The corruption in Panama is endemic. It did not happen since 1968 or 1940 when it became evident. It is as old as the republic. The revolutionary process headed by General Torrijos has failed in efficiently fighting this corruption. I believe this is one of the greatest problems. However, my personal experience was when I was a public official and I was able to confirm this, that General Torrijos, as the top leader of this process, wanted and still wants to fight this corruption.

Every time I tried to fight corruption in any way, from my political position, I had the approval and the encouragement of General Torrijos to do so. I had great problems with prominent people in the medical community in this country. I even had problems with the large pharmaceutical companies. There was a lot of money at stake and they tried to bribe as well as threaten and pressure me.

However, General Torrijos always encouraged me in my struggle against corruption. I repeat, corruption is something endemic in our country. It cannot be blamed on the government or the leader only. The government has failed in this but we, as a society, have also failed. I am sure that we could get General Torrijos' support to thoroughly fight this corruption in the country.

LA PRENSA: Don't you think that the revolutionary process, because of its name which means change, should have eradicated then, once and for all, the endemic corruption which you say the country is suffering?

Spadafora: I agree and I have said so. This is one of the deficiencies of this process. However, I am not pessimistic. I believe that it can be corrected. I think this is feasible if one can find the two forces I am talking about based on a well-designed program listing the fight against corruption among its priorities.

LA PRENSA: Doctor, in going back to you, after your revolutionary activities, do you plan to join the present government?

Spadafora: I am very satisfied and proud to say that I was a member of the revolutionary government. Specifically, I was deputy minister during the administration of General Torrijos when he was chief of government. I had many satisfactions. I like politics and political and administrative matters. I thought it was good to continue being part of the government but when the conflict in Nicaragua appeared I left, attracted by that great goal of fighting against the Somozas. Now, however, I have continued in my internationalist revolutionary activities.

I plan to return to Panama next year to establish myself there. I would like to have the experience I had before when I was a deputy minister. But I have made a firm decision not to accept any official position in this or any other government in the country. I am convinced that the only way for people to believe my statements about national unity is by seeing that I am not moved by personal interests.

So I have decided that as I sacrificed so many things I like to fight for just causes in other lands, such as being with my children and friends and in my fatherland, I feel I must give up the satisfaction of holding any government post for the sake of this policy of national unity. I will devote myself to promoting this policy next year when I return to my country. I will not accept any post from any government in power.

LA PRENSA: Does this mean that you will not participate in a democratic struggle in Panama even if it means running as a candidate in popular elections?

Spadafora: It means that I will not hold any post by election or appointment.

LA PRENSA: Don't you think you are going to extremes by thinking this way?

Spadafora: I don't believe so. I believe that a policy of national unity is definitely necessary. I believe it is the only way to avoid a civil war in the country. Too much is at stake because in talking about a civil war in this country we are talking about the destruction of a peaceful and calm life such as that we are used to in Panama. Avoiding a war is the best inheritance that we can leave our children and all the good Panamanians.

LA PRENSA: Do you foresee internal struggles in Panama?

Spadafora: Well, we only have to look around us. We have to look at the other Latin American countries to see what is happening there. In looking at these examples, we will reach the conclusion that no country can long survive if it is split in two hostile sides such as is the case in Panama.

LA PRENSA: What does the government think of this?

Spadafora: I already said it in this interview and I have stated it in previous discussions. I believe in the open mindedness and the patriotic feeling of General Torrijos. I have said that he is an instrument of balance. I also believe that through this leader there will be an agreement with the opposition in Panama.

LA PRENSA: It is being rumored that the PRD has contemplated the possibility of calling on General Torrijos so that he will be its candidate for the next elections.

Spadafora: Sociologically speaking, I believe that a leader, when he is a true and genuine leader, will have his work carried out without having him in the presidency. I believe that General Torrijos, in his capacity as commander of the National Guard, president of a party or president of the republic can carry out any historical duty he is called for.

LA PRENSA: You have not answered the most important part of the question. Do you think General Torrijos will be a presidential candidate in the forthcoming elections?

Spadafora: I have no idea. But, I repeat, I don't think it is necessary for General Torrijos to be a candidate to preside, politically, over a national unity process.

I believe, and I insist on this, that he is the necessary element in this historic moment in Panama to carry forth the process of national unity and the same applies for Dr Arnulfo Arias. There can be no talk about national unity with Dr Arnulfo Arias being against that unity. Regardless of the posts Dr Arnulfo Arias and General Torrijos may occupy, the two are necessary elements for national unity.

LA PRENSA: Regarding yourself, you have said you will return in a year. Are you going back now to participate in an armed struggle in some country?

Spadafora: I have told you I prefer not to talk about my plans during my absence. Let us forget my future plans.

LA PRENSA: I insist. Where are you going to reside during your absence from Panama? El Salvador? Mexico?

Spadafora: In no fixed place.

LA PRENSA: Since you have connections with revolutionary movements, do you think the revolutionary forces of El Salvador will have the success the revolutionary forces of Nicaragua had?

Spadafora: I do believe that. The Salvadoran people are entirely against a criminal government. The movement is led by an organized vanguard that has demonstrated it has the capacity to arm a portion of the people for the struggle. There is no question that victory is on their side.

LA PRENSA: Don't you think that if the Salvadoran Government wants a democratic solution, through elections, there should be in El Salvador the unity you want for Panama?

Spadafora: When there are mass killings like those taking place in El Salvador, when there is a criminal repression like that taking place in El Salvador, then the road of dialog is closed. The environment in Panama is completely different than that in El Salvador. There is no doubt about that. In El Salvador, the only dialog the military has accepted with the revolutionary left until now is the dialog of bullets.

LA PRENSA: You talk about killings, are they being carried out by the Salvadoran Army as happened in Nicaragua?

Spadafora: Perhaps even worse. It is not just what I say. Monsignor Romero and hundreds of other high-ranking clergymen in El Salvador have charged that the policy of the Salvadoran Government is criminal.

LA PRENSA: What about Guatemala?

Spadafora: The repression in Guatemala is perhaps even worse than that in El Salvador, but it has less publicity. Many people are being assassinated in the countryside. Many clergymen, not only the left, have denounced these murders. In Guatemala also we shall see a revolutionary process that will put an end to a reactionary and criminal government.

LA PRENSA: Do you mean that the revolutionary groups opposed to the Guatemalan Government are not as well organized as those in El Salvador?

Spadafora: It has to be understood that processes do not take place simultaneously in countries. Every process has its beginning and its own development. The Guatemalan groups have not yet been able to give the process the massive dynamics we see in El Salvador. But in my opinion that is only a matter of time and revolutionary work. I believe it will come...and very soon.

CSO: 3010

NETHERLANDS GOVERNMENT STUDIES SURINAME TREATY REQUEST

The Hague ALGEMEEN NEDERLANDS PERSBUREAU in English 3 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] The Hague, October 3--The Dutch government is studying a Surinam request for early talks on the country's most pressing social and economic problem--the mass exodus of Surinamese and the return of expatriates, a foreign ministry spokesman said.

The request was made by Surinam's deputy premier Andre Haakmat when he met Dutch Development Cooperation Minister Jan de Koning in New York this week in the margin of the U.N. general assembly.

Mr Haakmat told Mr De Koning that Surinam wished to get two bilateral treaties which will expire on November 25 replaced by two new treaties.

One of the treaties, which dates from Surinam's independence five years ago, regulates the admission of Surinamese into the Netherlands. The second deals with the Dutch military mission in Paramaribo, capital of Surinam.

Mr De Koning told our correspondent in New York that the Surinam request for two new treaties had come to him as a surprise.

Unilateral Move

More than 150,000 Surinamese--more than a third of the country's population--have settled in the Netherlands since the country became independent in November 1975.

To stem the flow the Netherlands introduced visas for Surinam nationals last month, a unilateral move which the Netherlands says does not violate the terms of the 1975 treaty which allow for access to the Netherlands on easy terms.

When the treaty expires next month Surinamese will be subject to the normal aliens laws in the Netherlands including its clauses regulating family reunions and its 'very liberal' provisions for those who want to study in the Netherlands, Mr De Koning said.

The minister told our correspondent in New York that it would be inhuman to isolate the Surinamese from the Netherlands. Apart from the South Africans they were the only people abroad who speak Dutch.

However, he described the settlement of Surinamese in the Netherlands as a 'major disaster' which had thrown back Surinam's development an entire generation.

Mr Haakmat said he failed to understand why the Netherlands had introduced visas for Surinamese after Surinam had made proposals to solve the problem and after his government's strenuous efforts to encourage the return of expatriates.

He said the Surinam government had formed a commission on Monday to prepare for talks with the Netherlands on the migration problem. He had asked Mr De Koning to use his influence in the Dutch cabinet to get the talks started by mid-October.

The treaty dealing with the Dutch military mission in Paramaribo will be extended by one year on November 25 under a bilateral agreement initiated last month. The agreement provides for further one-year extensions at a time if tacitly approved.

CSO: 3120

END

JPRS 76762

5 November 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2211

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76762

5 November 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2211

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

Cuba Involved in Recent Terrorist Attacks in Guadeloupe
(Nicole Kern; LE FIGARO, 26 Sep 80) 1

Spanish Paper Says Journalism Most Dangerous Profession in L.A.
(EXCELSIOR, 23 Aug 80) 3

ARGENTINA

Viola's Line of Thought Reviewed
(CONVICCION, 4 Oct 80) 5

Biographic Profile of Newly Appointed President
(LA NACION, 4 Oct 80) 8

National Figures Comment on Viola Appointment
(CLARIN, 5 Oct 80) 11

Viola's Predetermined Path to Presidency Surveyed
(LA NACION, 6 Oct 80) 13

BOLIVIA

'DER SPIEGEL' Interviews Former President Gueiler
(Lidia Gueiler Interview; DER SPIEGEL, 27 Oct 80) 16

Interior Minister's Drug Connections With Military Cited
(Luiz Claudio Cunha; VEJA, 8 Oct 80) 22

BRAZIL

Exiled Colonel Terms Brazilian Liberalization a Farce
(TRIBUNA POPULAR, 12-18 Sep 80; EL NACIONAL, 12 Sep 80) 24

Press Conference
Further Comments, by Mario Villegas

Figueiredo Confirms Determination To Develop Democracy
(O GLOBO, 26 Sep 80) 28

Brizola Proposes Opposition Group Forum as Alternative (Leonel Brizola Interview; FOLHA DE SAO PAULO,
21 Sep 80) 30

Navy Minister Examines Domestic, International Issues
(MANCHETE, 27 Sep 80; O GLOBO, 26 Sep 80) 33

Terrorism Assessed, Eduardo da Silva Fonseca
Maximiano Interview
Persian Gulf Conflict

Alternative Sources of Energy Under Study
(Thereza Martins; FOLHA DE SAO PAULO, 20 Sep 80) 38

Alcohol Is Fuel for One-Fourth of Cars Built This Year
(VEJA, 17 Sep 80) 42

Agriculture Minister: Seed Shortage Will Not Affect Crop
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 24 Sep 80) 49

Frost Damages Southern Wheat Crop
(O GLOBO, 20 Sep 80) 50

Development Program for Central West Discussed
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 18 Sep 80) 52

CHILE

FRG Newspaper Interviews Junta Member Matthei
(Fernando Matthei Interview; DIE WELT, 22 Sep 80) 53

Image Abroad Deemed Important, Underestimated
(Editorial; EL MERCURIO, 10 Oct 80) 55

Admininistrative Reform Plans Endorsed
(Editorial; EL MERCURIO, 7 Oct 80) 57

Briefs
Congress on Accident Prevention 59
Trade Mission in Singapore 59
ODEPLAN Director to FRG 59
Creation of Space Committee 59
British Bank Loan 59
New Offshore Oil Rig 59
Import Figures 60
Agriculture Minister in Japan 60
Trade Deficit 60
Trade With Spain 60
Publication of Magazine Banned 60
Salary Readjustment 60

CUBA

Ethiopian Foreign Minister Note on Horn of Africa Status
(Gedle-Giorgis Pelleke; GRANMA, 12 Sep 80) 61

'GRANMA' Scores Venezuela's COPEI for Saboteur Ruling
(GRANMA WEEKLY REVIEW, 12 Oct 80) 64

Charges 'Complicity', Editorial
COPEI Accused of Wrong-Doing
COPEI Involved in Acquittal

Jorge Risquet Commemorates 'GRANMA' Anniversary
(GRANMA WEEKLY REVIEW, 12 Oct 80) 70

Hart on Art, Literature as Class View
(Armando Hart Interview; GRANMA WEEKLY REVIEW, 12 Oct 80) 74

Need for Work Standardization Explained
(Jose Nornielis; GRANMA, 11 Sep 80) 78

Council of Ministers Issues New Wages for Sugar Industry
(GRANMA, 15 Sep 80) 80

GUADELOUPE

Terrorists, White Racism, Fewer Exports Seen Making Future Bleak
(Thierry Desjardins; LE FIGARO, 7 Oct 80) 96

GUATEMALA

Paper Mocks Nicaraguan Criticism of Lucas' Peace Rally Speech
(Editorial; EL IMPARCIAL, 10 Sep 80) 101

HONDURAS

U.S. Support of Democratic Processes in Region Upheld
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 6 Sep 80) 103

CTH, COHEP Present Views on New Constitution
(LA PRENSA, 27, 29 Sep 80) 105

Private Enterprise Menaced
Social Guarantees Reviewed

NICARAGUA

Part III of Catholic Bishops' Response to FSLN on Religion
(EL NUEVO DIARIO, 22 Oct 80) 114

PERU

Education Minister on Teachers' Strikes
(CORREO, 15 Oct 80) 117

VENEZUELA

Montes de Oca Challenges Caldera's Position in COPEI
(BOHEMIA, 15 Sep 80) 118

Left Unable To Unify, Petkoff, Rangel Interviewed
(Teodoro Petkoff, Jose Vicente Rangel Interviews;
BOHEMIA, 15 Sep 80) 124

CUBA INVOLVED IN RECENT TERRORIST ATTACKS IN GUADELOUPE

Paris LE FIGARO in French 26 Sep 80 p 6

[Article by Nicole Kern: "Guadelope Attacks Masterminded by Cuba"]

[Text] In the final analysis, everything is not as simple as one might think. Undoubtedly, the GLA (Armed Liberation Group) was blamed a little too quickly for the series of attacks which took place last week at Pointe-a-Pitre, Guadelope, during a "Corsican-style" black night. At the start of the investigation it was even thought that the death of the gendarme-artificer was accidental. But today the investigators think that the situation was entirely different and that this series of terrorist attacks cannot be compared to the attacks during which bullets were fired at Counsellor-General Vivies and the manager of a big department store from continental France, nor even the explosive attack against the gendarmerie post at Sainte-Anne, but rather an act of terrorists perpetrated in Guyana against a gasoline storage facility at Kourou and a gendarmerie post. They are now sure that one must see the hand of Cuba in this.

Little by little, Cuban influence has spread over the islands of the Caribbean, but the little islands of prosperity, represented by the French departments in America, constitute an obstacle to Castro's hegemony. Recently, the political map however was modified in that part of the world, a particularly sensitive one, with one particular withdrawal by the Marxists; this retreat emerged on Dominica, an island located between Martinique and Guadeloupe, where elections led to the defeat of the pro-Castro forces. This tendency is also in the process of being reversed at Sainte-Lucie and Saint-Vincent. One can thus understand the importance which, as far as Cuba is concerned, springs right now from a destabilization of the French departments which are as many ramparts standing in the way of Cuban influence.

People are more and more certain, in Guadeloupe, that the series of attacks reveals an undertaking that was remote-controlled from abroad even though it was carried out by a handful of citizens of Guadeloupe who had gotten training in Cuba. The investigators as a matter of fact have discovered troubling similarities between the attacks in Kourou and those at Pointe-a-Pitre. In particular, there was a very high level of technical preparation and a determination to kill, as revealed by the way in which the explosive charges were set; a second explosion was to take place a certain time after the first one, once the forces of public order had arrived on the spot.

Investigations are thus being oriented in that direction. It is known that two Guyanese are currently being charged with terrorism in the State Security Court and that two others were identified but so far could not be apprehended.

The population of Guadeloupe but also the population of Martinique undeniably suffered a shock and, consciously or not, refuses to recognize the persons behind these criminal actions as members of their communities. And precisely because the people hope very quickly to drive the demons out, precisely because of that everybody wants to have the guilty ones apprehended quickly. But the investigation is not easy because, according to all evidence, the terrorists are few in number, well-trained and well-organized.

During his visit to Martinique and Guadeloupe early this week, Paul Dijoud asserted the determination of the French government to do the utmost to make sure that the guilty persons will be punished, especially since, after the trials represented by the hurricanes, the two departments have every reason to believe in their future.

The ambitious but realistic improvement of the leeward coast of Guadeloupe, new investments for tourism and industry, lead us to think that the French Antilles have numerous assets for the next 10 years; but it is obvious that these assets cannot be utilized effectively except in a climate of confidence and calm, something which precisely prevails on Martinique and Guadeloupe today for the vast majority of the inhabitants.

This is why Paul Dijoud feels that it is above all necessary to reassure the French back home that they are wrong in believing that these acts, with racist overtones, reflect the feeling and the opinion of the local population whereas, on the contrary, these actions are being unanimously condemned.

5058
CSO: 3100

SPANISH PAPER SAYS JOURNALISM MOST DANGEROUS PROFESSION IN L.A.

Mexico City EXCELSIOR in Spanish 23 Aug 80 pp 3-A, 17-A [Text] Madrid, 22 Aug (IPS)--The Madrid newspaper DIARIO 16 published today a lengthy report in which it states that the most dangerous profession in Latin America today is that of journalist.

The report is carried on the front page under the headline "Dictators Against the Press" and is illustrated with photographs of several journalists who have been victims of reprisals in Latin America and with a drawing showing Generals Augusto Pinochet, Jorge R. Videla and Luis Garcia Meza as the worst enemies of freedom of information.

DIARIO 16 cites the resolutions of the Latin American Journalists Federation (FELAP) which carried out a symbolic protest last Tuesday with a work stoppage and 5 minutes of silence in Latin American editorial offices in memory of three Mexican newsmen who were assassinated in El Salvador.

After citing numerous cases of persecution of the press, such as the kidnapping in Chile of Guillermon Hormazabal, director of information services of Radio Chilena; the death of the young reporter Jose Eduardo Jara as a result of torture, also in Chile; the 30-month imprisonment and subsequent expulsion from the country of Jacobo Timerman, former director of LA OPINION of Buenos Aires; the arrest of Oscar Penafranco, vice president of FELAP in Bolivia; and so forth, the report charged that there is an organized campaign to dominate the news media in the contries under totalitarian regimes.

Countries Dangerous for Journalists

The report indicates, based on factual information, that the most dangerous countries for journalists at present are: El Salvador, Chile, Bolivia, Argentina, Guatemala and Uruguay.

The newspaper quotes a statement by Argentine journalist Jacobo Timerman, who has pointed out that "the press can do more for human rights than the Pope, the United Nations and Amnesty International." And it is precisely for that reason that dictators persecute journalists so harshly.

"Aside from the professionals who have been assassinated, imprisoned and tortured in various Latin American countries," the Spanish newspaper says, "there are several thousand who have had to go into exile, many of them taking refuge in embassies. And even today, 7 years after the Pinochet military coup in Chile, there are several hundred journalists who are prevented from returning to their country because they are considered to be 'dangerous to the security of the state,' and several of them have lost their citizenship."

The newspaper DIARIO 16 points out that in spite of everything, journalists are in some ways privileged, since the governments are afraid to harm them because of the international clamor that arises in their defense. But in spite of this Latin American dictatorships such as those of Videla, Pinochet, Garcia Meza and others, prefer to run the risk of protest against them and to eliminate impartial journalists.

DIARIO 16 states that one of Pinochet's first concerns when he staged the coup on 11 September 1973--as the dictator himself discloses in his book "El Dia Decisivo"--was the operation to silence the domestic radio stations. Garcia Meza did the same thing in Bolivia, since even before they had gotten President Lidia Gueiler to sign her resignation the military had occupied the studios of the Catholic radio station FIDES.

DIARIO 16 also points out that dictators are not in favor of holding trials for journalists because they fear that things will come to light which they prefer to keep hidden. This is the case of the Bolivians, who arrested Mary Helen Spooner, a correspondent for the English newspaper FINANCIAL TIMES, in La Paz, Bolivia.

But she was not tried because the proof that she has of ties between the military men who staged the coup and the traffic in drugs might have been aired in public.

"The profession of the journalist," DIARIO 16 concludes, "if not the oldest, is certainly the most dangerous under the totalitarian regimes of Latin America."

9204
CSO: 3010

VIOLA'S LINE OF THOUGHT REVIEWED

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 4 Oct 80 p 11

[Text] A review of the opinions expressed by retired Lt Gen Roberto Viola on topics of institutional or political interest revealed the following items:

Presidential Aspirations: "I have already stated that I do not have much desire to be president." (Report in LA CAPITAL, Mar del Plata, 1/22/80)

"You ask me if I want to be president; if I answer no, very few people will believe it." (Idem)

"If they have forgotten about me in 8 months, it is because they have found a better person." (Idem)

Political Aspirations: "I will not engage in politics in the classical sense, but I will continue striving to ensure a successful development of the Process." (Report in LA CAPITAL, Mar del Plata, 1/22/80)

"To try to exercise power without engaging in politics is utopian and nonsensical." (Speech on occasion of installation of General Nicolaides, 12/17/79)

Status of Process: "The great national effort initiated on 24 March 1976 has successfully completed the first cycle, having triumphed over historically decisive circumstances. Now the final success awaits us." (Military Academy, farewell to generals, 4/11/80)

"If the Process is supposed to lead into a new stage of faith and hope, it should not burn itself out; it should continue even though its development requires the adoption of different forms." (Farewell to Army, 12/26/79)

"Its mission consists of beginning a new historical cycle that will allow Argentina to make a strong debut in the third millenium of our Christian era." (Idem)

"We live in very peculiar circumstances. The country cannot afford to make another mistake, so the Process will take its time in formulating its aspirations. It will take precautions to avoid new frustrations." (Idem)

Institutional Future: "A rejuvenating and hopeful vision of our institutional future, of our country's tomorrow, cannot be made a reality without the active, generous and open support of all Argentines." (Military Academy, farewell to generals, 4/11/80)

"In a freely elected political system, a people's spirit, principles and ideology are reflected. It is the tool which makes it feasible to carry out the necessary actions to realize their hopes." (Farewell to Army, 12/26/79)

"The future should attract all our attention and inspire the best of our intelligence." (Idem)

"To determine honestly if we are democrats, that is, capable of living under the inspiration of those ideals and putting them into practice, even though that involves a constant effort." (Idem)

"If we move forward without letting ourselves be ruled by prejudices about past experiences, without falling into speculative demagoguery about the future to be built; if we act with prudence, reason, honesty and objectivity, Argentina's success is a foregone conclusion." (Idem)

Mission of the Armed Forces: "The Armed Forces will actively participate in all of the Process that leads us to a definitive solution to the Argentine political problem." (Farewell to Army, 12/26/79)

"Military power is not autonomous; it serves a higher authority, the political leadership, which is completely responsible for decisions." (Farewell to Second Army Corps, 12/7/79)

Economic Ideas: "I believe in an economic system based on the philosophy and basic concepts that orient the system applied by the Process." (Farewell to Army, 12/26/79)

"The system, like all systems, should have an operative model with a clear political orientation that will enable us to achieve the objectives that meet the national interest at a given moment." (Idem)

"Such a model should allow maximum use of the nation's resources and its productive capacity, establishing a profile that includes the activities in which we have comparative advantages, as well as those that should be undertaken by the country because of their degree of technology, high aggregate value or strategic importance." (Idem)

Dialog and National Unity: "Through the widespread exchange of opinions, constructive dialog and mutual understanding, we must enrich and strengthen our cherished national unity." (Military Academy, farewell to generals, 4/11/80)

"National unity, which should lead to agreement among Argentines on the ideology and institutional framework that will bring it about, means establishing an accepted political system." (Farewell to Army, 12/26/79)

Political Dialog: "I agree 90 percent with the implementation of political dialog, although I believe that this call, this proposal, should have come 2 years earlier." (Report in LA CAPITAL, Mar del Plata, 1/22/80)

Political Parties: "Fundamental and irreplacable nuclei of the republican system, they have the great responsibility of forming organizations that are representative, that provide valid channels for citizens' concerns and schools for civic education." (Farewell to Army, 12/26/79)

"They should be the focus of reflection about our problems rather than electoral enterprises." (Idem)

"They should resist the temptation to confuse the party with the nation, to believe that an occasional majority implies the right to govern extralegally." (Idem)

"They should propose serious and realistic programs, avoiding utopian promises." (Idem)

"I am convinced that the solution to our political problem is the key to resolve the other issues that concern us." (Idem)

"I am convinced that there can be broad areas of agreement among almost all the parties." (To the foreign press, 12/22/79)

Electoralism: "We must not be lured by the simple idea that politics is an electoral process. This is an important element in a democratic system, but that is not all. If that was true in the past, it should not be in the future." (Speech on occasion of installation of General Nicolaides, 12/17/79)

Peronism: "It will not be able to stay united. Just one act of persecution, which will not happen under any circumstances, could open the possibility of a monolithic unity among that political group." (Report in LA CAPITAL, Mar del Plata, 1/22/80)

"When they were in power they showed, after Peron's death, that they had a propensity for disintegration, disunity; in their case, power divides." (Idem)

Civilian Participation: "Gradualism does not simply mean staggered elections. It goes beyond that, aiming at a daily advancement toward the rule of law and the implementation of civilian participation in government decisions and functions, until there is full civilian rule with no surprises." (Farewell to Army, 12/26/79)

8926
CSO: 3010

BIOGRAPHIC PROFILE OF NEWLY APPOINTED PRESIDENT

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 4 Oct 80 pp 1, 11

[Text] Three different periods can be distinguished in the professional and public career of retired Lieut Gen Roberto Eduardo Viola, named by the Military Junta to serve as president of the nation.

The first consists of his military education in the infantry. He was born in Buenos Aires on 13 October 1924, and entered the Military Academy on 3 March 1942. He graduated from that school on 21 December 1944. The new second lieutenant was assigned to the 27th Infantry Regiment--today the Fifth Regiment--where he served from 1945 to 1951.

From there Viola went to the War College, where in 1954 he was designated Staff Officer. Later he was assigned to command the Third Army--now the First Army Corps--and then went on to become group chief of the Professional Corps School--now the Combat Support Service School--and subsequently he served in the office of the undersecretary of war and the Army General Staff.

In 1959 Viola took the information course for officers, and in 1965, by this time a colonel, he took the advanced strategy course at the Army Center for Higher Learning.

Between 1967 and 1969 he served as adviser to the Argentine delegation to the Inter-American Defense Board, where he worked under Captain Lambruschini. Upon returning to the country, he was named assistant director of the Military Academy, and in December 1971 he was promoted to brigadier general. By that time he was already commander of the Third Infantry Brigade.

Second Period

The second period in the new president's career is that which, because of his responsibilities, began to project his reputation beyond the confines of the military.

On 2 June 1973 he was named second commander and chief of staff of the Second Army Corps, a post he held until 20 December 1973. At that time he was named secretary to the Army commander in chief.

On 20 May 1975 he assumed command of the Second Army Corps, and on 29 August of that year he was promoted to chief of the Army General Staff. In December of 1975 he was promoted to major general.

Lieut Gen Videla, who was a classmate and close friend, named Viola to succeed him as commander in chief of the Army in 1978. Taking that job meant promotion to lieutenant general, which took place on 31 July 1978. At that time he swore that "without conditions, time limits or fixed deadlines, firmly resisting any sort of internal or external pressure, we fervently adhere to the government's program for traveling a peaceful and free road to national unity."

As a member of the highest ranking government agency, the Military Junta, he had the opportunity to experience and participate actively in the most difficult episodes of the border conflict with Chile, and to contribute to the coordination, final drafting and approval of the Political Guidelines.

The Public Man

The public Viola by this time was already a reality; his participation in the National Reorganization Process was obvious, and was based on his firm convictions.

Viola's manifest belief in democratic forms of government (on 20 October 1978 he asserted in Caracas that "Argentina will return to an authentic and real democracy") goes hand in hand with his conviction of the need for a revitalization of these formulas, and his decision not to abandon the task undertaken by the Armed Forces in 1976.

In this regard, his farewell message to the Army (he turned command over to Lieut Gen Galtieri on 28 December last year) is a true indication of these principles.

"We do not have easy times ahead of us. We have passed through just the first stage," he said in that document, "of a hard road that will not be immune to difficulties, troubles and misunderstandings. But it should lead us inexorably to the dawning of a new historical era in this nation. The road taken by the Armed Forces in this process does not and will not have any return route."

He also stated on that occasion: "The Army of which we are a part is the protagonist in a process that has clearly identified its objectives, which imply the establishment of a system in which mankind, liberty, justice, law, institutions, reason, Christian faith, in sum, the entire nation--all are privileged elements."

Third Period

The beginning of the third period of the new president's career can be pegged at the moment he retired from the Army. After that point in time it was considered probable that he would be called upon to succeed Lieut Gen Videla in the 1981-84 presidential term.

Many expectations were based on that probability, because many sectors considered him the most suitable man to lead the expansion of the political liberalization. This is not surprising if we bear in mind that the new president maintained that through the political parties "great agreements will be possible. Their existence is not the issue; it is how their role is to be defined."

Upon leaving the active ranks of the Army, he said: "I do not have much desire to be president, but I would accept the appointment because that is one more act of service." At that time he was responding to a query from a journalist, and he added: "On other occasions I already indicated that I cannot refuse if they name me. You ask me if I want to be president; if I say no, few people will believe me. But at one point I answered that I do not have much desire to be president."

He also claimed on that occasion that he would not engage in politics "in the classic sense," but that he would continue to work so that the Reorganization Process "will be successful."

Thus, he managed to fend off publicity about himself. He plunged into the study of national problems, an attitude which, despite his intention to remain in silence, did not hide from public opinion the increasing likelihood of his candidacy.

Now the Military Junta's decision will make retired Lieut Gen Roberto Eduardo Viola president of the nation as of 29 March next year. It might be worthwhile to note that he once remarked: "The National Reorganization Process is not against a certain social sector, political party or economic system; its purpose is to correct excesses, prevent diversion, and reorder and direct national life; in sum, to facilitate the full development of our potential. There are no institutions that are considered enemies of the Process; its enemies are subversives, dishonest and corrupt people who are responsible for administrative, economic, business or union chaos."

Lt Gen Roberto Eduardo Viola

8926
CSO: 3010

NATIONAL FIGURES COMMENT ON VIOLA APPOINTMENT

Buenos Aires CLARIN in Spanish 5 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] The political and official circles of the nation continued to comment yesterday on the appointment of Lt. Gen Roberto Viola to complete the presidential term that is to begin in March 1981.

There is agreement that the Junta's decision "satisfies expectations." The governor of the province of Buenos Aires, Gen Iberico Saint Jean, indicated that although the appointment was no surprise, the official acceptance "makes the importance of this event crystal clear," he said.

He added: "Changing personnel on all levels leads to new expectations, and is very healthy. Those of us who have been in government more than 4 years are being gradually worn down, so that the only thing we can do is offer our complete cooperation to General Viola."

Juan Carlos Pugliese, minister of economics under Arturo Illia, remarked on the procedure used to choose the future leader. He said: "We are confident this will be the last time this procedure is used. I don't think there is anything more to be said."

The Military Junta's selection was also considered positive by the comptroller of the Justicialist Party in Cordoba, Transito Rigatuso, who stated that "the president will be supported by Argentines," and went on to say that "national unity will be the mainstay of the new government."

Similar ideas were expressed by the former national legislator for the Justicialist Party, Julio Antun. He asserted: "The citizenry will hold its tongue and not commit itself until the nominee draws up his program; only then can a valid opinion be given. I hope, of course, that he will be the last de facto president."

Reasons, Not Emotions

Jorge Aguado, president of Argentine Rural Confederations (CRA), claimed that Viola's appointment "is the best appointment the Military Junta could have made."

He described the future president as "a very steady man who obviously listens to reason and not emotion."

Aguado denied that Viola was a "populist," and rejected reports that he had been offered the post of minister of agriculture in the future government.

The democratic leader of Mendoza, Amadeo Frugoli, expressed his satisfaction because the Junta had decided "long before the anticipated extension was over."

He also pointed out that "the word process implies the existence of a series of stages or successive phases," indicating that Videla and Viola "give the impression of continuity in actions and time."

Jorge Spilimbergo, leader of the Popular Leftist Front (national faction), stated: "The appointment of General Viola at the end of a secretive, conflicting and not entirely democratic process does not alter the continuity of a power that is harmful to the country."

Federico Bravo, leader of the Blockist Party headed by his brother Leopoldo Bravo, current ambassador to the USSR, called General Viola "a democratic man, defender of federalism, upright and serious." He commented: "His appointment is in line with the country's desires; everyone considers him a popular man."

PDP

The Progressive Democratic Party (PDP) issued a statement expressing its concern that General Viola as president should support more participation by civilians in government, advocating a rapid normalization of political parties.

The head of the provincial committee of the Radicals of Mendoza, Alfredo Moso, said that "it is upsetting that the Military Junta took 30 days to select the president of the nation," and expressed his desire "that this be the last military administration."

Menendez Silent

The former commander of the Third Army Corps, Maj Gen Luciano Benjamin Menendez, refused to comment on the appointment of Lieutenant General Viola as president of the nation.

The high official, who is now in retirement, led a military uprising in September 1979 which threatened Viola's position as commander of that military branch. The revolt failed, and Menendez was arrested at a regiment of Curusu Cuatia, in the province of Corrientes.

Menendez lives in the city of Cordoba, and when he was asked about the appointment of the new chief of state, he answered: "Of course I have an opinion on the matter. But I prefer not to make it public now. That is all."

8926
CSO: 3010

VIOLA'S PREDETERMINED PATH TO PRESIDENCY SURVEYED

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 6 Oct 80 pp 8, 20

[From the column "Political Week"]

[Text] Growth of a Reputation

The American ambassadors to Buenos Aires have cultivated a reputation for being among the best informed men in terms of Argentine politics. The most recent of these ambassadors, Dr Raul Castro, has made an appreciable contribution to the growth of this reputation.

In the last quarter of 1979, though quite a while earlier than the end-of-year shuffling of Army personnel, the former American ambassador used to assert more firmly than any other observer in private conversations about the military political process that ended in the official announcement of the day before yesterday: "Videla's successor has already been elected. It is Viola."

Of course the United States intelligence services function in some parts of the world with greater efficiency than American taxpayers have surmised for many years. But in the specific case at hand, it is possible to infer that the conviction of the diplomat who left Buenos Aires in the middle of the year--to accompany President Carter during his election campaign--was based essentially on a personal, objective interpretation of four or five points of reference that were available, to be sure, to any Argentine citizen who was moderately well informed.

From the Beginning

"Ab ovo," as the classics said: that is, from the egg, from the beginning, the presidential destiny of Lieut Gen Viola was so crystal clear that we cannot but assert that his appointment by the Military Junta was an entirely natural and foreseeable event. Only by reducing things to the absurd could one think in recent months of the possibility that someone other than he might occupy the presidency of the nation after Lieut Gen Videla. "Alea jacta est." As we said months ago, the die was cast in the Army, when it was learned that the major generals were advising unanimously that their commander in chief vote for the candidacy of that officer.

But all was not final. The desire for unity among the internal cadres of the Armed Forces runs deep, regardless of differences in leadership that led to Tuesday's delicate entanglement in the Military Junta. That cohesion was what demanded that the final word by the Military Junta on the presidency be awaited; in spite of everything, there is no single institution that is willing to overlook the substantive rules that govern the system that has been in effect since March 1976.

Viola, Onganía, Perón

The contemporary military political history of our country does not contain such a long, reflexive and carefully prepared presidential candidacy as the one which led to the Military Junta's Thursday decision. In a certain sense, it is true that Lieut Gen Viola is one of those officers who have returned to power (the presidency) after having had it before (in the form of the commander in chief of the Army). Before him, this feat was achieved by Lieut Gen Onganía and Juan Perón, the latter after 18 years.

Although Viola's case is, in that sense, more similar to that of Onganía than that of Perón, it is also true that there are some essential differences between the two situations: in the first place, Onganía reached the presidency through a military coup to which two of the four corps commanders were opposed; in the second place, Lieut Gen Viola has been backed by all the commanders of the Army without exception, in his quest for the Casa Rosada, but what is more, his presence in the public eye throughout the first 9 months of 1980 (since he retired as commander in chief) was the official responsibility of the Army. To put it precisely, it was the chiefs and high-ranking officers of the active forces, at the heart of the Army Command, who took it upon themselves during that time, as a military mission, to organize the periodic agenda--discreet but very active--of Lieut Gen Viola's work.

Renewed Expectations

Amid such a well-publicized situation at the heart of the Army, attention was distracted during the last 2 weeks from at least two retired generals, who were mentioned in some circles as "dark horses," as the Americans call the silent candidates who are put in at the last minute. These generals decided to detract from the capricious comments involving them.

The man who will be the next president of the nation has been described in the past 48 hours by international news agencies as a genuine democrat, or as one of the Argentine military officers with the most firm resolve to come to grips with the reconstruction of the nation's republican institutions.

For now, the sum of the statements made by political leaders upon learning of the decision of the Military Junta has been basically one of renewed expectations, not rejection. Among the voices raised to express satisfaction with the Military Junta's appointment was that of the minister of economics.

It was not for nothing that the minister had met with Lieut Gen Viola at a crucial moment during the Junta's deliberations, some 3 weeks earlier, even as some of the secretaries of state in his sector were openly opposing the idea of Lieut Gen Viola's being chosen by the Military Junta, and were rejecting the very possibility. When the cards were revealed, however, fate had dealt a winning hand to Viola, despite the evidence to the contrary which those officials and their allies had claimed to see.

1981 Budget

As we reported in yesterday's edition, Lieut Gen Viola will not make any statement before 15 October. Therefore, it would be useful as an orientation to the economic situation to note some recent events.

One of those events, which has not been thoroughly examined yet, [words missing]

There were undoubtedly many varied reasons for the man who has now been named the next president by the Military Junta to sidestep the issue under those circumstances. Some of those reasons would probably be found in an examination of the internal policy of the Army between 1976 and 1979.

It is well known that the situation in the upper echelons of the Army in 1976 forced Lieut Gen Videla to assume the presidency while retaining the post of commander in chief. Thus, one of the agreements made with the other branches of the military concerning the separation of the offices of president and commander in chief, had to be put off.

Unity and Pluralism

Lieut Gen Viola will be taking office a little more than 5 years after those events. From that point on he has had many opportunities to demonstrate his unusual patience for dealing with the tangled web of politics. Nothing has been easy for him, but he has progressed slowly, leaving behind obstacles which seemed unsurmountable in 1976, 1977 and 1978. This weekend there was no indication in any of the upper ranks of the three military branches that the suspense that had been deliberately maintained nearly until the end of September regarding Viola's candidacy, was anything more than just that: pure suspense, something which had its own political value independently of the results.

But the unforeseen events that took place between Monday and Tuesday, when the logical sequence of the collective behavior of the Military Junta was broken, ended up, it could be said, from the military point of view, giving Lieut Gen Viola an even clearer path to the Casa Rosada than was expected. Since Viola has not exactly been the fruit of his own efforts, it can be deduced that chance has at least been among his most effective allies during this process.

Meanwhile, it should be recalled that the Military Junta was bogged down for a couple of months between the summer and autumn of 1978 before it reelected Lieut Gen Videla. To reelect him it was necessary to call a meeting of the Plenary Junta. Thus, the Military Junta managed to come to a quicker and less risky decision at the beginning of this week, despite the dilemma.

In Lieut Gen Videla's recent speech in Mercedes, whole paragraphs can be found which his successor would not hesitate to endorse. The most significant ones refer to the need to reaffirm national unity and to defend the type of pluralist structure which characterizes Argentine nationality.

8926
CSO: 3010

'DER SPIEGEL' INTERVIEWS FORMER PRESIDENT GUEILER

DW281454 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 27 Oct 80 pp 185-192

[Interview with Lidia Gueiler, former Bolivian president, by Jutta Fischbeck--at Gueiler's daughter's home near Paris, date not given]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mrs Gueiler, during the summer you were forced to flee to the Papal Embassy in the Bolivian capital La Paz to escape the rebellious military men of your country. How did you manage your departure into exile?

Lidia Gueiler: The foreign press, I think in Chile, shortly after the coup published something that the Bolivian military people did not like. The military people then charged me with having misused the right to asylum and continued to detain me. The diplomatic corps and the Nuncio as its doyen then intervened time and again with the Foreign Ministry on my behalf, and finally they were successful.

SPIEGEL: Were you specifically threatened by the government while you were at the Papal Embassy?

Lidia Gueiler: The interior minister of the military government told the Nuncio that he could not guarantee in any way that I would safely make it to the airport from the Papal Embassy. But, thanks to the firmness of the Nuncio and the Bolivian church in defending human rights, I was allowed to leave the country after all.

SPIEGEL: Is it true that the planned television broadcast on your forced resignation could not be made at first because you showed visible traces of having been mistreated?

Lidia Gueiler: Naturally my appearance showed the burden which the coup, which seemed to me to be a monstrous treason, was on me. I looked very tired and unhappy and I felt so utterly powerless.

SPIEGEL: Were you tormented physically?

Lidia Gueiler: No. But after 30 years of political struggle for the liberation of the Bolivian people and a mere 19 days prior to the transfer of governmental power to a government that emerged from free elections I would never have voluntarily surrendered power to the military.

I was practically put under arrest in the presidential residence, I could not leave. Soldiers were posted in front of every door. When they brought me the prepared resignation statement they told me that I should sign to avoid greater bloodshed, that the seizure of power had been decided on anyway.

SPIEGEL: In the 155 years since your country's independence about 200 coups d'etat have been staged, most of them by military people. This is more than in any other country on the Latin American continent, which is not particularly poor when it comes to coups anyway. Why is this so?

Lidia Gueiler: This is attributable to the fact that the military men regrettably have turned their institution into a political party. Time and again generals have had the ambition of crowning their military career with the office of the president. This personal hunger for power leads to incessant violent revolutions.

SPIEGEL: But are there not any historical or sociological reasons for this phenomenon as well?

Lidia Gueiler: I believe that the personal quest for power on the part of the military is the main reason. In most cases the military men used the office of president for personal enrichment. A normal soldier in Bolivia does not earn much. This is why military people have always been a willing instrument in the hands of those wielding economic power.

SPIEGEL: Could you, under these circumstances, ever seriously expect that the military people would not try to stage a coup against you?

Lidia Gueiler: I was so optimistic as to believe just that. I think it was my mistake that I believed their word. If you are decent and keep your promises, you always believe that others do also. Besides, during the 8 months of my term of office I was practically a dike against the constant desire for coups. Had I not had my political experience and a great deal of patience, the coup would probably have come earlier.

SPIEGEL: What caused you to take charge of the office of president in such an explosive situation?

Lidia Gueiler: I had become the president of the House of Deputies and ultimately of congress. After the last elections parliament unanimously agreed to appoint me transitional president because nobody had emerged the clear victor from the elections and because the parties failed to reach agreement on a candidate. I believed at the time that jointly with the political forces that put me into this office I might save democracy.

SPIEGEL: Basically you owe your office as president to the inability of the political parties to agree on one of the candidates who were running. Is this weakness not also a reason why the military people time and again interfere in politics?

Lidia Gueiler: During the preceding 7 years of military dictatorship, all political parties and democratic institutions had been smashed. The advocates of democracy were still disorganized. This is but natural. But the dispersion of the parties at that time inflicted great harm indeed on the process of democratization. The group egotism of the parties was extremely lamentable. I believe that this reflected a lack of political maturity and political perspective.

[DW281523] SPIEGEL: Did the military people ever definitely promise you that they would not meddle with the democratization process?

Lidia Gueiler: Yes, to me as well as to the political parties. General Garcia Meza, for example, who later headed the coup, expressly assured me, at the time I was forced to appoint him supreme commander of the ground forces, that he intended to secure democracy from this post. Nevertheless, he subsequently threatened me with coups time and again.

SPIEGEL: Your critics accuse you of having failed to take any protective measures even though another coup was to be expected. Were you unable to take them or were you reluctant to take them?

Lidia Gueiler: I could not have achieved anything at all against the armed forces by myself. The only power that backed me was parliament, and it ultimately dissolved itself under the pressure of the military.

SPIEGEL: But as the president you were simultaneously the supreme commander of the armed forces. In that capacity could you not have made timely transfers of military men into retirement or to outside posts who were known to be hatching plans for a coup?

Lidia Gueiler: I tried in the beginning. I offered an ambassadorial post to Gen Garcia Meza, as I did to the incumbent minister of the interior, Col Arce Gomez. Arce Gomez had accepted, too; he wanted to go to Spain. But then he had previously talked with Garcia Meza and the other putschists, and they told him to stay.

SPIEGEL: Did Arce Gomez seem to you to be the most dangerous of them?

Lidia Gueiler: I have had tips that he instigated acts of sabotage.

SPIEGEL: What kind of acts of sabotage?

Lidia Gueiler: Bombing attempts, for instance. And I told him so quite frankly.

SPIEGEL: And did he admit it?

Lidia Gueiler: No, naturally not. But he said, if you want me to go abroad, I will go. As I said earlier, nothing came of it. Garcia Meza and the other putschists then worked toward a coup d'etat by stating that "extremists" were bringing arms into the country to liquidate the armed forces. Since the armed forces consider themselves mainly a military caste, this kind of propaganda was very well suited to preparing the terrain for the coup.

SPIEGEL: Was Gen Garcia Meza acting out of personal ambition, or for ideological reasons?

Lidia Gueiler: Out of personal ambition. He has no ideological pretentions. When I took over, I confirmed most members of the general staffs in the commands they held, but at the request of some party leaders I did not confirm Gen Garcia Meza. He was angry with me from that time on.

SPIEGEL: The military regimes in Chile, Brazil and Argentina were at least temporarily actively supported by the big brother, the United States. Bolivia's military, however, seems to have staged the coup against the explicit wish of Washington. How did Washington try to prevent the coup?

Lidia Gueiler: American Ambassador Weissman was personally very much concerned by the continual rumors about a coup. As far as I can judge, the United States in this case really followed Carter's democratization policy for Latin America.

SPIEGEL: Who supports, who finances the Bolivian military government?

Lidia Gueiler: I think the countries who do not care much about Latin America.

SPIEGEL: Argentina is said to have supplied money and arms.

Lidia Gueiler: I cannot prove that. But those who pull the strings probably belong to regimes which are not interested in Bolivia's becoming democratic.

SPIEGEL: When the military staged the coup, the people in the streets and in the tin mines fought against the tanks. It was to no avail....

Lidia Gueiler: The Bolivian people had no other weapon than their hope for democracy. These are helpless people without arms, almost without a political organization, who can do nothing against a long prepared and excellently planned coup d'etat.

SPIEGEL: The miners tried it at least. They retired to the tin mines and took along dynamite.

Lidia Gueiler: And they were the ones who bled the most.

SPIEGEL: Helpless people and armed forces doing what they want--that is a routine affair not only in Bolivia, but also in many other Latin American countries. How do you explain it that democracy is so weak on that continent?

Lidia Gueiler: Democracy is possible only if the people are educated in a democratic way, which is very costly. It is possible only if the ruling class shows maturity.

[DW281544] SPIEGEL: Most Latin American states, contrary to other countries of the Third World, have been independent for 1-1/2 centuries. They have had much experience with regard to democratic forms of government. And yet, the military always wins and the politicians lose. Why?

Lidia Gueiler: Because the military regimes are backed by powerful economic interests, and because the military is mainly interested in economic power.

SPIEGEL: When you were young, you fought in the national revolutionary movement of President Victor Paz Estenssoro, which in 1952 initiated in Bolivia the first social revolution of South America. The military have stopped that process, and the majority of the people, the Indios, are as poorly off as ever. Paz once said that "only violence will help in such a case." Do you think so too?

Lidia Gueiler: I am not an advocate of violence, but a revolution sometimes calls for violence.

SPIEGEL: And now? The trade unions have been dissolved, the parties suppressed and the politicians arrested or persecuted or they are in exile.

Lidia Gueiler: I think that most of all we must make great efforts to reorganize our forces. Without an organization even violence would be of no use.

SPIEGEL: Are there advocates of democracy in the Bolivian armed forces, despite everything else?

Lidia Gueiler: Not all military people agree with the way of our armed forces look today. The institutionalists prefer the army to consider itself only as an institution for the defense of the country.

SPIEGEL: And how strong are they?

Lidia Gueiler: Their intellectual capacity is stronger than their fighting strength.

SPIEGEL: The others have the rifles and will shoot at their own people in an emergency.

Lidia Gueiler: This is why I say that most importantly we must reorganize.

SPIEGEL: Aren't you afraid that history will simply repeat itself? Parties, trade unions and politicians will reorganize, trying to come to power in a democratic way, and then the next military coup will come?

Lidia Gueiler: We must therefore learn from experience. The military, for example, have arrested all the powerful trade union leaders this time. Had the trade unions been better organized down to the lower level, the next rank of cadres could have taken over immediately, so that the organization could have continued to exist underground. I know that at this moment they are about to learn exactly that and will carry on.

SPIEGEL: Emilio Sanchez, the Hamburg consul general dispatched by your government, has fought in vain against the recognition of the military regime. Now the La Paz regime demands his extradition. What would happen to him in case of extradition? Would he be imprisoned?

Lidia Gueiler: Certainly. And not just that. If he were extradited it would bring him into the gravest danger. Such a politically motivated request for extradition is juridically impossible.

SPIEGEL: Mrs Gueiler, you were the first woman who ever held the office of president in Bolivia, and that in an extremely difficicult political situation when the attempt was being made to reintroduce democracy into Bolivia. Did the military believe that a woman could be manipulated more easily?

Lidia Gueiler: At that time the military had no other choice than to accept me. If they thought they could have manipulated me, they could have staged a coup earlier. Some of the military probably admired that I managed to stay on so long.

SPIEGEL: Did they act differently toward you than they would have toward a male president?

Lidia Gueiler: The military always act like the military, regardless of whether it is toward a man or a woman.

SPIEGEL: Probably not always. Some weeks prior to the coup an officer broke into your private rooms at night to force you to resign. Would he have done it if you had been a man?

Lidia Gueiler: Possibly, but the officer would probably not have gotten away as he did.

SPIEGEL: He would have been shot?

Lidia Gueiler: Exactly.

SPIEGEL: And what did you do?

Lidia Gueiler: If I had a weapon, I would have shot him too.

SPIEGEL: Mrs Gueiler, we thank you for this discussion.

CSO: 3103

INTERIOR MINISTER'S DRUG CONNECTIONS WITH MILITARY CITED

Sao Paulo VEJA in Portuguese 8 Oct 80 p 72

[Article by Luiz Claudio Cunha: "The Minister of Cocaine"]

[Text] La Paz--During the first week of July this year, a two-engine Piper-Azteca aircraft exploded over a village 14 kilometers from La Paz and killed its three passengers. Near the bodies, Bolivian police found several suitcases containing $2 million in $50 and $100 bills. Intrigued, they were examining the baggage when a helicopter landed amidst the wreckage and the owner of the air-taxi company that owned the Piper aircraft stepped out: it was Col Luis Arce Gomez, then chief of the Army Intelligence Service (SIE). He brusquely tore up the report the police were writing, ordering them to return to La Paz and maintain absolute silence about the episode.

This year alone, three of Arce's aircraft were destroyed in tragedies that have never been explained--in Bolivia, affairs of the colonel, minister of the interior since the takeover by Gen Luis Garcia Meza, are not subject to investigation by the police. "El Loco," as he is called by his barracks comrades, or "Arcesino" to his countless enemies, Col Luis Arce Gomez, 42, is a veteran lawbreaker. In the Rene Barrientos government, while still a captain, he was implicated in smuggling leather and cigarettes into Paraguay. As he acquired more gold braid, he was also rising through the ranks of contraband traffic. Today, Arce is the brains of the military men involved in the billion-dollar cocaine trade.

Arce's girlfriend, Rosario Poggi de Quesada, an attractive brunette of 37 who smuggled narcotics between Spain and Bolivia during the 1970's, is, officially, the secretary general of the Interior Ministry and, unofficially, second in command of the colonel's clandestine empire. Norberto "Bubby" Salomon, air-force colonel and Arce's partner in air-transport companies, is also accumulating positions in the government and in the illegal organization headed by the interior minister. After the successful coup led by Garcia Meza, Bubby Salomon was rewarded with the post of military attache in Caracas. In May, one of Salomon's aircraft had crashed at the Beni airport with 320 kilograms of cocaine aboard.

In Bolivia, a colonel's pay is equivalent to about $800. But Salomon owns three farms and three rented homes in La Paz. As have most of the military officers who conduct the drug trade, Salomon has served in Santa Cruz de la Sierra, center of cocaine traffic in Bolivia. From Santa Cruz come rebel generals headed for La Paz and cocaine bound for the rest of the world.

Night Landings

Last June, at a meeting with Santa Cruz cocaine magnates, Gen Hugo Echeverria, commandant of the II Army Corps based in that city, was given a donation of $2.7 million to overthrow the government and drive out the specter of traffic repression. Echeverria promised Garcia Meza he would raise the $3 billion needed to pay off the nation's foreign debt with a groups of friends--"My friends from Montero," according to the general. Montero, 45 kilometers from Santa Cruz, is virtually the first free-trade zone for cocaine on Bolivian territory.

Outside of Bolivia, friends of Arce are always subject to unexpected happenings. Alfredo "Cutuchi" Gutierrez, owner of a landing strip at kilometer 7 on the Santa Cruz-Cochabamba highway surrounded by high walls and equipped with searchlights perfect for night landings, was arrested in Miami during May of last year piloting an aircraft loaded with cocaine. He wasn't in jail more than 24 hours--but the case alerted Colonel Arce to the special precautions that must be taken in Miami, the main point of entry for drugs in the United States.

At the present time, Bolivia has six consuls in Miami--one of them is Arce's father. All of them were chosen personally by the interior minister, who is afraid of diplomatic slipups, but seems convinced that he is not exposed to unforeseen economic reprisals from the U.S. government.

At a recent party given by friends in La Paz, Colonel Arce quite enthusiastically summed up the figures on which his confidence is based. "Tin represents $400 million a year, but cocaine brings in $1.2 billion," the interior minister explained. "If the Americans cut off their aid, it won't be my fault if the United States is flooded with cocaine."

8834
CSO: 5300

EXILED COLONEL TERMS BRAZILIAN LIBERALIZATION A FARCE

Press Conference

Caracas TRIBUNA POPULAR in Spanish 12-18 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] Caracas--"The democratic opening so loudly proclaimed by the military government in Brazil is a farce," declared Col Jefferson Cardim de Alencar Osorio during a press conference held in this capital.

Col Jefferson de Alencar Osorio is the well-known member of the Brazilian Armed Forces who recently requested and was granted asylum in the Venezuelan Embassy in Brasilia. He is thinking of remaining in our country at least a year and then continuing in other countries the struggle he began some 15 years ago in Brazil when he had to take up arms in defense of constitutional order violated by previous comrades in arms when they overthrew President Joao Goulart.

From that time on, 25 March 1965, there began a period of armed struggle, initially conventional and, after being betrayed, in the guerrillas. Initially defeated and arrested, he was freed in 1977 after 10 years in prison.

With the new situation that apparently had developed in Brazil with the approval of the amnesty law, his military rank had been recognized and he had even been promoted to general.

"The Military Supreme Court not only canceled that decision but I was accused of being a terrorist," he explained. "That left me without any guarantee in Brazil. My amnesty was canceled and I had to resort to asylum. I immediately resorted to the Venezuelan Embassy."

As proof also of the fraudulent nature of the so-called "democratic opening" in Brazil, he said that only 700 or the 7,500 militarymen subject to the law were amnestied. "And only 34 of them in the whole armed forces were readmitted into the service."

Furthermore, it was an amnesty granted also so that all the political exiles might return, but they are not permitted to carry out political activities.

"It can be seen that there is pressure on the people and there are still political prisoners; you cannot carry out a public demonstration in the street; political rallies can only be held in certain places and with the permission of the police. Nor can one attack or speak out against the government," declared Colonel Alencar Osorio.

The prominent democratic fighter related also that the "opening" has been denounced by the opposition press as a formula conceived by the government to improve its image abroad while repression continues at home.

He added that "up to now the government has not dissolved the organs of repression of the armed forces or the paramilitary civilian organizations. The torture apparatus remains untouched."

The Brazilian colonel also referred to his struggles, to the armed movements that have taken place in Brazil, as well as other aspects of the political situation there, which we will report on in our next edition.

Further Comments

Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p D-18

[Reportage by Mario Villegas]

[Text] In 1948, as an active service Brazilian Army officer, Jefferson Cardim traveled to Montevideo to marry the Uruguayan Rosa de Osorio, his present wife, whom he had met in Libramento on the border between Uruguay and Brazil. On his return to Brazil, he was unexpectedly arrested. Cardim had been married on 3 January, a date on which coincidentally a testimonial had been given in honor of the Brazilian communist leader, Luis Carlos Prestes, on the occasion of his birthday. The commander under whom Jefferson Cardim served associated the latter's trip with the tribute to the communist leader and for that reason had him arrested.

But that would not be the first or last time that Colonel Jefferson Cardim de Alencar Osorio would be arrested. Earlier, in August 1943, he was arrested after making a speech against the dictatorship of Getulio Vargas and carrying out political activities against Nazi-fascism. He was a fierce enemy of the Brazilian exponents of that philosophy and fought them without respite. Later he was also arrested on various occasions in the course of his checkered political-military career, because in Brazil, unlike Venezuela, the military could participate in political activity. Except that since the overthrow of the constitutional government of Joao Goulart in 1964 only the rightist militarymen can be politically active.

The Colonel Is in Caracas

Colonel Jefferson Cardim is currently in Caracas following the diplomatic asylum granted him by the Venezuelan Government because of the persecution and death threats he has undergone recently in Brazil. He is accompanied by his oldest son, Roberto Osorio, a lawyer, who together with the well-known Brazilian historian and jurist, Decio Freitas, is pressing the defense of the veteran 68-year-old colonel. His son will go to Brazil again shortly to appeal before the Supreme Military Tribunal against a perverted decision of which Cardim was the victim and by which he was declared a "terrorist" and excluded from the benefits of the amnesty law promulgated on 28 August 1979. Then they will resort to the Supreme Court, certain that they will not win in the Supreme Military Tribunal.

Cardim said that he requested asylum in the Venezuelan Embassy certain that the democratic regime of President Herrera Compins would protect him from the political and military persecution in Brazil. At other times, he has taken asylum in Uruguay, Mexico and Algeria. He had never been in Venezuela before. Colonel Jefferson Cardim made his public presentation to the Venezuelan press at the headquarters of the National Press Association where, in half Portuguese and half Spanish and helped by his son Roberto, who is quite fluent in Spanish, he spoke about the vicissitudes that his rebellious fate has brought him.

The Guerrillas

On 31 March 1964, there occurred the coup d'etat commanded by General Humberto de Castello Branco that overthrew the nationalist and constitutional government of Joao Goulart. At that time, Colonel Jefferson Cardim was in Montevideo where he occupied a diplomatic position that had been entrusted to him. One month before, Cardim had communicated from Montevideo with his friend, General Argemiro Assis Brasil, chief of Goulart's Military Household. "Give me a command, Argemiro, we must prevent the coup," Cardim said; to which his friend replied: "It is too late, Jefferson. Goulart no longer listens to me; we are lost. Stay in Montevideo, you are already in exile."

Joao Goulart arrived in Montevideo in exile, as did Leonel Brizola, who had been governor of the state of Rio Grande do Sul. After meeting with Jefferson Cardim, plans began to be prepared to install a democratic government in the state of Rio Grande do Sul, Cardim related, since Jango (as Goulart is popularly called) had great support there and two-thirds of the army forces were quartered there, the majority of them loyal to the ousted president, similarly the militia. Nevertheless, the military resistance did not prevail.

"On the morning of 26 March 1965, we carried out "Operation Tres Pasos" under my command, which meant taking the city of Tres Pasos, which would be the beginning of the seizure of barracks and the government of the state of Rio Grande do Sul. I had some 40 men and only 4 hunting rifles, 2 Colt 38's and my Colt 45. We assaulted the military detachment and seized the arms in addition to getting some 30 persons, including officers and men, to join us. We took the radio station and issued a proclamation written by me, which I signed as commander of the National Liberation Armed Forces (FALN). It was the first armed guerrilla movement against the dictatorial regime."

After that they carried out other military actions and the detachments of Tenente Portela and Oporan were taken. Colonel Cardim recalls then that "the other forces committed to the uprising and loyal to Goulart and Brizola lost their nerve and the general uprising did not occur." He related that they had no other alternative than to continue to carry out guerrilla actions with some 25 men whom he thought of leading to Mato Grosso; but he was unable to reach it because there was a fight with the troops of the Third Army in which they were defeated.

From there they escaped and dispersed. Cardim was arrested on 28 March 1965 when he was reported by the brother of a farmer who had given him food and lodging.

The colonel was tortured and then sentenced to 10 years in prison. He served 3 years of that sentence in the first phase, because he escaped from prison and took asylum in Mexico, from where he went to Algeria. In the course of a later trip to Montevideo with a stop in Buenos Aires, he was arrested by the Argentine authorities and turned over to the Brazilian Government. He then served the second phase of his sentence, 7 years, after which he devoted himself to fighting for general amnesty.

The Democratic Opening: A Farce

When the amnesty law went into effect, Cardim was reintegrated in the rank that he would have had if he had continued in his military career: major general retired, receiving the corresponding benefits and economic and social prerogatives. Nevertheless, his case was reconsidered and the Supreme Military Tribunal canceled his amnesty and began to consider him not as a politician but as a common criminal and terrorist. After that came the threats on his life and military persecution. That is when he decided to seek asylum in the Venezuelan Embassy in Brasilia.

"I will continue my struggle abroad, denouncing the violation of the amnesty law, the violation of human rights and demonstrating that the 'democratic opening' in Brazil is a farce.

"Suffice it to read the Rio and Sao Paulo newspapers," the colonel said, "to be aware of how the sinister 'Death Squadron' continues to operate with the same violence as before, coldly murdering alleged criminals." Referring to the participation of the left in Brazilian political life, within the so-called opening, he said:

"The military who are in key positions, especially the army generals, do not allow a party having a pinkish hue, with nationalistic or anti-imperialistic tendencies, or with a socialist base to be legalized. Much less the Brazilian Communist Party, which was the only one that continued to operate underground and now has a little freedom with the return to Brazil of some of its members and Central Committee leaders, such as Luis Carlos Prestes, but it cannot obtain legalization, nor has it been permitted to carry out any political propaganda or have headquarters in all of the national territory and it is proscribed as a party," he said.

He said also that the economic policy imposed by the International Monetary Fund has sown hunger among more than 30 million farmers. "We have to alert the people to the struggle," he said, indicating the course. "The vote is now our only weapon inasmuch as the firearms are in the service of reaction." He charged that Brazil's foreign debt exceeds $60 billion and that inflation has increased more than 100 percent. "We have to eradicate imperialism from our country and mobilize all the people to achieve a constituent assembly that will elect a government of popular representation with all political parties, including the Brazilian Communist Party."

Colonel Jefferson Cardim de Alencar Osorio is now in Venezuela where he is thinking of settling permanently. His wife Rosa de Osorio, 52 years old, will come to join him soon. The guerrilla colonel, with straight gray hair, a penetrating look and youthful smile, will soon begin to write his memoirs about his arduous revolutionary life, which he is thinking of publishing in Caracas. His son, Roberto, will leave him here since he also has an important task: He is undertaking the legal defense of his father in Brazil.

Jefferson Cardim rises, checks the buttons of aquamarine double-breasted jacket and firmly shakes the reporter's hand.

8711
CSO: 3010

FIGUEIREDO CONFIRMS DETERMINATION TO DEVELOP DEMOCRACY

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 26 Sep 80 p 3

[Text] Florianopolis--President Joao Figueiredo, speaking yesterday in Tubarao, Santa Catarina, said that his determination to establish a democracy in Brazil will not waver "however many bombs they may toss at the head of the government."

The president of the republic, criticizing those who doubt that he is in a position to keep his promises, reiterated that there will be direct elections in 1982, and he recalled that he has invariably responded to the unbelievers with facts.

Speaking to representatives of the state government, the municipal administration and Santa Catarina businessmen, President Joao Figueiredo said:

"They say I have made many promises, many claims, which I am not in a position to keep. But they said that about amnesty, about the political normalization of the country, about freedom of expression and freedom of the press. They said this about the multi-party system. And still they dare to say it now about direct elections. To all of these doubts, within the situational potential of the country, I have responded with facts. No one can accuse me of having avoided any of the promises I made as a candidate. Despite the attacks, sometimes unjust and even slanderous, I remain committed to those promises I made, to establish the democracy which is possible for Brazil in this country."

In conclusion he said:

"May heaven allow me to return to this state at the end of my term in office to say that I have kept those promises, so that Santa Catarina can in fact emerge from this interim period and play the role it deserves in the national context."

Detente

President Figueiredo landed in Tubarao at 1050 hours, and he was applauded along the route to the local plant by more than 2,000 persons. But it was at the modest municipal airport that the atmosphere of detente which would mark this visit to Santa Catarina was evident. A number of people gathered early to await the president, and immediately after landing, Figueiredo abandoned the route leading to the bus and mixed with the small crowd. For 15 minutes he shook hands and embraced citizens, kissing women and children and entirely upsetting the plans of the security agents, who found themselves enveloped by the throng.

The president made himself available once again at lunch with the ELETROSUL [Southern Electric Power Plants] employees' association. He even left the table and went outside to acknowledge the loud applause of some hundreds of persons who had gathered outside the building.

Visit to Criciuma

At 1500 hours, the president arrived in Criciuma and proceeded immediately to the Sangao mine, where he pushed the button putting it into operation. As he was preparing to leave the platform, a reporter presented him with a Porto Alegre association jersey (the team for which Figueiredo roots), and asked him three questions, the first about the role of Santa Catarina with regard to the energy question.

"The Santa Catarina coal and the Rio Grande do Sul coal," he answered, "are so important that I have reserved a third of the resources of the energy mobilization program for coal. The alternatives in the Brazilian energy program do not lie in PROALCOOL [National Alcohol Program] alone. We will get there."

The next question concerned the conflict between Iraq and Iran.

"It has serious implications for us," he said. "But I do not believe it will last long. I think the conflict will come to an end soon. But in any case, it may have serious consequences for us, because we are importing 340,000 barrels a day from there. If the supply is interrupted, there will be serious consequences for the country."

In conclusion, a reporter asked when the president expects the first results of the investigation of the attacks.

"Well," the president responded, "I am not the police, am I? But do you know, I wish I were?"

5157
CSO: 3001

BRIZOLA PROPOSES OPPOSITION GROUP FORUM AS ALTERNATIVE

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 21 Sep 80 p 5

[Interview with Democratic Labor Party President Leonel Brizola by Orivaldo Perrin, date and place not given]

[Text] Rio de Janeiro--The power system in the country has reached a crossroads. The democratic alternative proposed by the Figueiredo government will either become concrete or it will collapse once and for all. The current economic model, if it is to be maintained, has to be bolstered by a rigid dictatorship. A social impasse has been reached: the nation wants an end, a response to terrorist acts, and the government is not acting. This crossroads could be found within the armed forces, where there is said to be a group of authoritarian officers who want to guide the nation.

This is what the president of the Democratic Labor Party (PDT), Leonel Brizola, thinks. Five days ago he obtained temporary registration of his party with the TSE [Supreme Electoral Court], and he is now embarking on a new stage in the career he has outlined for himself since his return to the country.

In this interview, the former governor of Rio Grande do Sul proposed the establishment of a forum of opposition groups to confront the government, with representatives of all the parties. "This may not yet be the solution," Brizola commented, "but it is a real alternative for bringing us to power. And the time has come: the government is indecisive and vague, and owes the people innumerable political, social and economic clarifications. We need to exorcise the demons contained among us and begin to act, for otherwise we will end up accustomed to this fox-in-the-chicken-house democracy."

First Step

The main passages of the interview follow.

[Question] As a slogan and a party, is the PDT just in its infancy?

[Answer] We have obtained our provisional registration with the TSE. This is the second party we laborites have formed in accordance with the requirements of the law. The first was under our old name. When we read reports of the possible disqualification of the PDT, we laugh among ourselves. The fact is we find it easier to organize the party now than it was earlier.

We find more people prepared to join with us, even in Sao Paulo. The dispossession from which we suffered awakened a reaction of solidarity within the Brazilian people. It was easy to see that the real party was neglected with the intent of benefiting a group the government could manipulate through the Machiavellianism of General Golbery. Today this problem has practically been dealt with. Many weep over our losses, but they were only on the level of cadres. Many electoralists, opportunists and the "physiologists" left. All of the short-sighted people.

The Right Wing

[Question] What type of short-sightedness do you mean?

[Answer] The right-wing team. Our losses were on the right-wing side. We had none on the left. And this is very significant, because it represents for us a purge, particularly in view of the nature of the new party we are building.

The new name expresses more faithfully our doctrine and the program we are presenting for Brazil today. The modern labor path is the Brazilian path to democratic socialism. The data available to us shows that the labor movement, as a popular trend in our country, as an intelligible formulation by the people, has not fallen into the trap laid by the government.

As a party, we do not represent an immediate alternative for power. In the medium time range we do. Our initial work is oriented toward the small municipal and state administrations and the legislatures.

While we are proceeding through this period of formation and affirmation within the national context, our logical path calls for joint action with the other parties and factions within the opposition. I believe that the new aspect in this country is in the opposition sector. The current regime, responsible as it is for these 16 years of omissions, errors, compromise and inhuman acts, has nothing more to offer the nation. It is spent. It has exhausted itself. It led the country to a situation of distortion and impasse, crisis and dependence, such as we had never before experienced. However much effort it may make, it no longer has public credibility. The little which remains for the present regime is the opportunity for concrete action, since it is in power. But in the realm of hope, nothing more is possible.

Moreover, this regime has been one of the aged and elderly. Its inspirers were members of a generation which preceded mine considerably. Some of the personages who founded the regime and have been influencing it up to the present were already active in Brazilian politics in the year when I was born, as is the case with Marshal Cordeiro de Farias and even former President Geisel. I once saw in a foreign country a photograph of General Geisel and some of his aides. At first glance I thought it was one of those photographs of Kremlin personalities. The alternative for the opposition must be like a still-unknown passage through some kind of gorge situated between two inaccessible and undesirable obstacles for the Brazilian people. On the one hand you have the perplexities, lack of definition and sleight-of-hand characteristic of the government, and on the other hand the authoritarian pockets with their concealed intentions of promoting a return to arbitrary action, as these terrorist attempts demonstrate.

The Open Political Approach

[Question] In your view, who would hinder the more open political approach?

[Answer] I have thought about this a great deal. Would it be the armed forces, which cultivates authoritarianism in its internal structures and has this unjust and unacceptable desire to control a nation of 120 million persons? First of all, it is natural for them to be concerned that the socioeconomic changes imposed should be carried out in orderly fashion. On this there is a consensus, a unanimous view: no one wants chaos or anarchy. Secondly, there is the problem of revanchism, the feeling of rancor and the desire for vengeance. I have traveled throughout this country and I can say with certainty that the Brazilian people are not interested in any type of revanchism. Our people want only a solution to their afflictions and for the country. Thirdly, there is a question of stability and pluralism. Now the people have been proving to be the greatest factor in stability. A study was made to determine this. The people abhor terrorism, attempted coups, and any kind of surprising action. The people cultivate hope and not despair. In fourth place I would put a question of great importance concerning the role of the concerns of the armed forces. It is a question of seeking a serious and realistic democratic alternative for the country. To pursue the commitments and accept the formulae and models of these last 15 years I think can only be done with more dictatorship, because it would have to be through an imposition against the will of the majority of the people. It seems I am taking up a taboo subject, that of the armed forces, but I think it will be beneficial for the building of democracy. We need to exorcise all kinds of demons. The alternative for power I imagine will have to be realistic on another point too: if it takes too leftist a direction, it cannot be assimilated by the Brazilian people as a whole. Brazil is neither Nicaragua nor Iran.

5157
CSO: 3001

NAVY MINISTER EXAMINES DOMESTIC, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

Terrorism Assessed

Rio de Janeiro MANCHETE in Portuguese 27 Sep 80 pp 112-113

[Interview with Minister of Navy Eduardo da Silva Fonseca Maximiano by Haroldo Hollanda; date and place not given]

[Text] Admiral Maximiano Fonseca, minister of navy, gives assurance that nothing will deter President Joao Figueiredo in his determination to promote the perfecting of democracy, but he admits that the more open political approach makes the battle against inflation difficult. He condemns and is saddened by terrorist actions and recalls that these radical attitudes hinder and delay the process of achieving full democracy. Minister Maximiano da Fonseca sees no substantial difference between direct and indirect elections for the presidency of the republic, since either of the two can be democratic. He still prefers the indirect method, for he believes that it better defines and increases the responsibilities of those who make the final choice of a president of the republic.

[Question] Despite the present economic difficulties, is the more open approach an irreversible process?

[Answer] The history of nations demonstrates that political stability is closely linked with economic stability. It can even be said that one is always the consequence of the other. This being the case, we could presumably conclude that there would be a danger that inflation will contribute to a political retreat. However, the facts are there to prove that the commitment made by the president of the republic to establish a democratic system in the country has been fulfilled without reversals, despite the fact that difficulties in the battle against inflation have without a doubt been increased as a result of the problems generated by the more open political process. The public senses that the political opening has made the battle against inflation difficult. But nothing will divert the president from his promise, and he reiterated this with the greatest conviction and firmness in the two addresses he gave at the Planalto Palace and in Uberaba, respectively, immediately after the hateful terrorist acts perpetrated in Rio de Janeiro.

[Question] Is normalization of our political life one of the irrevocable promises of the revolution which President Joao Figueiredo is attempting to fulfill?

[Answer] I have not the slightest doubt or hestiation in answering this question in the affirmative. The fact that some sectors, either due to lack of understanding or radicalism, or because of spurious interests, raise a doubt about the honesty of the president's intentions and, as a result, proceed in such a way that they only contribute to slowing the speed of our steps in the firm direction of full democracy is regrettable, for obviously, we do not want and will not return to the situation prior to March 1964. This is the reason for the indispensable caution in the conduct of the process of democratic improvement we have undertaken, until our regime reaches the level desired by all true democrats. As I have already had occasion to say, some of the greatest enemies of democracy are among those who are urging immediate and full democracy most insistently.

[Question] Do you favor the holding of direct elections for the presidency of the republic? Or do you believe that in a country such as ours, a parliamentary system of government, with indirect elections, would be preferable?

[Answer] The most important thing is not whether the elections are direct or indirect, but rather that they be held democratically. For there are countries which have adopted direct elections, whereas they in reality are not democratic, while other truly democratic countries have indirect elections. The parliamentary system has already been tried in the country without good results, and I believe that such a system would not contribute to increasing our political stability. On the contrary, it might threaten it. There are some who deny that the election of the president of the United States, a country with a presidential system, is indirect in nature. However, yet once again its history has shown that the president elected is not the man winning the majority of the nominal votes of the people. Indirect elections, even under a presidential system, have in my opinion the great advantage that they not only provide a better definition, but also increase the responsibilities of those to whom it falls to make the final choice of a president.

Radicals Profit From Chaos

[Question] Do you believe that the recent terrorist attacks are designed to disturb the political life of the country?

[Answer] These incidents are extremely regrettable, and in reality it is the government which is most threatened by them, since public calm is a basic factor in its proper functioning. I believe that there are two possible sources for these incidents. Either they are in fact designed to disturb the political life of Brazil in order to hinder the functioning of the government, and in such a case they could be either leftist or rightist. Or they could be carried out by those who, even though not professing extremist doctrines, are dissatisfied with the lack of responsibility which regrettably is to be found--and this is true--mainly on the part of the so-called alternative press, which has been unable to make use of the full freedom currently enjoyed for noble purposes. It is indicative to note that these attacks are not oriented only toward the political press, but also that which without a doubt has been contributing to the moral decline of our traditions. As to the clearly terrorist attacks which have occurred recently, even causing loss of life, they are quite justly rejected and condemned vehemently by all good Brazilians. In my view, their origin lies in the more radical sectors of an extremist movement which has never hesitated to use such means in any country to create chaos, which is its best vehicle for winning power.

[Question] Do you see or glimpse on the horizon any political events similar to those in 1968 which culminated in the promulgation of AI-5 [Institutional Act No 5]?

[Answer] The situation is entirely different. I would say in fact that it is in a way the opposite of that in 1968. In 1968 the government was concerned quite rightly with strengthening the regime established by the movement which was transformed into a revolution, the results of which could not be denied, either in the economic sector or in domestic order. The events then forced the government to undertake more energetic measures, due to the need to prevent the loss of what had already been achieved, or a lag in the process of future improvement. Currently, since domestic order is assured, the government is interested from the political point of view in strengthening the democratic system, which has always constituted one of the principal goals of the revolution. Tolerance of some phenomena which would not have been allowed in 1968 demonstrates what we have just asserted. Political problems of greater or lesser gravity are inherent in a democracy, and provided domestic order is assured, we will have nothing to fear. The guarantee of domestic order is provided by the perfect unity in the armed forces.

[Question] Is the Brazilian government, and the navy in particular, concerned with the defense of the South Atlantic? Has the Brazilian navy shown interest in signing a defense pact in this area of the world?

[Answer] As could not fail to be the case, the Brazilian government is concerned with the defense of the South Atlantic. In particular, as to the navy, this is its main concern, because such defense involves almost the whole of its mission. In fact, if we realize that almost all of our foreign trade passes through the South Atlantic, that the role of Brazilian products and services in the majority of the countries bordering this ocean is increasing steadily, that technological development has increasingly been allowing the exploitation of the ocean's resources, we can see how important the presence of our flag is throughout the South Atlantic, even in peacetime, is. First of all, it would be well to remember that there is already a mutual assistance treaty among the American nations, the Inter-American Reciprocal Assistance Treaty (TIAR). A defense pact limited to the South Atlantic would only make sense if one or some of the riparian nations possessed great naval power, which would enable it to support the others. However, none of the navies in this part of the world have the power necessary even for their own defense, and thus we do not believe the signing of such a treaty is justified. The important thing is that these navies understand each other very well in order to be able to function together if the circumstances should justify such a decision.

[Question] How do you view the recent rapprochement promoted in the relations between Brazil and Argentina?

[Answer] I regard it as one of the most significant foreign policy actions of Brazil under the present government. It is obvious that the more united the South American countries are, the stronger the position of the continent within the context of international relations will be, mainly in view of the fact that these countries face very similar problems. The rapprochement between Brazil and Argentina will certainly encourage good understanding among the South American countries.

Brazilian Production of Warships

[Question] Have you any indications or news about the presence of Soviet vessels in the South Atlantic?

[Answer] The potential presence of Soviet warships off the eastern coast in the South Atlantic is a known fact. With the ever-growing increase in Soviet naval power, this presence is naturally tending to become ever more effective in all ocean areas, including the South Atlantic.

[Question] Has the level of efficiency of our naval forces in patrolling the coast improved?

[Answer] The level of the efficiency of our naval forces has without a doubt improved substantially where the quality and the training of the personnel are concerned, mainly since the new frigates, submarines, mine-sweepers and aircraft carriers went into service. Our great problem is quantity, since our fluctuating available assets are undeniably far below our real needs. It is important to note that the new frigates are not and should not be regularly used on patrol assignments, because these are vessels the operation of which is very costly. For regular patrol service we are using just 10 corvettes and we can use destroyers, which are now more than 25 years old.

[Question] How is Brazilian naval construction of warships developing?

[Answer] The great problem for our military naval construction industry is the lack of financial resources. Without a doubt, we are in a position to produce even submarines. It is our firm intention not to order any more new foreign vessels, unless an emergency situation develops, which is unlikely. We can indeed purchase foreign naval vessels second-hand, making it possible to alleviate our difficulties until the equipment presently available can be replaced with vessels built in Brazil. Currently, we are in the final stage of developing some projects in Brazil for vessels which will be built here as soon as financial conditions permit.

Persian Gulf Conflict

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 26 Sep 80 p 21

[Text] Naval Minister Maximiano da Fonseca stated yesterday that the war between Iran and Iraq is likely to be resolved soon.

He explained that with the great offensive power of modern weapons now, one country can overcome another and impose its will in a brief time.

He said that the neutrality of the two major powers--the Soviet Union and the United States--is a guarantee that the other countries will not have to face a broad war.

Concerning the possibility of some type of problem with the authorities in the two warring countries caused by a Brazilian oil tanker, the minister said the following:

"The Brazilian merchant ships passing through the area of conflict are meeting the requirements of the countries at war. It is hardly likely that a Brazilian vessel could cause an incident, but if some problem arose, it would fall to the navy and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to deal with the matter."

He said that the permission given Brazilian vessels to leave the Persian Gulf showed a reasonable and friendly attitude on the part of Iran.

5157
CSO: 3001

ALTERNATIVE SOURCES OF ENERGY UNDER STUDY

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 20 Sep 80 p 13

[Article by Thereza Martins: "The Search for Fuels--Scientists Research Biomass Derivatives for Use as Oil Substitutes"]

[Text] The difficulties which oil imports have caused the Brazilian economy have led scientists and researchers to work on and develop projects in the energy sector with a view to the gradual replacement of oil with other fuels.

"One of the ways of reaching this goal is increasing the contribution of renewable sources of the biomass type (wood, sugarcane bagasse, charcoal), especially wood, encouraging the replacement of oil products with biomass derivatives."

This statement was made by Prof Saul Goncalves d'Avila of the chemical engineering department at the faculty of engineering, University of Campinas (UNICAMP), who has been pursuing research in the energy sector since 1978, along with Profs Jose Claudio Moura and Zsolt Makray.

Initially, the purpose of this research involved the use of agricultural residues for energy production, but it was then found that the equipment used also lent itself to the processing of wood or forest residues.

"Studies of pyrolysis (decomposition by heat) were made on a laboratory scale and a pilot facility linking a gasification apparatus with a motor-generator complex for the production of electricity was built," Professor d'Avila explained.

"The results showed," he added, "that the gas obtained from cellulosic materials readily lends itself to use as fuel for internal combustion engines." The gasification apparatus developed is of the descending flow type, making it possible to produce a gas which is practically free of tar, the UNICAMP professor and researcher said. This gas, in order to be used in engines, needs only an operation involving heat filtering and condensation of the water which forms.

"The results of gas-burning tests in furnaces showed that the gas is suitable for replacing fuel oil in its multiple uses, such as for example in boilers, kilns, etc." Professor d'Avila also said that "it seems that the only limitation on generalized use lies in the flame, which does not reach temperatures above 1,200°."

He explained moreover that the tests are not conclusive, because the furnace design is an important factor here.

Decentralization

Professor d'Avila, who is also coordinator of the CODETEC [Technological Development Company]-FINEP [Funding Authority for Studies and Projects]-UNICAMP bioconversion project (the Technological Development Company has been devoting itself since 1978 to research and development work in the field of gasification of cellulosic materials, also notes that the energy consumed today in the form of fuel oil "is equivalent to the energy supplied by only 2,000 gasification units of 10 million kilocalories per hour."

The units developed thus far are in the 500,000-kilocalorie-per-hour range, but the CODETEC goal is to produce units with a capacity of up to 10 million kilocalories per hour, Professor d'Avila explained.

In his view, the development in the country of a technology such as that for the gasification of wood, which is "simple and low in cost," will provide social and economic benefits. "Another effect to be considered is the decentralization of the production of natural fuels, which will have positive repercussions in the interior by creating new jobs, both in reforestation and at the wood gasification and processing units."

Prof Saul Goncalves d'Avila emphasized "the encouragement which the effective adoption of a national solution and technology for the energy problem would have on technical and scientific circles in the country," and he said that the reforestation of 0.6 percent of the country's area could produce energy equivalent to the planned fuel oil consumption for this year.

"Based on a functional energy equivalent of 3.3 tons of wood per ton of fuel oil, and presuming productivity in reforestation of 12 tons of wood per hectare per year, it will be possible to provide a substitute for all of the fuel oil to be consumed in the country in 1980 through the exploitation of 46,000 square kilometers of planted forest, representing only 0.6 percent of the area of the country."

He believes that, despite the increase in energy consumption, "wood is an abundant and renewable natural energy source for Brazil."

According to Prof Saul Goncalves d'Avila, "the overall energy efficiency of wood gasification processes depends above all on the performance of the gasification unit, which represents the key apparatus for the whole system."

He explained that the first gasification or gas-producing units date back to the first half of the 19th century and utilized coal. "They were all of the upward-draft (countercurrent) type, with movable beds supported by a grid through which air and steam were blown."

This same type of design has been used for gasogenic units for the processing of wood and cellulosic residues, but according to Professor d'Avila, this was "a mistake," because the gases produced by the materials used have a "high water and tar content, thus requiring additional purification installations."

Professor d'Avila said that "the presence of tars in the gas can be avoided by passing the products of pyrolysis through an incandescent charcoal sector in the gasification unit. In this way the tars are thermically cracked, producing a clean gas," he concluded.

The gasification apparatus using this technique are called downdraft or cocurrent gasification units. This type also uses air as a gasification agent, and the energy needed for the process is supplied by combustion reactions which occur in the descending bed.

Research

The gasification of wood in gas-producing units (cocurrent type) was a process used, mainly in Germany, during World War II. After the war, the development of gasification units was almost forgotten, only becoming the focus of attention again in recent years because of the high price and the prospect of the scarcity of oil, Professor d'Avila explained.

He also explained that despite the fact that the programs for the gasification of biomass (wood, among other materials) are still small and have not gone beyond the pilot plant stage, they have one characteristic in common. "They are oriented toward the building of large-scale gasification units capable of meeting the energy demand in modern installations, and certainly much larger than those before World War II."

Professor d'Avila further said that "with the high content of volatile products, the low ash content and the additional advantage of containing no sulfur, wood is the ideal raw material for gasification. Depending on the gasification process," he added, "gaseous fuel can be used as a source of industrial heat, fuel for engines and turbines, a reduction gas for metallurgy or a synthesis gas for ammonia, methanol and other hydrocarbons."

The solid material fed into the gasification unit passes through successive stages: drying, pyrolysis, in which the volatile material is distilled, and finally, high-temperature reaction, during which the combustible gases are formed, mainly carbon monoxide, hydrogen and methane.

Key:

1. Biomass feed
2. Descending flow
3. Removable reaction section of AISI 310 stainless steel
4. Combustible gases
5. Access for cleaning
6. Lower load valve
7. Load level control
8. Load hopper with volume consistent with functional needs
9. Efficient distribution of air in reaction section
10. Air for gasification
11. Mechanical cleaning system

5157
CSO: 3001

ALCOHOL IS FUEL FOR ONE-FOURTH OF CARS BUILT THIS YEAR

Sao Paulo VEJA in Portuguese 17 Sep 80 pp 76-84

[Cover story: "The Alcohol Explosion"]

[Text] Seven years after the cataclysm caused by the unbridled rise of oil prices and the disorder that reigned in the economy of the whole world, we can already say: Alcohol hit it right in Brazil. Perhaps that fact is not yet apparent. Perhaps there may be problems and big problems ahead. Perhaps the Brazilians, only a minority of whom have already entered the alcohol cycle, have not perceived the change. But alcohol has definitely taken the course of things that have come to stay--and as of now, the future cannot be conceived without it.

After a shaky start in 1975, the national alcohol program took off and this year alone the automobile plants will sell 250,000 alcohol-fueled vehicles, almost one-quarter of their total production. It is known that the program is not a panacea capable of solving the energy problems of the country, which must still import oil for a long time. But while it may not stanch the drain in the balance of payments, though lessening it, alcohol is transforming Brazil into the first modern society that concretely has begun to eliminate the prophecy of the end of the automobile civilization, giving the automobile industry a certificate of long life. A sign of that tendency is the drop in the consumption of gasoline. From January to August of this year, consumption decreased 10.7 percent compared to the same period last year.

"The alcohol-fueled car is the real Brazilian miracle," proclaimed a man who cannot err in that type of thing: Wolfgang Sauer, president of Volkswagen do Brasil, the largest automobile manufacturer in the country, who expects to sell 120,000 alcohol-fueled cars this year. Enthusiastically, Sauer predicts that next year no less than 80 percent of the company's automobile production--estimated at 550,000 units--will be of alcohol-fueled cars, a complete reversal of Volkswagen's production profile. The gasoline cars--the other 20 percent--will be almost optional. His optimism has a clearly simple explanation: This year Volkswagen does not know if it can take care of the long queues of consumers that line up at its authorized dealerships wanting an alcohol-fueled car. Sauer advises, however, that the gasoline-fueled car cannot be considered an anachronism. After all, the national fleet numbers 7 million vehicles and the alcohol-fueled vehicles have not even reached 10 percent of that number. Thus, the replacement will be a goal to achieve in the long term.

Even so, this excited demand is not justified only by the incentives given the owners of alcohol-fueled cars--the price of 18.20 cruzeiros per liter compared to 38 for gasoline, the single road tax (TRU) 50 percent lower, more generous financing terms, and fuel supply available on Saturdays. In a country accustomed to mistrusting its own solutions for difficult problems, it would be impossible to induce so many consumers to take a gamble they did not like to take, just as it was impossible to convince them to eat soybean instead of beans. But soybean is soybean and alcohol is alcohol. The sales performance clearly indicates that there is no suspicion hovering over the alcohol-fueled car. Of course, there are still problems with the alcohol motors but none of them are insurmountable. "We are in the first generation of alcohol-fueled motors," said Wolfgang Sauer of Volkswagen. "The second generation is already in the testing phase and will be better," he asserted.

Alcohol Not at Fault--The backing of the consumers forced the factories to develop improvements in the automobiles and solidified the option for alcohol as irreversible. Proalcool, the government program that coordinates the whole spectacular mass of financing for the production of alcohol is definitive. When it still ran the risk of infant mortality, it already had the support of the industrialists. By July of this year, the National Executive Commission for Alcohol, responsible for the program, had already approved 292 projects involving investments of 45 billion cruzeiros and a production of 6.8 billion liters of alcohol per year. That figure is still below the 10.7 billion liters set by the government as the goal for 1985 but Minister of Industry and Commerce Joao Camilo Penna, responsible for the implementation of the program, guarantees that there will be no lack of alcohol. "How can we doubt a program of such dimensions?" he asks. Proalcool also has in its favor the fact that it has not installed itself in its own building, does not have a bureaucracy, and is not planning to set up a branch headquarters in Rio de Janeiro, as would be normal to expect from one more federal agency.

But since mistrust in the face of a new experiment was natural, even though no especially sophisticated technology was at stake, the government offered itself as a guinea pig for the first tests of the regular use of alcohol-fueled cars. Since July 1979, President Joao Figueiredo himself has been moving about in an alcohol-fueled Ford Landau. At each inspection, however, the car revealed corrosion problems. Until on 19 November, Flag Day, what many had expected to happen at any time did happen. After presiding over the commemorations at Planalto Palace, Figueiredo went to his car. After a few tries, the car would not start.

For 2 weeks, mechanics of the transportation service of the presidency of the republic, Ford technicians and even a specialist from the Aerospace Technical Center (CTA) inspected the adaptation made in the motor to run on alcohol. They could not find anything wrong. Until by chance one Sunday, the duty sergeant in the Planalto service station decided to examine the ignition system of the Landau. He pressed the starter several times but the car would not start. Inspecting the electrical system, he discovered that a transistor through which the electric current flowed was intermittent. That was the trouble. The alcohol was not at fault.

From that time on, the Number 1 car in the country had no further problems, as the president's chauffeur, Miguel Soares, states. "On the contrary," he avers, "since alcohol gives the car more power, the security personnel many times complain that I am going too fast." After driving Juscelino Kubitschek's Cadillac, the Mercedes-Benz of Joao Goulart and Castello Branco and the Galaxie of Costa e Silva, all gasoline-fueled, Soares does not hesitate to say that he does not feel any big differences between them and the alcohol-fueled Landau, "the most comfortable of all."

Today in Planalto the following ministers are driving around in alcohol-fueled cars: Golbery do Couto e Silva of the Civilian Household, Octavio Medeiros of the National Intelligence Service (SNI), Danilo Venturini of the Military Household, Celfim Netto of Planning, Helio Beltrao of Debureaucratization, Said Farhat of the Mass Media, and the secretary of the presidency, Heitor Ferreira. Of all of them, Ferreira is what could be called a pioneer in this field. He has been driving an alcohol-fueled Volkswagen for some time and even today he drives the official black Opala himself. "Many people would like my alcohol-fueled car to explode," he admits. "But it runs very well." Golbery, who has not had a steering wheel in his hands for 15 years has also never heard any complaints from his chauffeur.

Without Complaints--Now with the initial difficulties having been overcome, Planalto has made an accounting of its consumption--from June 1979 to 10 September of this year, the transportation service used 415,000 liters of alcohol--and already sees the doubts disappear even among the opposition. Three months ago, Federal Deputy Marcelo Medeiros (Popular Party for Rio de Janeiro) bought an alcohol-fueled car. Convinced by him, his wife Heloisa 1 month ago exchanged a gasoline-fueled Caravan for an alcohol-fueled Opala Comodoro. "I made a good deal," she declared. Normally Heloisa uses one tank of gasoline (55 liters in this case) per week. With the Caravan, today she would have been spending 2,090 cruzeiros per week. With the alcohol-fueled car, she spends 990 cruzeiros. Thus, she saves 1,100 cruzeiros per week or 4,400 per month.

Without any complaints to make, Heloisa today is among the exponents of an alcohol-fueled car--"I have already convinced my gymnastics teacher"--joining the ever-growing number of those who believe that the benefits exceed the problems. She complains about the difficulty of traveling with the car because of the shortage of alcohol stations--a real problem but one that is on the way to a solution because alcohol stations are being established at a rate that few expected (there are fewer than 1,800 at the present time and states such as Rio Grande do Sul, for example, do not have any). In addition, Brazil is beginning to accumulate experience in the operation of alcohol-fueled motors. A pioneer in the use of alcohol-fueled cars, Telecommunications of Sao Paulo (TELESP) is already in a position to make an assessment.

Pressured by stricter and stricter orders to reduce fuel consumption, reserve Colonel Olavo Grunau, chief of the company's transportation department, comprised mostly of Volkswagens, did not see any alternative but alcohol. On 2 August 1977 the first 25 alcohol-fueled cars were operating. Today TELESP has 1,053 alcohol-fueled cars--most of them adapted--that get an average of 4.12 kilometers to a liter of alcohol. The performance is poor, much inferior to that of factory-built alcohol-fueled cars, and inferior also to the company's 994 gasoline-fueled cars, which get on the average 5.15 kilometers per liter. However, discounting the difference in the price of alcohol compared to gasoline, it is quite positive: a study conducted last June shows that since 1977, TELESP saved 20 million cruzeiros. The initial problems of TELESP's cars--at slow speeds, they "went dead" and the motor parts that had direct contact with alcohol suffered excessive corrosion--have already been solved. Corrosion, incidentally, stopped being a problem when the factories began to protect the fuel lines with chrome or copper.

Solution in Sight: Fuel consumption--from 15 to 20 percent more than with gasoline--is the central problem and has been the main worry of the factories. Three years ago, Volkswagen, which has already invested 492 million cruzeiros in the development of alcohol-fueled cars in its Brazilian factory, brought one of the most famous motor specialists in the world to Sao Paulo: the German, Herbert Heitland, 54 years old, an independent consultant, presently the company's research manager.

With the typical image of the stubborn scientist, Heitland is working on various alternatives, unconcerned for the time being about cost problems. He guarantees, however, that some day there will be an alcohol-fueled car capable of getting 20 kilometers to 1 liter--a rate so far reached only by the German Golf which runs on diesel fuel and is reputed to be one of the most economical automobiles in the world. There is already a solution in sight for the problem of starting the motor, which is still slow. "We have already tested a prototype and the motor was started at a temperature of 10 degrees below zero," Heitland said.

The tendency toward improvement is a constant factor. "The automobile industry worked 80 years on gasoline. It is not logical to expect to get the same results from 6 or 7 years' experience with alcohol-fueled cars," argued Andre Beer, executive director of General Motors of Brazil, himself a user of an alcohol-fueled Opala. He predicts that this year 40 percent of GM's production will consist of alcohol-fueled cars. Fiat, the first factory to produce alcohol-fueled cars on the assembly line, also promises to change its production structure. "In a little while, half of our production will be of alcohol-fueled cars," Miguel Goncalves, the president of Fiat, predicted. The fact is that none of the big automobile factories in Brazil have stayed out of the alcohol area, and all of their strategy is to concentrate more and more in that sector.

The Runaround--Because it was the first, Fiat at first was bogged down in the labyrinths of the bureaucracy. Trying to obtain certification for the first exclusively alcohol-fueled car in 1978, Fiat was the victim of a runaround. In the Ministry of Industry and Commerce (the minister at the time was Angelo Calmon de Sa) sometimes they said that the certification should be given by the CTA, other times, by the National Oil Council (NP), or, who knows, by the Brazilian Petroleum Corporation (PETROBRAS). To solve the impasse, the company threatened to grant its own certification. Under pressure, the ministry reluctantly agreed to give its approval, but even so not until July 1979.

Conflicts of that kind were settled exactly 1 year ago. At that time, the Ministry of Industry and Commerce and the automobile industry signed their famous "protocol" establishing targets for the production of alcohol-fueled cars for each year, compatible with the expected production of alcohol. Under that document, the industry commits itself to produce 250,000 vehicles this year, 300,000 next year and 350,000 in 1982. The president of the National Automotive Vehicle Manufacturers Association (ANFAVEA), Mario Garnero, who had declared that the target would not be reached this year and production would not exceed 209,000 reconsidered his prediction. Today, more confident, Garnero guarantees that the industry will meet its commitment. As a matter of fact, Volkswagen, Fiat, General Motors and Ford predict that they will exceed their estimates as a result of buyer pressure.

The concern of everyone now converges on one point: Will Brazil have sufficient alcohol for the 900,000 cars that will be produced between 1980 and 1982, and after that? Between 1975 and 1980, alcohol production encouraged by government financing increased an impressive 659 percent. That expansion will not be so radical in the coming years. "Production capacity reached its fullness in the past harvest. New increases now can be achieved only at the cost of new investments," explained Jose Luis Zillo, 39 years old, successor to the controversial Jorge Wolney Atalla as president of Copersucar, responsible for 50 percent of the country's alcohol production, estimated at 4 billion liters.

Changed Landscape--Far from the daily problems that concern businessmen in that sector, banker Castao Eduardo de Bueno Vidigal, principal stockholder in the Mercantile Bank of Sao Paulo, puts all his chips on an inescapable progress of the program. And not exactly because alcohol is going to reduce the foreign debt or resolve the problems of the automobile industry. His interest is and has always been money; he always knew where it was and how it is reproduced. "Have you ever imagined how much the Cross Industrial Product is going to grow as a result of the increase of cane production?" Vidigal asks. "What is going to happen in this country is a penomenon of development similar to what occurred when the automobile industry was established in 1961."

He recalls that that industry was also regarded with discredit. He himself, as secretary of finance for Sao Paulo in 1961 was surprised when he discovered in tax accounts that a single automobile factory paid more taxes on sales and consignments than all the coffee exports. "Nobody can hold Proalcool," asserted the banker, who also predicts a concentrated growth in Sao Paulo, which today is responsible for no less than 80 percent of the alcohol produced in Brazil.

As a matter of fact, Vidigal's prediction makes sense. The landscape in the countryside has been changing since Proalcool was established. Today sugarcane intended for alcohol already occupies a planted area of 2.5 million hectares, greater than the area of the state of Sergipe. In 1985, to attain the production target of 10.7 billion liters, it will be necessary to mill 100 million hectares. According to a Copersucar study, that will create more than 350,000 direct jobs and it is estimated that in the producing areas, per capita income will be $2,000. In addition, by law the companies that produce alcohol must allocate 2 percent of the price for the benefit of its workers. That type of social fund will have accumulated 4 billion cruzeiros at today's prices by 1985. The extraordinarily favorable panorama does not hide gray areas. The businessmen in the sector complain, for example, about the low return they receive today. The price of a liter of alcohol to the consumer is 18.20 cruzeiros today but the producer receives only 14.93. "The margin is laughable," complains Zillo of Copersucar. According to him, the fair price the producer should receive is 22 cruzeiros. "Today we are dependent on the favors of the government because we do not have a price," laments Orlando Crisin Ometto, 58 years old, the largest individual producer of sugar and alcohol in the world, in the center of his empire established in the interior of Sao Paulo.

Ometto, a native of Sao Paulo from the city of Piracicaba, a classic sugarcane city, has fond recollections about the period when his family of Italian immigrants erected a good part of the vast empire he commands with the wealth it accumulated in a period of almost 100 years in Brazil. Today his four plants, the largest one located in Barra Bonita, produce 6 percent of all the alcohol manufactured in Brazil. In the next few years, the group is going to spend 21 billion cruzeiros--$371 million--on new projects. Associated with Votorantim, Atlantica-Boavista Insurance and the Dedini machinery industry (he with 34 percent and the other three groups with 22 percent each), Ometto is going to install the largest alcohol distillery in the world in Mato Grosso do Sul, in the Bodoquena Plantation. In 1985,

Bodoquena will be producing 224 million liters of alcohol per year. But that feat will be surpassed in 1988 by Ometto himself when project Jaiba in northern Minas Gerais goes into operation, the production of which will reach 487 million liters per year. At that stage, Ometto will be producing almost 10 percent of the alcohol manufactured in Brazil. It is just as if Brazil were planting Kuwaits, of which Ometto will be the principal "alcohol sheikh."

"If I did not believe in Proalcool, no way would I run that risk investing so much money. And afterwards what excuse would I give my grandchildren and great grandchildren?" he asks. Although there are drawbacks in the course of the program, Ometto is certainly not throwing money out the window or creating any problem for his descendents. Businessmen like himself who committed their assets to alcohol dispel the predictions of the gloomy scenario produced in academic circles where nobody risks money on wrong guesses. At this stage, for example, it is hairsplitting to discuss if the planted area necessary for alcohol is going to rob lands usable for food production or is going to chase small farmers into the city.

Alcohol is blazing other agriculture frontiers. Ometto, for example, is successfully planting beans along with sugarcane, demonstrating that one crop can complement another, thus taking care of two needs: energy and food. Also, the warning that the first explosion of the price of sugar in the world market would topple production of alcohol is nothing more than intellectual anguish. The prices of sugar in the market today are the highest since 1975 and that has not caused the production of alcohol to be reduced a single liter. The specter of "vinhoto," a pollutive residue resulting from the preparation of alcohol, has also evaporated. Today, the "vinhoto" is completely utilized as a fertilzer and its use as fodder is being studied.

It would certainly be more useful if those interested in the energy problem would devote their efforts to more concrete questions. Difficulties that have not yet been overcome still persist, such as the substitution of diesel oil, which is responsible for the burning of 32 percent of the oil refined in Brazil--more than gasoline, which accounts for 25 percent of the imported oil. Firm supporters such as Ometto or Gastao Vidigal guarantee the irreversibility of the alcohol alternative. One could add to them the government of Kuwait, the third largest OPEC producer, which in June purchased 10 percent of the shares of Volkswagen do Brasil, which were held by the Monteiro Aranha group. According to Rui Patricio, former Portuguese foreign minister, Proalcool "was an important factor in the transaction." At the same time, the pressure of consumers for alcohol-fueled cars and the readiness of industry to build them in increasing numbers consolidates the chosen course. Oil is expensive, difficult to find and some day it will end. Alcohol, if one plants the raw material, will yield.

A Really Good Deal

During the debut last July of his alcohol-fueled Fiat, banker Agenor Vitor Lazzari, 46 years old, a management aide for the Bank of the State of Sao Paulo, was on the point of exploding with indignation. He had gone a few blocks when, in irritation he asked himself if he had not made a bad deal. "It was a real disaster," he said. "The car kept missing."

Lazzari thought of canceling the deal but he ended up by learning a lesson for all owners of alcohol-fueled Fiats out of that episode: "Let the car warm up for 5 minutes." The car's good performance now makes him smile--the indignation was left in those first few meters. On the roads that run along the Pinheiros and Tiete rivers, which he takes going home from work, the Fiat hits 100 and 110 kilometers per hour, "just touching the accelerator." Agenor Lazzari drives an average of 54 kilometers a day, alcohol consumption is 8.3 kilometers per liter, and he spends 3,000 cruzeiros per month on fuel.

It is exactly 50 percent less than other consumers spend driving an almost equal number of kilometers per month with a Fiat identical to Lazzari's, except gasoline-fueled. It is true that the gasoline-fueled Fiat has a lower fuel consumption--about 11 kilometers per liter. But the prices of fuel are so high that that difference is largely compensated for. "I looked for an alcohol-fueled car because of my distress over seeing gasoline more and more expensive and scarce," Lazzari explained. He swore that he is not exaggerating when he says that his Fiat goes up Sao Gualter Avenue, one of the steepest in Sao Paulo, in fourth gear.

The daily life of the owner of an alcohol-fueled car, like Lazzari, is not different from that of drivers of traditional cars other than the fact that they spend less. For them, there is simply no worry about being without gasoline on weekends, or not being able to make longer trips--the alcohol stations operate normally on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays and their constantly growing network already covers long road routes across the country. There is still the specter of maintenance and service station expenses. But, as the alcohol enthusiasts ask, who knows of any gasoline-fueled car of any make or year that one can swear never went into a service station.

Supply Guaranteed From North to South

One of the questions that interests potential buyers of alcohol-fueled cars the most is knowing how far they can go without the risk of getting stuck on the road because of a lack of fuel. The answer is promising: There are 1,781 stations in Brazil today that have alcohol pumps, spread from Florianopolis in Santa Catarina to Fortaleza in Ceara. More than 800 of them are in Sao Paulo where the travel options for that very reason are countless. On the Anhanguera highway, for example, one can go from Campinas, Limeira, Araras and Riberirao Preto to the border of the state of Minas Gerais where there are 160 stations available. According to Renato Lutti, an Anfavea aide, on that route there are stations with alcohol pumps every 50 kilometers. The Sao Paulo coast is also well served. There are stations in Santos, Sao Vicente, Guaruja and all of Praia Grande up to Itanhaem.

A trip from Sao Paulo to Rio de Janeiro is made without any problem. By Dutra highway, there are stations in Sao Jose dos Campos, Taubate, Guaratinguata, Lorena, Resende, Volta Redonda, Nova Iguacu and Duque de Caxias and there you are: The next city is Rio, where almost all the stations have alcohol pumps. The coastal route is similarly easy to follow: There are stations in Ilha Bela, Sao Sebastiao, Ubatuba, Caraguatatuba, Parati and Angra dos Reis. A Ford LTD can go from Salvador to Joao Pessoa with only two stops since the distance between those cities is 938 kilometers.

There are countless routes for trips by alcohol-fueled cars: It is possible today to go from Brasilia to Florianopolis and from there to Fortaleza without using gasoline as the map shows. Even if the intention of the Ministry of Industry and Commerce to reach the target of 7,000 stations in Brazil by the end of the year is not met, it will not be the lack of guarantee of a fuel supply that will keep one from buying an alcohol-fueled car.

8711
CSO: 3001

AGRICULTURE MINISTER: SEED SHORTAGE WILL NOT AFFECT CROP

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 24 Sep 80 p 25

[Text] (Bureau correspondents)--Amaury Stabile, minister of agriculture, said yesterday in Londrina that, despite the shortage of seed grain in some regions, next year's grain crop should reach about 60 million tons, as against 51.5 million tons this year. In Maracaju (Mato Grosso do Sul), the minister announced that another 5 billion cruzeiros will be allocated to expand the area planted for the 1980/1981 crop. The sum will be added to the 5 billion cruzeiros allocated last July for the same purpose. It is estimated that, using these funds, about 400,000 hectares will be added to the area under cultivation for the 1980/1981 crop.

In Londrina, Stabile said: "We are already sure of 56 million tons, but we are not counting on the harvest in the north and northeast. This crop will be greater because of the 5-percent increase in the area under cultivation, which went from 26 to 28 million hectares this year."

Regarding the seed shortage, the minister reported that 70,000 sacks of beans are needed in Parana alone. "Actually, the reason we have no seed, particularly beans, is that with the current market prices the producers are selling seed as grain. We are looking for seed and we have found a little in Bahia and Minas Gerais. If we don't get seed, however, we will use higher-grade grain for planting."

Stabile is traveling with a "production caravan," formed by Agriculture Ministry technicians who are going around the country to meet with producers. In Maracaju, the minister heard violent criticism of Delfim Netto, minister of planning. In the opinion of Rubens Ilgenfritz, president of the COTRIJUI [local wheat growers' cooperative], Netto is still a stranger to the concerns of the nation's farmers.

Today in Brasilia, the agriculture minister is meeting with representatives of 41 Rio Grande do Sul wheat cooperatives, to take an accounting of the losses in the state and to study the current situation.

6362
CSO: 3001

FROST DAMAGES SOUTHERN WHEAT CROP

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 20 Sep 80 p 23

[Text] Londrina (O GLOBO)--Parana has lost 150,000 tons of wheat, a financial loss of about 110 million cruzeiros, and will have to replant 70,000 hectares of beans ["feijao das aguas"] as a result of the recent frosts in the state. The estimate was given in Maringa last Thursday by Eugenio Estefanelo, director general of the Parana Secretariat of Agriculture. He also predicted higher prices for vegetables and fruits in the days to come, owing to total losses in the green belts around Curitiba. His predictions were based on the surveys of the secretariat's Department of Rural Economy, which had been studying the situation since the beginning of the week, when the temperature began to drop in Parana. According to the surveys, wheat was damaged mainly in the western and southern regions, where 260,000 hectares are planted in wheat and half of it is in the spike-forming stage. Hence, average yields, estimated by the technicians at 1,130 kg per alqueire, will probably decline by 12 percent.

The bean crop suffered the worst damage, however, mainly in the southern and south-western regions. Some 830,000 hectares in the state are planted in beans, and half of them had already been seeded. In the western and central western regions, 70,000 of the 90,000 alqueires will have to be replanted. According to Estefanelo, the planting period can be extended to October, which means the bean crop could be salvaged, but producers throughout the state are complaining about the generalized shortage of seeds, and are thinking of planting corn or cotton instead of beans, according to technicians of the Agriculture Secretariat's regional office in Cascavel.

The secretariat's director general admitted during his visit to Maringa that next year's coffee crop in Parana, estimated at 7 million sacks of processed beans, will not reach that figure, although it is still too early to evaluate the loss.

Rio Grande do Sul

Porto Alegre (O GLOBO)--The Rio Grande wheat crop should be significantly smaller this year because of the frosts that occurred last Tuesday and Wednesday in the interior, with temperatures close to 0 degrees centigrade. Only 1.2 million hectares were planted this year, fewer than last year. Under normal weather conditions, the yield is 1,200 kg per hectare, but, with the frosts, the estimate has been reduced to between 600 and 900 kg per hectare.

The regional office of the CFP (Commission on Financing and Production) sent a telex to the CFP superintendency in Brasilia yesterday, reporting that within 8 to 10 days it will take a survey of the frost damage to the Rio Grande crop. Ary Herzog, regional officer of the CFP, added that "the most significant losses will be in wheat and fruit."

Viticulture will be minimally affected, as will corn and beans, which had just been planted.

COTRIROSA

Pedro Lugoz, director-superintendent of COTRIDORA (Santa Rosa Wheat Growers Cooperative) reported that losses to the wheat crop in the region should be about 25 percent. Some 40,000 hectares of wheat were planted in the cooperative region, with an estimated yield of about 1,200 kg per hectare. With the frosts, the estimate has dropped to 900 kg per hectare.

Lugoz said: "The corn was affected, but it can recover. Beans and fruit were badly damaged by the frosts. It is still too soon to estimate the crop losses, because you cannot be certain of the yield until the crop is actually harvested."

Luis Fernando, technical director of the Carazinho wheat growers cooperative, adds that "the crop loss from the frosts should be about 50 percent, at least.

"The wheat is in the stage of spike formation and some crops are in the flowering stage. Yields of 1,200 kg per hectare were estimated initially, but the figure should be about 600. Some 20,000 hectares were planted in wheat. The bean crop here was a total loss, but the wheat was only recently planted."

6362
CSO: 3001

DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM FOR CENTRAL WEST DISCUSSED

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 18 Sep 80 p 34

[Text] Finance Minister Ernane Galveas predicted yesterday that within 3 years the Central West could be producing from 3 to 5 million tons of grain for export, bringing in about $2 billion more in exchange reserves for the country, if the programs in progress in the region are not interrupted.

He assured that the federal government will continue to give full financial support to the region, within the limitations of the budget, and admitted the possibility that the National Monetary Council [CMN] could approve further funding for investments to put new areas into production, if the credit of 5 billion cruzeiros recently authorized by the CMN is used up.

Lecturing at the seminar "Central West: New Frontier," in Brasilia, Galveas promised that "once the most critical phase of the inflation is overcome, the federal government is going to channel more generous investment credit to that area of the country, mainly because the region is in the best position to absorb the manpower freed by the modernization of agriculture in the South and Southwest and to handle the migratory flow from the Northeast." This settlement plan is seen to be entirely "viable," according to the finance minister, because the region (formed by Mato Grosso, Mato Grosso do Sul and Goias, the Federal District and the territory of Rondonia) takes in 23.1 percent of the total area of the country and has only 6.3 percent of the total population.

He also stressed the agricultural potential of the region, reporting that production in the Central West increased from 5.6 million tons in 1978 to 7.6 million tons in 1979, a growth of 35 percent in a single year, whereas nationwide production increased by only 7 percent. In addition to the extent of the territory, the minister noted the region's fertile soil, favorable for an enormous range of products, notably natural rubber, cacao, coffee, black pepper, cotton, rice, cassava, corn, beans, soybeans and wheat.

Galveas disappointed businessmen and officials in the region, however, in indicating his firm opposition to the creation of a Regional Development Bank for the Central West.

6362
CSO: 3001

FRG NEWSPAPER INTERVIEWS JUNTA MEMBER MATTHEI

Bonn DIE WELT in German 22 Sep 80 p 5

[Interview with Fernando Matthei, Chile's air force chief, by Manfred Neuber: "Chile/Junta General Assures: There Will Be a Civilian After Pinochet: 'The Free Market Economy Is a Success for Us'"]

[Text] Santiago—Chile is hoping for better relations with the FRG "when people there realize that we are making solid progress toward transfer to a democratic system," General Fernando Matthei (55) said in a conversation with DIE WELT. Matthei is chief of Chile's air force and a member of the military junta.

After the failure of the old parliamentary democracy, which made it possible for a minority to bring Chile under communist domination, the only country in the world to do so through free elections, a domination "from which we freed ourselves at the last minute," as the general of German origin explains, the new order could not "occur overnight."

The free world must understand, he said, that Chile does not want to revert to the situation before the takeover by the military on 11 September 1973. Matthei said that the "truth about Chile" could only be asserted gradually, because the image of his country has been distorted for years. He responds to the criticism of the Pinochet regime by CDU politicians: "CDU politicians in the FRG actually must recognize that the model of a free market economy most compatible to their own interests was introduced and has been a great success here."

About the Christian Democrat former president Eduardo Frei the junta member maintained that he is allowing himself to be put to work by the popular front as the most recent statements from Mexico by Allende's widow have revealed. Matthei drew the following conclusion from the results of the referendum on Chile's new constitution: "Today we have more than two-thirds of the population behind us. The Marxists always amounted to at least 20 percent. That means that the rest are only generals without armies."

WELT: Are you speaking of former party leaders?

Matthei: Yes, they are still planning campaigns and have at best staff officers. I know many Christian Democrats who want to construct a new democratic order with us. We can tread the same path, even if they do not agree with everything that we do.... We are not trying to disguise the fact that we have an autocratic government, but it is being transformed step by step into a democratic one.

WELT: Frei has proposed forming a transitional government composed of military and civilian politicians...

Matthei: Do Messrs Frei, Zaldivar, and whatever their names might be believe that they could find idiots in uniform who would join forces with them after they picked on the military for years?

WELT: Not even young officers who perhaps...

Matthei: The politicians have no idea how disciplined and loyal our armed forces are. They stand behind their superiors to the last man.

WELT: Is it esprit de corps or concern about a possible "purge" if there were another regime?

Matthei: A government that would try something like that would not survive a single day.

The air force chief conceded that General Pinochet's decision shortly before the plebiscite not to be a candidate in the presidential election planned for 1989 favorably influenced the results of the voting. "Many people would not have been happy with the prospect of having the president remain in office until 1997." According to Matthei his successor will not come from the junta, rather he will be a civilian politician. At the latest within 3 years a law will be passed on the admission of new parties.

According to the new constitution Marxist parties remain prohibited. Matthei explained: "The parties in the new democracy should also have a democratic internal structure. We do not want any cadre parties directed by foreign countries."

During the conversation on the 15th floor of the government residence Diego Portales the pilot general underscored the government's great social achievements. International organizations have just certified Chile's high rate of literacy and the lowest rate of infant mortality in Latin America. With a continuously high rate of economic growth (more than 8.5 percent) the country with the "crazy geography" (a 4,000-kilometer-long narrow strip between the Andes and the Pacific Ocean) likewise is in a leading position.

Currently Chile is experiencing a construction boom. Within 8 years 900,000 dwellings are to be created. The state which eliminated almost all subventions and fostered free competition, however, contributes to the costs of individual homes for residents of low income. Health care and schools are to be improved by decentralization of the bureaucracy. "Before everybody waited to see what Santiago was doing. Now the cities can take matters into their own hands. This way more of the tax revenues are kept locally," Matthei explained.

General Matthei provided DIE WELT with a sense of things on the directional struggles openly discussed in Chile between hawks and doves in the junta and in the armed forces by frowning at the replacement of the cosmopolitan foreign minister, Hernan Cubillos, who was successful in Europe, with the chief of state, Pinochet (officially because of Pinochet's punctured Asian trip, unofficially because of pressures exerted by Cubillos to liberalize the regime).

9485
CSO: 3103

IMAGE ABROAD DEEMED IMPORTANT, UNDERESTIMATED

Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 10 Oct 80 p A-3

/Editorial: "Necessary Understanding"/

/Text/ After reading a letter written by a U.S. diplomat to the WASHINGTON POST, which EL MERUCRIO published yesterday, the need for understanding the Chilean situation becomes obvious. It is indispensable that foreign public opinion understand Chile and understanding is also absolutely necessary within our country in order to learn about Chile's internal problems and those which arise from our international relations.

The letter to the WASHINGTON POST was written by U.S. diplomat Robert A. Stevenson, political counselor at the U.S. Embassy from 1962 to 1965, in other words during a period when ideological and political refinement reached a peak. That U.S. diplomat had at that time an indepth knowledge of the great virtues of our democratic and political life as well as of the weaknesses of the system. Mr. Robert A. Stevenson could not have ignored that our active democracy, "vibrant and intensely political" as described by the WASHINGTON POST, reached a small circle of citizens and that the concepts of social progress coexisted with the irritating state of extreme poverty and backwardness of the masses.

Mr. Stevenson has clearly understood that the vast majority of Chileans are anxious for peace and wish to dedicate themselves, without obstacles, to productive work. It is natural then that they have supported the military government for 7 years and that they have given President Pinochet overwhelming support as expressed by the 11 September plebiscite.

However, Stevenson stresses his surprise over the Chilean's lack of understanding over the damage to Chilean-U.S. relations following the murder of Orlando Letelier. This is an important aspect which we are not always aware of. We Chileans are very closely tied to our internal problems and are perhaps extra sensitive to criticism from abroad. Thus we are not aware of the damage to our respectability abroad by such unfortunate acts as the murder of former minister Letelier.

We should ponder the ideas of this U.S. diplomat because Chile's distance from the large world centers invites a kind of provincial indifference to foreign events or acts caused directly or indirectly by Chile abroad.

Nations that are more in tune with international events or that are more observant react quickly to threats or dangers from abroad. We Chileans suffer from a certain blindness in this matter. We are an inward looking people. Convinced that by solving our internal problems we are adequately prepared to effectively meet external problems, we are satisfied with the achievement of small successes within our own boundaries and we have no fear of defying large powers simply because we do not physically appreciate the danger of the challenge.

In an era when the people are fully aware that the military regime has support that is unprecedented in the history of any government, it is worthwhile for us to overcome the mental barriers which to date have prevented us from making broad and flexible international decisions. Inter-relationships among nations that are more meaningful and broader in scope make isolation undesirable regardless of the reasons for it and even though there is a potential for large future gains. The growing success of Chile's economic experience, which should be followed by success in the political model, obligates us to move toward an international opening, to a greater understanding of foreign positions and to show greater modesty in dealing with Chile's reality and its future.

U.S. diplomat Stevenson has done us a service through his efforts to dissipate the errors and perverse opinions held in the United States about Chile, but he has also given us some advise which should always be kept in mind: Chileans cannot live with their backs to the world and it is best that they realize this.

8599
CSO: 3010

ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM PLANS ENDORSED

Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 7 Oct 80 p A-3

/Editorial: "Administrative Reforms"/

/Text/ CONARA /National Administrative Reform Commission/ Minister-president Gen Roberto Soto announced, during the seminar on Government Administration and the Principle of Subsidiaries, that the basic goals of the entire administrative reform program should be the reduction in the number of ministers, a reduction in the number of public servants and improvement of their training.

As is known at the start of the year the president issued presidential guidelines establishing the basic objectives to be pursued in modernizing the government. It involves a real effort to debureaucratize the administrative processes, improve and simplify the traditional red tape, strengthen the process of regionalization, bolster the role of the mayors and improve municipal services, conduct a general reorganization of the ministries, public services and institutions to eliminate duplication and other irregularities and to prepare an organic law governing the administration of the government.

The need for a modern and functional public administration is obvious since in one way or another all renovation projects which the country has undertaken depend on the existence of efficient and expeditious administrative mechanisms.

What is more the reform of the government is closely tied to the current government's great political program which aims to restore freedom as the guiding principle for all social activity, strengthening individual initiative in all areas of daily life.

For this reason the principle which administrative reform should underscore is that the government assume only those activities which because of their very nature unequivocally fall within the government's domain and that private enterprise be allowed to develop its entire creative capacity to solve the vast majority of the public's problems.

To achieve this it is necessary to drastically reduce the power of government agencies, power which they have enjoyed for decades, and create mechanisms that will allow participation by individuals and safeguard the inviolability of their rights.

In this respect CONARA's position that the number of ministries should be closer to seven or eight, with the remaining ministries becoming mere departments, might be a valuable contribution to the attainment of an administrative structure that is more in tune with current needs. However, a cutback in the number of ministries alone will not guarantee the decentralization of power and, therefore, it must be accompanied by measures guaranteeing that the citizens will be "the natural, only and direct benefitiaries of the functions performed by officials according to the law," as CONARA has said.

Also important is the decision to cut back on the number of public employees gradually so as not to increase the number of unemployed. A general characteristic of lesser developed countries is the existence of huge bureaucratic machines which paralyze reorganization rather than furthering the government's development plans. In the past the slow rate of economic growth, the shortage of productive employment opportunities and highly statist political ideas led to the abnormal growth of the bureaucracy which resulted in administrative inefficiency. The new policies and the idea that administrative tasks are activities requiring special technical training signal the possibility of a modern state which guarantees real freedom.

8599
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

CONGRESS ON ACCIDENT PREVENTION--Vina Del Mar, 21 Oct (AFP)--Military representatives of Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, the United States, Guatemala, Honduras, Panama, Uruguay and Chile are attending the Fourth Meeting of the Committee for the Prevention of Accidents of the Air Forces of America, which will end on 24 October. [PY222023 Paris AFP in Spanish 1455 GMT 21 Oct 80 PY]

TRADE MISSION IN SINGAPORE--A Chilean trade mission headed by Chilean Foreign Ministry director Javier Illanes has arrived in Singapore to see about increasing commercial ties between the two countries. This visit is part of a tour which will encompass the five ASEAN countries. [PY202025 Santiago Chile Domestic Service in Spanish 1630 GMT 20 Oct 80]

ODEPLAN DIRECTOR TO FRG--Miguel Kast, the ODEPLAN [National Planning Office] director, has left for the FRG, where he will attend a seminar on European and Chilean economic problems. Kast was invited by a local university that is sponsoring the seminar. During his stay Kast will also give lectures on social and economic development in Chile. He will also visit Great Britain and Italy, where he will contact representatives of both government and private business sectors. [PY151352 Santiago Chile Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 15 Oct 80 PY]

CREATION OF SPACE COMMITTEE--The Chilean Government has created a space committee that will be in charge of drafting the law that will establish a Chilean space commission. It will also advise the president on matters pertaining to this activity until the new law is issued. This will enable Chile to have in the near future an organization to represent the country at the many international forums on this subject and have a channel for all international aid and technical cooperation that may be rendered to our country. [PY151351 Santiago Chile Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 15 Oct 80 PY]

BRITISH BANK LOAN--London, 6 Oct (AFP)--Barclays Bank has granted the Bank of Santiago a $5 million-credit line, which will be used for Chilean purchases of British equipment during the next 12 months. [PY161238 Paris AFP in Spanish 2020 GMT 6 Oct 80 PY]

NEW OFFSHORE OIL RIG--The National Petroleum Enterprise (ENAP) has reported that the SP-3 platform, which is the third offshore platform at the Spiteful deposit, has started production with approximately 3,000 cubic meters daily. The platform is situated in Laredo Bay, 25 km north of Punta Arenas, in the Magellan Strait. [PY161238 Santiago Chile EL MERCURIO in Spanish 30 Sep 80 p 8 PY]

IMPORT FIGURES--According to a report of the Central Bank, Chile imported $8.5 million worth of whiskey during the period January-August as compared to $9.5 million for the same period last year. The report adds that Chile imported 28,386 vehicles during the first 8 months of the year. [Santiago Chile Domestic Service in Spanish 1100 GMT 8 Oct 80 PY]

AGRICULTURE MINISTER IN JAPAN--Chilean agriculture minister, Alfonso Marquez de La Plata, has arrived in Japan and today met with his Japanese counterpart, Takao Kameoka, with whom he discussed Chilean wood exports to Japan and Japanese technical cooperation for the development of the forestry sector in Chile. [PY212044 Santiago Chile Domestic Service in Spanish 1630 GMT 21 Oct 80 PY]

TRADE DEFICIT--According to the Central Bank, the Chilean trade balance during the first 8 months of the year showed a deficit of $351.1 million. During the mentioned period Chile imported goods worth $3.5994 million as compared to $2.6385 million in the same period of 1979 and exported goods worth $3.2483 million as compared to $2.3726 million last year. Chile's main trade partner during January-August 1980 was the United States which accounted for $1.3355 million, Japan with $720 million, Brazil with $590.5 million and the FRG with $552.9 million. [figures as received] [PY241809 Buenos Aires LATIN in Spanish 2252 GMT 4 Oct 80 PY]

TRADE WITH SPAIN--Raul Artigas Jara, president of the Chilean-Spanish Business Chamber pointed out that bilateral trade during 1978 and 1979 increased by 59.6 percent and that during the first 8 months of the current year it amounted to $184.6 million. He also said that the main products purchased are: copper which amounted to $58.8 million, fish and seafood for $16.3 million, celulosa and various minerals. Chile has bought from Spain transport equipment, electric domestic appliances, textile machinery and agricultural equipment, books and other Spanish-made products. [PY241809 Santiago Chile EL MERCURIO in Spanish 13 Oct 80 p 5 PY]

PUBLICATION OF MAGAZINE BANNED--Santiago, Chile, 18 Oct (AFP)--The Chilean Supreme Court has passed down a decision which confirms the decision of the military authorities to prohibit the publication of the bi-weekly magazine GENTE ACTUAL. The first edition of this magazine, which among others belong to members of the proscribed Christian Democratic Party, was never circulated, by decision of the military chief of the Santiago Emergency Zone. [PY241809 Paris AFP in Spanish 1529 GMT 18 Oct 80 PY]

SALARY READJUSTMENT--The National Statistics Institute announced that as of yesterday a salary readjustment of 14 percent has been implemented for the workers of the public sector, pensioners and for those of the private sector who are not subject to collective bargaining agreements. [PY241809 Santiago Chile LA NATION in Spanish 2 Oct 80 p 2 PY]

CSO: 3010

ETHIOPIAN FOREIGN MINISTER NOTE ON HORN OF AFRICA STATUS

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 6

[Letter from Ethiopian Foreign Affairs Minister Gedle-Giorgis Felleke to Isidoro Octavio Malmierca Peoli, Cuban minister of foreign relations, on recent events threatening the stability of the Horn of Africa]

[Text] Comrade Isidoro Malmierca, minister of foreign relation, Republic of Cuba, Havana:

I am honored to call your urgent attention to the following events which have been seriously undermining the stability of the Horn of Africa, thus creating a serious threat to the maintenance of international peace and security.

In flagrant violation of the charter and decisions of the OAU and the principles of the Nonalined Countries Movement and despite a great loss in life and property amounting to billions of dollars caused by the invading army in the administrative areas of eastern and southeastern Ethiopia during the war of aggression which Somalia unleashed against Ethiopia in 1977 and 1978, the Somalian government is still persisting in its insatiable ambition for territorial expansion and enlargement at the expense of all its neighbors.

Ignoring international public opinion which has emphatically condemned its nonprovoked aggression against my country and without obtaining information about the ignominious defeat it suffered at the hands of the Ethiopian Revolutionary Army, the Somalian government has engaged in provocative activities in recent months infiltrating thousands of its regular troops into Ethiopia with the deliberate intention of sabotaging, subverting and promoting its most recent aggression.

Having repudiated the invading army by resorting to its legitimate right of self-defense, Ethiopia showed maximum restraint in ordering its defensive troops to stop their advance at the common border. My government had also offered clear-cut conditions for the restoration of regional peace, stability and harmony based on the cardinal principles of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of states, the inviolability of frontiers, the nonuse of force and noninterference in the internal affairs of each other.

The Somalian government not only refrained from answering our appeal for peace but even delighted in engaging in a number of machinations aimed at disorienting and deceiving world public opinion and opening the way for its latest aggression against Ethiopia.

Its unending but spurious complaints to the United Nations about alleged attacks by Ethiopia and its claims of having been inundated by Ethiopian refugees while diverting humanitarian aid to supply its aggressive forces are only two of the more conspicuous examples of its hypocrisy. The Mogadishu government and those imperialist powers which are obsessed only with the acquisition of military bases to use as a springboard for aggression and destabilization are totally responsible for the horrendous effects that aggression and destabilization are having with regard to the preservation of international peace and security.

Since the troops which Somalia previously infiltrated did not enable the Mogadishu government to achieve its expansionist objectives, that government recently engaged in open aggression against Ethiopia. Once more it made a massive deployment of its regular armed forces fully equipped with the latest and most deadly weapons, including various types of missiles, light and heavy artillery, tanks, armored trucks, 106 mm antitank artillery, various explosives and mines and many other weapons of U.S. and NATO origin. The 14,000 fully mechanized troops which Somalia put into action, with three divisions in the rear guard, attacked the town of Warder in Ogaden on five occasions and from four different points. The 3rd, 4th and 5th infantry divisions participated in the full-scale attack. Also participating in the attack were 6 infantry brigades, 1 commando brigade, 1 police combat brigade, 1 mechanized brigade with 60 vehicles of Italian origin and 4 artillery battalions each equipped with 18 pieces of 122 mm artillery.

Confronted by units of the Ethiopian Revolutionary Army, the invading forces clearly shows that the Mogadishu government is at present in complete harmony with imperialism, which is openly supporting Somalia's expansionist ambitions to further its own strategic interests in the area.

Somalia's objective and purpose in its latest desperate attempt were to undermine the consolidation of the Ethiopian revolution and the progress of the economic and social development it has achieved. Somalia's frustration was further intensified by Ethiopia's peaceful efforts to promote a spirit of understanding, cooperation and good neighborly relations with its closest neighbors.

Beginning with the army's defeat in 1978, Siad Barre's regime has also been seriously threatened by internal opposition and conflict which have been aggravated by the unfortunate ventures he continues to promote and by his extremely poor administration. Determined to divert public attention from the increasing domestic problems it is facing, Barr's regime has intentionally sent its opponents on missions which are impossible to fulfill with the obvious purpose of eliminating those opponents in the process.

Fully aware that one of the objectives of the Somalian government is to try to get Ethiopia to cross the common border and then capitalize on that act, we shall continue to exercise self-control. However, the international community must understand that there is a limit to our patience. Consequently, the world community should not be content with verbal condemnation of Somalia's latest aggression but, rather, take a strong position aimed at eliminating similar aggressions in the future.

In urgently calling your attention to this problem, it is my obligation to inform you that my government reserves the right to resort to other legitimate measures of self-defense as provided by Article 51 of the UN Charter. My government will also hold the Somalian government and its benefactors responsible for all consequences of its latest attack on my country.

The series of full-scale attacks committed by Somalia against Ethiopia is creating a serious threat to international peace and security. I am therefore honored to request that you present this matter to the attention of the current chairman of the Nonalined Countries Movement, Comrade Fidel Castro Ruz, and inform him of our request that the text of this communique be circulated to all Countries which are members of that movement.

With high esteem,

Felleke Gedle-Giorgis, minister of foreign affairs of Socialist Ethiopia

8568
CSO: 3010

'GRANMA' SCORES VENEZUELA'S COPEI FOR SABATEUR RULING

Charges 'Complicity'

Havana GRANMA WEEKLY REVIEW in English 12 Oct 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Crime Upon Crime, Infamy Upon Infamy"]

[Text]

THE FOURTH anniversary of the monstrous Barbados crime is upon us in circumstances that make it 1000 times more abhorrent and more deserving of our indignation. To the amazement and derision of humankind, the heartless assassins who one day shook the world with horror, and whose uninterred victims are still crying out for justice from the bottom of the sea, among the scattered remains of the plane the criminals blew up in mid-flight, are now on the verge of being acquitted by the court that is trying them, in evident complicity with the Government of Venezuela.

On that Cubana plane were traveling 57 exemplary, devoted sons and daughters of our people, including two complete crews of our airline enterprise, with a brilliant service record; the members of the junior fencing team, euphoric on their way back to their homeland laden with medals, after carrying off all the first places in the Central American and Caribbean Championship; people working in the fishing industry; and other valuable comrades. With them were 11 Guyanese citizens, young people coming to study medicine in our universities, and five officials of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

There can be no words to describe the inconceivable cruelty of that act.

How can one begin to describe the last minutes of those 73 defenseless people, trapped in a craft at a height of thousands of feet above the sea, who, in such an unexpected and cowardly way, were suddenly hit by a violent explosion, engulfed in flames, asphyxiated by gases and hurtled with no possible salvation to a dreadful death?

How can one begin to describe the spirit and heroism of the pilots who, even in such terrible circumstances, made a superhuman effort to pilot the plane back to land?

Four years have not been enough to dry the burning tears of our people, one in pain, feeling the death of each and every one of those hard-working, exemplary, humble and promising compatriots that day as if each was a son, a parent or a sister. Four centuries will not be enough either.

Only justice can assuage the pain. It's not a question of making those despicable murderers pay for the crime they have committed. All their lives together could not compensate for a single second in the life of any of the Cubans who died on October 6, 1976. It's a question of something much more important. History demands that such an act not go unpunished. It was essential that, along with the moral sanction of humankind, there be a legal sanction, so that crimes of this kind cannot repeat themselves and so that those whose lives were cut short in their prime will at least stand to save many other human beings potentially threatened by the practices of those crazed agents of terrorism and international crime.

It was to be supposed that any responsible government, with an elementary sense of justice and national honor, would have put such reasons above any other considerations or any ideological differences between it and Cuba.

But this has not been the case with the Social Christian Government of Venezuela.

Since it came to power, a whole sordid scene of lies has surrounded the legal proceedings against the four individuals charged with blowing up the Cuban plane.

It was not by any means easy for the Carlos Andrés Pérez government to open proceedings against the criminals. It had to deal with delaying tactics, pressures, threats, affronts and even attempted sabotage. But, despite its well-known divergences with our country, that government acted firmly, decorously and with a sense of responsibility. Although there were many pitfalls in the way of the work of the courts, they were slowly surmounted and there was the certainty that sooner or later justice would prevail.

Everything changed, however, when the ruling COPEI clique installed itself in Miraflores Palace.

The true cause of this is not hard to understand. While the previous government kept its differences with Cuba at a noble, respectful distance, the current rulers of Venezuela have given themselves over to a dirty maneuver in complicity with other international reactionary forces, to foment provocation, revive old threats, worsen the blockade and try to slander and isolate Cuba from the peoples of the continent. While the previous government followed a sovereign and even solidary Latin American policy, the present government has done the exact opposite and is stained with the heroic blood of the Salvadoran people, whose slaughterers it has been backing and advising with no qualms whatsoever. While the previous government had nothing to do with the assassins, there are politicians in power in Venezuela today who are involved, have a lot to do with the intellectual and material authors of the barbaric Barbados sabotage.

We're not going to find out anything that isn't public knowledge in Venezuela and other places.

The bomb destruction of the Cubana plane was the work of small, counterrevolutionary terrorist groupings and is part of a campaign of threats, attacks and attempts on the lives of Cuban officials in many countries of the Caribbean and in Argentina, the United States and Portugal. These groups are known to have had links with the now ousted Somoza regime and with the Chilean repressive bodies. They are also known to have been involved in such repugnant acts as the assassination of Chilean former Foreign Minister Orlando Letelier. These elements are known to have bases, as well as local agents and contacts, in several parts of the United States and in countries of the Caribbean to carry out their dirty work.

Everyone knows that the main perpetrator of this crime, a cynical, depraved assassin by the name of Orlando Bosch, had a base of terrorist operations in Caracas, run by another of the men implicated, Luis Posada Carriles. Everyone knows that Posada was a Batista follower who acquired Venezuelan nationality, that he ended up a notorious torturer and murderer in the Venezuelan political police before the Carlos Andrés Pérez government and that he had close ties with politically influential circles in the COPEI Party. Everyone also knows that the material authors of the sabotage, Freddy Lugo and Hernán Ricardo, are two individuals whose ties with the political police, Posada and the COPEI clique go back to that time.

This explains all. As has been confirmed in the recent courageous statements made by Venezuelan journalist Alicia Herrera, the four criminals had been told a while ago that nothing would happen to them, that their dossiers would be fixed, that the witnesses' evidence would be changed under pressure and that the military court would finally acquit them. The privileged conditions of confinement for these individuals was in itself a grotesque farce: The Venezuelan security services paid them a substantial stipend month after month. This is the reality that arouses indignation, and the Venezuelan Government knows full well that there is not a single word in her statement that is anything but the truth and the whole truth.

It would be difficult to sink to greater depths of infamy.

Who are the COPEI ruling clique hoping to take in with their phariseical invocations of the independent decisions of the courts? Who are they out to make a mockery of with all their legal talk but no solid backing to their arguments? Who do they aim to bamboozle with their hypocritical guise of defenders of "human rights," "democracy" and "national dignity"? Are they not the ones committing a crime that defies description against the law, human rights and the very dignity of their country?

The Venezuelan Government knows that the military court is acquitting the guilty. It knows that there is irrefutable evidence against them. And it knows that they are self-confessed murderers, since one of the two who directly committed the crime, Hernán Ricardo, is publicly known to have confessed to the police in Trinidad and Tobago that he and Lugo had planted the bomb that exploded in midair aboard the Cubana plane. Judge Delia Estaba Moreno, who opened the proceedings, has honestly declared only recently how strong the evidence is pointing to the guilt of the detained.

Let the Venezuelan Government deny this if it can!

We are convinced that this monstrous act of provocation will have many more, serious repercussions than those its miserly promoters are perhaps capable of foreseeing.

Four years ago, a band of mercenary gangsters, who know no country or law, murdered 73 defenseless human beings. Today, it is a government that coldly murders justice, tramples on the law and has utter disregard for the integrity of all humankind.

The decision to acquit the terrorists is a crime greater than the sabotage itself. That act took its toll of 73 victims; what the Venezuelan Government is doing today might well take its toll of hundreds of thousands of innocent lives. The bloodthirsty assassins will be loose on the streets, free to do as they wish. And many other assassins like them will feel free, will be encouraged to commit the same atrocities. That is the fateful role the Venezuelan Government has cast for itself.

Those who are today so blinded by their hatred of Cuba and so incapable of bearing the dignified, prestigious international role of our country as to plot such crimes will not have long to wait before they see how their shameless actions backfire on them. The peoples will never forgive them for such an affront. No soldier of honor will want to be associated with such villany. The noble, heroic Venezuelan people will never forgive them for this insult. These dirty depredators of the nation's honor and Venezuela's responsibility to the world community will face, are already facing, the firm repudiation of all honest Venezuelans and the strongest of condemnations on the part of international public opinion.

For now, the Venezuelan Government will bear the sole responsibility for all the consequences of this act where official relations between Venezuela and Cuba are concerned.

For centuries, from the depths of their hearts, our people will repudiate this monstrous Barbados sabotage; for centuries also they will remember and abhor this decision on the part of the current Government of Venezuela, which heightens the crime and infamy of four years ago manifold. But neither the crime nor the infamy will go unpunished. Such moral dwarves will fall by the wayside; our martyrs will live forever.

COPEI Accused of Wrong-Doing

Havana GRANMA WEEKLY REVIEW in English 12 Oct 80 p 2

[Text]

THE LATIN American public and that of the rest of the world have just learned of new important disclosures on the incredible, repugnant scheme devised in Caracas — for which the Venezuelan Government is directly responsible — to set free those who committed the monstrous crime off Barbados. Venezuelan professional journalist Alicia Herrera spent a long time interviewing the criminals in prison and obtaining detailed information on the way they sabotaged a Cuban airliner that resulted in the death of 73 people. She openly accused the COPEI clique that rules Venezuela of having worked out a disgraceful plot to acquit the four assassins.

The charges made by the Venezuelan journalist — a story in itself — also reveal the hypocritical nature of the Social Christian regime in Venezuela which has made it a point to declare itself, in the corridors of international organizations and in official documents, a defender of human rights while in fact protecting, and therefore encouraging, monsters capable of committing the most horrible crimes.

The attitude of the prosecutor, the military court and, above all, the Venezuelan Government was so utterly shameful, despicable and immoral that journalist Alicia Herrera, fully realizing that human dignity and justice were being trampled by the COPEI clique and that an attempt was being made to let a crime condemned by all humanity go unpunished, decided to risk her life in order to let the world know the truth.

Although the people of Cuba have closely followed the trial of assassins Orlando Bosch, Luis Posada, Hernán Ricardo and Freddy Lugo and are well informed regarding these criminals' guilt in the sabotage of the Cubana plane on October 6, 1976, the new evidence brought to light by the Venezuelan journalist in a press conference in Mexico has aroused great interest, not only in Cuba but abroad as well.

The journalist's disclosures constitute additional irrefutable evidence of the defendants' participation in the monstrous crime and, furthermore, reveal the sinister official plan, the Venezuelan Government's influence on the court's decision to exonerate the self-confessed criminals, the criminals' links with the Venezuelan security services, the changes made in the case files and the pressure exerted on witnesses in order to fabricate juridical pretexts and hide behind an alleged separation of powers.

But that's not all.

The Venezuelan journalist also revealed that the terrorists, especially their leader, had been involved in other crimes and acts of sabotage in this hemisphere which included the sabotaging of Venezuelan planes, and she also made it known that one of the main plans that Orlando Bosch intends to carry out as soon as he is released is to assassinate the former president of Venezuela, Carlos Andrés Pérez, with whom, he told her, he was "going to settle accounts."

It is common knowledge that Carlos Andrés Pérez, who was president of Venezuela when the Barbados saboteurs were arrested, took firm and forceful measures to foil the schemes and the pressure tactics to protect the assassins, thereby acting in a totally responsible way and with deep concern for his country's honor. And his political and ideological differences with our Revolution are well known. The present Government of Venezuela, the military court and the prosecutor are well aware of the fact that by planning to release those guilty of the Barbados crime they're not only absolving them of all guilt and committing a brutal, unpardonable act of provocation against Cuba, but also opening the doors and giving free rein to terrorism, crime and murder that know no borders or nationality, thereby showing absolute disregard for the hemisphere's desires for peace and tranquility.

As Fidel said, "The fact that the culprits go unpunished — after having been in the hands of the authorities, after having been in prison — can go a long way toward encouraging similar incidents, and then instead of one it will be ten, 20 or 100 times that the peoples will have to mourn over atrocities of that sort."

The tremendous responsibility assumed by the Venezuelan Government has not gone unnoticed by international public opinion, and it was also denounced by journalist Alicia Herrera in her press conference. She said, "I want to reiterate my charges that if the four assassins responsible for the Barbados crime and many other acts of terrorism are freed, the government of Herrera Campins will be an accomplice, and the world will hold it responsible for whatever crimes these despicable individuals commit in the future."

The action taken by Alicia Herrera, a journalist of much experience in Venezuela, shows the feelings that can be aroused in defense of national honor when it is violated by unscrupulous elements — like those who want to release those guilty of the Barbados crime. The Venezuelan journalist's courageous and honorable gesture confirms our people's opinion of the noble and fraternal character of the Venezuelan people.

We are convinced that among the Venezuelan people — a people who, at the cost of their own lives and with the collaboration of worthy, honest members of the military, had the courage to overthrow tyrants like Pérez Jiménez — there are millions, including decent, honest members of the military, who regardless of their ideology or creed are firmly opposed to such a monstrous, shameful action as that of setting free a group of assassins who blew up a plane in midair with 73 defenseless people aboard.

As the Venezuelan journalist said, the decision taken by her country's Social Christian government, the military court and the prosecutor to acquit the criminals constitutes "an insult to justice and to human dignity." And that government, that military court and that prosecutor should not forget that there are countless men and women in Venezuela who have very high regard for justice and dignity.

COPEI Involved in Acquittal

Havana GRANMA WEEKLY REVIEW in English 12 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] The abhorrent machinations going on in Caracas with the complicity of the COPEI clique that rules Venezuela to acquit the assassins who blew up a plane in flight with 73 persons aboard and to leave such a horrible crime unpunished, continue to astound world public opinion and to draw protest from many personalities and organizations in Latin America.

The Venezuelan Government's representatives who are sponsoring these outrageous plans are not fooling anybody with their hipocritical "juridical" arguments about an alleged separation of powers. There's no room for excuses or pretexts of any kind in this matter. World public opinion, including Venezuelan public opinion, is well aware of the fact that terrorists Orlando Bosch, Luis Posada, Hernán Ricardo and Freddy Lugo are guilty of the crime off Barbados. Everybody knew this from the very beginning, and the evidence leaves no doubt as to their guilt.

This has been confirmed in Caracas by Judge Delia Estaba Moreno who in October 1976 was designated special trial judge for the case of the Cubana plane sabotage that resulted in the death of 57 Cubans, 11 Guyanese and five Koreans.

When world public opinion was still recovering from the shock of the charges made by noted Venezuelan journalist Alicia Herrera, who added new and irrefutable evidence of the guilt of those accused of the monstrous crime and revealed interesting details about the changes made in the original dossier, the news agencies reported on an interview granted by Judge Delia Estaba Moreno to the Caracas daily El Nacional, in which she confirmed again that the dossier contained enough evidence to prove that those under arrest — Bosch, Posada, Ricardo and Lugo — were guilty of the crime.

Judge Estaba Moreno explained: "When I ordered the arrest of those persons, I based myself on the provisions of Article 182 of the Criminal Procedure Code." Said article states that the trial judge shall issue an order of arrest "when there are well-founded indications of guilt."

Judge Estaba Moreno also said, "When the dossier left this court it contained sufficient evidence, and the arrest orders were confirmed by the military court. However, I have no idea what happened to the dossier after it left my hands."

These statements weren't made by just anybody. They were made by Venezuelan Judge Delia Estaba Moreno, a prestigious jurist with many years of professional experience who was in charge of the case for several months until it was transferred from civil jurisdiction to the military courts. She opened the dossier on the case and is thoroughly familiar with every detail of the investigation proceedings. This is why her courageous statements prove that the course of the proceedings had been diverted toward a dirty, monstrous maneuver aided and abetted by the present Government of Venezuela.

Judge Estaba Moreno's firm, coolheaded statements demonstrate that justice in Venezuela has not been debased and that a clumsy attempt is being made to handcuff it through an action that has all the earmarks of an act of provocation against Cuba, an action that runs counter to the worldwide clamor for an end to air piracy and terrorism, an action that, if successful, will cast an indelible mark on the prestige of the Venezuelan armed forces, on the Venezuelan state and on the Venezuelan Government.

Judge Estaba Moreno's dignified stand is in keeping with her unwavering attitude throughout the time she was in charge of the case: an attitude characterized by impartiality, forcefulness, honesty and resolve to punish those guilty of the horrible crime.

It wasn't by accident that the defense attorneys made repeated efforts to challenge her for lack of competence when she was in charge of the case, nor was it by accident that instead of contesting the serious evidence that existed against the defendants they tried to postpone the trial and have the main dossier transferred to another judge.

These delaying tactics were accompanied with threats, pressure and contempt of judiciary and executive authority. As everyone will remember, in those months in 1977 terrorist groups linked to ringleader Orlando Bosch tried to sabotage a Venezuelan passenger plane and carried out an act of sabotage against the Venezuelan airlines offices in Florida demanding the release of the assassins. It was also at that time that the Daily Journal published an interview with Bosch in which he made all kinds of insulting and slanderous remarks about then Venezuelan President Carlos Andrés Pérez.

No amount of pressure was able to stop Judge Delia Estaba Moreno from acting according to justice and reason. The prosecutor of the military court to where the case was transferred called for a sentence of 30 years' imprisonment, based on the evidence. And then, the same prosecutor, following orders from above, asked for an acquittal, a request that was quickly ratified by the military court.

The facts themselves; the charges about the changes made in the dossier; the promises made by the Venezuelan Government officials to the criminals that they would be set free; the criminals' well-known links with the Venezuelan security services; the pressure exerted on witnesses to change their initial statements; the overwhelming evidence produced by Venezuelan journalist Alicia Herrera; and, most recently, the courageous statements made by Judge Delia Estaba Moreno confirm that efforts are being made to commit an action as monstrous as the sabotage off Barbados. Acting coldly and deliberately, a state has assumed the protection of those guilty of a barbarous crime, thus making it possible with such incredible behavior for crazed individuals filled with hatred, for professional killers like those who blew up the Cuban passenger plane in flight, to quench their thirst for blood through the repetition of similar acts.

The Venezuelan people's response to this horrible scheme demonstrates that the COPEI clique is making a mistake by thinking that justice and dignity in Venezuela no longer exist. It's not so easy to play around with a nation's conscience, honor and dignity!

•

If the prosecutor, the military court and the government of Venezuela insist on committing this crime, they'll have to go through with it alone, without the participation of those who really represent justice and to whom the magistrate's gown is a symbol of duty. They will have to carry it out against the will of the people of Venezuela, of the peoples of the rest of Latin America and of all conscientious governments of this hemisphere and the world over.

CSO: 3020

JORGE RISQUET COMMEMORATES 'GRANMA' ANNIVERSARY

Havana GRANMA WEEKLY REVIEW in English 12 Oct 80 p 9

[Text]

Speech delivered by Jorge Risquet, member of the Secretariat of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Cuba, in a ceremony to commemorate the 15th anniversary of the founding of the daily Granma held in the Luis A. Turcios Lima Auditorium of the Ministry of Communications, in Havana, on October 3, 1980, Year of the 2nd Congress

Comrades:

ON THE occasion of meeting to celebrate the 15th anniversary of the daily Granma, we share the satisfaction of this collective that successfully tackles each day the task of bringing to our citizens the most relevant domestic and international news, our Party's guidelines and the most important efforts of our people who, immersed in their daily chores, read Granma every morning to get a rundown of the information they are interested in.

Anniversaries of various work places are often used to give a rundown of the work done in a given period — a particularly complex task when a newspaper is involved that daily submits the results of its work to the rigor of its own criticism and to the judgment of public opinion. Each day millions of avid readers take over the work done the night before by journalists, editors, photographers, and print, communication, transportation and office workers.

Each edition of the paper becomes, therefore, a literary and political job encompassing widely varying topics that immediately — in a matter of hours — is subjected to the rigorous criticism of millions of readers of all ages, interests, opinions and walks of life.

Someone once said that this multifaceted work is a flower lasting only one day, a flower that buds, opens its newsprint petals and withers all on the same day.

In the case of Granma, this image is valid only if one adds that this daily flower is planted with skill and care, has undergone a long period of germination and only withers after sowing its seed deep in the consciousness of its readers.

Only those who are on the inside of the exhilarating atmosphere in a newspaper are able to justly appraise what these 15 years of work in a publication with these characteristics really mean.

It has taken you, Granma workers, an impressively sustained effort for 5000 days and 5000 nights to punctually bring out the organ of the Cuban Revolution whose voice of guidance and denunciation, combat and hope, reaches our people at dawn and is then multiplied over the other media and taken to the four corners of the world.

A well-known Spanish poet once wrote;

> Some obscure helots > of pen and paper > toil laboriously
> so the next day > on the pages of the daily > the world's in your hands, > you're master of the land,
> your horizons are widened.

It goes without saying that the workers of Granma are not helots in the sense attached to the word in ancient Sparta; yet they are indeed helots if we consider their unblemished sense of duty, the responsible way in which they work and their dedicated efforts to make each edition better than the one before.

On occasions like this, we cannot but recall the origins of our organ founded, when the Revolution was still young, with the merger of two political papers that had behind them a magnificent revolutionary record.

The fighting tradition of Noticias de Hoy, whose forerunner was Voz Proletaria, and the revolutionary impetus of Revolución, whose immediate antecedent was El Cubano Libre, gave rise to the wonderful symbiosis of which Granma is the result.

THE PATRIOTIC TRADITION OF OUR 'MAMBI' PRESS, THE TRAJECTORY OF WORKER PUBLICATIONS, THE HERITAGE OF THE TEMPERED, BOTH LEGAL AND UNDERGROUND, COMMUNIST PRESS AND THE LATEST OFFSHOOTS OF THE REVOLUTIONARY PRESS WERE THE THREADS LEADING UP TO GRANMA

The patriotic tradition of our mambí press, the trajectory of worker publications, the heritage of the tempered, both legal and underground, communist press and the latest offshoots of the revolutionary press were the threads leading up to Granma.

With its brilliant record, Granma has not only remained faithful to its historical legacy but has also heightened that legacy in such a way that it is now a landmark in the development of journalism in our country.

"The very name of the paper," Fidel once said, "is a symbol of our revolutionary ideas and of our path."

The social function of the press under socialism in itself implies an extraordinary responsibility, new and greater complexities, in the case of a newspaper like Granma that, in addition to conforming to the ethics of the journalistic profession, has its own condition of being the official organ of the Party, voicing its viewpoints and serving as a vehicle to guide and set the pattern for the actions of millions of people.

The growing role of information in the life of modern societies is constantly attaching more importance to the role of the mass media, particularly the press, whose workers must each day sift a considerable volume of material to give their readers broad, varied and interesting information on events that have real relevance and content in line with the needs of a population like ours — highly politicized, aware of widely varying questions and avidly seeking knowledge and news on the most varied problems.

In the pages of Granma — which through its daily presence in homes and work places for 15 years now has become a sort of daily bread — our workers can find the selection that is the result of the entire staff's careful work. Actually, in spite of the fact that everything is still not perfect, the official organ of the Party offers a substantial volume of information whose quality and approach satisfy the needs of the greater part of the population, whose broad range of interests makes a careful distribution of space and a setting of priorities mandatory practically every day.

The basic quality of journalism under the conditions of socialist society is precisely what generates greatest complexity, for it is not just a question of keeping public opinion informed in any old way, overwhelming readers with a chaotic avalanche of information without rhyme or reason, or wasting time and resources in putting on the senseless show typical of the bourgeois press.

When, for instance, we compare Granma with some capitalist dailies whose editions have 30 and more pages, our paper seems minuscule in size.

Yet, on going into content, it can be seen that while the capitalist papers are characterized by a chaotic mixture of very diverse, pompous and trivial information, often unconfirmed and attributed to unidentified sources or simply concocted by the editors, in addition to the ads, fashion pages, sex or diplomacy, with all the gossip and frivolity of the social pages, ours is a daily that is reasonably well ordered, with essential information on matters of real social interest, that focuses on the spheres of greatest interest to the public and that, in the long run, contains more and better information and contributes in a more responsible way to forming mature public opinion, qualified to correctly evaluate what the paper brings each day.

What those who make simple comparisons sometimes fail to understand is that the essential differences between one and the other way of making a newspaper also generate differences in form and content and that the excess information that bourgeois papers boast about so much boils down, in essence, to a sophisticated procedure of disinformation.

To plough his way through all that is dumped on him every morning, the reader of capitalist dailies must himself tackle the task of selecting and analyzing what, in our case, is done each night by Granma's editorial team. In the long run public opinion in the capitalist countries necessarily suffers from indigestion, or worse still, from poisoning of a special kind, falsehoods ranging from subtle distortions of the truth to downright lies and gross slander.

IN THESE LAST 15 YEARS, GRANMA HAS ACHIEVED ITS MAIN GOAL OF KEEPING OUR PEOPLE INFORMED, GUIDING THEM IN THEIR EVERYDAY TASKS, CONTRIBUTING TO THEIR EDUCATION AND EXERTING A POSITIVE INFLUENCE ON HELPING DEVELOP THEIR REVOLUTIONARY AWARENESS

The Granma collective, following its own path and drawing from the experience of the revolutionary and progressive press, has created its own peculiar style and overcome the obstacles stemming from inexperience; it has succeeded in doing away with clichés and in filling the vacuum caused by the absence or lack of regularity of publications specializing in culture, sports, science and technology. In these last 15 years, Granma has achieved its main goal of keeping our people informed, guiding them in their everyday tasks, contributing to their education and exerting a positive influence on helping develop their revolutionary awareness.

There have also been shortcomings in these 15 years. Not everything was done the way it should have been done. However, every single important event, every revolutionary feat and every social achievement was to be found on the pages of Granma.

Day after day, Granma has reflected the activities of the people, life throughout the country, the efforts of its workers, the dedication of its soldiers, the most important developments in Cuban culture, its victories in sports and the progress made in education and public health.

Only recently we were witness to the efforts made to give adequate coverage to the most outstanding technical-scientific feat ever undertaken by a Cuban: the Soviet-Cuban spaceflight that took Granma up into the stars and whose protagonists were cosmonauts Arnaldo Tamayo and Yuri Romanenko, along with Valeri Riumin and Leonid Popov.

In keeping with a necessary system of priorities set by the limitations of space available for each day's issue, Granma reflects the successes of certain work collectives, the progress of the sugar harvest and agricultural development, the advances made in industrialization, the efforts of port and transportation workers, the dedicated work of fishermen and seamen and the victories obtained using higher forms of production in the countryside. In a nutshell, the extraordinary, many-sided, dynamic efforts made in economic and social sectors that contribute to the progress made by our people in the construction of socialism.

The space devoted every day by our paper to the international situation reflects the tenacious and often heroic revolutionary efforts of the peoples engaged in a struggle against imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism and racism. The progress made by the recently liberated nations in their struggle to free themselves of the burden of centuries of domination is reflected in our paper. And revolutionaries the world over find in the coverage of their struggles a powerful stimulus for their sacrifices and their aspirations.

No important international event escapes Granma's attention. Granma reports on it, analyzes it and often offers its readers conclusions on its results and its role in contemporary international society.

The progress made by the countries building socialism; the internationalist stand of the Soviet Union; a critique of the bourgeois way of life and the ideological currents hostile to socialism are given systematic attention by Granma, which also reserves in each issue the necessary space to cover the speeches of our leaders, particularly those of our commander in chief, which, given their great importance, have often made it necessary to run off over a million copies, which have rapidly sold out.

The pages of Granma have also echoed the criticisms formulated by our leaders and our readers as well to those who show themselves to be incapable or insensitive to people's problems, to those who make incorrect use of common property, to those who make errors in the management of the economy and to those who do not take proper care of social property.

Practically everything of real interest to our people is published day after day by this newspaper that is the daily result of the work, the intellect and the desire for improvement on the part of the revolutionary collective of Granma workers.

Doubtlessly, Granma still has a great deal to do, and the professionals on its roster must make renewed efforts to further their knowledge. There's still room for improvement in some of the departments, in distribution, for example. But, as a whole, the Party and the people are satisfied with the paper, above all on account of the marked improvement in efficiency and the sustained overall progress especially evident since the 1st Congress of the Party.

Nevertheless, this collective, which has been so receptive to fair and opportune criticism, should meditate on the observations made by Comrade Raúl in regard to the press at the recent journalists' congress, which deal with the main aspects of journalistic work. Above all, we would like to insist on his observations on the journalist's role as a worker in the terrain of ideology, who, according to Raúl's words, is "a reproducer of ideology, one who multiplies his appreciations by millions of copies."

This characteristic of the journalist's profession is the source of the great responsibility that falls on those who live and work in this field, who must be aware of the fact that our people's being well informed, well oriented and therefore well prepared to interpret everything that occurs in our country and in the rest of the world and to react accordingly in the face of any problem increasingly depends on the journalist's work, on the effort he puts into his work, his dedication to his work and the extent of his knowledge and ability.

The paper should also improve its profile, make an effort to better reflect the activities of the Party's grass-root organizations, reflect more frequently and in greater depth the results of the Party's work and, above all, keep the people and Party members informed on the results of the activities of leading bodies which often make decisions that take a long time to be made known or do not reach the grass-roots and the population the way they should.

This can only be achieved as correspondents, reporters and activists strengthen their ties with the organizations, learn to grasp better the essence of their work and more frequently attend events in the provinces, the municipalities and major work places.

As the organ of the Party, Granma must dedicate its greatest efforts to the ideological work for its pages to reflect, day by day, the complex problems facing the Party in this respect; the virulent, complex class struggle in the ideological sphere; and the problems that it is of great importance to clarify in furthering the revolutionary awareness of the masses.

We must realize that the defense of the purity of our ideology, the clarification of our historical past and the effort to salvage the best of our national culture — which, at present, constitutes the main content of the ideological page in some issues — should be well substantiated, not so much with profound, complex and often excessively long theoretical pieces — not always suitable for a daily — as with opportune, skillful treatment of current issues: a critique of the bourgeois way of life and currents hostile to socialism; the problems of peace and détente; the different viewpoints in appraising international cooperation; the situation of the peoples of the so-called Third World; the problems of socialist construction; sociopolitical questions related to the organization of social production; the economic analysis of achievements in production; and other matters of indisputable interest whose coverage involves practical ideological clarifications.

In order to make these aims a reality, we must do more to implement the guidelines emanating from the Party leadership. In this sense, the press in general, and Granma in particular, must pay due attention to the establishment of the mechanisms necessary for implementing the resolution of the 9th Plenary Meeting of the Party of the exercise of criticism in the mass media.

The more what is contained in that resolution becomes natural to people, the more the quality of journalistic work will improve; the greater prestige of the various press organs will contribute to eradicating the errors and shortcomings affecting production and services for the people, creating headaches for the people and, in general, blocking our people's progress.

Due attention must also be paid to subject coverage and efforts must be made to continue improving our work until a perfect balance is achieved between national and international information and the attention given by the paper to the different spheres of the nation's life.

This should be an occasion for recognizing and making known to you that it wouldn't be fair to expect top quality work from the Granma collective while at the same time neglecting to give the systematic and opportune help you need from our Party, especially the Party's central organs.

We should all feel committed colleborators of Granma and are under an obligation to provide the paper, in an organized, permanent fashion, with the information and criteria necessary for the writing staff to have all the informational and analytical elements to formulate a well-founded, accurate, true and profound approach.

Who sets us an example in fulfilling this duty to the letter is Fidel; in spite on his multiple, complex and exhausting tasks, he always finds time for such collaboration.

Comrades, at this celebration I have emphasized the role played by the official organ of our Party in informing and guiding the masses, but we can't overlook the fact that internationally speaking Granma is the best qualified and most timely spokesman concerning the feelings of our people, and its articles and editorials clearly and unequivocally set forth the stand taken by the Cuban Revolution, the essential lines of our foreign policy and the resolute will of our nation to confront all maneuvers, resist all aggression and properly counter the efforts of our enemies.

Should it be necessary to confirm any of this, the recent work drives on the part of the workers in response to the mounting anti-Cuban maneuvers orchestrated by imperialism and backed by the continent's puppet government and reactionary press, the strong reply we gave from its pages to the gross training invasion, the broad coverage concerning the events that took place at the Peruvian and Venezuelan embassies, the editorials clearly setting forth the Cuban stand and the coverage given to the Marches of the Fighting People would be good examples of the deep respect our people have for Granma.

WHEN GRANMA SAYS SOMETHING IT IS CUBA THAT IS SPEAKING, AND CUBA DOES NOT EXAGGERATE, IS NOT IN ITS ACTIONS PROMPTED BY SENSATIONALISM, AND NEVER LIES

And our enemies also respect Granma, for they fear the sharp edge of its pen, the overwhelming strength of its truth, and its penetrating humor and growing prestige that has forced many to realize that when Granma says something it is Cuba that is speaking, and Cuba does not exaggerate, is not in its actions prompted by sensationalism, and never lies.

Another example that attests to the above is the clear-cut information published so far as a result of the attempts of the Venezuelan Government to bring about one of the most shameful maneuvers ever contemplated against Cuba, that of releasing the material and intellectual perpetrators of the monstrous crime committed off Barbados. Such information has unmasked the profoundly reactionary nature of that government and that court, and has aroused the indignation of world public opinion that unanimously condemns such infamous behavior.

The official organ of our Party has reached its 15th anniversary in the climax of its activities and the best moment of its life. Its prestige is today greater than ever; deeper than ever is the respect the people have for Granma, a paper that is indissolubly linked to them. For our people and our Party, it is our teacher and our voice.

For over ten of the 15 years, the difficult post of editor of Granma has been filled by Comrade Jorge Enrique Mendoza with an extraordinary sense of responsibility, with absolute dedication, leaving behind each dawn, with the close of a new issue, a bit of his health.

On expressing our Party's recognition for the selfless labor and exemplary modesty of Comrade Mendoza, we extend this tribute to all the comrades in the work collective of Granma.

Many congratulations to you all; may Granma have a long life and many successes.

Patria o muerte! Venceremos!

CSO: 3020

HART ON ART, LITERATURE AS CLASS VIEW

Havana GRANMA WEEKLY REVIEW in English 12 Oct 80 p 12

[Interview with Armando Hart, member of the political bureau of the Communist Party of Cuba and minister of culture, by Ana Maria Radaelli; date and place not given]

[Text]

● A GREAT deal has been written about culture in socialism. This is quite understandable, considering that art and literature represent a specific social class' world view.

In contrast with art conceived as a luxury for a minority and the subculture imposed by imperialism on those countries under its domination, socialism reaffirms the real values of artistic creation which, based on the most legitimate national traditions, is the result of the work of the masses and is meant for their enjoyment.

Twenty years ago Cuba began its first big cultural battle. It was to get rid of illiteracy in a relatively short time. For the existence of over a million illiterates made speaking about culture utopian.

The creation of a strong cultural movement in Cuba, a country subjected to colonial and then to imperialist domination, was not easy. A long and difficult road had to be traveled to leave behind the past when our country was "a factory without schools or books" and reach a stage when all manifestations of culture are enjoyed by the masses.

We discussed the subject — of great importance to those peoples who have taken their future into their own hands — with Comrade Armando Hart, who graciously answered our questions.

The Cuban Revolution has been defined as the cultural event par excellence. Could you comment on this idea?

Every real revolution represents a cultural event. Revolutionary processes are based on two basic principles: first, the peoples' liberation struggle, that is, the concrete struggle for economic, social and political rights — what we call in Marxist terminology the class struggle — and, second, the evolution of philosophical and political ideas and the evolution of science. The latter factor has played a major role in our country. I'm referring specifically to the development of the political ideas of the 19th century. Starting in the late 18th century and more specifically since the middle of the 19th century, Cuban culture has been closely related to historical objectives, that is, independence from Spanish domination and abolition of slavery. In the 19th century there was an awakening of national awareness which, in turn, gave rise to a cultural awakening that served to heighten the national awareness. Thus culture was present in the country's political and social life.

October 20 has been named National Culture Day because it was on that date, ten days after the outbreak of Cuba's first war of independence, in 1868, that our national anthem, the March of Bayamo, was sung for the first time. Our purpose is to show that social action and culture have always been closely bound up with each other in the history of our cultural development. And it was this close relationship that made the 19th century one of great intellectual richness in Cuba.

Its highest figure was José Martí who was not only one of the precursors of the great anti-imperialist struggles but also a precursor of modernism. . . and whom Rubén Darío called his teacher. And it isn't a coincidence that the greatest figure in Cuban 19th-century politics and revolutionary ideas was also the greatest figure in Cuban culture.

Thus, as a result of this close relationship between the social and the cultural, between the awakening of national awareness and cultural awareness, the 19th century was very rich indeed and paved the way for the further development of Cuban culture.

However, imperialism often tried to divorce Cuban culture from its historical roots, a fact that is seen in the case of all peoples under foreign domination.

That is correct. The penetration began at the start of this century and gathered force starting in the '30s. Severing the links was a matter of major importance to imperialism, because the social ideas that existed in Cuba in the 19th century were advanced for their time. It wasn't a question of socialism since at that time this was not recognized as a necessity of society, but still those ideas were indeed very advanced: Cuba was in favor of independence and against slavery.

Neocolonialism used two main methods to undermine these ideas: the corruption of the educational system and penetration through the mass media. And I want to go back to what I said before, that is that the Revolution of 1959 was a cultural event to the extent that it meant precisely an awakening of national awareness.

There's no question that such awareness born a century before was present in the people, but it had been seriously undermined by imperialist penetration. The triumph of the Revolution, this major cultural event, led to a whole series of new cultural events.... The triumphant Revolution put into effect very advanced ideas that gelled with the construction of socialist society. The revolution in culture is profoundly humanist. Let us remember that the Preamble to our Constitution states that the fundamental law of the Republic is the full dignity of man. This principle of José Martí is deeply rooted in the core of our Revolution.

How would you define this principle of humanism?

It would be well to define exactly what this principle means since all kinds of myths and falsehoods have been connected with it. To us, the full dignity of man means that millions of people who didn't know how to read or write the word "humanism" can do it now; that millions of people who didn't know how to spell "dignity" are now able to do it.... For there are many places where there's much talk about democracy and yet millions of persons are discriminated against because of the color of their skin. To us, the term dignity of man is not applicable just to a few but to all.

The Revolution also meant the liberation of man when it gave him an education, medical care and a decent job.... There's one aspect we think is worthwhile pointing out and that is that many countries the world over have recognized that Cuba has had notable achievements in education, in public health.... Let's say that they simply had to recognize these facts. Still, many try to hide other equally important achievements, for example the mechanization of agriculture. And this is an important achievement, it's important that people don't have to cut sugarcane under the conditions they used to in the past. Doesn't this mean the full dignity of man? To some people it may not mean that because they're not interested in the workers, because to them a worker is not a human being — but to us he is. Freeing work in this way opens new possibilities for people to further their knowledge; they have more free time and therefore more time to study, more time to participate in cultural activities....

TITLES AND NUMBER OF COPIES PUBLISHED

Year	Number of titles	Number of copies
1973	886	31 620 900
1975	851	37 709 600
1978	1013	33 539 400
1979	1049	35 703 800

Which would you say were the most important achievements in the last 20 years of cultural work?

There were many, but the most important one was, without a doubt, the Literacy Campaign and the extension of primary education and later of secondary education, up to this vast educational system that comprises all levels and specialties. Only a revolution could make such an achievement possible.

Speaking more specifically, in the fields of art and literature the list of achievements is also long. However, suffice it to say, for example, that prior to the triumph of the Revolution the number of books published in Cuba ran to about half a million a year, while the figure now stands at over 30 million. We could mention many other things, for example the expansion of the library and museum network, the establishment of the motion picture industry, the founding of Casa de las Américas, the establishment of a whole system of art education, the training of art instructors, the development of the Movement of Amateur Artists as well as the development of a strong artistic movement among the children through the Pioneer Organization....

Regarding professional artists, we could mention the founding of a democratic organization which had no precedent in our country, the Union of Writers and Artists of Cuba (UNEAC). We should also mention the artistic brigades such as the Raúl Gómez García Brigade, composed of young professionals from the art schools, and the Hermanos Saíz Brigade, composed of young artists.... We should also mention the New Song Movement and the many festivals and other important events held in our country — those sponsored by Casa de las Américas, for example, which have contributed so much to our greater knowledge of the Latin American intellectuals.... None of these things would have been possible without a revolution. The National Ballet of Cuba wouldn't be what it is today without the Revolution, and the same thing can be said about the National Dance Group, the National Folklore Group and our theater movement....

What about the Revolution's efforts to bring out the real value of the cultural traditions you mentioned before?

Bringing out the real value of our cultural and artistic traditions along with the enhancement of our cultural values; that's very important. It can be said without exaggeration that never before in the history of this country were artists given such recognition as they are given now. Before the triumph of the Revolution, figures like Alejo Carpentier and Nicolás Guillén, to cite only two examples, were underestimated by that society.... Today, the situation is radically different. What we're saying now can also be said by our artists, because it's an objective fact that some may deny or ignore, but it exists just the same. We have already pointed out the importance we attach to bringing out the historic values of our culture, of a culture that developed, as we have seen, throughout the 19th century. I think we've done quite a lot in this respect, but we should continue to delve deep into the study and the revival of our cultural roots.

What can you tell us about the Revolution's policy on artistic creation?

In the specific field of creation, there's no doubt that the Revolution gave great opportunities to our artists to develop their talent. As I said before, prior to the triumph of the Revolution the number of books published in Cuba ran to about half a million a year, while the figure now is over 30 million, and I believe that is very significant. The difference between the number of authors who have had their books published in the last 20 years — both established writers and young talents — and the list of the books published prior to 1959 is so great that it's beyond comparison.

Many things are said about our country abroad, but the facts speak for themselves, because the work of the Revolution is reflected in facts such as those we have just mentioned. The complete list is too long to bring up now....

This doesn't mean that we're fully satisfied with the results. A revolutionary is never satisfied; when he feels satisfied it means that he's stopped being a revolutionary! There are still many problems to be solved, but getting back to what I was saying, cultural work is so evident, it's impossible to hide. As far back as 1961, on the occasion of the dialogue between Fidel and the intellectuals and, later, at the 1st Congress on Education and Culture and then five years ago, at the 1st Congress of the Communist Party of Cuba, what we meant by creative work was clearly defined, and the principle is reflected in our Constitution as follows: "Artistic creativity is free as long as its content is not contrary to the Revolution. Forms of expression in art are free." This means that we guarantee freedom of creation as long as it's not contrary to the essence of the Revolution, because that would constitute a negation of creative freedom.

There's full freedom of form because the Revolution made freedom of creation possible and supplied materials to all artists, and we can assert that never before in the history of Cuba has there been so much freedom. This, too — and you must forgive the repetition — may be ignored by the ignorant or kept secret by our enemies, but it is an objective fact.

As I said before, many myths and falsehoods have been woven around this subject. The mass media controlled by the imperialists have never said a word about what it meant to eradicate illiteracy, to extend primary, secondary, technical and university education to the entire country. They never mention the strong Movement of Amateur Artists that embraces every sector of the population, the libraries and houses of culture located everywhere in Cuba or the intellectuals' and artists' participation in drawing up our cultural policy....

How do they take part?

One of the Revolution's great achievements in the field of culture is precisely that of having artists participate directly in drawing up our cultural policy. How is this done? Through the Union of Writers and Artists of Cuba, the Raúl Gómez García and Hermanos Saíz Brigades, the New Song Movement and the Technical Advisory Council of the Ministry of Culture composed of the most representative figures of art and literature.... It's done this way because the Ministry of Culture does not consider itself as having the authority to take any kind of important decision in the matter of the arts without the advice of specialists in that field. Likewise, we cannot apply a policy on music without consulting the musicians, nor in the field of the theater without consulting the playwrights....

We challenge all those who slander our country by accusing it of muzzling culture to come here and see for themselves; let them meet with our artists, our writers and our young people in the universities. We challenge them to meet with the students and intellectuals in their own countries the way we've been doing. We challenge them to talk freely with the intellectuals in their countries and discuss cultural policy with them.

It has become very fashionable to use the term "dissident" in the propaganda campaigns aimed at Cuba and the socialist countries in general.

Yes, but they forget that in many capitalist countries the entire cultural movement dissents, at least on basic issues. It's not a question of just a few.... The cultural movement in the capitalist system dissents, from Picasso to Neruda, to cite only two examples. Neruda was a dissident in the capitalist system and so was Picasso. So what do these propagandists do? Instead

BOOKS PUBLISHED

Year	Number of titles	Authors (Cuban)	Number of copies
1978	623	602	32 887 000
1979	698	808	32 479 000

Year	Number of titles	Authors (foreign)	Number of copies
1978	331	328	9 256 800
1979	342	316	11 082 300

Note: This table includes coeditions printed abroad

SOME INTERESTING FIGURES

	1963	1973	1975	1978	1979
Theater
Performances	1257	3255	6798	7009	8944
Audience (in thousands)	531.8	771.4	1211.1	1367.9	1816.5
Groups	—	40	40	50	56
Dance
Performances	243	280	635	444	903
Audience (in thousands)	139.3	247.5	316.7	288	612.3
Groups	—	6	10	8	15
Music
Performances	5892	61 162	30 225	36 366	37 104
Audience (in thousands)	2013.5	6485.2	9875.1	7048	7727.9
Cinema
Performances	—	—	2309	1963	2847
Audience (in thousands)	—	—	2827.8	1276	2115.9
Amateur arts
Activities	—	105 600	220 400	310 600	376 800
Audience (in thousands)	—	21 045.3	40 358.3	44 333.2	41 904.6
Libraries
Users (in thousands)	399	2595.8	4052	5571.7	5037.8
Museums
Visitors (in thousands)	—	637.7	1026.2	1365.9	1321.8
Exhibits
Visitors (in thousands)	382.4	751.2	1112.7	1482.3	1229.3

of mentioning our achievements — and there are plenty of them — there's a big outcry about four or five names. Four or five names that don't reach, even remotely, the intellectual stature of an Alejo Carpentier, a Nicolás Guillén or an Alicia Alonso. No great figure of Cuban culture is outside the Revolution. Now then, supposing there were more than four or five, so what? Supposing there were 100 or 200, so what? There are millions of us living in socialist society! They want us to talk about the dissidents. But we have to talk about our educational system, about our houses of culture — there are already 111 of them throughout the country — about our artistic groups that have been so successful abroad; about our amateur artists festivals, in a nutshell, about the intellectual development of a country where only 20 years ago more than a million people didn't know how to read or write. . . . Why all this hullabalooo over four or five people? It's worth asking why. For those who engineer the propaganda campaigns against Cuba and against socialism don't tackle the problems of intellectual development in their own countries or the problem of setting up a national library network or the many problems involved in playwriting in today's world or the real and concrete problem that the motion picture industry in many — if not all — capitalist countries is flooded with violence and pornography. That's culture? A movie industry that goes so far as to use children for these purposes — and this happens in countries that claim they champion human dignity. What does this mean? That the current theme of the dissidents is just a smoke screen in an attempt to hide the great problems posed by the development of culture today, in a world where there are millions of illiterate people!

There's one undeniable fact, and that is that the enemy has a powerful machine. Let's not forget that the press, radio and television in those countries are in the hands of the monopolies. In short, they use cultural techniques for anti-culture purposes that denigrate human beings.

Generally speaking, to what extent have the resolutions adopted by the 1st Congress of the Party five years ago been fulfilled?

Generally speaking, we can say that our objectives have been reached and that, as we said before, there have been many achievements. However, there's something I'd like to point out. The 1st Congress theses say that the Communist Party of Cuba's policy on artistic culture is aimed at establishing in our country a climate of great creativity that will promote art and literature, which constitutes the legitimate aspiration of the whole people and is the duty of all political, state and mass organizations.

That is already a fact and, quite likely, one of our greatest achievements: the establishment of that kind of favorable climate for artistic and intellectual work that makes possible the creation and dissemination of art in such a way that creation is the result of the masses' work for the enjoyment of the masses. And that, I repeat, is one of our greatest achievements.

CSO: 3020

NEED FOR WORK STANDARDIZATION EXPLAINED

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 11 Sep 80 p 1

[Article by Jose Nornielia: "System of Administration and Planning of the Economy"]

[Text] Standardization of all labor operations capable of being standardized and the application of some form of piecework or per-job payment corresponding to each type of work, where possible, are the two principal measures which should be undertaken by all organizations, firms and budget-operated units during the rest of this year and next year to speed up improvement in work standardization and the wage structure.

In the immediate future emphasis, should be placed on achieving basic work standardization in accordance with time standards, specific methods and planned programs in each of our work centers. It is also essential to continue to apply the principle of socialist distribution according to the quantity and quality of work performed.

Among other measures which should be taken are updating all time standards compatible with the spirit of Resolution No 236 and implementing the types of work standards which prevailed in 1976 in accordance with Instruction No 1 issued by the former Ministry of Labor in 1972.

We must preserve our typical agrigultural projects and coordinate them with the new terms of the system of payment per finished crop. At the same time, we must promote forms of payment commensurate with the amount of production really achieved. With regard to the building sector, the system of payment per contract should be the general rule.

Urgent Need To Draw up Branch Regulations for Bonus Payments

It is also necessary to draw up branch regulations for bonus payments to speed up their introduction as a powerful factor in materially stimulating workers in accordance with their productive efforts and services rendered.

Companies and budget-operated units should promote internal studies on work standardization to improve that operational phase. The result of these studies should be incorporated in the annual plan for the development of the work-standardization program so than we might enter more deeply into a phase which could be described as the establishment of a basic level of work standardization.

In recent years, the work-standardization effort has been limited by many objective and subjective factors; it has met with difficulties and suffered from many inadequacies. Its greatest limitation in recent years can be traced to the fact that the increase in productivity brought about by the need for increased production did not seek to mobilize our current productive reserves through improvement in work standardization.

Inadequate Wages, Obstacle to Progress of Work-Standardization Effort

Among the difficulties of a general nature on the subject of work-standardization, we can point out the recession and resultant stagnation in the process of tying wages in with performance as one of the most serious. This situation has caused a weakening in the application of the principle of socialist distribution according to the work involved and a lack of concern in introducing basic work standardization in work centers, particularly with reference to piecework standards.

In general, there has been poor performance in the labor and wage indicators, such as productivity, average wage, base wage, cost per production unit and others.

We should keep in mind that the development of work standardization does not constitute an end in itself but rather an effective means of increasing economic efficiency. While plans for the economy do not reflect the possibilities of increasing productivity through work standardization, nonfulfillment of the work-standardization, measures adopted for that purpose is also not obligatory.

This limitation is all the more significant in that the mechanisms for moral and material incentives have not been fully developed, thus providing companies with the challenge to put forth all their productive effort to increase their economic efficiency.

8568
CSO: 3010

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS ISSUES NEW WAGES FOR SUGAR INDUSTRY

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 15 Sep 80 pp 4-5

[Original paragraphing not followed]

[Text] Introduction

On 14 February 1980, the executive committee of the Council of Ministers approved the General Wage Reform which covers all the economic sectors and branches in the country. One of the objectives of the wage reform is to increase economic efficiency through increased work productivity, with the establishment of organizational measures that make the massive introduction of payment for yield possible. The principle is from each according to his ability, to each according to his work. This also leads to closer agreement between the social interests and the individual interests of the workers.

In order to fulfill the objectives of the wage reform, the introduction of a coefficient of 1.15 for sugar harvest activities has been planned to differentiate the wages in this branch from others. The coefficient is nothing more than a wage increase expressed in a percentage (15 percent) which means that work of equal complexity provides different wages for workers based on the branch of the economy in which they work.

Everyone knows that the economy of our country depends decisively on sugar production which includes, agriculturally, land preparation, sowing, cultivation and harvesting of the cane and, industrially, its transformation into sugar. It is in the interest of the revolution to favor this branch of the economy in order to stimulate increased productivity, efficiency and the short, medium and long-term production quotas and to promote the incorporation, training and stability of the work force in each one of the sugar activity phases.

Along with this coefficient, the new rates of the General Wage Reform will be applied as will payment of bonuses, payment for years of service in certain jobs and other mechanisms of material stimulation based on payment for yield.

In other words, plans are to increase the wage base of the workers who participate in cane agriculture and the sugar industry by some 100 million pesos. About 42 million will go to the industry and 58 million to all the tasks of cane agriculture, including harvesting.

The increases in the industrial sector will be applied as the organizational conditions required for the application of the General Wage Reform are established. The coefficient of 1.15 for the industry will be applied gradually as the fourth brigade is introduced in each sugar mill.

At the beginning of the next sugar harvest, the application of the fourth brigade will begin in 18 selected mills throughout the country in order to obtain the necessary experience to make the extension of this new labor organization possible. This requires a greater number of trained workers than before.

The wage increases for the agricultural activities of the sugar harvest will be applied at the beginning of the work for the next sugar harvest. In the case of cane sowing, cultivation, fertilization, etc., they will be implemented now to the degree that the cane enterprises create the organizational conditions indicated in the General Wage Reform.

The State Committee for Labor and Social Security and the Ministry of the Sugar Industry in coordination with the CTC [Central Organization of Cuban Trade Unions] and the National Sugar Workers Union have been working since the last sugar harvest on work organization and wage studies in order to incorporate the principles of the General Wage Reform in the coming harvest.

These studies were done in cane enterprises in the provinces of Pinar del Rio, Havana, Matanzas, Villa Clara, Cienfuegos, Sancti Spiritus, Ciego de Avila, Camaguey, Las Tunas, Holguin, Granma, Santiago de Cuba and Guantanamo with the participation of workers, union and administrative leaders and dozens of specialists including economists, engineers, psychologists, sociologists and technicians in work organization and wages. They made thousands of direct observations of the work, statistical analyses of previous periods and direct interviews with workers who participate in cane cutting, reaping and harvesting. Also research done by the Ministry of Agriculture in previous years and the opinions of the technical offices of the agrotechnical and mechanized sector were incorporated in these studies.

In order to apply the results of these studies, the executive committee of the Council of Ministers agreed to introduce a set of organizational and wage measures in the next sugar harvest to permit a more rational use of the work force through the application of work norms adapted to the cane varieties, type of cutting, structure of the fields, distance of transportation and other organizational factors. Also the introduction of new wage mechanisms for the mobilization of volunteer forces has been planned. The CTC and the National Sugar Workers Union are working on improvement of emulation regulations that specify rates, inspection periods and stimulation mechanisms at the levels where this is held.

In summary, the study covers: manual and mechanized cutting; harvesting with animal power, tractors and trucks; and mechanized reaping and harvesting. Also the collection centers that are part of the chain from the cutter to the mill were analyzed.

There has also been work on analysis of the working and living conditions of the workers in this sector in order to take measures to improve these conditions based on the economic possibilities of the country.

In order to give a more thorough explanation, let us discuss these measures by labor activity.

Manual Cane Cutting

In manual cutting, the types of cane (green or burned), the varieties, the cutting systems, reaping modalities, periods of cutting (leftover cane or not) and yield of the fields were studied.

The studies took into account time for training, time for rest and personal needs as well as time for servicing equipment. This work was done through thousands of direct observations of workers involved in manual cutting, reaping, harvesting and mechanized cutting.

In conclusion, it was felt necessary to reduce the variables and establish only four. Concerning varieties, it was decided to differentiate the quotas for Barbados 42231 from the rest of the varieties and to differentiate the quotas for the leftover cane from the other and green cane from burned cane.

We want to point out that, in the past harvest, the wages for cutting green cane increased from 4.64 pesos to 5.36 pesos, an increase of 15 percent in the cutters' wages. Also the studies showed an average increase in quotas for manual cutting of about 10 percent for harvesting by tractor and 13 percent for harvesting by truck. In harvesting by animal power, the introduction of new parameters of distance meant the adjustment of some quotas. In reaping, there was a reduction of the cane quota for collection centers and an increase in quotas for the rest of the cane.

With respect to the combines, an average reduction of 15 percent is planned for cane on less than 80,000 arrobas and an increase of 10 percent for cane on more than 80,000 arrobas.

The application of the new wage rates in the reform means an average increase of 10.4 percent on the wage scale which increases the projected wages for the cutters to 5.92 pesos. In addition, a coefficient of 1.15 will be applied as in the rest of the sugar harvest activities as an increase for economic and social interest, considering the importance of this sector for the economic and social development of the country. There has been approval for these wages to receive an additional increase of 15 percent compared to the other sectors. By adding this increase to the 5.92 pesos which we mentioned, the wages of the cutter increase to 6.80 pesos. In other words, if the cutter fulfills the quota, he will receive 25.9 percent more wages according to the new quota although this, as we have already stated, is 10 percent larger on the average than the present quota. Although this actually represents a 10-percent reduction in the rates, it will be compensated by the payment of 9.09 percent for rest which, until now, was included in the rates. Therefore, the 25.9 percent mentioned above becomes a net increase.

In addition, the cutter of green cane can also receive a 15-percent bonus (5 percent more than in the past harvest) for fulfillment of the quota and attendance biweekly and 10 percent more for fulfillment of the quota and attendance during the entire harvest (25 percent in total bonuses).

As an example, let us look at payment for 100 arrobas of cane cut before and after these measures are applied.

In the cutting of green cane by technical standards with a yield of 40,000 to 60,000 arrobas per caballeria, the rate per 100 arrobas is: before--2.23 pesos; and now--2.61 pesos.

As we can see, even when the quota was increased, the value for 100 arrobas grew by 0.23 pesos, an increase of about 17 percent for this type of quota. Also, for fulfillment of the quota in the 2-week period, the wages increased by about 15 percent because of the bonuses he receives if he meets the planned attendance and cutting quality.

We should point out that the existing wage of 5.36 pesos includes vacation pay; that is, the cane worker receives 9.09 percent for vacation pay in each payment.

Another important new measure is that, for all the wages the worker receives during the harvest, 9.09 percent will be accumulated. He will receive this at vacation time based on the real time he worked.

In practice, this measure means an additional increase. The worker who meets the attendance requirement and the quotas during the harvest will still receive a bonus of about 10 percent on all wages paid during the harvest.

As an example, we will take a worker who received the 15-percent bonus for fulfillment of the quota and attendance each 2-week period. In this case, if the harvest lasted 160 days as is normal, he should have worked 128 days if he was present during the entire period. Taking his wages of 6.80 pesos plus the 15 percent he was receiving as a bonus--1.02 pesos in daily bonuses--he will make 7.82 pesos daily.

The wages of 6.80 pesos multiplied by the 128 days of harvest give a total of 870.40 pesos. This was his wages during the harvest (without the biweekly bonuses). As we stated before, these wages can be increased by the bonus at the end of the harvest plus the accumulated vacation pay. Let us see an example.

The wages paid during the harvest increase with the final bonus as follows:

Wages for arrobas cut	870.40 pesos
Biweekly bonus	130.56
Bonus at end of harvest	87.04
	1,088.00 pesos

He has the right to 12 legal days of vacation--that is, 15 calendar days. If he is paid 1,088.00 pesos for the harvest time and the vacation pay is 9.09 percent of this income, the worker will receive 98.90 pesos.

In this case, the worker received 1,000.96 pesos during the harvest and, at the end of the harvest, will receive 185.94 pesos if he fulfilled his social duty expressed by fulfillment of the quota and punctual daily attendance at work.

If we divide this payment--1,186.90 pesos--by the 128 days worked plus the 12 vacation days for a total of 140 days, the worker will have received an average daily income of 8.47 pesos. Compared to the 6.40 pesos he would have received in the past harvest under the same conditions, this means an increase of 32 percent in wages.

Of course, we did not include other possible wage increases in the above example that he can obtain for overfulfillment of the quota.

Wages of Mobilized Cutter

Under the present system, the volunteer cutter has the opportunity to choose the wages of his regular work center with the right to receive the wage difference for the cane cut or he can accept the established rates and systems of payment for the harvest which is known as "go for what the cutter gets."

In the analysis of the results of real productivity achieved with respect to the wages of their regular work centers, we see that, in the last harvest, more than 15 million pesos were paid in wages that were not supported by production. The mechanisms of the Economic Management and

Planning System demand maximum efficiency from the enterprises and these, in order to achieve it, require that the wages paid in the cane enterprises correspond to the quantity and quality of work done by each worker.

Nevertheless, the present system impedes the application of this principle since the establishment of the wages for those workers does not depend on the enterprise that receives the work force. They are determined by the enterprise of origin.

To solve this situation, a new system has been conceived which consists in giving the mobilized cutter a guarantee of 40 percent of his regular wages. Starting with that sum, everything else that he receives in wages will be based on the quantity and quality of the work that he does during the harvest and the corresponding bonuses.

To have a better idea of this measure, we will illustrate it with the same example analyzed above.

In the past harvest, the worker was paid 5.36 pesos daily. Starting in the next harvest, that wage will increase to 6.80 pesos for fields of 40,000 to 60,000 arrobas. In the previous harvest, the cutter received 2.23 pesos for each 100 arrobas; in the next, that figure will increase to 2.61 pesos. In other words, he will receive a 17-percent increase. As can be observed in this example, the decrease in wages is reduced by the increased quota; that is, that increase is a net increase.

A volunteer cutter from any sector who receives, for example, monthly wages of 200 pesos will receive a guarantee of 80 pesos monthly if he agrees to this system of payment. In addition, he will be paid for the amount of cane cut plus the corresponding bonus if he fulfilled the quota. Following the example cited earlier and assuming he has fulfilled the monthly quota, the worker would receive: 6.80 pesos daily for 24 days for a total of 163.20 pesos plus 15 percent in bonuses--24.48 pesos--plus the 80 pesos in guaranteed wages for a total of 267.68 pesos for the month.

This represents a 33.8 percent increase in his wages of 200 pesos by merely fulfilling the quota and attendance.

Independent of this, the workers from the work centers of industry, transportation, services, etc. will still have the option to agree to this system or to cut cane for the wages from their regular work centers. However, in this latter case, they cannot receive the wage difference as before.

In order to further illustrate the new system, we have a worker who opts for it who receives a monthly income of 100 pesos. In this case, starting with the example mentioned above, if he chooses the wages of the harvest with the 40-percent guarantee, he will receive 40 pesos and the corresponding wages for the month which, as we stated above, can reach 187.68 pesos--the scale wages, coefficient and bonus. This plus the 40-percent guarantee would total 227.68 pesos. In other words, this worker can receive much more than twice his present wages by merely fulfilling the quota and attendance.

If the worker joins the harvest for the wages of his regular work center, he will only receive the 100 pesos mentioned above. These examples illustrate the justice of the system that will go into effect with the next harvest.

All the agricultural workers who are mobilized for the harvest will use the new approved system.

Wages of Regular Cutter of Cane Enterprise

In order to stimulate the incorporation and permanence of regular cutters of the cane enterprise itself, there is an additional increase of 10 percent in the daily wages paid for fulfillment of the quotas (without the bonuses) which they will receive in each payment period.

Loading the Cane

In the past harvest, there were two quotas for the loader operators based on the type of equipment used. This situation was solved during the course of the harvest itself and a single quota was established for both cases.

In the present quotas, the cane to be cut was not divided according to technical standards or collection centers. The studies demonstrated that it was necessary to establish a difference in loading cut cane with technical standards and for cut cane destined for the collection centers--that is, with chaff. It was also considered necessary to establish three ranges of yield and, based on this, fix the quotas for the next harvest.

An increase of 24 percent has been planned for loading cane which increases the present wages of the operator from 6.32 pesos to 7.82 pesos. Also when he fulfills the quotas of work and attendance, he can receive an additional 10 percent in the 2-week period which is equal to a total wage of 8.60 pesos daily. This raises the monthly income to 206.40 pesos if he fulfills the quota and attendance.

With respect to loading, the quotas for cane cut with technical standards (separated cane) have increased an average of 10 percent and they have been reduced almost the same amount for cane for collection centers (cane with chaff), except for cane of more than 100,000 arrobas. In the wage calculations, we felt that the medium-term worker would not be affected by the adjustments in the quotas.

Hauling Cane (Does Not Include Mechanized Cutting)

In the studies, special attention was given to hauling cane with animal power, tractors or trucks.

Those studies were aimed at analyzing the structure of the use of time for hauling tasks and tasks related to preparation and servicing of equipment as well as time for rest and personal needs. Also the ranges of distance, yield, type of cutting and other technical organizational factors were studied to define the work quotas.

All the above showed the need to reduce some quotas and increase others. There was an average increase of 12 to 14 percent although in no case was the increase more than 18 percent.

The need to introduce bonuses in this activity was also demonstrated.

Because of the above, it was decided to increase the wages of tractor operators from 5.36 pesos to 6.80 and those of truck drivers from 6.64 pesos to 8.28. In both cases, the wages were increased by 25 percent with the possibility of obtaining 10 percent more as a bonus if the established attendance and work quotas were met in the 2-week period. This will increase the daily wages to 7.48 and 9.11 respectively, with the possibility of receiving a monthly wage of 179.52 pesos and 218.64 pesos for the tractor operator and truck driver respectively if they fulfill the quota and attendance.

In hauling cane with animal power, an adaptation of the quotas has been planned based on differentiating the hauling distances. This will have positive repercussions on this task as will the introduction of wage increases of about 25 percent.

In summary, the new wage rates for the workers in manual cutting and mechanized loading are as follows:

No.	Occupation	Wage Rates Present	Wage Rates Approved
1.	Youth brigade manual cutter	5.36	6.80
2.	Cutter	5.36	6.80
3.	Cane burner	5.36	6.80
4.	Estimator	4.64	5.88
5.	Cane burner's helper	4.00	5.15
6.	Loader operator	6.32	7.82
7.	Grab operator	4.64	5.88
8.	Load arranger	4.64	5.88
9.	Manual loader	4.64	5.88
10.	Tractor operator	5.36	6.80
11.	Truck driver	6.64	8.28

The bonus system for all the labor forces that participate in the cane harvest is based on the following:

a) To increase the biweekly bonus for the cutter of green cane to 15 percent of the wages paid in the 2-week period for fulfillment and overfulfillment of quotas, establishing the fulfillment of the standards of quality in manual cutting as the main condition.

b) To continue the bonus of 10 percent for the cutter at the end of the harvest as an incentive for permanence and productivity.

c) To establish a bonus of 15 percent in mechanized loading for the loader operator and 10 percent for the grab operator and load arranger based on the biweekly wages paid for fulfillment and overfulfillment of quotas establishing the fulfillment of the standards of quality for that activity as a condition. Only those whose quotas have been lowered below the equipment quotas because they work for collection centers are not included in this.

To modify the wage treatment of the volunteer cutters of the CTC mobilized for the harvest, two choices have been given in each case:

a) To receive the wages of the regular work center without payment of the wage difference at the end of the harvest; and

b) To receive the rates and systems of payment established for manual cutting, also receiving 40 percent of the wages received at the regular work center.

The agricultural workers mobilized for the sugar harvest activities will use the latter system.

Also 9.09 percent for vacation pay will be paid to all the workers in manual activities and with animal power based on the new rates.

At present, the rate for these activities includes the 9.09 percent vacation pay. In the coming harvest, 9.09 percent will be added to the new rate to accumulate for subsequent use.

Mechanized Harvesting

Mechanized harvesting received special attention in the mentioned studies where everything related to the time for preparation of the equipment, quality of maintenance, material support for breakdowns and other factors as well as the real time of operation of each piece of equipment were evaluated according to types of cutting, yield per area, size of the fields, leftover cane or not and preparation of areas for mechanization.

At present, the workers in the mechanized harvest receive wages based on a guaranteed wage of 30 percent with regressive wage rates of 0.7 for each percentage of fulfillment up to 100 percent. After 100 percent, they are on a 1-to-1 basis. There is also a bonus of 15 percent when the daily quota is met.

The conclusions of the study advised the need to continue this system of payment, introducing a reduction in the quotas for green and leftover cane and areas of less than 80,000 arrobas per caballeria. This provides the chance to receive a 15-percent larger wage in the rate per thousand arrobas and, consequently, to be able to fulfill the quotas and receive the daily bonus of 15 percent.

The present wage scale was raised from 7.44 pesos to 7.84; at the same time, the present bonus will be increased from 15 percent to 20 percent. This makes a total possible increase of 25.4 percent. If we add a 10-percent bonus for seniority to operators with 3 to 4 years' experience and a 20-percent bonus for those with 8 years of work or more, the real increases for years of service and bonuses could be as follows:

	New Wage With Coefficient	Seniority	20% Bonus	Total Wages
Under 3 years	9.01	——	1.80	10.81
3 to 4 years	9.01	0.90	1.80	11.71
5 to 7 years	9.01	1.35	1.80	12.16
8 or more years	9.01	1.80	1.80	12.61

In other words, an operator with 5 years' experience or more who fulfilled the existing quota in the past harvest (which has been reduced by 15 percent) received 9.65 pesos daily. In the present harvest, he will receive 14.31 pesos, an increase of 48 percent.

We should add that there will be increases of about 25 percent in wages and 5 percent in the present bonus for the rest of the squad which would mean an average direct increase of 30 percent in wages for this work force. With the 15-percent reduction in quotas, this increase is about 45 percent.

In summary, the increases for mechanized cutting with the new wage measures individually, by job, are as follows:

No.	Occupation	Wage Rates Present	Approved
1.	Operator mechanic	8.72	10.48
2.	Combine operator	7.44	9.01
3.	Combine " mechanic	6.32	7.82
4.	"Panolero de Novia"	5.36	6.80
5.	"Panolero de Novia Tractorista"	5.36	6.80
6.	Estimator	4.64	5.88

[Continued on next page]

No.	Occupation	Wage Rates Present	Approved
7.	Tractor operator	5.36	6.80
8.	Sling tender	4.64	5.88
9.	Truck driver	6.64	8.28
10.	Mechanized harvest helper	----	5.88

The occupations of clearer of obstacles and comber have been combined under a single job title--mechanized harvest helper--at the new level on the scale.

For the squad chief who now receives 192.00 pesos per month, two wages have been established depending on whether he meets the qualifications for the occupation or not.

	Approved Wage Rates
With qualifications	10.48
Without qualifications	9.01
If an operator mechanic	12.05

Payment for years of service (seniority) applies to the combine operator as follows:

Years of Service	% Bonus on Wages Paid
3 to 4 years	10
5 to 7 years	15
8 or more years	20

The payment of bonuses to all the workers in the mechanized harvest has continued, establishing the fulfillment of the technical standards of quality established for mechanized cutting as the main condition.

a) Bonus for fulfillment of the daily quota:

Occupation or Activity	% of Bonus
Operator mechanic and combine operator	20
Squad leadership personnel	15

b) The payment of a 10-percent bonus will be gradually introduced in the mechanized harvest for the fulfillment and overfulfillment of harvesting for the collection centers. The principal condition will be fulfillment of the established percentage of foreign materials.

In the places where this bonus is being introduced, the bonus granted for fulfillment of the quota will be reduced by 5 percent. In these cases, a bonus of up to 25 percent can be received by the operators and up to 20 percent by the rest of the squad.

General Wage Reform in Sugar Industry

At the end of the 1960's, a set of organizational measures was adopted in this industry. They included labor and wage stabilization with the objective of achieving greater stability in the work force and the incorporation of new workers in order to respond to the planned increases in production.

Under the conditions created by Economic Calculation, it was necessary to introduce the General Wage Reform in this industry as a suitable mechanism to reinforce the stability of the work force.

Within the framework of the General Wage Reform, studies have been done in 18 sugar units in order to obtain experience to apply, throughout the industry, the principle of distribution based on work, the introduction of the weekly break, payment for abnormal labor conditions in those occupations that require it, payment for night work, the introduction of additional jobs and professions where feasible, etc.

For these reasons, it was agreed to introduce a set of organizational and wage measures in the sugar industry which favor not only stability but incorporation of new labor and increased qualifications of those workers.

In order to achieve these objectives the following measures will be applied at the beginning of the next harvest as the organizational conditions required by the General Wage Reform are created:

1. Application of the planned new rates in the General Wage Reform to all workers;

2. Payment for night work to personnel who work on rotating shifts;

3. Payment for abnormal labor conditions in those occupations that require it;

4. Payment for years of service (seniority); and

5. Payment for additional jobs, etc.

In addition, the payment of bonuses will be introduced to stimulate fulfillment of the sugar production quota and other indicators such as clean bagasse, pure syrup, etc.

The application of these wage measures must be preceded by studies of work organization that permit changes in the unnecessary work force at the sugar mills. This should constitute a large part of the workers who will make up the fourth brigade which we will discuss later. Until this is implemented, they should do other tasks or take qualification or requalification courses.

The measures that will be introduced will be based on the existence of three large groups of workers:

1. Workers presently stabilized (fixed);

2. Nonstabilized workers (contracted); and

3. New workers.

For the first group, the stabilized, the proposed measures will be applied, except in the cases where the wages now received during the harvest and at other times are higher on the basis of days worked, with the payment of the wage difference to those workers who sometimes hold a job requiring less skill.

By placing workers of this group in other activities outside the enterprise, the wage difference resulting from the wages that they receive for the occupation they hold during the harvest and the wages corresponding to the new occupation that they hold will be respected. They will receive their wages based on the established system of payment.

The second and third groups (nonstabilized and new workers) will collect the wages for the work they do.

The application of the measures and regulations described above permits the establishment of a new integral labor and wage organization which benefits all the sugar workers. It helps create favorable conditions to guarantee the stability and incorporation of the necessary work force to this industry and promotes increased skill in the workers.

a) The new wage rates refer to those approved in the General Wage Reform for all occupational categories, excluding those for technical positions which will be applied once the qualifiers for this occupational category are completed in 1981.

b) Payment for abnormal labor conditions will include all those resulting from the studies at each mill.

c) There will be payment of 0.16 pesos per hour for the shift from 1900 hours to 0300 hours and of 0.08 pesos for the shift from 0300 hours to 1100 hours. This would mean an increase of approximately 15 pesos for all workers who rotate shifts.

d) All the workers of the sugar enterprises will receive an increase in their basic wages for years of service (seniority).

This increase will be applied at an increasing rate in correspondence with the accumulated years of experience: 5 years, 5 percent; 10 years, 7 percent; 15 years, 9 percent; 20 years, 12 percent; and 25 years, 15 percent.

It will be necessary to establish certain rules in order to fulfill the objective of this increase; for example, the continuous nature of the years of work in one enterprise.

e) There will be a 10-percent wage increase for additional jobs. If a worker has the knowledge to permit him to do different jobs during different periods of the year, this is important to the sugar industry. Therefore, it has been decided that:

1. Those workers who have or achieve qualifications that permit their full incorporation during the periods of disassembly, cleaning and repair will have a 10-percent increase in their basic wages paid during the period those qualifications are used.

2. Those workers who are connected with another activity because they have equal or greater qualifications than the fourth group on the scale will have the right to the mentioned 10-percent bonus during the period of use of their qualifications.

f) The regulation of bonuses implemented during the past harvest in some experimental enterprises will be applied to all sugar enterprises with the required adjustments. This will stimulate fulfillment of the sugar production quota and other indicators such as clean bagasse, pure syrup, etc.

In summary, the integral application of these measures will be carried out as the studies are completed at the beginning of the next harvest.

Seen in perspective, these approved measures are within the limits of the agroindustrial complexes and permit a more consistent development of the Economic Management and Planning System. It is indispensable to use this focus in order to understand the positive effect that the approved wage and labor measures have on the economic efficiency of this, the primary industry of the country. The nominal expenses that these represent can be compensated for with the increased production and productivity and the development in general that is expected of this activity.

Gradual Introduction of Fourth Brigade in Sugar Industry

It has been the constant concern of the leadership of the revolution to provide a weekly break for the sugar workers who work on continuous shifts, especially in these years when this activity has lasted longer because of our harvests.

Nevertheless, only now does our country have solutions for this old problem. At this time, there is the possibility of deflecting the workers needed to complete the fourth brigade toward this activity and the General Wage Reform permits certain wage mechanisms which have little effect on the workers while reducing the work week by 1-1/2 days.

Since the decision to create the fourth brigade in the sugar mills implies the introduction of a new labor organization which requires a logical base for a certain period of time and the necessary work force with the required skills, it was felt appropriate to gradually introduce the fourth brigade without delaying the application of the General Wage Reform (based on the established requirements) as pertains to this branch: new rates, payment for abnormal labor conditions and night work, seniority, bonuses, etc.

In 18 selected sugar mills throughout the country, the necessary organizational studies have been done and conditions have been created for internal promotion of the workers of the mill to supply the required skilled personnel. The introduction of the fourth brigade at the beginning of this harvest and the application of a coefficient of 1.15 that will serve to further stimulate the incorporation and permanence of workers in this activity put this branch in a preferred situation compared to the rest of the national economy.

In the rest of the mills, the introduction of the fourth brigade at the proper time will be accompanied by the application of the coefficient mentioned above which will reduce the work week of the workers from 56 to 42 hours, only minimally decreasing the wage increases that they obtained at the time the reform was applied.

Let us take as an example the case of a worker in the sugar industry who holds the position of crystallization point checker and has been working in the mill for 15 years.

	Receives Now		Will Receive With Reform
	Daily	Monthly	Daily	Monthly
Rate scale	8.72	261.60	9.12	273.60
Abnormal labor conditions	——	——	0.64	19.20
Night work	——	——	0.64	19.20
				312.00
Seniority (9 percent)	261.60			28.08
				340.08

At the time the General Wage Reform is applied, he will receive an increase of 76.80 pesos.

When the fourth brigade goes into effect, his wage situation will be as follows:

Rate	1.14 pesos for 182 hours	207.48
Abnormal labor conditions	0.08 pesos for 182 hours	14.56
Night work	0.08 pesos for 182 hours	14.56
Coefficient	15 percent of 207.48	31.12
		267.72
Seniority (9 percent)		24.09
		291.81

Therefore, after the fourth brigade starts, the worker will see his wages increased by 30.21 and his work week decreased by 14 hours, practically 2 days, in comparison with his present situation.

The situation of a paid vacation for agricultural and forestry workers is as follows.

At present, as a result of a practice that dates back to the middle 1960's, the rates for those who are paid for manual work and animal power in agricultural and forestry activities increase by 9.09 percent for a paid vacation for these workers. This is included in the job rate.

The cyclical nature of the work done in agriculture and the reigning system of payment—that is, by the job—meant that the payment periods were short. Consequently, the wage accumulation system for vacation pay was not followed. This was paid with the basic part of the wages.

Due to the socioeconomic development that has taken place in our country since the triumph of the revolution, agricultural workers have employment all year, in one activity or another. Therefore, there is a logical need to take a vacation the same as the rest of the workers in the country. This has been presented repeatedly in recent years, particularly in the 13th and 14th Labor Congress.

It was not possible to respond to this until now since that would have meant a reduction in the income that these workers were receiving biweekly, a difference due to the accumulated income to be paid at the time of vacation.

The application of the General Wage Reform permits accumulation of the 9.09 percent for a paid vacation since these workers receive wage increases of 20 to 30 percent.

Once this mechanism is applied to an agricultural enterprise, the workers who benefit from this measure will receive a vacation and their pay, according to the existing legislation for all workers in the country.

It should remain clear that this measure will be applied in each agricultural enterprise at the time of implementation of the General Wage Reform once each enterprise has fulfilled the organizational requirements necessary for its application.

7717
CSO: 3010

TERRORISTS, WHITE RACISM, FEWER EXPORTS SEEN MAKING FUTURE BLEAK

Paris LE FIGARO in French 7 Oct 80 p 2

[Commentary by Thierry Desjardins: "Guadeloupe: Fear of the Future"]

[Text] Four bombs in Guadeloupe. One dead. One Boeing destroyed, two boats sunk. The news traveled around the world, and everyone concluded from the report that "this was it," that the rebellion in the French Antilles was beginning and that Martinique and Guadeloupe would before long become independent.

However, when one is in Guadeloupe for several days, things do not seem so simple. The French Antilles: that is very complicated. It is true, there are independentists in Guadeloupe, and doubtless there are increasing numbers of these individuals in this archipelago of 318,000 inhabitants, 54 percent of whom are under 20 years of age, with 98 percent of this group attending school. On the walls of Point-a-Pitre, Basse-Terre, Saint-Francois and Sainte-Anne, one sees hastily painted slogans generally with Creole spelling: "Andepandans nasyonal" [National independence], "vive la Guadeloupe lib'" [Long live free Guadeloupe], "Deor les Blancse" [Whites out]. One already also sees the Guadelupian flag, red, of course, with a star and two small green bands.

The independentists also have a thriving organization. The Union for the Liberation of Guadeloupe (UPLG) does not conceal itself, and all of its leaders are known. Attorneys such as Messrs Tacita and Hermantin; professors such as Messrs Thesauros, president of the Antilles-Guyana University Center; and Edenval, director of the UER [?Teaching and Research Unit] of law in Point-a-Pitre; trade unionists such as Mr Mounie of the Union of Poor Peasants; and several journalists. They are a total of 50 intellectuals, masters of thought, who can count on about 200 loyal activists, the young generally, recruited at the university. Altogether, they do not amount to very much.

Moreover, these intellectuals do not hesitate to get their hands dirty. The president of the University Center, an important position if there are any, was arrested the other evening by the police as he was in the process of writing on the walls of a pharmacy, with "his face camouflaged by a woman's pantyhose" (according to the police report): "Long live the UPLG." After spending several hours at the police station like an unruly schoolboy, President Thesouros, who seems to be a professional in independence movements--during the war in Algeria, he had joined the ranks of the FLN [National Liberation Front]—was released. Today he was booked on a simple police charge of destruction of private property and returned to his office of president.

Added to these avowed independentists are the communists who hold a certain number of mayoralties, in Pointe-a-Pitre and Basse-Terre, in particular; leftist elected officials; and large part of the clergy. Officially, the Guadeloupian CP, behind its number one man, the mayor of Point-a-Pitre, Dr Bangou, wants "democratic and popular autonomy, with a Guadeloupian executive and legislature, with an independence perspective." During the last PCG [Guadeloupian Communist Party] congress, the young activists had prepared motions which were much more radical in glorification of independence. Bangou, who has a feel for the realities, prefers to speak of "national liberation."

Unfortunately, there are also those who prefer bombs to graffiti. This is the Guadeloupian Armed Struggle Group (GLAG). It has already claimed responsibility for two assassination attempts. The first, on 6 March 1980, against Raymond Vivies, a wealthy Point-a-Pitre businessman and the only white member of the general council, and the second, on 11 July, against the director of the Point-a-Pitre Grand Galleries, Mr Jouandon. On 15 April, the GLAG had claimed responsibility for the arson of radio station FR 3.

However, it still has not claimed responsibility for the four explosions at the beginning of September. Nevertheless, everyone here is convinced that it was indeed the GLAG which perpetrated these acts.

All the more so because the GLAG has published explicit, to say the least, communiques. Under the headline "War on the Intruders in Guadeloupe," it wrote: "The UPLG and the GLAG are assembling to organize the 'red quarter.' A 'red quarter' during which the French living in Guadeloupe are invited to pack their bags before 31 December. Those who, on that date, have not complied will be considered objective enemies of the Guadeloupian people and will be treated as such."

The Atmosphere Is Becoming Oppressive

Let us say at the outset that among the 20,000 whites in Guadeloupe (12,000 Bekes and 8,000 metropolitan Frenchmen), no one attaches a great deal of importance to these threats and these tracts which are racist to say the least.

What really disturbs them is the atmosphere which is deteriorating day by day. Unlike the people of Martinique, the Guadeloupians have never been a very cheerful or outgoing people.

However, this antiwhite racism at present occasionally takes on more disturbing overtones. A few weeks ago, we witnessed an "operation for the recovery of our beaches." At the cry of "the whites are polluting our beaches," a number of blacks chased off vacationers who were trying to get a tan on the beaches of Sainte-Anne and Saint-Francois with blows of sticks and stones. In short, the whites--more the metropolitan French than the Bekes, moreover--feel ill at ease; and many of them have already bought weapons, a very bad thing.

Have the Windward Islands then been caught up in the winds of history? When one listens to the president of the bar association, Felix Rodes, one would be inclined to believe it.

With his sideburns and large benign mustache, he is one of the most senior members of the independence movement. His principal claim to fame, apart from a doctoral thesis written in 1951 in Montpellier on the subject of "Gentlemen Glassworkers in Languedoc Under the Ancien Regime," is having spent 169 days in prison following the 1967 incidents. This former confirmed Gaulliist, this former UNR [Union for the New Republic] candidate in 1958 whom a disappointment (a seat on the economic and social council which was promised but not awarded) pushed him in the direction of resentment and then toward the most absolute independentism, is positive: "Independence is the only realistic solution to save Guadeloupe where the situation is catastrophic." The president of the bar association then presented figures.

"In 1965, the department covered 50 percent of its imports and produced 185,000 tons of sugar and 165,000 tons of bananas. Today it covers only 19 percent of its imports and produces only 90,000 tons of sugar and 80,000 tons of bananas."

These figures are accurate; however, Rodes failed to mention certain things. First, Guadeloupe was the victim of hurricanes David and Frederick in 1979 and Allen in 1980. "Colonialism" did not do much about it, in large measure limiting itself to indemnifying the victims. Next, in the face of the harsh laws of the world market it should have been admitted that the Guadeloupian banana was no longer the best and that the techniques used, particularly for shipment, were archaic. Quality was then improved and "containerized" export was adopted, limiting the losses at the port of debarkation. Banana experts, if there is not another hurricane, hope to regain the 1979 figures, 135,000 tons, and before long to reach the quota allocated to Guadeloupe, which is on the order of 155,000 tons.

As for sugar, the island's other traditional lifeline, one must yield to the evidence: sugarcane is selling increasingly poorly. The department's five plants were operating at a loss. Therefore, it was necessary to close two of them and modernize the three remaining plants. Baron Empain has just sold the 12,000 hectares of sugarcane he owned here. The SAFER [Real Estate and Rural Development Company] which bought the land from him for over 100 million [francs] expects to bring about real agrarian reform by offering the land to young farmers and by encouraging diversification of production. Experts estimate that the island could become a department engaging in livestock raising, (it imports 40 percent of its meat), vegetable growing (a kilo of tomatoes in Point-a-Pitre costs 25 francs) and fruit production (pineapples, papayas, limes and mangoes will be planted).

The malcontents maintain that this relative abandonment of sugarcane has a dual objective: "to play the game of the sugar beet lobby of metropolitan France and to make more Guadeloupians unemployed so that they can become employees of the Paris metro." Such arguments will hold water. And when the malcontents conclude that independence would make "Guadeloupe a rich country thanks to its bananas and sugarcane," we become skeptical.

Opposing Felix Rodes and his friends is Lucien Bernier and his people. A former senator, president of the general council, mayor of Saint-Francois for 35 years, this socialist broke with Francois Mitterrand because he intended to remain a fierce supporter of departmentalization. He is at least as direct as his opponent: "The independentists say that they speak for the people. But so do I. And I have a considerable advantage over them: I was elected. Let them present themselves, then, against me. Here the elections are free. We are not in Cuba or Chile."

During the last legislative sessions, the PCF [French Communist Party] sent its number one man, Gremetz. Shortly after his arrival, he said: "Guadeloupe will be independent." Result: three RPR [Rally for the Republic] deputies were elected. Ninety percent of the Guadeloupians do not want independence, and they prove it at every election. They are right. Independence is regression. It is enough to take a look at all the neighboring islands which are independent. On Dominica, a domestic earns 120 francs a month. Here she earns 1,200 francs. The standard of living in Cuba is four times lower than our own. Our gross domestic product is 12,250 francs per capita. On Antigua, it is 4,400 francs. Our people have been accustomed to a metropolitan standard of living and will never agree to return to the Caribbean level. That would be crazy. My commune covers 6,000 hectares. At the end of the year, I will be able to count on the fingers of one hand the number of houses which do not have running water."

Figures Which Make One Think

We can see that the debate is not always purely ideological. There are a few figures with which everyone on the island is acquainted and which make the Guadeloupians think when they are alone in a voting booth. Public expenditures on Guadeloupe total 2.101 billion francs. Revenues taken in amount to 568 million, which means that Guadeloups costs metropolitan France 1.533 billion francs per year; i.e., Paris gives an average of 5,110 francs to every Guadeloupian annually, including the newborn. There are about 200,000 Guadeloupians working in metropolitan France. Of the 90,000 employed persons in the department, 22,000 are government employees. There are 70,000 automobiles on the island; i.e., one automobile for every four and one half inhabitants. Twenty years ago, there were 4,000 automobiles. The infant death rate is lower than that of the Nord department. There is not a single beggar in the French Antilles, a unique phenomenon in the region. And examples can be cited ad infinitum. The Guadeloupians know this, they who witness the daily en masse arrivals of illegals from Dominaca, Haiti or Santo Domingo.

Much-vaunted Specificity

Of course, the word independence has charm. Older persons imagine that they are already presidents or ministers and the young that they are ambassadors to the United Nations. But the Antillean soul is complex. Blackness which is dear to Senghor and was imported here by his friend, Cesaire, the mayor-poet of Port-de-France, has not had much success. In search of their "specificity" (the grand a la mode term), the Guadeloupians prefer Creoleness to blackness. But this Creoleness is hard to define.

One of Thesauros' young students told me: "If we bring up slavery so often, it is perhaps because we want to obtain greater assimilation. An Antillean in Paris is a negro; however, a Guadeloupian in New York is almost a Frenchman. As for me, I had two uncles who were killed in the war. I am of French culture more than African or American culture."

In fact, nowadays, what the vast majority of Guadeloupians fear is not so much a small group of terrorists or a handful of ideologues but rather being turned loose by Paris. Everyone here repeats: "After the 1981 presidential elections, Giscard will find a way to cut us loose. We are costing him too much, and he does not wish to be accused of being a colonialist. After that will come the blood bath, the departure of the whites and misery for the country."

It is said that the president of the republic intends to come to the Antilles at the end of the year. It would be good for him to come and above all to state with great clarity the thoughts of Paris on the future of the Antilleans. That said, the whites are trying to sell their businesses but are not finding any buyers.

8143
CSO: 3100

PAPER MOCKS NICARAGUAN CRITICISM OF LUCAS' PEACE RALLY SPEECH

Guatemala City EL IMPARCIAL in Spanish 10 Sep 80 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text] We have heard on the radio a Nicaraguan speech, motivated by government touchiness, which found wanting some opinions expressed by the president of Guatemala without pointing out or stating specifically the reason for and nature of its disagreement. Probably, as our colleague PRENSA LIBRE notes in today's edition, it was because the president labeled the Nicaraguan Government a communist regime, which is the name universally given to applied Marxism, although it may be necessary to add certain defining adjectives to it: Leninist Marxism and Leninist-Stalinist Marxism. President Lucas Garcia also said that it had brought that country to hunger.

The speech by the Guatemalan president to the overflow crowd of demonstrators at the Plaza de Armas here was clear and suited the circumstances, aptly interpreting the current situation in Central America, while in our country we were feeling the unfortunate effects of the incredible dynamite attack on Central Park, which indiscriminately threatened both passersby and those who customarily use the park chosen by the terrorists for their attack--a criminal explosion which left many victims, both dead and gravely wounded, as well as large losses, including those of artistic value, such as the stained-glass windows of the National Palace, the work of artist Luis Urruela.

PRENSA LIBRE commented today that those who were paying attention "to the words spoken so energetically by President Lucas--a definition of positions--must have understood that that speech was, in a certain measure, his way of warning that he had understood exactly the significance of last Friday's attack," an exhortation to the demonstrators to defend the institutionality of the nation, since "there have ceased to be any illusions with respect to poetic 'dialog,' and he understands the futility of intellectual parry and thrust as a response to terrorism."

In view of that clear position, the attitude of the Nicaraguan Government, which has recalled its ambassador, Alejandro Castillo Massis, is noteworthy, it being rumored that he was going home to inform his foreign office about the Guatemalan president's speech. One can see an attempt at further alienation, since relations between the two governments are not particularly cordial--much less fraternal--since Cuba does not look kindly upon us. And we have just heard a curious observation about Nicaraguan policy: When there is any doubtful question, difference of opinion or search for a reasonable solution to certain problems, these are decided by a homologous rule: "This is how they do it in Cuba."

Generally the universal method of providing clarification is used--even Guatemala supported that right when it was discussed and decided in the United Nations--since maintaining the unblemished right to free expression of thought, free information and free opinion or comparison of criteria and opinions takes precedence over concerns and arrogance or just plain touchiness, and for that reason we Guatemalans have overlooked certain Nicaraguan expressions of opinion including some official statements, which would have merited timely rectification; the most serious we have observed among brothers was the preferential treatment in Nicaragua of foreigners--such as Russians and Cubans--while other Central American countries were ignored.

And the reason some Nicaraguan official disapproved of the Guatemalan president's speech perhaps might be that in Nicaragua, information has been restricted and there is censorship or repression of the press: The National Reconstruction Government Junta has by successive decrees limited newspaper information; the law forbids mention of candidates for elections, said to be planned for 1985; no mention is to be made of consumer goods shortages; no reference is to be made to possible confrontations with rebels or antirevolutionaries; no information is to be divulged regarding the internal security of the country. Perhaps they have discussed this matter and have resolved it in accordance with the latest fashion: "This is how they do it in Cuba."

Adolfo G. Merino, UPI correspondent, says, quoting a U.S. legislator, that "Soviet military activity in Cuba gives the lie to the old saying that the Caribbean is an American lake," and an article by Mickey Edwards (in "Proceedings of the United States Naval Institute") indicates that "the Soviet Navy has a recent and persistent presence in the Caribbean," and the objectives may be to threaten eventually the maritime routes in that region, to provide well-supplied and well-armed military force to encourage political instability in other countries, and finally, to assure a military presence and acquire capability for eventual maneuvers or as a latent threat.

Our colleague PRENSA LIBRE is right in warning: "After what has happened in Nicaragua and what is occurring in El Salvador, these details should be as transparent as the mountain air. However, the exact significance of the message appears not to have been received."

9735
CSO: 3010

U.S. SUPPORT OF DEMOCRATIC PROCESSES IN REGION UPHELD

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 6 Sep 80 p 7

[Editorial: "Big Stick for Central America?"]

[Text] The subject of violence in Central America has acquired such importance that at present in Western Europe and the United States it holds first place in public attention.

This was demonstrated once again by the television program aired on 3 September by the important National Broadcasting Company [NBC] network, which devoted a 90-minute documentary during prime time to the present political, economic and social situation in the isthmus.

The program revealed, among other things, the opinions of Ronald Reagan, candidate for the presidency of the United States on the Republican Party ticket; the opinions of Henry Kissinger, former secretary of state of the superpower; and the position of the present administration, as expressed by Warren Christopher, second in command of the U.S. State Department.

The former chief of American diplomacy, considered one of the most skillful diplomats of our time, said that, "what is happening in Central America is extremely serious for us. We have not found any definition, any democratic alternative with which the oligarchies could be replaced to resist totalitarianism, so we are approaching the process backwards."

Mr Kissinger also added: "The process in question, which has spread from Nicaragua to El Salvador, is bound to affect Guatemala and is certain to have an impact on Mexico, which would be a very grave matter for us."

The aspiring Republican presidential candidate, in turn, did not rule out the possibility that, if he becomes president of the United States, he may find himself in the position of having to use force to slow the advance of totalitarianism, repeating the imperialist advantures of the 1920's, when the marines landed anywhere in Latin America to impose Uncle Sam's will. Asked specifically whether he would use direct military intervention in case of an emergency, Mr Reagan replied: "That is a question that no one can answer in advance. The general hope is that it may never be necessary, but I believe a person should never say 'never.' I believe that each situation must be judged in its own context."

Finally, NBC aired President Jimmy Carter's position and that of the present administration, in the words of Under Secretary Christopher, as follows: "The present Central American situation is one of change; it is an uncontrollable and irrepressible reality, and I believe that wh t we must do is work with the forces of change. Past generations would have countered these pressures with military force, trying to stop the change...."

Some information media, and particularly the voices of the left, believe they saw in Reagan's words a threat that "the big stick," which has been kept in the attic for years, could again be used by the great power up north to crush the extremist groups which are agitating and quarreling in Guatemala and El Salvador.

If one reads carefully, one will see that Reagan said, clearly, that "the general hope is that the use of force would never be necessary," in other words that he--if he becomes president--would exhaust all peaceful means to prevent Central America from becoming a sphere of influence of the Soviet Union. Certainly the time of landings and invasions has passed--except for the USSR, which last year occupied Afghanistan with its military forces and prior to that had taken Cambodia, using the Vietnamese army as mercenaries.

In the Western Hemisphere it would be very difficult to go to such extremes, and for the sake of national peace and dignity, as well as of respect for sovereignty and international law, it is desirable that such a thing never happen here.

In reality, Mr Carter's administration offers, perhaps, the only sensible approach: to support democratic changes, to achieve wealth, development and justice and, in this way, to reduce tensions to a minimum.

If we examine the events of recent history, we will see that wherever the struggle has taken a military form, totalitarianism has won the battle. This happened in Cuba, Vietnam, Cambodia, Nicaragua, Ethiopia, etc.

On the contrary, when nations have decided to transform their structures peacefully, extremism has been isolated. Examples: Costa Rica, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, post-war Germany, Japan, Italy (where the largest Communist Party in the West has been defeated repeatedly) and other free countries. In summary: We doubt that Reagan, with his anachronistic policy, will win the election. Moreover, we hardly dare to expect that Carter will win reelection. But if the people of the United States make the mistake of supporting the former film cowboy, he will undoubtedly have recourse to an expedient which is doomed to defeat before it begins.

Finally, the key to the question is whether--if indeed the promoters of violence are moved by ideological reasons and ambition for power--the people support them (or deny them support) when they are suffering from hunger, oppression and other outrages.

When the time comes when there is true peace, freedom, development and justice in our countries, the emissaries of Moscow will be absolutely alone and, as in authentically democratic nations, they can't expect any more results than if they were plowing the sea.

8735
CSO: 3010

CTH, COHEP PRESENT VIEWS ON NEW CONSTITUTION

Private Enterprise Menaced

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 29 Sep 80 p 88

[Text] Tegucigalpa--The Honduran Private Enterprise Council (COHEP) has declared itself in permanent session and in a state of alert "because it feels that the new constitution of the republic infringes on private property and ignores private enterprise."

At the general assembly, which began last Friday evening, most of the businessmen reviewed a document that has served as a basis for drawing up the new constitution, which the National Constituent Assembly has already approved in initial debate.

Further explaining his position, Dr Raul Aguero Neda, the treasurer of the COHEP Board of Directors, said that "our stand is due to the real danger posed to all by the current first draft of the constitution, which we regard as a real threat to the country in general and to private enterprise in particular."

"It is our impression that this country is taking the attitude of 'get off my back because I want to get drunk,' not 'get off my back because I want to work.' Private enterprise is not surprised when a minor party makes it into the National Constituent Assembly to practice cheap demagoguery, to increase its political capital with a well-reasoned, individual vote, but we are surprised when the honorable representatives of our majority parties ignore the real values of this country," he said.

"A few days ago an honorable deputy told me that 'my party is not afraid of legislating because we feel that we have the backing of more than 500,000 votes.' I would dare say that 75 percent of the people who cast those votes will feel sorry that they did so when they see what they are really going to represent when the new constitution is passed," Dr Aguero Neda argued.

The COHEP treasurer said that we have to distinguish between those honest deputies who will oppose certain articles that are harmful to the country because they are familiar with and know how to interpret the scope of the new political constitution, and those who will raise their hands like automatons because they are not capable of making a discerning judgment.

A Ridiculous Constitution

He said that last Friday, when they analyzed a number of articles of the constitution and several regulations, "we had smiles on our faces because we thought that it was a joke. That is how ridiculous the constitution of the republic is.

"On a radio program that focused on university autonomy and private universities, Jorge Arturo Reina said that 'the National University is the state for education purposes,' and this was seconded by an honorable deputy, who is one of the country's young and trained representatives. In this case, we are looking at a violation of human rights.

"This limits the education of our children to an environment that is not in keeping with the ideas and doctrines that many of us have embraced, without political interference or alien doctrines. We think that no one should deny the autonomy of the National University, but we do not think that Hondurans ought to be limited to or forced to accept an educational environment with those restrictions. Private enterprise predicts serious problems when this constitution is put to a serious vote, if the deputies are going to vote by party bloc, without the grasp of issues that all competent deputies ought to have. We feel that very few of them are competent to interpret the scope of the constitution, and some of them, because of that law, will be in a position to lose what they have now and what they might have in the future."

Private Enterprise and Private Property

The COHEP treasurer said that "according to the interpretations of a number of technicians who are looking into the draft constitution, private enterprise is not regarded as necessary in this country, and what is more, there is a move to ride roughshod over private property. In certain paragraphs you can even read between the lines that there is a desire to destroy even the smallest grocer, thus relegating to the government the right to market food and medicine. Another part mentions the socialization of medicine in general."

He contended that "I sincerely believe that the country is in serious danger, and what is more, private enterprise has to stand up and speak up. We are already in a state of alert because it is better to die on your feet than on your knees, and we feel that the entire Honduran nation must be prepared for the struggle that will be waged to openly oppose this cumbersome constitution. Our lawmakers are forgetting that there are more than 256,000 businessmen in this country, excluding coffee growers, who represent another 50,000, and that if we multiply this number by the average family size, they represent almost a million voters that the political parties are losing out on, and in future elections these voters will have to think seriously about whom they should vote for."

Social Guarantees Reviewed

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 27 Sep 80 pp 32-33

[Statement by the Confederation of Honduran Workers (CTH) to the Honorable National Constituent Assembly in relation to the "Social Guarantees" section of the new constitution of the republic; date not specified]

[Text] Honorable Representatives of the People:

The National Assembly of Boards of Directors of unions affiliated with the Union Federation of Northern Honduras Workers (FESITRANH) and with the Central Federation of Unions of Free Honduran Workers (FECESITLIH), which make up, in turn, the Confederation of Honduran Workers, met in the city of San Pedro Sula on 20 September 1980 to analyze with the responsibility and high-mindedness that characterize Honduras's Free and Democratic Union Movement, the draft constitution, which includes the section on Social Guarantees, and in particular the following headings: the family, labor and social security, health care, housing and culture.

Organized labor is aware of the lofty responsibility that the honorable representatives of the people have taken on in their binding commitment to promulgate a new constitution of the republic that is fully consistent with the sacred interests of the people, and thus the CTH, pursuant to a mandate from its rank-and-file, has decided to present its views regarding these major social provisions, with the understanding that they will warrant your due attention since they represent the sentiments and thoughts of an overwhelming majority of the Honduran people, the organized workers in our cities and countryside.

1. The Family

We note that the subsection on the family derives from the 1965 Constitution of the Republic but also incorporates new concepts that unquestionably enhance its social content; it therefore deserves our approval. Nevertheless, given the importance of the family as the basic unit of our society, we feel that this subsection should be complemented with the following articles:

Article 10. Children must not be left abandoned. The state shall adopt every precaution for their comprehensive protection.

"Parents are obliged to feed, assist and educate their children. The state shall see to it that these duties are fulfilled.

"Abandonment or refusal to provide support for under-age or legally disqualified children, a spouse or destitute siblings is punishable by law if the committed party is capable of doing so or if he conveys his assets to third parties or if he resorts to any other method of avoiding the obligation."

We propose the following articles to the honorable representatives of the people as aspirations of the workers:

Article No ( ). Single mothers shall be the object of special legislation, as shall destitute older citizens.

Article No ( ). The state shall guarantee the legal equality of spouses.

Article No ( ). The state shall promote and maintain day care centers and nurseries in the most populated sections of urban and rural areas.

2. Labor and Social Security

Most of the 26 articles on labor and social security are from the 1965 constitution, and some are from the existing Labor Code, but we note a pattern of enhancing their social content. Even so, we feel that greater emphasis ought to be placed on these factors because the preservation of the country's social peace depends on them.

In light of these considerations, the CTH wishes to propose the following amendments to the new constitution:

Article 20 of the Draft Committee: 3-a. There must be equal pay for equal work.

Article 4-a. Wages, compensation and social security benefits enjoy a preferential credit claim in the event of employer insolvency or bankruptcy.

Article 5-a. Every worker is entitled to receive a minimum wage set periodically by agreement among the state, employers and workers. It should be sufficient to meet the normal material, moral and cultural needs of the family, in accordance with the type of work, the conditions in each region, the conditions of each job, the cost of living, the relative skills of the worker and the pay scales of the companies.

In addition, a minimum professional wage shall be set for those occupations in which the minimum wage is not regulated by a labor union contract or pact. Minimum wages must be revised annually to keep pace with the cost of living. The law shall govern their revision.

The minimum wage shall be exempt from attachment, compensation and deduction, except as stipulated by law in connection with allowance for board, union dues or taxes.

8-a. Workers shall be entitled to annual paid vacations. In the event of an unjustified dismissal, the employer shall pay in cash, aside from the legally stipulated compensation, for the vacation time taken and the proportional time worked. A worker cannot receive extra pay for working during his vacation. The employer is obliged to grant vacation time, and the worker to make use of it. The law shall govern these obligations and indicate permissible instances of cumulative vacation time.

The amount that is due a worker for his vacation time is independent of the wage that he is to receive in advance for the vacation days that he is to take. The law shall govern this right.

9-a. Workers shall be entitled to a weekly paid day of rest and to the holidays stipulated by the law. If a worker works on his weekly day of rest or on a national or legal holiday, he shall be paid for this performance of service, plus double his wage for the time that he works that day.

11-a. Nighttime work in public or private industrial establishments or in dangerous or unhealthy jobs is prohibited for workers of both sexes under age 18, except in cases in which only the members of a single family are employed, or in the event of force majeur, or in the case of women performing management tasks that do not normally require manual labor and other things expressly stipulated by the law.

12-a. Employers are obliged to compensate workers for occupational accidents and job-related illnesses. The labor authority shall assess the damage caused to the worker in accordance with the new list of disabilities that it shall draw up in consultation with the International Labor Organization. When the accident results in the death of the worker or when the accident or job-related illness causes a total or partial disability, the compensation shall consist of an amount equal to at least 1,000 workdays.

13-a. The right to strike and stage work stoppages is recognized, as long as direct talks between employers and workers have proven fruitless.

14-a. Workers and employers, without distinction as to sex, religion or political philosophy, are entitled to freely establish unions, professional organizations, federations and confederations, without prior authorization, for the defense of their respective interests.

Article 21. The law guarantees job stability for workers, in accordance with the characteristics of the industries and professions in question, and stipulates just causes for dismissal.

If a worker is unjustifiably dismissed, he shall be entitled to damages consisting of the wages that he failed to receive and to the legal and contractual compensation agreed upon, or, if he so chooses, he can be reinstated in his job, with his employer honoring the wages that he failed to receive in the form of damages until his reinstatement takes effect. These actions acknowledged by the law are exculpatory.

Article 24. The law shall govern labor relations for farm, livestock and forestry workers; land, sea, navigable waterway, railway and air transport workers; miners, oil and port workers; store personnel, private commissioned workers and other similar agents; professional athletes; actors and musicians; professionals such as examining physicians [medicos visitadores]; social workers; government blue- and white-collar workers who are not under separate jurisdiction, and mass media workers.

Article 26. The labor jurisdiction to which all judicial disputes between labor and capital are to be submitted is hereby established.

Courts of Appeal and Labor Courts are hereby established. The law shall establish the regulations for this jurisdiction and for the organizations that shall implement them, "under the principle of all due speed in hearing cases under labor law."

Article 29. Workers shall share in company profits in accordance with the percentage that the National Tripartite Commission shall determine. A special law shall create this national commission and stipulate its powers.

Article 30. Under equal conditions, Honduran workers shall have preference over aliens. The law shall set the percentage of Honduran workers for companies or employers; this shall not be lower than 90 percent, except in the cases set forth in the law. The Executive Branch shall be able to modify this percentage when agricultural requirements or the national good so dictate and shall stipulate exceptions for Central American workers under conditions of reciprocity.

No company or employer can pay Honduran workers less than 85 percent of the total wages they earn in their respective companies.

Article 32. Employers are obliged to directly resolve the problems of their workers either individually or collectively. If this procedure does not yield results, workers can resort to legal strikes. The state shall establish mechanisms for their prompt settlement.

Article 33. The state shall contribute to the ongoing technical training of workers and to the enhancement of their cultural and economic level. Its contribution shall represent two percent of the federal budget.

Within the province of their special area of interest, industrial enterprises are obliged to set up schools to promote worker education for the children of their laborers and associates. The law shall regulate this matter.

Article 36. Every person is entitled to a guaranteed livelihood in the event that he suffers from a work disability or is unable to secure gainful employment. Social security benefits shall be paid out and administered by the Honduran Social Security Institute and shall cover cases of illness, maternity leave, family subsidies, old age, orphanhood, loss of work, occupational accidents, occupational diseases and all other contingencies affecting the ability to produce and consume. The law shall provide for the provision of these benefits as long as social needs so dictate. The state shall create aid and social welfare institutions that shall be unified under a single state-run system with the contributions of all interested parties and the state itself.

Article 38. For the benefit of society, the social security system shall be extended to urban and rural workers.

Social security shall comprise family allowances, medical and maternity benefits, disability, old age, death and survivors benefits, occupational accidents and diseases benefits and unemployment benefits.

The law shall regulate the exercise of this right and related procedures.

Article 39. Employers and workers shall participate through their most representative national organizations on the Board of Directors of the Honduran Social Security Institute; they shall have more representatives on it than the state.

Article 41. The state shall protect peasant farmers and to this end shall pass laws and formulate programs in connection with family assets that cannot be seized and that are exempt from all types of taxes; farm credit, compensation and crop loss insurance; production and consumption cooperatives; pension funds; the creation of modern farm technology schools and experimental farms; the construction of irrigation and rural roads projects; marketing and land awards, among other matters.

Article 44. Workers and civil servants are entitled to receive annually and in proportion to their time of service, a Christmas or other bonus. This bonus shall not be less than 100 percent of their last regular straight-time wage or than the average of their last 6 months of contractual pay or fraction thereof if the contract has not been in effect for that period, which does not preclude the gains achieved by workers in labor union contracts.

In addition, employers shall pay their workers a 13th month's wage either in two installments (June and December) or in a single installment for each year of uninterrupted service.

The CTH asks the honorable representatives of the people to include the following articles in the new constitution of the republic:

Article ( ). In order to enforce labor guarantees and laws, the state shall monitor and inspect companies and, in the event of violations, shall impose the legally stipulated sanctions.

Article ( ). In line with a full employment policy, a 40-hour work week shall be established for day and day-night work and a 36-hour week for night work (pay shall be for 48 hours), to help eradicate unemployment and under-employment.

Article ( ). Any existing legal provision that is more beneficial to workers shall be legally enforced.

Article ( ). Workers shall enjoy paid leave of absence for their professional training at all levels, for their general, social and civic education and for their union education.

The law shall determine the objectives and conditions.

Article ( ). Worker representatives to companies must enjoy effective protection against any act that could harm them.

Article ( ). Worker representatives shall have access at companies to facilities that shall enable them to rapidly and effectively perform their functions.

Article ( ). Permanent jobs cannot be regarded as casual labor, and only permanent workers can be hired for permanent jobs.

Workers must share in the net profits of their companies but must never assume their risks or losses.

Article ( ). Companies or employers shall include in their annual budgets funds for worker benefits, and they are given a period of 3 years from the time that this constitution takes effect, to meet this obligation. The proper yearly amount shall be deposited in a joint account in the workers' bank, with each worker assigned his due amount.

As long as these funds are not needed by their real owners, the workers, pursuant to the regulations issued, they shall be invested in social programs that directly benefit the workers and their dependents.

A tripartite commission made up of representatives of union organizations, employers and the state shall be in charge of administering this fund.

The CTH feels that it is of the highest importance to include the following temporary provisions:

Article ( ). The state shall enforce all labor guarantees and laws and, to this end, shall review all labor and social legislation with an eye towards updating and including in it all of the benefits granted by this constitution. An organization made up of government, employer and worker representatives shall be established to enforce this principle.

Article ( ). A standing tripartite commission shall analyze ratified ILO conventions and the proposals that are to be brought before the appropriate authority in relation with the submission of recently adopted international labor conventions and recommendations.

3. Health Care

We feel that the health care subsection, which consists of five articles, should include the following principle:

--The state shall promote medical care benefits so that workers can regain their health, prevent a further development of disease and alleviate suffering.

The nature and scope of the medical care shall be determined by pertinent legislation.

4. Housing

The housing subsection consists of just three articles, and thus the CTH proposes the following additions:

Article ( ). Rents shall be part of a general housing policy. The state shall determine the maximum percentage as a frame of reference for appraising rents.

Article ( ). Housing policy should be regarded as an integral part of economic policy in general, which includes full employment, price stability, a more equitable distribution of wealth and an efficient utilization of production sources.

Article ( ). The construction of low-cost housing shall be promoted through suitable incentives, subsidies and controls to maintain stable and standard prices that most of the population can afford.

Article ( ). Companies located outside urban areas are obliged to provide workers with sanitary and sufficiently ample housing if the labor contract stipulates room and board.

Article ( ). Eviction notices must not be issued unless a worker's transfer to another housing unit has been provided for.

Article ( ). A tenant must always enjoy guaranteed safeguards. The law shall govern pertinent procedures.

Honorable Citizens:

In light of the lofty standards and the heightened social responsiveness of the honorable representatives of the people, the Special General Assembly of the CTH hereby submits, through my person, the above proposals for debate and subsequent inclusion in the Social Guarantees Section of the new Constitution of the Republic of Honduras.

The Free and Democratic Honduran Union Movement trusts that each of the honorable deputies will support the freely expressed thoughts of our representatives.

We would inform you that the Special General Assembly of the CTH has appointed an Ad Hoc Committee to expand upon, when appropriate, the content of these proposals, pending the consent of this august Legislative Chamber.

Tegucigalpa, D.C., 22 September 1980
Representing the Confederation of Honduran Workers, Andres Victor Artiles, Secretary General
"National Literacy Year"

8743
CSO: 3010

PART III OF CATHOLIC BISHOPS' RESPONSE TO FSLN ON RELIGION

PA292242 Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 22 Oct 80 p 4

[Third and last part of Nicaraguan Catholic bishops' response to Sandinist National Liberation Front communique on religion in Nicaragua; issued in Managua 17 October 1980; passages enclosed in slantlines printed in boldface]

[Text] Revolution. What Revolution?

5. We Christians want and have been demanding serious and thorough transformations. We are /radicals/, not extremists. We demand revolutionary changes. However, we must always ask ourselves "What revolution are we making and how are we making it?" On what bases and on what values? We demand social justice, but justice is not a "class privilege" of any class over any other. It is a basis for common rights and common respect which does not grant the right for mutual destruction.

Demanding economic justice is dignified and just. Establishing "ideological and class materialism" is something very different.

The problem that the Christian faces is not that he refuses to revolutionize but that he is not able to accept certain principles and procedures which disregard the values of faith and the fundamental sense of man and history. Atheism and materialism are impiety against God.

Could anyone be so senseless as to accuse the church or the Christians or opposing revolutions because they offer culture, medicines and work and production systems which are better adapted to human dignity and social development?

Wars are made and financed by the powerful to assume power.

Revolutions have to be made with generosity and sacrifice by the people themselves, dignifying themselves in their human quality and in their rights to participate "actively and deliberatively" in everything regarding their history. We are on the side of these people and this revolution.

The "poor" are not a /mass [masa]/. We are struggling for their dignity and liberation as sovereign children of God in their nation.

Open Door Toward Interventionism

6. The principle which declares that "the interpretation of religious matters is the sole jurisdiction of the church" (No 6) is abolished if the Sandinist National Liberation Front [FSLN] assumes the right to "interpret which popular religious activities or festivals" are or are not contrary to its revolution. This is not merely a supposition since, according to the FSLN's way of thinking, religion is only "a personal matter" in the sphere of the individual. (No 9).

This concept is not just a private interpretation of the FSLN on religious matters but is at the same time a "political" interpretation. We all know that this concept is inherent in individualistic liberalism and that it has been the source of grave injustices in the social life and against the rights of religion.

Therefore, subjecting religion to these opinions of the FSLN is opening a door to interventionism and political abuse, especially by those who wish to eliminate religion from human life.

In addition to these reasons, there are objective facts which confirm the tendency to "interfere" and to interpret the religious holidays as partisan political events. Everyone already knows about certain plans to substitute the "religious content" of our traditional holidays for content and activities of a partisan political nature, such as the slogans and plans to celebrate the nativity, those already used for the Immaculate conception and the patron saint festivals.

Atheistic Proselytism

7. Judging from the declaration which affirms textually that "within the partisan framework of the FSLN there is no room for religious proselytism because it destroys the specific character of the vanguard and causes disunity," it is not interested in introducing motives of disunity due to "discriminations" or religious interpretations. However, how can one reconcile this statement with what is officially and publicly done against the faith and against religion through the official state organs and organizational structures within it? Indoctrination and pressure is carried out by different means and known methods against religious beliefs and sentiments.

Atheism and materialism are beating at the religious door. If being an atheist is an individual right, it is something else to proselytize for atheism from the state institutions and through pressure groups.

Would these not be the "long philosophical discussions" which the FSLN delegation considers unnecessary to attain its objectives? [sentence as published] Or is it that these teachings and watchwords are imparted only to cause confusion?

Religion will provide the integrity of life. It demands free and responsible action from every man on the earth. Religion encourages and liberates man from his own personal affairs, and because of this, far from making him forget the duty to transform and to renew the social structures, it obliges him to do so with meaning and evangelical criticism.

[PA292244] This is a recent situation; the Christians know that. The FSLN knows it. "The Catholic church as an institution" and Christians, "prompted by their faith, participated in the popular victory" over the regime which took away the property and the rights of the people. It isn't necessary to repeat that any more.

To want to limit the church and the duties of Christians to an individualistic plane again is not just an injustice to their revolutionary activities and involvements but an overt affront to their faith, which prompted their activities and involvement.

This is the eternal reason why the weak, the oppressed, the imprisoned, those deprived of freedom and land, the poor and the masses have turned to the one, living and true God who restores their worth as beings and gives them the strength to continue fighting deceit and absolute power.

/Conclusion/

/To the People Their Own/

We have made these observations not just to respond to or to explain the recent /FSLN communique/. In this time of change we are dutybound to offer religious guidelines to the people.

If it is recognized that religious motivation played a role in promoting the revolution, why is religion denied the power and the right to lay the groundwork for new revolutionary structures today? Has there been a break with the Nicaraguan people who claim that their faith is the reason for their joy? If it is a fact that Christians and the institutional church have actively participated in the revolution, who is opposing them now? The church and Christians are not against the Nicaraguan revolution. They are against those who make the revolution's ideology go against the religious feelings of our people.

"It wouldn't be fair or sensible if, after so much bloodshed and sacrifice, the value of life and humanity involved in a genuine liberation were again forgotten." (Bishops' 30 July 1979 message).

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." (Galatians 5:1)

Managua, 17 October 1980, day of Saint Ignatius of Antioch, bishop and martyr
[signed] Nicaraguan Episcopal Conference

CSO: 3010

EDUCATION MINISTER ON TEACHERS' STRIKES

Lima CORREO in Spanish 15 Oct 80 p 4

[Text] A severe warning was issued yesterday by the minister of education. It was directed toward teachers who threatened to paralyze educational activities.

Minister Luis Felipe Alarco said that in the event of strikes, the laws will simply be enforced.

Then he warned: "If they strike they will definitively not be paid."

Yesterday, after several weeks of absence, Alarco met again with reporters assigned to cover the government palace.

He spoke at length and most interesting was his statement concerning his relationship with the Single Union of Education Workers. (SUTEP)

Alarco thinks the situation among the teachers is calm and the main problems have been solved.

On the other hand, he reiterated that for the time being it was impossible to meet their demands, because of lack of funds.

Alarco proposed the teachers should work in order to get paid and observe the following system: Work on summer and implementation courses to be offered next year in September and November.

The education minister summarized the situation as follows: If one does not work, one does not get paid.

He said there is no problem otherwise, at least he does not have any, in recognizing SUTEP and that the situation is being studied by a special commission.

He also stated that negotiations with teachers are still going on, even at the ministerial level.

Alarco also emphatically denied the rumors regarding his departure from the ministry on Abancay Avenue.

CSO: 3010

MONTES DE OCA CHALLENGES CALDERA'S POSITION IN COPEI

Caracas BOHEMIA in Spanish 15 Sep 80 pp 6-9

> [Text] The COPEI [Social Christian Party] intraparty battle is now joined. Montes de Oca has jumped into the ring, where until now only the former president, working out with his followers, held sway. Things have changed, and this report unveils them.

It was a warm, serene, mid-July night in San Cristobal. The young fair-haired man behind metal-rimmed spectacles, short-stature, cool, down-to-earth, and devoid of emotionalism in manner and speech, spoke clearly and incisively: We must now choose and virtually launch, or prelaunch, the COPEI leader who is to be the candidate to continue the work of Luis Herrera Campins [LHC]. The one who spoke this way is Edgard Flores, somewhat over 30 years of age, and general secretary of COPEI in Tachira, a state that is certainly linked to the germinal tradition of the current governing party.

The man had just made a speedy return from the United States, spurred by a nocturnal conclave that had been held a few nights before in the home of the then recently appointed Governor Ildefonso Moreno Mayo, where unanimity had spread like wildfire--without anyone knowing in fact who had proposed it--around one name: Rafael Andres Montes de Oca.

Also present at that meeting were: Nestor Solano, scarcely over 20 years of age and already secretary for organization (of the Regional Committee) and head of the green contingent in the Legislative Assembly; Luis Largo, who for his surname lacks physical height but who in battle lacks no fight, and who headed LHC's campaign in that region; Erasmo Ochoa, Camilo Granados, Perez Vivas and, in short, the youthful upper echelon of the Andean traditional enclave.

"But we cannot stop at having agreed, nor at having decided: We must launch him, at once!" one of those said later over the steaming black demitasses being savored by the group in the inviting atmosphere of the highest regional official's private residence. Approved unanimously! Signed, sealed and delivered: We must contact without delay the most immediately available journalists. The next day, the Tachira correspondent of a Caracas daily and our colleague Francisco ("El Gocho") Guerrero Pulido, managing editor of the San Cristobal LA NACION, were strategically invited to a dramatic announcement, which indeed it was. Expressed or "rendered" in plain homespun words: COPEI was dispensing with all nonsense and lining up behind its star figure, Rafael Andres Montes de Oca, the charismatic "Pepi."

The "bomb" had been dropped in San Cristobal. It would not be the last.

In the Home of Bello

Miguel Bello's home is one of the most attractive on Valencia's Avenida de Circonvalacion, on the outskirts of the city, in a suburban community surrounded by refreshing greenery, beside the Colegio La Salle. A significant adjacency?

Dona Flor, the genteel wife of Miguel, is one of the most active leaders of that state's COPEI, but at no time does she put aside her home-loving virtues: an exquisite hostess, she prepares the most delightful dishes and does not permit any of her guests to be served by other than herself.

Well, in the Valencia home of the Bellos, almost in convivial simultaneity with San Cristobal, another no less symptomatic and newsworthy conclave was taking place. Present were "all the leaders" of Carabobo's Herreraists--that is, most of the regional COPEI executive lineup. Present also was Governor Raul Gomez, an architect with a neatly trimmed goatee, who is very well liked by everyone because of his warm personal simplicity: he rides the buses, makes unannounced official visits, conducts his personal affairs himself, etc.

Here, the "bomb" was more complete and encompassing, and its orchestration was entrusted to none other than the president of the Municipal Council, Armando Celli Giuni, of the branch of the Valencia Cellis that also has its very prestigious AD [Democratic Action] ramification. This COPEI-ist Celli who could formerly be counted among the supporters of ex-President Caldera, is also, like his "white" cousins, a respected "green" leader in the old and dense metropolitan center. His bombastic proposal was unequivocal: It was "Pepi" all the way. That is, he proposed the interior minister's candidacy for national secretary general of the COPEI in 1981, against the incumbent Eduardo Fernandez, who aspires to reelection; and called for the selfsame Montes de Oca's candidacy for president of the Republic in 1983.

Almost the entire Regional Committee exploded in favor of this integral proposal, which seemed to offer a menu that included everything under the sun.

But in this case the Valencia leaders had no sooner finished their coffee than they brought their highly successful meeting to a close and dashed off to lay "Hands To The Wheel!"--notwithstanding that this little slogan is a current stock saying of former President CAP [Carlos Andres Perez], the favorite target of wrathful outbursts by the Calderaists.

In any case, there was no lack of jesters who ascribed the stampede to fear that Dona Flor de Bello would, as she frequently does with her guests, coerce them into a game of football or baseball on one of the respective fields adjoining her home.

Lunches and the Clock

"Hands To The Wheel" did not remain in the realm of words. A high-level strategic mobilization was immediately initiated at the two launching platforms: the western and the central. Valmore Acevedo and Donald Ramirez left by plane for Tachira. Other passengers on the flight recount that it seemed to them they had overheard Valmore, today one of the leaders closest to the president and the prime minister, telling Donald in an anecdotal vein about a certain scolding he had received during a wedding reception, from ex-President Caldera, who was seemingly fit to be tied, because of some statements the former COPEI secretary for municipal affairs had made. That pronouncement of his, published in one of the newspapers, had presumably set off the Herrera-Pabloist offensive in a series of coldly calculated moves.

Meanwhile, on the throughway he had so often driven as a tauromachy buff of yore, Cesar Perdomo, political bullfighter who has proven himself in a hundred rings, sped toward Valencia in his modest automobile filled with leaders as distinguished as he.

The central-western pincers began to close in tightly from the two key coordinates in COPEI's geostrategy. While Valmore Acevedo, ex-governor of Tachira, and the deputy and former secretary general of the JRC [COPEI Revolutionary Youth] operated behind the scenes in their elegant Andean manner in Tachira, Cesar for his part, in Carabobo's precincts, and in his unfailingly open collar and aggressive and straightforward style, was bullfighting the left, playing the bulls, so to speak, with slow, simple, close-in and well executed passes. Both faenas--the Tachira one and the Valencia one--were destined to culminate in estocadas without puntilla and a circling of the arena after receiving both ears.

From another quarter, a coincident ceremonial obligation added its contribution to the geopolitical design for prelaunching Montes de Oca: As minister of interior, he had to attend the ceremony in San Cristobal consecrating the assignment of Monsignor Arellano Moreno as bishop of San Carlos (Cojedes). "Pepi" went there, and, by way of further coincidence, traveled together with whom others but Valmore Acevedo, Donald Ramirez and Cesar Perdomo.

In the capital of the border region, he was received by COPEI-ists and independents alike with an enthusiasm that resembled an acclamation. But before leaving Caracas, asked by reporters what was going on, he had responded with one of his cryptic messages: One should not lunch at breakfast time. The interpreters and/or targets of this new message (similar to the previous one: "We are now talking through photos") would now have to add to their studies in photology a crash course in chrono-gastronomy.

Others, meanwhile, are thinking that Montes de Oca, good outdoorsman and accustomed as he is to hearty early morning meals, is now making a hearty lunch of them all. Especially now, when, rid of the encumbrance of a useless gall bladder, he finds himself in good physical shape and ready to enter the ring--assuming he has not already entered it.

But it is not entirely a question of gastroenterologic chronometry. Also included is a new political geography. Or rather, a geographic strategy. For, while many observers thought the Herrera-Pablo-Pepi-ists would fire their rockets from their launching platforms situated in the famous "Bermuda Triangle" (Lara-Portuguesa-Barinas), the native lairs of the most powerful figures in the government, or in Yaracuy, which is also a zone of influence of Miraflores's "Cogollito" bordering on the Caldera homeland, they are actually launching their missiles from the bases least imagined would be used: Tachira and Carabobo, the first of these the cradle of COPEI's ancestral lineage, and the second its newest electoral bastion.

The logistics of the initial attack is tending to disconcert the adversary and encompasses extensive old- and new-world zones in COPEI's mapping: the latter two indicated above, those of the mentioned triangle, the also mentioned one of Yaracuy, and, in a certain way, Trujillo, the land of Pedro Pablo, who, despite his apostolic names, has not been able to forget the wounds of Parque Central.

Calderaism, which had been shadow boxing alone in the ring, perceived the danger: Montes de Oca had climbed through the ropes and was advancing with solid steps. It had to seek a tactical fall-back or at least a deferment of the encounter. Aristedes Calvani, the able and veteran trainer, recognizing the risks (careful of those unexpected strikes from Tachira and Carabobo!), opted for declaring a suspension of the fight: Candidacies within the COPEI were, for the moment, impertinent.

But already, his pupil, Jose Curiel, a good engineer, not content with having revealed months ago a Caldera electoral apparatus, had considered it justifiable to respond to the Montes de Oca proclamations with a gerontophilial statement picked up by reporter Alfredo Pena: "Why invent youngsters? Caldera is the man for 1983!"

A local caricaturist came up with a biting comment: There are two candidacies: the "impertinent" one and Caldera's. Former Foreign Minister Calvani folded his hands and remained silent. But those who like to lunch early recalled that the supporters of Calderaism, when the founder of COPEI was president, also considered Luis Herrera Campins's electoral prolegomena "impertinent."

Meanwhile, what was "Pepi" doing? Far from letting those highly "spiced" early morning lunches he was served in San Cristobal and Valencia upset his cool or his digestion, he proceeded to calmly assimilate such an itinerant balanced diet. And, agreeing with Luis Herrera, he sustained that any candidacies were in fact untimely. For some experts, the man from Carmelitas is still being sibylline in his utterances. And what he is not saying is more significant than what he is saying. Amen. There will be no further publicized "rounds" for now. "Pepi," according to the experts, has won the first round.

Developments are now taking place within COPEI's traditionalist sector. Eduardo Fernandez recognizes that his hopes for the immediate future--and certainly they are understandable--have been scattered to the wind by the Calderaist decision to serve up the same dish again, that of the former president, making his turn at a highly hypothetical third successive COPEI government more than difficult. If for a debatable second one the fight will call for the energy of a young lion--and the going will be far from a lark--how will things be for 1988? The prospects are now extremely remote.

Besides, not only are the severe warnings of the Parque Central speech echoing in the ears of Pedro Pablo: Oswaldo Alvarez Paz may become a new porpoise (some say he already is) and the line of succession also includes Jose Curiel. In politics, new developments, no matter how fluid, surprise no one. Thus, the more sophisticated analysts are showing not even a sign of surprise to know of the dialogic soundings going on between Eduardo and Pedro Pablo Aguilar and between the former and Montes de Oca.

Weights and Measures

In the opinion of experts, there can be no doubt as to the intra-COPEI confrontation: Two Rafaels are in the ring and no one will get them out of it. This is what the fans on both sides are saying. Now on an equal footing under the rules, Rafael Andres's supporters assert, the decision will be entirely up to the jury--that of the Social Christian presidential congress.

While punches are being traded back and forth, with those gloves on of course that characterize the fine art of democratic political boxing, the fans are making calculations, formulating predictions, eyeing weights and measurements, and placing their bets.

Mr Rafael Caldera was born in Yaracuy on 24 January 1916. He is 64 years of age and will be 67 at the time of the hardest fighting and the heaviest travel demands. Illustrious academician, born in San Felipe, Yaracuy, he came to Caracas as a very young child and is in fact considered a notable of the capital, educated in the exclusive San Ignacio school, from which other COPEI scions of the same political lineage would emerge: Lorenzo Fernandez, Calvani, Lara Pena (founder, now retired), Eduardo Fernandez, Jose Curiel, among others. His colleagues see him as a great leader whose presence inspires an almost sacred respect which instead of attracting--they say--estranges; they look up to him with the reverential fear accorded to Great Masters whose opinions constitute orders and whose policy is rigid, immutable, and applied step by step, inexorably.

The same experts in COPEI idiosyncracy, on the other hand, believe they see a distinct and contraposed hemisphere in the political agility of Rafael Andres Montes de Oca, a pragmatic man whose natural simplicity attracts and wins people over. Born 16 June 1930, he has just turned 50, the age of presidential hopefuls. His age when the time comes will be more or less the age at which Caldera himself, Carlos Andres Perez, Betancourt and Leoni all rose to the presidency. He was born and was brought up in the province, and it was not until 1976 that he came to settle in Caracas, to head up, like a meteor, LHC's victorious campaign. Brought up in a middle class family, he studied at La Salle (of Barquisimeto), the alma mater of LHC, Garcia Bustillos, Luciano Valerio, Rodolfo Jose Cardenas, Abdon Vivas Teran and others.

The COPEI-logues are wont to ascribe to this scholastic separation a special significance from the standpoint of social classes--upper and middle--and of fundamental philosophies: the products of San Ignacio the conservatives, and those of La Salle the liberals. From their scholastic diversity, the same experts are now drawing additional differential considerations: Caldera was able to devote himself full time to his university studies; Montes de Oca had to interrupt his studies in his third year of law, when his father died and he had to work as salesman, livestock breeder's helper and farm hand to support his brothers.

Caldera was always one of the leadership; Montes de Oca came up from the bottom. Caldera was a public prosecutor, president of the Chamber of Deputies, and president of the Republic, besides secretary general of the party. Montes de Oca, at the age of 16, was secretary general of COPEI in Lara, then council president in Barquisimeto, four times a deputy, government secretary general, and governor.

Caldera's orthodox rigidity, the experts add, projects from the national ambit into the international. Montes de Oca is, in both areas, a man of pragmatic, realistic openmindedness with neither personal grudges nor sectarian prejudices.

In sum, there stand the two gladiators confronting each other in COPEI's internal battle. The remaining forces watch with interest while waiting to take the appropriate action once the question of who shall be the governing party's standard bearer in the forthcoming elections is resolved.

9238
CSO: 3010

LEFT UNABLE TO UNIFY, PETKOFF, RANGEL INTERVIEWED

Caracas BOHEMIA in Spanish 15 Sep 80 pp 28-32

[Report on interviews with Teodoro Petkoff and Jose Vicente Rangel, by Jesus Seguias; place and date of interviews not given]

[Text] The Venezuelan left is once again showing its weaknesses. It has in the face of several opportunities taken it upon itself to save the nation in the latter's hours of difficulty. But it has always arrived too late, after others had already filled the void, or so early as to be overtaken by the tedium, the fatigue, that has indicated it had chosen the wrong moment to intervene. We might say that the Venezuelan left has never risen exactly to the historic moment it was to have exploited. It has risen higher or lower but never to precisely the right height.

The nation's current political and economic situation has now presented the left with an opportunity such as has rarely come its way. The conjuncture--as the leftist intellectuals like to call it--is favorable. AD [Democratic Action] and COPEI [Social Christian Party] are now experiencing bitter moments. The government as well. The nation is demanding viable alternatives. Many could say, "There is the left."

But no, be under no illusions. The left is also, enthusiastically and once again, disposed to throw in the towel. It is not prepared. It still has to debate important matters. For instance: Is or is not Jovito Villalba of the center? Has or has not Martinez, the cockroach, something on which to sit? Let this not alarm you: These are favorite issues of the left in the nation's most trying moments.

BOHEMIA, with reference to the start of the electoral campaign in Venezuela--what a record!--has interviewed the two future precandidates of the left with the best potential: Jose Vicente Rangel and Teodoro Petkoff.

Time, the Conspirator

Jose Vicente Rangel

[Question] Jose Vicente, there are those who think that the time factor is working in favor of your candidacy, that, inversely, it is conspiring against Teodoro Petkoff, and that hence the MAS [Movement for Socialism] has decided to move up its debate on the candidacy issue to now. What do you think of this?

[Rangel] I think the important thing is not what I think about it; what is important is what the others think. If MAS considers it desirable to debate now the name of the candidate, when and as long as that debate is unitary, participative and democratic, I have no problem with its being held right now. I have no problem whether it is held now or later. I am agreeable to absolutely everything, and the others may set the rules of the game, when and as long as these rules provide at least a minimum guarantee of participation and are genuinely democratic; and as far as the time is concerned, I repeat, if they want it to be now let it be now; if they want it to be later, let it be later.

Teodoro Petkoff

[Question] What do you think of the electoral issue, especially amid indications that you are launching a prior campaign within MAS to capture legitimately, like any other citizen or any party member, the nomination to be MAS's presidential candidate? What do you think of this situation?

[Petkoff] I am not going to commit the hypocrisy, so characteristic of too many Venezuelan politicians, of saying that for me the candidacy issue has no importance whatever, that it is secondary, and that it is not an issue that interests me. No, I believe the presidential candidacy is in a way the key or one of the keys to the political processes. I do not consider the question of the candidacy a secondary one; nor do I take the hypocritical position toward it, I repeat, of saying that it does not interest me. Yes, it does interest me, and very much so. We have not opened the debate in MAS; and in the most recent meeting of the National Directorate, its, let us say, most important and almost sole decision dealing with electoral matters was the one arrived at unanimously--I repeat, without a single vote against it, by all the members of the National Directorate--to propose to the left as a whole, at the most appropriate moment for a debate on the candidate of the left, the name of a MAS associate; that is, a member of MAS, one of MAS's leaders.

Jovito Villalba and the Center

Jose Vicente Rangel

[Question] One of the most recently commented political moves of the left, by one component of the Venezuelan left, has been your approach toward certain sectors that leftist political leaders call the "center." Regarding those sectors, which might include Jovito Villalba, the URD [Democratic Republican Union] itself, and some independent sectors: Do you actually position them within that conception of the center, and would you be now in the process of preparing a center-left policy to be presented to the nation as an alternative?

[Rangel] I do not want to get involved in a Byzantine debate of the kind that seems to appeal so strongly to certain sectors of the Venezuelan left, ignoring the facts of life with respect to this problem of the center. We have had political leaders here suddenly saying that the country cannot go on splitting itself between left and right. And I agree. As I would also agree if at some point they should say that neither can the center be accepted as such. Well, following that line of reasoning, if there is to be no right, no left and no center, we could then also accept that in Venezuela there are no social classes, that in Venezuela there are no political and ideological alinements, and that we Venezuelans live in a kind of political limbo.

[Question] Excuse me, Dr Rangel. When you refer to those politicians who say that in Venezuela there is neither a right nor a left, would you perhaps be referring to what Teodoro Petkoff said on one occasion when he expressed that concept?

[Rangel] I am not referring to him specifically. I am speaking in general terms, because in fact there have been persons who have made that statement, with which, I repeat, I am not taking issue as a matter of honor. For me, the important thing is that the left define a proper and precise policy of alliance. A policy geared solely to the left has no place at this time.

For me, the important thing is that we be able to offer a governing alternative in 1983. Now then, there is a vast number of Venezuelan men and women who are in need of a message, who have been oscillating between the AD and COPEI, precisely because the left has no policy in their regard, no message, and moreover provides no specific appeal to them to participate, because that "useful fools" policy, that policy of using people as mere signers of public declarations and documents, and as contributors to dinners and funds, is now entirely a thing of the past. The people want to participate at all levels and, when invited to participate, they want to be able to participate in the selection of the presidential candidate, in the drawing up of a platform, in the day-to-day actions of a campaign and of an electoral policy. Otherwise, the people are not interested.

Actually, there are in reality, in practice, millions of persons who we could say, if we wanted to, are the center in a country with a middle class, with a very acute middle class mentality, and who, over and above such characterizations as--let us assume--exist, are a concrete reality toward which the left has thus far addressed no policy.

Now, if recognition of this fact is to be merely an exercise in differentiations, in instigating polemics, in setting up demarcations betweeen political figures and parties, I do not intend to go along with that approach, because it is a totally antiunitary approach and I do not go along with anything that is antiunitary for the country at this time.

Teodoro Petkoff

[Question] Teodoro, do you believe there is a political center in this country?

[Petkoff] The political center is nonexistent. What is known as the political center from a party standpoint was swept away by the mechanisms of a two-party reality. All those political forces called URD, FND [Democratic National Front], FDP [Popular Democratic Force], Civic Crusade, have disappeared, swept away--disappeared not only electorally speaking but also legally speaking. The only thing that has remained in ultraprecarious existence is the URD, and this is owing mostly to the weight Villalba still exerts in Venezuela, which is moreover very meager; he is today a flyweight in Venezuelan politics. Note that it represents the anachronistic view of the left, the one we broke away from when the MAS was formed.

We should recall at this time that we at that time refused to join the New Force because we knew it was a plan based on forces, on a waning trend in our society. We are simply being consistent with our own plan and have no reason to turn back. What we have seen in these 10 years is how the center has gradually become extinguished, how we have consistently refused no continue using the center as a crutch for the purpose of creating a separate and independent socialist movement, to make of it an alternative. Now that the left has reached the stage in this country where the center no longer exists--where what exists is the AD, COPEI and the Left--now they come forth with a plan full of cobwebs, to tell us that what is needed is to revive the center, to take up that crutch again and transfer the political center of gravity from the left to that so-called political "center." It is true that in Venezuela there are millions of Venezuelans who are adherents of neither the AD nor the COPEI and who vote AD or COPEI and are what we might call the victims of the disappearance of the center, because they no longer have an option and are therefore the prisoners of the two-party mechanism.

[Question] Do you believe the left can, by itself, break that polarization and become an alternative now for the Venezuelan people--and I say "now" because of the special set of circumstances you yourself mentioned just a few moments ago?

to avoid generation of a vacuum. Well now, the policy of convergence that I am revindicating and that is an essential feature of the MAS plan is a policy that must take all these factors into consideration: the Armed Forces, the economic sectors, Catholics, in sum, the vast expressional spectrum that is the Venezuela of 1980.

Teodoro Petkoff

[Question] Do you think the same as Jose Vicente Rangel? Do you think the party institution in Venezuela is in crisis?

[Petkoff] I have been hearing talk of the crisis of political parties almost from the time I entered Venezuelan politics, and when now, on my recent trip to Valera, I lived the moving experience of seeing a member of COPEI, who had been with the party 32 years, break down in tears as he explained to me that he was leaving COPEI to join MAS, I truly came to realize that belonging to a political party in Venezuela has for too many people a connotation that goes far beyond what many people suppose, namely, that belonging to a political party is like belonging to a soccer club. There are still too many people in Venezuela who make of militancy or of party membership an existential choice. Now, it is true that the parties are having problems. Parties like the AD and COPEI are in a profound crisis, and a crisis that is very much the cause of popular loss of confidence in what they offer; but the fact that the AD and COPEI are in crisis does not mean that the party institution as such is in crisis. What I read here and there these days regarding the crisis of the parties appears to me extremely superficial and banal. Whoever is writing about the crisis of the parties must certainly be looking around for a party he can hitch up to for a political career or to prolong his political career. For, frankly, if I thought at this time that the party system is in crisis I would be doing anything but looking for a party in which to continue in politics. The party institution as such is inseparable from democracy. For a party to be in crisis does not mean that the institution as such must also be in crisis. MAS is not in crisis; on the contrary, what MAS is undergoing is internal processes that have produced a development of the socialist party institution, which to me appears noteworthy; it appears to me a revolution in Venezuelan party life.

Are There Differences Between Teodoro and Jose Vicente?

Jose Vicente Rangel

[Question] What fundamental differences separate you from Teodoro Petkoff and MAS?

[Rangel] I have no personal differences with anyone....

[Petkoff] The way you have phrased your question would seem to imply that there might be another distinct alternative to the left in the Venezuelan political scene. I can tell you that the very authors of the center-left plan themselves say the center must be created because the center does not exist; whenever they speak of the center they speak only of Jovito Villalba. Is that the country's political center? Jovito Villalba?

[Question] Is it your view then that the country is at this point in time thinking in terms of the need for a socialist revolution?

[Petkoff] That is too summary a way of putting the question. What the adherents of the left have to face up to is the fact that today there are AD, COPEI and the Left; there is nothing else. Therefore, in view of the responsibility that has been placed on it by destiny, because of the country's political developments, the Left, under these circumstances, must say: the time is now, to offer the country a way out, to be not only the country's moral conscience, but to offer it a viable governing plan that the country can feel is its own. This is what it is all about; all else is but fantasy, illusion, political spiritualism.

The Party System: Its Finest Hour?

Jose Vicente Rangel

[Question] Dr Rangel, as regards that policy of national convergence that should cross the boundaries of the leftist movements: Does it imply a questioning of the party structure in Venezuela?

[Rangel] It is precisely because of the crisis the party system in Venezuela is undergoing--a crisis of participation, of real representation--that the Venezuelan people are working out their own organizational forms. We see how the most diverse organizational forms are proliferating at all social levels throughout the country. For example, what is occurring in the vast urban world of today's Venezuela: how neighbors are organizing to work out their own problems, their own revindications, because party policies do not reach them and have no true direction; what is happening with the small and medium producers in the cities and rural areas, who have generated a vast movement in connection with the concrete problems they are having, a movement that is much more powerful even than many parties in Venezuela, for when those sectors bring 7,000 tractors out on the road they summon with a stronger voice than many of the nation's parties; and what is occurring, for instance, among the youth in the districts--how this youth is organizing in direct, spontaneous forms, through theater groups, sports clubs, cultural groups, which are concerning themselves not only with sports, cultural and theater activities but also with revindication, because in the absence of party policies they are acting [Question] I specifically said fundamental differences, of a political or theoretical nature....

[Rangel] With MAS I have been partaking of the MAS plan right along, provided the intent is not to sacralize that plan, transforming it into a kind of sacred text, a Koran or a Bible, requiring in that case some first-rate clergymen to interpret it. I subscribe fully to the general lines of that plan, whose basic feature has always been the idea of convergence. The policy I am advocating, and with which I believe many Venezuelans identify today, is precisely a convergent policy.

[Question] Does Teodoro agree with that approach?

[Rangel] I do not know. Teodoro does not enter my field of concerns.

Teodoro Petkoff

[Question] Teodoro, it is being said that Jovito Villalba is the one who has pointed up the differences between you and Jose Vicente. Is that true?

[Petkoff] Well, yes. It is a very important difference. Our plan, which is the same one of 10 years ago, the same one Jose Vicente says he partakes of and that he has partaken of over the last 10 years, is this: Develop a revolutionary force of our own in Venezuela, a force that does not have to depend on crutches, a force that can be the center of gravity of the opposition, of the system and of the government. Now that is a strategy; I use the word "strategy" and I hasten to add its definition: It is a plan for the long term, a strategy. We have pursued a strategy for 10 years. I recall that 10 years ago MAS was a tiny group and that it is owing to a strategic plan that has guided us in adjusting tactics to our basic purpose, and from which we have never deviated, that we are what we are today. We, especially, have no reason whatever to turn back to formulas we discarded as far back as 1973--absolutely no reason to. Our entire political effort is based on a conception of Venezuelan life that is neither political nor electoral scheming, but rather an analysis of our society.

Is Unity Becoming Remote?

Jose Vicente Rangel

[Question] MAS has indicated that a unitary accord without MAS would be meaningless. Furthermore, its intent is to propose to the left a candidate from its own membership. Would the left accept a MAS militant as its sole candidate?

[Rangel] The problem is to determine the candidacy that will be the most agglutinant, the most nucleating, the most unitary, whether that candidacy be from within a party or from outside a party. If it is within the intents and purposes of a particular party to want, based on this precept, to impose a candidate from its own membership, that is very commendable; but the problem lies in persuading the other parties, which can also advance the same argument for their own candidates, to accept this initiative. On the other hand, I believe that what you have said is true: Unity without MAS would not be unity; however, unity without the rest of the left is also not unity. But I believe even further that unity of MAS and the left without the rest of the country is also not unity.

[Question] If MAS, for instance, were to choose Teodoro Petkoff as its candidate, and the rest of the left refused to accept him, would you accept the candidacy for the rest of the Venezuelan left?

[Rangel] I would first have to see the terms under which the hypothesis you are advancing presented itself....

[Question] You do not entirely discard it...?

[Rangel] I would have to see the terms of reference. If that circumstance were to result from faulty methods used by MAS in managing the situation, defying the unitary sense of the country and of the left, I would have to study the matter in all serenity and thoughtfulness; if, on the contrary, a MAS candidacy of the type you have indicated were to be refused by the rest of the left as a result of errors committed by the latter toward MAS, or the development of an anti-MAS sentiment, I would again have to study the situation in detail; because I am not at the service of anti-MAS policies under any circumstances; nor can I lend myself to MAS policies against other sectors of the Venezuelan left.

Teodoro Petkoff

[Question] In the case that a MAS militant were not to be accepted by the left as its candidate, and the left were to propose an independent or another militant from its membership, and if that candidacy had the agreement of the majority of the left, would you accept it?

[Petkoff] Well, in the first place, let me set forth the following, because implicit in your question is the idea that a party's candidate might be insufficiently unitary. The question should not be phrased in the manner you have just phrased it; it must be phrased differently: It must be phrased bearing in mind that if MAS is going to present the name of one of its leaders as a candidate, it will not be with the intent of saying to the rest, "Here is the candidate. Kneel before him." It will be with the intent of debating his candidacy. MAS would also expect sufficiently serious consideration to be given to that name, because the problems of unity today cannot be debated without taking into account MAS's role and importance. We have no intention of imposing anyone, and it seems to us in very bad taste to talk of a party that has on two occasions fielded an independent as its candidate, to talk of us, in terms of hegemonic intentions. I would say that today the left should think carefully in regard to a certain conception that is going the rounds in rightist circles, according to which depolarization must be stimulated, maintaining two-partyism however, which would mean stimulating all those hot-air candidacies that are not based on a party organization, that being everyone's are in fact no one's, and that do not represent the development of a force linked organically to the country.

[Question] And in the case the left were to propose Jose Vicente Rangel as its nominee for the candidacy, how would your group view his nomination? Could it be considered as being definitely rejected by MAS?

[Petkoff] Well, I imagine that since Jose Vicente has that image of the perennial candidate--he has built up that image himself--his name will be debated when the time comes. What we are not going to do is debate it within MAS. Now, I imagine that as a component of the left as a whole we will debate it, but obviously we will already have a name of our own to submit to the debate. I do not think he need be too distressed; his name is there. He is already in the game.

9238
CSO: 3010

END

JPRS 76770

7 November 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2212

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76770

7 November 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2212

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

Communist Parties Issue Joint Statement After Meeting
(CAHIERS DU COMMUNISME, Sep 80)..... 1

BRAZIL

High Command Institutes Measures To Reduce Expenditures
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 26 Sep 80)..... 5

Press Reportage on Trade With USSR, Eastern Bloc Nations
(Various sources, various dates)..... 6

USSR Offers Oil
Brazil to Propose Contract, by Noenio Spinola
Soviet Sugar Purchase
Technicians' Trip Cancelled
Cement, Ships From Poland
Warsaw Fair Prospects
Textiles to Poland
Minister Visits Czechoslovakia
Czechoslovak Imports From Brazil
Czechoslovakia Supplies Parts
Brazilian-Argentine Gas Pipeline
Mission to Eastern Europe
Hungarian Offer

Netto Tells Plans To Contain Trade Deficit, Conserve Oil
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 23, 26 Sep 80)..... 20

Containment of Trade Deficit
Call for Oil Conservation

Agricultural Workers Strike for Higher Wages in Pernambuco
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 26 Sep 80)..... 25

Foreign Minister Criticized for 'Exalting' Third World
(Editorial; O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 24 Sep 80)..... 27

COSTA RICA

Presidential Candidate Madrigal Discusses Opponents, Prospects
(Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto Interview; LA REPUBLICA, 1 Oct 80)..... 29

CUBA

U.S. International Law 'Violations' Described
(REVISTA CUBANA DE DERECHO, Jan-Dec 78)..... 34

Introduction To Study, by Miguel A. D'Estefano Pisani
Conclusions Given

Solar Energy Used on Space Flight Mission
(Orlando Gomez; GRANMA, 25 Sep 80)..... 47

Space Flight Mission Seen as Stimulus
(Joaquin Oramas; GRANMA, 25 Sep 80)..... 50

First Medical Experiments in Space Flight Sector Described
(JUVENTUD REBELDE, 21 Sep 80)..... 52

Plans, Prospects of Steel Enterprise Described
(Raul Palazuelos; BOHEMIA, 5 Sep 80)..... 58

Country To Manufacture 100-HP Boilers
(Aleyde Diaz; TRABAJADORES, 7 Aug 80)..... 66

Briefs
Intersputnik Meeting 67

GUATEMALA

Army Announces Military Registration for All Males
(DIARIO DE CENTRO AMERICA, 14 Oct 80)..... 68

Briefs
Clergy Depart Under Death Threat 70

HONDURAS

'TIEMPO' Says Lack of Unity Destabilizing Nation
(Editorial; SULA TIEMPO, 10 Oct 80)..... 71

NICARAGUA

Education Minister Clarifies School-to-Work Program
(BARRICADA, 1 Oct, 30 Sep 80)..... 73

Reactionary Attempts at Disinformation
Communique Issued

Debate Continues Over School-to-Work Program
(LA PRENSA, 27, 28 Sep 80; BARRICADA, 30, 25 Sep 80)..... 81

Lawyer Defends Parental Authority
Sandinist Youth Stresses Voluntary Work
Parents Association Expresses Support
Youth in Other Countries Cited, by Jose Santos Rivera

UPN Chief Aguirre Denounces Church Document
(Danilo Aguirre Solis; EL NUEVO DIARIO, 19 Oct 80)..... 84

CUS Replies to Borge's Accusations
(LA PRENSA, 13 Oct 80)..... 89

VENEZUELA

Composition of Country's Marxist Left Groups Detailed
(Heydra; EL DIARIO DE CARACAS, 26 Aug 80)..... 91

COMMUNIST PARTIES ISSUE JOINT STATEMENT AFTER MEETING

Paris CAHIERS DU COMMUNISME in French Sep 80 pp 123-125

[Joint statement by the communist parties of France, Guadeloupe, Martinique and Reunion, issued in Paris on 1 July 1980]

[Text] Delegations from the communist parties of France, Guadeloupe, Martinique, and Reunion, headed by their respective secretaries general, Georges Marchais, Guy Dominthe, Armand Nicolas, and Paul Verges,* met in Paris on 1 July 1980. The delegations engaged in a wide-ranging exchange of views on the situation in their countries and on the prospects for militant action. This meeting also gave them the opportunity to reaffirm their combat solidarity.

The four parties denounce the reactionary policy of the French Government and its UDF-RPR [Union for French Democracy-Rally for the Republic] majority subservient to the monopolies. The government and major employers want to make the working masses in France bear the burden of the economic crisis, and in the overseas departments, they want to perpetuate and aggravate colonial domination with its disastrous consequences.

The four parties underscore the extreme gravity of the situation in these islands.

The government's policy has resulted in a slump in agricultural production, a reduction or liquidation of the already weak industrial sector, and a decline in fisheries and native arts and crafts.

---

*For the French Communist Party: Maxime Gremetz, secretary of the Central Committee (CC), and Jean-Charles Negre, assistant to the CC's foreign policy section. For the Guadeloupe Communist Party: Ernest Moutoussamy, member of the political bureau, and Michel Bangou, member of the CC. For the Martinique Communist Party: Guy Dufond, member of the political bureau. For the Reunion Communist Party: Julien Ramin, secretary of the Central Committee.

The various government plans end in setbacks for these countries, because their real purpose is to allow monopolies to make excessive profits. These monopolies are interested in these countries as consumer markets supported by public funds, as reserves of rich marine resources, and as strategic commercial and military bases.

The human consequences of this policy are tragic.

Half the population is unemployed. There is widespread underemployment among women. Two-thirds of the youth are deprived of job opportunities. The continuous increase in prices and taxes is systematically reducing the purchasing power of workers, and small and medium-size farmers. A growing number of men and women are being plunged into abject poverty in these countries.

The very existence of these peoples in the near future is threatened by a policy of intensive emigration of their young men and women at a time when the birthrate is declining sharply. This danger is exacerbated by mounting immigration designed to change the composition of the population.

In France, natives of the DOM's [overseas departments] are subjected to capitalist exploitation and to discrimination of every kind, including racism.

To maintain its system, French imperialism is reinforcing its administrative staffs, its military presence, and its repressive forces. Arbitrariness, discrimination, violation of human rights, and brutal repression are increasingly becoming the rule in these colonies.

Despite the scheming government's use of economic assistance as hush money to deter popular protest, despite its powerful propaganda means, particularly [television channel] FR3, and despite its virulent anticommunism, the working masses refuse to be brainwashed and are becoming more and more rapidly aware of the colonial character of the integration policy, extending today to the Common Market's Europe.

The peoples of Guadeloupe, Martinique, and Reunion, as well as those of Guiana, New Caledonia, and Polynesia, are victims of colonialist contempt expressed in a variety of farms. The refusal to recognize their national identity, more and more widely resented here and there, the denial of their cultural originality, are combined with arbitrary actions, rigged elections, and violation of their dignity.

An increasingly large number of the social classes in these countries are joining the struggle and becoming conscious of the colonial reality of their situation. The policy of humiliation and depersonalization is being increasingly denounced. The struggles for dignity are expanding. Peoples are openly asserting their individuality more and more frequently. There is growing national consciousness, especially in the Antilles, and this despite the Socialist Party which denies the right of self-determination to the peoples of the DOM's and thereby reinforces the RPR-Giscardian coalition.

Communists play a large and leading part in developing those multiform militant campaigns that have recently scored noteworthy successes.

Peoples of the DOM's are insisting, with increasing vigor, upon their right to be given responsibility for management of their own affairs.

The four parties reaffirm the inalienable right of these peoples to freely choose their status and determine their own future.

The French Communist Party is working to see that the inviolable right of self-determination of the DOM peoples is respected. In league with those peoples, the party is striving to create democratic conditions guaranteeing the the free exercise of that right.

The communist parties of Guadeloupe, Martinique, and Reunion determine their own policy altogether independently and according to conditions peculiar to each of their countries.

It is on this basis that each of these parties offers its people a political status that puts an end to the situation of colonial domination and permits economic development, social progress, and cultural fulfillment in freedom while advancing to socialism.

While it is true that each people has its own particular social-historical development, Guadeloupe, Martinique, and Reunion cannot remain outside the current development in the Caribbean Sea and the Indian Ocean. The upsurge in people's struggles in these regions and the progress of anti-imperialist forces are reviving the sense of their dignity and the necessary international solidarity in opposition to the reinforcement of the forces of French and American imperialisms.

The four parties stressed the importance of coordinating the militant campaigns of DOM workers with those campaigns being waged by all French workers against the policy of repression, austerity, unemployment, and colonial pillage pursued by large multinational corporations and the Giscardian government.

As part of this coordinated action, the French Communist Party will intensify its efforts to support the campaigns of DOM workers to obtain satisfaction of their demands for enforcement of their economic and social rights, for respect and extension of freedoms and democracy.

The French Communist Party reaffirms its solidarity with the struggles of the peoples and communist parties of Guadeloupe, Martinique, and Reunion to free themselves from colonialism.

These three parties support the French Communist Party's action designed to put an end to domination by big capitalist interests.

At the end of these talks conducted in an atmosphere of cordiality and frankness, the four parties agreed to strengthen their fraternal cooperation and active solidarity.

8041
CSO: 3100

HIGH COMMAND INSTITUTES MEASURES TO REDUCE EXPENDITURES

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 26 Sep 80 p 7

[Text] Following a meeting lasting 4 1/2 hours yesterday in Brasilia, the Army High Command decided to institute measures to effect economies, rationalize the use of resources and reduce the movement of military personnel in order to "cope with those current problems which derive principally from the nation's current economic situation and impact the life and activities of the Army," according to an announcement released by the office of Minister of the Army Walter Pires.

The measures adopted include research and support for civilian industry, with a view to the consolidation of Brazilian military technology; a reduction in the movement of military personnel to the minimum essential to the interests of the service; the transfer or exchange of nonessential real property, in order to obtain resources for new barracks and training camps; the intensive utilization of exercises for cadres without the use of troops, carried out preferably in the vicinity of the barracks; and the increased use, in training, of various types of simulators.

Another matter examined dealt with studies and measures designed to dynamize social, medical and hospital assistance to military families, particularly in the form of the following actions: a) improvement of the network of in-transit hotels; b) construction, within the limitations of current possibilities, of residential structures on military posts where they are lacking; c) measures to improve the facilities for medical and hospital care for military personnel and their dependents, through dynamization of the medical care system instituted last year.

Yesterday's meeting was the first meeting of the High Command convened by Minister Walter Pires other than during the period of voting on the promotion lists. It was also the first time during the tenure of Minister Walter Pires that the cabinet had distributed a statement to clarify matters discussed at a meeting of the High Command.

The commander of the 1st Army, General Gentil Marcondes, and the military commandant of Amazonia, Gen Leonidas Pires Gonsalves, who had returned only yesterday to their respective states, described the meeting as "basically technical" in nature.

Shortly after the meeting opened, the photographers were allowed into the room, where the minister and the other participants appeared to be quite relaxed. After several photographs the meeting continued and did not conclude until 1230 hours.

10992
CSO: 3001

PRESS REPORTAGE ON TRADE WITH USSR, EASTERN BLOC NATIONS

USSR Offers Oil

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 30 Sep 80 p 24

[Text] Brasilia--An offer of 300,000 tons of oil (about 2.2 million barrels) by the Soviet Union was confirmed yesterday by the Itamaraty Palace. The Soviet oil could be put on the Brazilian market at the rate of 21,000 barrels a day by this coming December, at a price below the $34 per barrel which was reported.

Statement by Minister

Minister of Planning Delfim Netto said in Rio yesterday that it is possible that Brazil will begin negotiations with the Soviet Union with a view to purchasing oil. He made a point of stressing, however, that PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] knows what it is doing and it will be PETROBRAS which will decide which is the best solution in market terms."

The minister, who attended the installation of the new president of ELETROBRAS [Brazilian Electric Power Companies, Inc], General Costa Cavalcanti, left the ceremony quickly and said little. When he was asked about the possibility that the government will decree rationing of oil products, Delfim answered "Nothing about rationing," meaning that this matter is not within his jurisdiction. He also said he knows nothing about any possible increase in prices in the next few days for oil products.

Similarly, the president of PETROBRAS, Shigeaki Ueki, who was also at the ceremony, said he did not attend the meeting of the National Energy Commission but that he knew that measures designed to rationalize oil consumption had been approved. The marketing director, Carlos Sant'Anna, admitted that larger purchases of oil could be sought on the Latin American market, Mexico and Venezuela.

"In 1981 the Parana basin will either have oil or gas. Paulipetro will destroy the tabu that there is no oil in that basin," the governor of Sao Paulo, Paulo Maluf, who was also present at the installation of General Costa Cavalcanti, said. He noted that Sao Paulo's contribution currently to the effort to reduce dependence on imported oil is substantial. He recalled that 67 hydroelectric plants, involving an expenditure of $3 billion, are being built.

He disagreed with the theory that the possibility of finding oil in Brazil in large quantities is remote. He said that the existing problem is the lack of prospecting. He cited by way of example the United States, which has a program for this year calling for 51,000 drillings in search of oil. Argentina will drill 800 wells, while Brazil will content itself with drilling 300.

Brazil to Propose Contract

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 28 Sep 80 p 39

[Article by Noenio Spinola]

[Text] Brasilia--Planning Minister Delfim Netto has said he does not see any problem in letting the Soviet Union participate in risk contracts for prospecting for oil in Brazil. PETROBRAS President Shigeaki Ueki said in Rio de Janeiro that he was going to "brief the Soviet ambassador in Brasilia on the conditions for bidding in the north-northeastern areas."

While the invitation is formally unnecessary, since the bidding is public, it will obviously have political significance since it will indicate that Moscow will hardly have any restrictions, considering the background of Brazilian-USSR relations. Ueki said: "Our interest in having all types of bidders for the prospecting of our oil could justify even the opening of new areas for the USSR."

No Dramatics

The shock waves and repercussions caused by the war in the Persian Gulf reach us in muffled form. "We will take no dramatic steps," the planning minister said. The president of PETROBRAS said something similar in Rio.

In the PETROBRAS view, Brazil has time and certain figures in its favor: the national energy consumption level is running at about the equivalent of 2.5 barrels of oil per day, with 1,100,000 barrels in hydrocarbons. A stock on land and on board ship of 120 to 130 million barrels leaves a reasonable margin for maneuvering, even if the oil flow from Iraq is interrupted for a longer period than the majority of the strategists on Middle East problems foresee.

"Public opinion sectors sometimes seem to enjoy suffering," said Shigeaki Ueki. He said that the reports of Brazilian "dependence" on purchases from Iraq do not reflect the reality, because they should be considered within the overall context of energy consumption in the country, and not solely in relation to import totals. The assessment by the president of PETROBRAS is simple: assessing the total energy demand in oil-equivalent terms, imports from Iraq represent only 17 percent.

Food a Concern

This week, the clouds visible above the top floor of the PETROBRAS building on Chile Avenue were dark, in slight contrast with the dark-blue sky seen from the office of the minister of planning at the Planalto Palace. Without any political connotations, the clouds on the horizon are of similar concern today to the entire government leadership, because the farmers may cease planting for the summer harvest if alarmism seizes the country under the impact of the shock waves provoked by the conflict between Iraq and Iran.

"I have not the slightest doubt that the demand for foodstuffs will explode worldwide," Minister Delfim Netto said, adding that Brazil is still far short of a proper perception of the opportunities opened up to it as a supplier. There are so many problems that the Americans, struggling with the limitations of their water table, are thinking of building an aqueduct to transport water from Alaska to the productive region. "Even water, and not just oil alone, will enter into production costs all over the world," he said.

"Therefore we are not speaking of rationing," Shigeaki Ueki said.

The truth is that the cost relation between oil and farm or industrial production is much closer than is realized. The producer of rice or soybeans, when harvest time comes, will include in his cost figures the price per ton of diesel oil needed to operate the harvesters, and industry will do likewise.

One of the largest textile factories in Brazil, Bangu, bears witness to this problem. For each ton of cloth the industry consumed an average of 4.23 tons of oil in 1978. Spiraling prices led that same enterprise to adopt a rigorous modernization program for the machinery and installations, reducing average consumption to 3.15 tons this year. But the vertical cut of some 34 percent achieved, according to its directors, is one factor in a tough race with the spiraling prices of raw materials.

The crisis in the Gulf will moreover have consequences, above all in the accounting sector, since due to an irony of history, the geopolitics of the area produced a war in which the interests of the superpowers--the United States and the Soviet Union--are severely limited. The USSR armed Iraq, but it has also been paying court to Iran, and even when the Ayatollah came out with a condemnation of the "diabolic" influence of the powers of the Kremlin, the Tass agency, in its day-to-day rhetoric, never ceased its praises of the "revolutionary inspiration" of the Iranian people against the "imperialist interests" of the Americans. And, in Baku, in Azerbaijan, the flow of Iranian oil upward across the Caspian Sea continued to be welcome.

According to Shigeaki Ueki, any analysis of the crisis should be less defeatist, because there are also many alternatives for taking the oil out through the Mediterranean. Unlike what has been claimed, the dispatch of oil tankers to the area was only studied. "It is one alternative," he said.

Dialog

Apart from costs, the echoes of the crisis, which is an old one, have been disturbing some preconceptions. Seven years ago the idea of the risk contract, which was a sin, developed despite everything. Now even the potentially most polemic barriers are falling.

The Soviets, who can produce between 2 and 3 million barrels of oil more than Saudi Arabia, have in recent months been quietly conveying their interest in selling their technology to Brazil. PETROBRAS, according to its president, has conducted comparative studies of the USSR potential with that of other countries, having concluded that even large Western enterprises had exported technology to the USSR.

Be that as it may, the new thing is that PETROBRAS is now expressing interest in holding talks with a country which has thus far remained away from the competition for oil prospecting in Brazil due to various reasons. Obviously, any expression of interest on the part of the Soviets will have immediate impact on the other bidders and will perhaps speed up the race for a raw material which today is as valuable as gold.

It has been reported that the latest specific contacts between the Soviets and PETROBRAS were made in Brazil between 8 and 12 months ago, when the USSR ambassador visited the Brazilian enterprise. No agreement was reached then because Brazil wanted to buy oil, while the Soviets alleged that their commitments to traditional customers and their limited production prevented them from expanding their sales.

Approximately 10 days ago, PETROBRAS turned down an offer from Moscow for the sale of 300,000 tons of oil at $34 per barrel, contending that it could obtain the same price of average oil at $31 from other suppliers, and because the Soviets did not respond to its counterproposal to provide regular oil supplies in 1981.

Ueki said: "We were not interested in buying on the 'spot' market at that moment because there were large stocks on the world market." Apparently, for the same reason, the Soviets wanted to sell their surplus oil, but without any special interest in continuing the supply. The Soviet offer left some experts with the impression that, despite the volatile situation prevailing in the Persian Gulf and the repeated border incidents between Iran and Iraq, no one was expecting the sudden crisis that has broken out in recent days.

Soviet Sugar Purchase

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 18 Sep 80 p 18

[Text] Sugar went up $100 a ton in little more than a week, reaching the level of $814 per ton for delivery in October, because the Soviet Union set out to purchase 1 to 1-1/2 million tons on the international market, the director of the trading company which sells the product, Frederico Costa Pinto, said yesterday.

In commenting on the entry of the Soviets into the sugar market yesterday, the president of the IAA [Sugar and Alcohol Institute], Hugo de Almeida, revealed that commodities firms have sought out that autonomous body on behalf of the Soviet Union with a view to the purchase of between 100 and 300,000 tons. This year, Brazil expects to export 2,500,000 tons, and, according to Hugo de Almeida, they still have a small volume of the product available.

Poor Harvest

In Hugo de Almeida's view, the reports of Soviet purchases are "reasonable," in view of the fact that there were poor harvests of sugarcane in Cuba and sugarbeets in the Soviet Union. Cuba expected to produce approximately 8 million tons and the total is likely to come to 6,500,000. The figures for the Soviet Union have not yet been released, Hugo de Almeida said.

Also, in addition to the Soviet Union, businessman Costa Pinto said yesterday, Poland is reported to be purchasing more than 100,000 tons and East Germany another 200,000 tons of sugar. Greece, Spain and Turkey will also have to make purchases, and in Latin America, at least Venezuela, Peru and Mexico will have to buy sugar. "The market is firm," he added, "and should remain so until at least the coming year."

The proposals submitted by trading firms to the IAA are being studied, and, Hugo de Almeida said, none of the formal applications has been rejected. He says however that "if the Soviet Union confirms its purchase, the country will benefit even if it is not the seller, because there will be an increase in prices which will have direct repercussions on other Brazilian contracts, with open prices for the coming year."

Technicians' Trip Cancelled

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 19 Sep 80 p 23

[Text] The SIDERBRAS [Brazilian Iron and Steel Corporation] is reported to have forbidden the Sao Paulo Iron and Steel Company (COSIPA) to send two engineers to the Soviet Union to study the Soviet technology for injecting crushed coal in blast furnaces. The COSIPA had made contact with the commercial office of the USSR to express its interest, and the trip was arranged. The engineers were to visit first the installations of Nippon Stell, in Japan, which uses the Soviet process. Following their visit to Japan, the engineers were preparing to depart for Moscow when they received contrary orders from Sao Paulo. The reports came from sources in the sector, stating that the Soviet office only learned of the cancellation of the trip on Wednesday, the very same day the engineers were expected in Moscow, where they were also to be welcomed by representatives from the Brazilian embassy in that country.

The same sources said that in forbidding the trip, SIDERBRAS is preventing the COSIPA engineers from having direct access to the real owner of the process. "SIDERBRAS seems to prefer the intermediary," they say. A similar situation occurred with Tubarao Iron and Steel: the Soviets (through Lincensintorg--the state technology enterprise) sold metallurgical technology to Italimpianti (an Italian enterprise). Italimpianti resold this technology to Brazil under advantageous conditions.

No COSIPA Statement

The spokesman for the SIDERBRAS, Augusto Cesar de Carvalho, said he had no knowledge of any decision forbidding the trip by the enterprise. He said that any clarification of the matter should be sought from the COSIPA.

Cement, Ships From Poland

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 13 Sep 80 p 22

[Text] Brasilia--Brazil may purchase between 200,000 and 250,000 tons of cement and 8 special vessels not built by the national shipyards from Poland, the secretary general of the Ministry of Finance, Eduardo Carvalho, said on his return yesterday from an 8-day trip to that country. He went there to sign a contract for the supply of 4 million tons of Polish sulfur over the next 12 years and another for the export of Brazilian textile products worth $200 million over a 5-year period.

Carvalho also signed an agreement for the expansion of credit lines to the Polish government, in a total amount of $150 million U.S., including $120 million to be supplied by Bank of Brazil agencies abroad to finance the exploitation of sulfur mines, and $30 million U.S. to increase credit for exports of Brazilian products to Poland.

The government leaders in the two countries will study various forms of increasing trade with a view to reducing the negative trade balance between the two countries, which may come to a negative total of almost $400 million U.S. for Poland this year. There may be an exchange of metallurgical products, a subject scheduled to be discussed at the beginning of next month when the president of SIDERBRAS, Henrique Brandao Cavalcanti, travels to Warsaw. Apart from this matter, the agenda for future bilateral discussions includes the expansion of exports of domestic iron ore from that East European country and the purchase of rails for the Federal Railroad Network.

Brazil's exports of chocolate liqueur, iron ore, pellets, coffee, soybean meal, thread and cloth, shoes, and orange juice, among other products shipped to Poland this year should come to a total of $500 million U.S., while imports of coal, raw materials, chemical products and operating machines will not exceed $100 million U.S., Carvalho said.

According to Eduardo Carvalho, the Polish government authorized Brazil to discount the promissory notes for the financing of the domestic exports of that country on the international financial market. Its debt may come to $1 billion by the end of this year.

On the subject of the import of the 8 ships, the secretary general of the Ministry of Finance said that this will only be carried out if the Polish government will finance 100 percent of the purchases of the Brazilian ships'-outfitters, allow a period of grace during the construction of the vessels, cover the interest rates and agree to the time payment periods prevailing on the market. These conditions are being imposed because the National Merchant Marine Superintendency (SUNAMAM) is short of financial resources. The Polish authorities are expected to respond to this proposal by the end of this month, but Carvalho is confident that the negotiations between the 2 countries in this sector will go through, because an offer of $100 million U.S. for the financing of the export of the vessels and more than $100 million for other products was made. Carvalho gave assurance that the import of these vessels will not work against our domestic shipbuilding industry, particularly because the vessels to be imported are not of the kind produced by the domestic shipyards.

The secretary general of the Ministry of Finance announced yesterday that negotiations between Brazil and the Soviet Union for the purchase of equipment for the building of two hydroelectric power plants should be concluded by the end of the year. Two weeks ago, the Ministry of Finance met with officials of the ABIMAQ [Brazilian Association of Machine Industries], ABINEE [Brazilian Electro-Electronic Industry Association] and ABDIB [Brazilian Association for the Development of Basic Industry] to discuss the terms for these imports to avoid any threat to domestic industry. On this occasion, the government gave the businessmen assurance, Carvalho said, that the demands of the sector will be taken into account.

Fraud

The president of the Association of Directors of Building Industry Enterprises in Bahia (ADEMI), Juvenalito Gusmao de Andrade, revealed in Salvador yesterday that the cement factories which supply the Bahian market are violating the price established by the Interministerial Price Council (CIP) for the product. The price per sack of cement, established at 216 cruzeiros, was increased on the first of this month by the addition of 39 cruzeiros said to be a "freight charge."

Warsaw Fair Prospects

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 26 Sep 80 p 19

[Text] Sao Paulo--Brazilian textile industries believe that the International Textile Products Fair to be held in Warsaw from 6 to 10 October will make a considerable increase in its exports to East European countries possible. According to the president of the National Textile Industry Council of the textile industry union of Sao Panlo, and vice president of the Sao Paulo State Federation of Industries (FIESP), Luis Americo Medeiros, 237 Brazilian businessmen from this sector will attend the fair, showing their wares and developing a broad potential for trade.

"This is the first major event in the textile sector to be held in Eastern Europe," he said, "and Brazilian businesses in the sector will be heavily represented. It is still too soon for us to estimate the volume of business we can do in Warsaw. But without a doubt, the fair represents a first step toward more aggressive action in Eastern Europe."

Trade

Eastern Europe, according to Medeiros, buys about 25 percent of Brazil textile exports, which will reach a total this year of 1.1 billion cruzeiros, making the sector second in the list of major manufacturing enterprises in the country, surpassed only by the automobile industry.

Winning markets in Eastern Europe is very important, according to Medeiros, because our national exports of textiles have been losing their ability to compete on Western markets. This has basically been because the prices of Brazilian products, due to the constant domestic increases in production costs, have gone up more than the international average.

"In the first 7 months of the year, raw materials prices increased by 70 percent on an average. Cotton alone saw a price increase of more than 100 percent in this period," Medeiros said.

He said that after the Warsaw fair, a smaller display of Brazilian textiles will take place at the Brazilian embassy in Moscow.

Textiles to Poland

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 11 Sep 80 p 16

[Text] Sao Paulo--The Foreign Trade Company (COMEXPORT) signed a contract for textile exports worth $200 million with the Polish enterprise Textilmpex. This was the largest operation in the sector this year, it was learned yesterday from the director of the enterprise, Jean Herscovici, one of the members of the mixed Brazilian trade mission visiting Poland.

COMEXPORT, the largest textile exporter in the country, entered into this sector some years ago when restrictions were imposed due to the fixing of quotas on the MCE [European Common Market] and United States markets, and it sought out Eastern Europe as the main alternative. The operation with Textilmpex accounts for 30 percent of the 1980 exports of textiles to Poland.

COMEXPORT, together with PETROFERTIL and INTERBRAS [PETROBRAS International Trade, Inc], signed an agreement with the Polish Ciech enterprise for the import of 4 million tons of sulfur from Poland. The two operations are covered by a protocol signed by the head of the Brazilian mission, Eduardo Carvalho, and the Polish minister of foreign trade, Ryszard Karski.

According to Mr Herscovici, the import of sulfur from Poland by Brazil seemed to be the best alternative when the payment for the product, purchased mainly from Canada, had to be made in strong currency.

As to the total exports of Brazilian textiles, the president of the Textile Industry Union of the State of Sao Paulo, Luis Americo Medeiros, expressed his concern yesterday.

He said that Brazilian textiles are becoming ever less competitive abroad and the inability to export textiles worth 1,100,000,000 cruzeiros this year is a worry.

Minister Visits Czechoslovakia

Brasilia CORREIO BRAZILIENSE in Portuguese 20 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] Prague--During his stay in Czechoslovakia, Minister of Mines and Energy Cesar Cals met with the Czechoslovak prime minister, Lubomir Strougal, and with Minister of Metallurgy and Heavy Industry Ladislav Gerle, and the first vice minister for foreign affairs, Yaroslav Knizka. He also met with the president of the Skodaexport, Technoexport and Pragoinvest foreign trade enterprises and visited a coal gasification plant in Warsaw.

The members of the Brazilian delegation held meetings and trade discussions with the following Czechoslovak foreign trade enterprises: Skodaexport, Technoexport, Pragoinvest, Keramental, Polytechna, Chemoprojekt, Geofond, Intergeo, Koospol, Kovo and Ceskolovenka Keramika.

During the discussions, which took place in a constructive atmosphere of mutual understanding, the following points on the agenda were taken up:

1. Possibilities for a mutual trade exchange increase, taking into account above all Czechoslovak supplies of energy equipment, equipment for the cement industry, equipment and technology for the exploitation of coal resources, gas pipeline installations and equipment, special operating equipment and chemical products, among other items. Brazil in turn would supply primary products (iron ore, soybean meal and others), manufactured and semi-manufactured products.

2. The forms and possibilities of cooperation between Czechoslovak and Brazilian enterprises on third markets.

3. Prospects for industrial cooperation in the coal gasification sector, the use of low heating power fuels, laboratory support and mineral exploration.

During the talks, the parties reached the following conclusions:

a) Possibility of cooperation in the energy sector where the building of thermonuclear plants is concerned. The Brazilian delegation made it clear that within a period of 90 days it must establish the location of a thermoelectric power plant using coal, with an approximate capacity of 300 megawatts, to be built in cooperation with domestic industry, which will coordinate the project and will be responsible for a minimum of 60 percent of the total supply of equipment. In this connection, the Soviet delegation stated its position to the effect that this percentage should take into account the technical training of the respective industrial enterprises due to the high level of equipment specialization. On the enterprise level, specific details pertaining to the question of financing and transfer of technology would have to be agreed upon.

b) The Czechoslovak delegation expressed its interest in participating in supplying equipment for the building of three cement plants, in accordance with agreements reached with the Pragoinvest company and the Brazilian industrial group. The Czechoslovak delegation said that in order to carry out the operation in question a minimum of 50 percent of the equipment would have to be imported. The two delegations agreed on holding a meeting in Brazil within the next 60 days with the participation of the companies directly interested and the domestic associations in this sector, in order to examine the matter.

c) Cooperation on third markets. The two delegations agreed that there is a real potential for cooperation between Brazilian and Czechoslovak companies in various sectors, including electric power plants (Costa Rica, Argentina, and Nigeria), as well as the construction of a metallurgical plant in Nigeria. The Pragoinvest enterprise will study the possible participation of Brazilian industry in supplying part of the equipment for the cement factories to be built by Czechoslovakia in Latin America or in other countries. The Technoexport enterprise will act in similar fashion with regard to the possibility of Brazil's supplying equipment for coal gasification projects to be carried out in other Latin American countries.

d) The Czechoslovak delegation indicated interest in participating in coal gasification projects in Brazil. With a view to informing the Brazilian delegation about Czechoslovak technology, a visit was paid to Warsaw, where the gas with the highest heating power is being produced by gasification. The Czechoslovak delegation stated that it is prepared to make a visit to this plant possible for other Brazilian technicians, and if interest is expressed, to send Czechoslovak specialists and technicians to Brazil for technical discussions.

3) Discussions were held by representatives of the Mineral Resources and Research Company and the Politechna enterprise, the Coal Research Institute and the Intergeo enterprise concerning the possibility of technical cooperation in the realm of lignite coal mineral technology, and the possibility of investment in abandoned deposits in Brazil and managerial affiliation with a view to third markets.

As a result of the talks involving the members of the delegation headed by Minister Cesar Cals and representatives of the Czechoslovak Koopol and Kerametal enterprises, continuation and in some cases increases in Brazilian exports of iron ore, soybean meal, coffee, vegetable oil, citrus fruits and other products were deemed viable. Where iron ore is concerned, Brazilian exports would come to 8 million tons in the period between 1981 and 1984 and 10 million tons between 1986 and 1990. The Rio Doce Valley Company (CVRD) and the Kerametal enterprise will arrange, by means of long-term contracts, the terms for the annual distribution of shipments and the types of ore. The respective Czechoslovak enterprises will study the possibility of importing cotton thread and other manufactured products from Brazil.

Brazilian Minister of Mines and Energy Cesar Cals will appoint a mixed commission on coal in Paris next Monday, jointly with French Minister of Industry Andre Giraud, French ministerial sources announced.

The appointment of this Franco-Brazilian sectorial group should allow an increasing exchange of information and the development of joint projects for the study and exploitation of coal, the Brazilian embassy in Paris explained.

Cals, who arrived in Paris last night, will meet officially with Giraud on Monday, and also that same day with the French director general of energy and raw materials, Francois de Wissocq.

The Brazilian minister paid an official 2-day visit to Czechoslovakia before traveling to Paris, which he will leave on Monday en route home to Brazil.

Czechoslovak Imports From Brazil

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 4 Sep 80 p 14

[Text] Brasilia--Czechoslovak Consul Stanislaw Matocha said yesterday that "if there are not other ways of putting the trade balance with Brazil and my country into better equilibrium, the Czechoslovak government is contemplating, as one of the classic means of reestablishing balance, reducing imports of Brazilian products."

"This is not our desire," he explained, "but for 5 years the trade balance has favored Brazil and our deficit has been increasing. Our imports today total 6.4 times ($125 million U.S.) the volume of our exports to Brazil ($21 million U.S.). It would be very ambitious for us to want to achieve a surplus situation in our favor immediately, but we believe that the time has come to begin to reverse the present trend and to reduce the difference in favor of Brazil."

Stanislaw Matocha views the visit paid by Minister of Mines and Energy Cesar Cals, at the head of a delegation of Brazilian officials, to Czechoslovakia in September as an important step in this regard. One of the reasons is the fact that the Brazilian government has currently undertaken a review of the terms of trade with the East European countries, "perhaps in the awareness that we have waited a long time for this." Despite the presence of the Brazilian minister in their country, the Czechoslovaks nonetheless take a skeptical view of the future of their trade relations with Brazil. As Stanislaw Matocha explained, although the trade balance between the two countries does not run to very high figures, the Czech economy is dependent on soybean meal (with which all of its cattle are fed) and coffee from Brazil (60 percent of Czech consumption). Meanwhile, the Brazilian economy is not dependent on Czechoslovak products, which makes negotiation difficult. "We are in a position to provide complete cement plants for Brazil and we are rather concerned about the domestic production indices required by the CDI [Industrial Development Council]. Once they told us that for cement plants it was 95 percent, then they spoke of 80 percent and even 60 percent. We are hoping that the visit by Minister Cals will clear this up once and for all."

The Czech consul further noted that his government "has been able to understand Brazil's need to export and has already been importing from it manufactured and semi-manufactured products which it could have bought from other countries."

Czechoslovakia Supplies Parts

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 27 Sep 80 p 25

[Text] The purchase of equipment for a thermoelectric power plant with a capacity of 300 megawatts was the only concrete negotiation completed by the Brazilian mission headed by Minister of Mines and Energy Cesar Cals which visited Czechoslovakia. The plant, the total value of which is estimated at $210 to $300 million, is to have 60 percent domestic components and the imported portion, with 120 million U.S., still lacks definite financing, but it can be paid for in ore. This information was provided yesterday by Vitorio Mariano Ferraz, who went to Prague as the representative of the Brazilian Association of Machine Industries (ABIMAQ), the Brazilian Electro-Electronic Industry Association (ABINEE) and the Brazilian Association for the Development of Basic Industry (ABDIB). He said that the site for the building of the thermoelectric plant should be decided within 90 days.

Ferraz added that France too is ready to sell a thermoelectric plant to Brazil, and Minister Cesar Cals has indicated readiness to purchase it, even having received a financing proposal, but that no definite agreement has been reached. He also stressed that as president of the National Cement and Mining Machines Department and the Machine Industry Union of the State of Sao Paulo, he went to Czechoslovakia prepared to discuss the only matter not taken up during the trip: the import of three cement factories. Before their departure, he said, the Ministry of Mines and Energy announced that if this negotiation were to be completed, the financing would be carried out over a period of 12 years, at an interest rate of 8.5 percent per year.

Nothing of this was discussed in Czechoslovakia, however, but Ferraz said that the country is prepared to sell the three units to Brazil provided the domestic components index is 50 percent. In his view, however, domestic industry is in a position to provide cement factories with a 95-percent domestic production level, although the cost would be approximately 20 percent more. The question of imports is to be discussed again within 60 days, when private businessmen will decide if the purchase from Czechoslovakia is of interest or not, Ferraz said in conclusion.

Brazilian-Argentine Gas Pipeline

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 24 Sep 80 p 25

[Text] Brasilia--Czechoslovakia is one of the nations interested in participating in the international bidding on the construction of a gas pipeline between Argentina and Brazil, government sources revealed yesterday. They further gave assurance that bids will only be solicited after the work of the mixed commission representing the two countries which began work yesterday at the Ministry of Mines and Energy has been completed. The sources said that there are already four international firms which are also interested in the matter.

The mixed commission has a period of 120 days in which to submit its final opinion on the viability analyses for the sale of Argentine gas to Brazil. This is a consequence of an agreement signed between the two governments on the occasion of the visit of President Jorge Videla last month.

Mission to Eastern Europe

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 3 Sep 80 p 20

[Text] Brasilia--Brazil wants to seek the cooperation of East European countries for the development of joint trade operations on third markets, with the participation of Brazilian private businesses.

This information was provided yesterday by the Itamaraty Palace, which is preparing to send a high-level delegation this week to Budapest and Berlin, where the matter will be discussed within the framework of the mixed commission in which Brazil participates in each of these two countries.

The Brazilian mission, which will travel to Hungary and the GDR, will be headed by the chief of the European department at the Itamaraty Palace, Ambassador Ivan Batalha, and will include representatives of the Coordinating Group for Trade With the Socialist Countries of Eastern Europe (COLESTE) and ministerial and business bodies.

Hungary

A meeting of the mixed Brazilian-Hungarian commission will be held from 8 to 10 September in Budapest. Three basic points will be analyzed: combined coffee, cacao and iron ore exports in exchange for imports of fertilizers and cryollite; the potential for industrial cooperation in Brazil; and the possible signing of a protocol for the forming of a consortium of Brazilian private businesses and Hungarian enterprises with a view to utilizing trade opportunities on third markets.

East Germany

The mixed Brazilian-GDR commission will meet from 12 to 16 September in Berlin. According to the Itamaraty Palace the main subjects will be the following: possible increases in Brazilian exports of primary, semi-manufactured and manufactured products, in particular iron ore, soybeans, textiles and shoes; expansion of Brazilian imports from the GDR, especially heavy equipment and potassium chloride; and cooperation on other markets and in the coal mining and gasification sector.

Hungarian Offer

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 19 Sep 80 p 23

[Text] Hungary has suggested to the Brazilian government that the state enterprise Metrimpex could negotiate the supply of specialized laboratories valued at $9 million with the National Nuclear Energy Commission, in addition to requesting approval by Brazilian authorities of a contract for a total of $23 million with the Ministry of Education and Culture for the supply of educational equipment.

This information was obtained from diplomatic sources in Prague, whom the Hungarians have asked for bids on deliveries of 100,000 tons of domestic iron ore in 1980 and up to 200,000 tons in 1981. This was one of the results of the meeting of the mixed commission of representatives of the two countries held from 8 to 11 September in Budapest.

5157
CSO: 3001

NETTO TELLS PLANS TO CONTAIN TRADE DEFICIT, CONSERVE OIL

Containment of Trade Deficit

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 23 Sep 80 p 24

[Text] Brasilia bureau--Unless the conflict between Iran and Iraq intensifies, Brazil will expend $1 billion worth of its petroleum stocks during the rest of this year and will thereby reduce to less than $2 billion the deficit in the trade balance and hold to $12 billion the net requirements for foreign funds in 1980.

Although he was questioned persistently by the newsmen with whom he had lunch, the minister of planning refused to provide any information concerning the strategy Brazil will develop with respect to its foreign debts in 1981. Asked whether he believed the coming year would be better or worse than the present one, he replied: "It is my firm belief that 1981 will be what we are capable of making it." He conceded, however, that if petroleum prices maintain a reasonable rate of increase the net acquisition of funds will probably be in the same amount as in 1980, that is to say, $12 billion. "I'd like to make it clear that we've had no problem to date in obtaining funds," Delfim said. "As for 1981 it's too early to say, but I believe it could be a repeat of 1980," he added.

In the minister's opinion "the next year is always the difficult year." He is sure, he says, that when 1981 arrives everyone will want to know whether the nation will be able to obtain funds in 1982, "and so on and on." He conceded that the international banks will have to increase their capital next year in order also to be able to increase the level of loans to countries that accept the Eurodollar. "If there are no restrictions on the Eurodollar things will be much simpler, though," he added, "and if there are restrictions it will complicate things."

Just as he had done at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Delfim refused to say with whom he had talked on his 10-day trip to the United States and Europe. "I can only tell you," he said, "that I didn't go there to talk with bankers but to talk with some friends to find out just what's going on in the world financial market and get a picture of it that is closer to reality."

"What kind of picture is that?" a reporter asked, and got this response from the minister: "Only if you make a trip such as mine will you be able to find out." Delfim apologized to the newsmen for not being able to make any startling disclosures concerning Brazil's position with respect to the recycling of petrodollars or the prospects for interest rates. He said that if everyone knew what the Brazilian Government was thinking its representatives would go to the negotiating table without any bargaining power at all.

The silence of the minister of planning also extended to the controversial question as to whether Brazil should or should not turn to the International Monetary Fund. According to Delfim one must make a clear distinction between two different things: on the one hand there is the financing in the form of the grants customarily supplied by the IMF, which are of no interest to Brazil both because of the imposition of economic regulations they entail and the small sums involved; and on the other hand, he said, if the IMF is actually selected as the entity to recycle the petrodollars, "we shall have recourse to the entity that was created for this purpose, but we shall do so not as the nation of Brazil but rather as a part of the overall world problem." It is a question, he believes, of two different situations: in the first case, the IMF is involved with "standby" credits, and in the second, with the policy of recycling the IMF's petrodollars.

Delfim said there was no point in arguing as to which is the best or the worst form of recycling, nor even as to whether Brazil is for or against it, because among other things the financial system has shown signs of being able to initiate the recycling.

When a reporter asked whether Brazil would accept petrodollars recycled by the IMF if they came in the form of grants, Delfim good-humoredly declared: "There's no point in arguing on the basis of an 'if.' Of course," he said, "if Marilyn Monroe were alive we'd hire her as secretary. There's so much 'if' in this business that there's no way to respond to this question. Remember what happened early this year?" he asked, and then answered his own question: "They said Brazil wouldn't pay, and now everything (the foreign debt) is being paid: everything's in order, everything's going forward."

The minister of planning does not believe the IMF is exerting pressure to destabilize the economy, because, he says, "today's IMF does not have a recessive policy such as the one it had in the past. This isn't the problem that is posed today; rather, it is the fact that only by creating a new mechanism will there be any possibility of assisting in the recycling process."

Delfim complained of the confusion that is being caused by the two different situations into which the IMF could be propelled, pointing out that "two different things are being called by the same name." He cited "the case of the fellow who was imprisoned in a cave and whose name was 'Nobody.' When someone asked, 'Who's imprisoned in there?' the fellow replied, 'Nobody.'

Inflation

The minister of planning insisted that there is no anxiety among international bankers about the high rates of inflation in Brazil, and voiced the conviction that in the last quarter the rates would drop back to their previous level. Delfim believes that what the government is doing in the area of fiscal policy, for example, "is far more than anyone could rightfully demand. We're headed for a magnificant surplus in the treasury," he said--a surplus which he predicted would be between 80 billion and 90 billion cruzeiros at year's end.

When a reporter commented that this excess of tax collections has been inflationary because it was generated by an increase in the tax burden, Delfim replied that "over the short term every measure taken to combat inflation causes inflation." In his view the "important thing is that the surplus will have the effect of reducing the excessive demand, and this will enable us to increase our financing without creating an imbalance in the money supply." The minister does not believe that the interest rate being charged in the domestic market is around 90 percent. He insisted that "such a rate isn't being charged even in the smallest segment of the market. In fact," he added, "the greater part of the credit in this country is indexed."

In response to the comment that inflation remains at the 100 percent level despite the fact that the greater part of credit is indexed and the basic money supply, monetary base, and expansion of credit to the private sector are under control--as well as the prices for industrial and agricultural products--Delfim said that "no such narrow, linear, very short-term relationship exists between the money supply and prices. If you use a slightly longer term, however, you will see that prices ultimately converge toward the rate of increase in the money supply, which is now around 70 percent for the period of the past 12 months. Prices will also converge toward this rate, but only slowly: it takes about 12 months, I don't know exactly how long."

Petroleum

Delfim said that utilization of $1 billion worth of the petroleum reserves will not bring the stocks to a level that would be cause for concern, because--he explained--there is plenty of petroleum. He believes that after utilization of the reserves has begun, imports for the remainder of the year could be around 600,000 barrels per day. "Since we have contracts," he continued, "there is a time lag between the decision and the actual importation, but we shall consume perhaps $1 billion in petroleum reserves."

When a reporter commented that this utilization of reserves might be inadvisable in view of the rapid deterioration of relations between Iraq and Iran, Delfim emphasized that "if war comes, instead of consuming $1 billion of the reserves we'll be increasing the reserves. Instead of a trade deficit of $2.5 billion," he said, "we shall then have one of $4 billion: this I do know. The government is of course following the situation closely, but in the event of a generalized war between the two countries there is obviously nothing we can do. We're not the U.N., and we have no troops there," he added.

As for the balance of payments, the minister predicted that the deficit in current transactions this year is expected to be approximately $11 billion, with service on the debt accounting for between $6.2 billion and $6.3 billion. No major changes are expected for 1981.

Call for Oil Conservation

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 26 Sep 80 p 24

[Text] Minister of Planning Delfim Netto declared yesterday in Sao Paulo that Brazil has always been careful to maintain adequate stocks of petroleum, in the belief that a crisis such as the one now in progress could cause real damage to the Brazilian economy. The present stocks are quite substantial and will possibly be sufficient to cope with this conflict," he added.

"The fact that we have substantial stocks, however, does not mean we can continue consuming at the present level," the minister said. "Indeed, Brazilian society must become aware of the fact that this is a serious moment and that everyone must economize on petroleum to the greatest extent possible. We can transform these stocks--which in fact constitute a 110 to 120 days' supply--into reserves sufficient for many more days than that. Without this conservation we shall truly be dissipating a most precious patrimony that was created by the labor of all Brazilians. I believe it should not be necessary to raise domestic prices in order to show people that they must economize on gasoline, oil and other products. This is basic," he said, "if we are to be able to continue living in the relative tranquility we enjoy at present."

Delfim acknowledged that at the very least--in the event of a war between Iran and Iraq--there would be an increase in petroleum prices on the world market and also a reformulation of the plans studied to date for recycling the petrodollars--the principal item on the agenda of the next meeting of the IMF.

"I believe it is very difficult to make any prediction today," Delfim Netto emphasized. "With regard to the construction of an international financial mechanism, it is essential to remember that what is being discussed at the present time is a new International Monetary Fund. The old IMF is dead, for all practical purposes, and we are building--or attempting to build--a new IMF. This effort is obviously being hampered to a considerable extent by the war. Moreover, this problem is intensified by the fact that even now the IMF has already been encountering difficulties in negotiating with the Arab oil producing countries. It isn't so easy to build up a fund of petrodollars in the IMF. In any event, Brazil--as a country which is continuously preoccupied with these problems and has a long tradition of international cooperation--is exerting its best efforts to enable the world to find a more efficient recycling mechanism than the one in existence today," he said.

Agriculture

The minister of planning gave assurances that there will be no lack of fuel for the growing and shipping of our agricultural crops, because--he said--the petroleum we have in reserve today is destined specifically to meet the requirements of this sector.

"The reduction in the supply of petroleum from Iraq will not be 400,000 barrels per day but possibly 300,000," Delfim said, "for the Iraqis are going to supply 100,000 barrels per day by oil pipeline through Syria." He went on to emphasize, however, that "this must not lead us to imagine we are in a comfortable situation that will enable us to consume the same amount we are consuming today. We must economize right now, and for the additional reason that oil prices are going to rise, which will impose even greater sacrifices with respect to the Brazilian balance of payments."

Meeting with Maluf

Delfim Netto's meeting with Governor Paulo Maluf at Bandeirantes Palace lasted an hour and a half. At its conclusion Delfim refused to talk to the various newsmen who were waiting for him in the message room and instead went directly down to the garage via the private elevator. Through Adebal Figueiredo, the governor's press aide, the minister sent word to the reporters that "it was only a courtesy visit" but did not disclose where he was going afterwards.

Delfim arrived around 1300 hours at Bandeirantes Palace, where he only allowed photographers and cameramen to enter the room for a few minutes in order that they might record the meeting, which had not been on the governor's agenda. The agenda had to be amended to include the luncheon with the minister.

10992
CSO: 3001

AGRICULTURAL WORKERS STRIKE FOR HIGHER WAGES IN PERNAMBUCO

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 26 Sep 80 p 27

[Text] Approximately 15,000 agricultural workers of the municipalities of Sao Lourenco da Mata and Paudalho (25 kilometers and 45 kilometers respectively northwest of Recife) went out on strike yesterday, paralyzing the work in the cane fields almost completely. The strike was declared by the agricultural unions of the two municipalities, who are fighting for better wages for their members.

No incidents occurred on the first day of the strike, which next Monday could be extended to 40 additional municipalities and affect the entire cane-growing region of Pernambuco State in the event of failure of the negotiations which have been taking place since day before yesterday between employees and employers under the coordination of the representative of the Ministry of Labor. As on the first day of the strike, there was no progress yesterday toward an agreement, and a new meeting was scheduled for today.

Although the leaders of the agricultural workers insisted that the strike was in compliance with all legal requirements, the employers declared it to be illegal and asked the TRT [Regional Labor Tribunal] to initiate "collective dissension" proceedings.

In Sao Lourenco da Mata and Paudalho a total of 54 "sugar mills" (as the sugarcane plantations are still called to this day, because they formerly produced sugar) are shut down. These agricultural properties are today limited to planting, growing and supplying cane for the sugar mill complexes. The strike is adversely affecting three of these complexes--the Tiuma, Nussurepe and Bulhoes mills--the last-named of which is located in Jaboatao Municipality but obtains much of the cane it uses from plantations in Sao Lourenco da Mata Municipality. The three mills, however, were operating all day yesterday inasmuch as they had previously stockpiled sufficient cane to avoid interruption of the grinding operations.

On the other hand, the presidents of five federations and 35 agricultural worker unions, meeting in Florianopolis, last night sent a telegram of solidarity to their colleagues in Pernambuco.

The negotiations had already been initiated more than a month ago when Minister of Labor Murillo Macedo sent his secretary of labor relations, Alencar Rossi, to Pernambuco to confer with the parties concerned. Alencar Rossi returned to Pernambuco day before yesterday with the intention of assisting in the negotiations. The cane field workers had meanwhile decided to call the strike before the expiration of the labor agreement currently in force.

Minister Murillo Macedo announced yesterday that he had already instituted "dissension" proceedings and that Alencar Rossi will return to Brasilia, inasmuch as the ministry's directive with respect to strikes is already well established, namely: "Strikes are nonnegotiable."

10992
CSO: 3001

FOREIGN MINISTER CRITICIZED FOR 'EXALTING' THIRD WORLD

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 24 Sep 80 p 3

[Editorial: "A Unilateral Vision of Reality"]

[Text] The tradition whereby ever since 1945 Brazil has opened the General Assembly of the United Nations obliges Brazilian ministers of foreign affairs to make their speeches more a "profession of faith" than an analysis of the world situation and the position which Brazil has assumed vis-a-vis that situation. Only on this basis can one understand why Foreign Minister Saraiva Guerreiro--speaking day before yesterday in New York--made no reference to the conflict between Iran and Iraq and chose to give his discourse the character of a denunciation of the entire industrialized world and an exaltation of the "Third World," into which Brazil has definitively been incorporated.

Because it was a speech in which rhetoric predominated over realism, it is understandable that the Brazilian foreign minister's analysis of the world economy would be slanted. One cannot understand, however, why rhetoric led him to minimize the importance of petroleum in the context of the world economic crisis, as if only the industrialized countries or the capitalist system were responsible for the rise in prices recorded in the world economy since 1973 and as if the OPEC countries were the innocent victims of the North's mania for domination over the South. In this connection Foreign Minister Saraiva Guerreiro is unwittingly supplying ammunition to those who have taken a stand in opposition to the economic policy of the Figueiredo administration; for if it is indeed true that petroleum has not become ridiculously expensive but rather that it was ridiculously cheap before 1973, then petroleum could not have--either on Brazilian inflation or on the Brazilian trade balance--the impact that the president and the minister of planning ascribe to it.

The adoption of erroneous positions of this type--which are at bottom half truths designed to conceal the intrinsic reality of the situation--usually occurs when an attempt is being made to give the world community the impression that the "Third World" is a cohesive bloc confronting an industrialized North which is exploiting it uniformly and methodically. Foreign Minister Saraiva Guerreiro is undoubtedly correct when he attempts to classify the problem of the energy crisis among those problems which require global solutions even though--in his opinion--they are a function of North-South understanding. Although he did not say so, he could have illustrated his thesis by citing the lack of efficiency with which the U.S. Government, for example, is dealing with the problem, in that through its heavy consumption it is allowing the radical leaders of OPEC to blame the industrialized countries for the future scarcity of petroleum and consequent current rise in petroleum prices. What has perhaps not occurred to the foreign minister is that by making North-South relations the "alpha and omega" of relations among nations he is muddying the waters and leading observers to believe that Brazilian diplomacy is out of touch with reality when it equates--as if they were closely related--the expenditures of the superpowers on their nuclear arsenals with the overall foreign debt of the developing countries of the socialist bloc, and so forth.

The North-South problem is a serious problem (and we feel it distinctly in our trade-and-services balance with many of the industrialized countries, that is to say the Western countries of the North), but it will not be solved by rhetorically proclaiming the impact of the "Third World" on international political decisions, as if that "world" were capable of presenting a united front. The possibility does exist, to be sure, for the "Third World" to form a united front against the industrialized countries in North-South negotiations; but in the practice of relations among nations the "Third World" is so divided and obeys so many imperatives--and some countries suffer such unseemly exploitation by others (witness OPEC's relationship with the "Third World")--that one cannot hope it will be able as a bloc to have an influence on the decisions of the "great powers," not to mention the "superpowers," be they nuclear powers or oil powers.

The Brazilian foreign minister demands participation for the countries of the "Third World." Would the governments of these nations, however, be disposed to assume--in this disturbed world--the responsibilities inherent in the decision-making power they demand? Or to sacrifice, in the sphere of armaments industries--what they want the North to do for them with respect to their own armed establishments? Brazil--whether the Foreign Ministry likes it or not--has interests today that do not permit it to employ the rhetoric that is so dear to the galleries.

10992
CSO: 3001

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE MADRIGAL DISCUSSES OPPONENTS, PROSPECTS

San Jose LA REPUBLICA in Spanish 1 Oct 80 p 9

[Interview with Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto, by Wilmer Murillo in the column "Political Wednesdays in the Republic"; date and place not given]

[Text] The electoral race in which the prize is the presidency of the republic has already begun in the Unity coalition.

And one of the men ready to take up the vanguard banner in the Unity is Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto.

Attorney Madrigal states that he proposes to promote profound changes in national life to contribute to the material and spiritual development of Costa Ricans. To decide among various alternatives. To choose the best. To make choices freeing the country from the ominous perplexity which it is experiencing. He says he feels he is the right man to unite the country, which is the main thing. Now as always he feels the need to take up the challenge, says Madrigal, whose opinions are reflected below.

[Question] Do you believe you are the right politician to unify the coalition rapidly enough after the convention to defeat Liberation candidate Luis A. Monge?

[Answer] The important thing is not that I believe it, but what the people believe about me. And according to the statements I am receiving constantly from various groups of citizens, I believe I am in an adequate position to unite the country, which is what interests me. Costa Rica urgently requires a rebirth of confidence which can establish a national purpose through consensus. In these very difficult times only the firm will of Costa Rican citizens, concretely reflected in a political movement with a great mystique, can play the role which in other countries, unfortunately for them, is filled by the army. My intention is for us to overcome the crisis here and avoid all the reefs by means of a civic effort in which we dedicate ourselves to producing in all sectors in order to enrich the country spiritually and materially.

[Question] Why do you aspire to the presidency of the republic?

[Answer] I am a man who has taken up the challenge and faced difficult circumstances when I believed there was something to be done. When I judged it necessary to draft an organic plan to provide housing for people of limited resources, I and others of my friends sponsored the INVU [National Institute of Housing and City Planning] law until we got it passed. Later the same thing happened when I believed industry in Costa Rica needed to be developed. Then when a true dialog pursued through the press was wanted, and so on. Costa Rica has vast problems facing it, and as I have already told you on other occasions, I was born here and have had deep spiritual satisfaction. I completed my education and have advanced in my work. Therefore I believe I can make my contribution to the country if it can be useful. I believe that all Costa Ricans, each in his own position, should struggle to fulfill their duty to overcome all the difficulties confronting the country.

[Question] Who do you regard as your main adversary in the struggle among factions?

[Answer] Any one of them. They all say they will win.

[Question] It is said that currently Calderon Fournier controls the assembly of the PUP [People's Union Party] and the DC [Christian Democrats], in addition to his own party. Don't you believe these factors put you in a precarious situation?

[Answer] The control of these two assemblies by a third party or another potential candidate presents a problem in that he would thus win more votes on the resolutions in the leading bodies of these parties, but no more than that. However, this should be avoided in order to achieve a true balance within the coalition. The PUP should be returned to its legitimate representatives, or else a formula should be sought to convert it into the body originally planned to unite the wills of the other parties. But as it is it is an eminently neutral body. Moreover, individuals familiar with electoral matters believe that if the DC supports a faction, it should then surrender its right to an independent vote in the leading bodies of the coalition, because they have already, in exchange for the arrangement on deputies' seats and public posts reached with the Calderon faction, become a part of it. All of these factors should be discussed before we can feel that we can act within Unity with reciprocal and adequate guarantees.

[Question] What do you believe are the mechanisms which should be adopted to return the PUP to its original leaders?

[Answer] There is a legal aphorism which says that things are undone as they are done. It remains for the gentlemen in the political leadership of Unity to apply it.

[Question] Recently there has been talk of an electoral reform in the congress, presumably in exchange for the payment in cash of the political debt. Do you believe, first of all, that a merger is something negotiable? Secondly, do you believe that the argument that the payment of the debt by the state makes the parties independent and frees them from the clutches of the moneylenders is valid?

[Answer] In fact, the proposed amendment of Article 62 of the electoral code has been pending in the Legislative Assembly for a long time. Suddenly, under pressure from us to return the PUP, interest sprang up in some circles in creating the Unity party, in order to do which it was necessary to proceed with the reforms allowing the merger of the four parties. Through Don Jose Joaquin Trejos, who made a public statement, we have learned that Calderon told him some of his delegates had held private meetings with PLN [National Liberation Party] delegates to arrange payment of the political debt in advance in cash, in exchange for which the PLN would provide the votes necessary for the merger. The rest of us Unity deputies were not even informed of this matter. I thought this negotiation was unfortunate and I said so without hestitation. It does not seem natural that at a time when bank credit for producers is in short supply and in many cases is not extended out of fear that currency issues, as is logical, will increase inflation, one hundred and some million will be allocated in public credit, either by lowering the production categories or else by issuing currency. Either of these two things seems to me undesirable. It is true that state aid in covering certain of the costs of a political campaign can help a given party to free itself from the moneylenders who would exploit the need for money for the campaign. But I do not agree in advance payment, because it has lent itself to a series of immoral acts and improper negotiations to which I have consistently been opposed.

[Question] There is talk on all sides of the need for dialog in order to deal with the problems of the country. To what do you attribute the lack of capacity in the country to form groups with sufficient authority to discuss and deal with the crisis?

[Answer] I believe that the word dialog has been used lightly. What is needed is to work and to produce on the basis of a concrete and logical plan. A well-founded plan in which the country can place full confidence would give rise to the consensus which we have been seeking on ethereal and vague levels. Crisis is dealt with by means of an ordered plan, a complex of very fertile ideas rallying the national will and gaining the necessary strength to overcome it.

[Question] What are your ideas about what you would do in government if you win power?

[Answer] It would be necessary to give the government itself greater cohesion, to make an effort so clear that it is absolutely certain that there is not the slightest corruption. A great effort should be pursued to turn Costa Rica back toward the rural sector in order to achieve integral development of the farm zones, with industrial processing of many of their products. And in saying integral, I am not merely referring to the material aspects, but the educational and cultural aspects as well, in order to give our development a truly human content.

At the same time I believe we must undertake a great crusade for national education, strengthening all the good which has been done in the past and promoting the changes which are needed to ensure education in the rural sectors which will incorporate the people in their environment, which will teach them to live. And in general, we need a change in education to proceed with training adolescents and an effort in university education of a sort which seeks excellence in academic life. Finally, I believe that the country needs a little more order and discipline in order to achieve greater efficiency in the results and the efforts made. Above and beyond all this, uniting these purposes, there must be a firm and constant effort to awaken confidence and faith in the individual in order to resolve a moral crisis which is aggravating the economic and political problems and making their solution more difficult.

[Question] It has recently been stated that Calderon, despite his youth, is a man among those engaged in the struggle for the Unity nomination who has the most political experience. Do you believe that it is experience or the advantage of being the son of such an individual as Dr Calderon Guardia which has put him where he is?

[Answer] I do not want to voice any opinions now about the comrades competing in this struggle. I believe that it must be their fellow citizens who assess, reveal and point out the virtues and shortcomings of each one, their achievements and errors.

[Question] Are there great differences in the way you and the rest of the potential Unity candidates view things?

[Answer] Differences of opinion among individuals are a natural thing. It is very possible that each of us or at least a majority have various viewpoints on different problems.

[Question] Since the DC has given support to the Calderon faction, do you believe that an ideological alliance has been achieved which might possibly threaten the efforts to give unity a social Christian ideology, the basis for a single, ideological and permanent party?

[Answer] A philosophy need not necessarily be the monopoly of a group. Nothing prevents us from adopting aspects of Social Christian thinking and applying their principles to our problems. Therefore, to me the labels are not essential. In any case as I have already said, the alliance which developed between the DC and the Calderon faction is yet another alliance based on some deputies' seats, some possible posts in the public administration, and not the formation of an ideologically structured party.

[Question] Do you believe that being an independent deputy and as a result having been involved in few government affairs gives you an advantage over Calderon and engineer Mendez Mata, who were cabinet members and thus responsible for the errors which occurred in their respective ministries?

[Answer] The government, like any government, has had its successes and failures. As an independent deputy I have sought to recognize the successes and support them, and to report the errors and combat them. It is the people of Costa Rica who have placed their confidence in me to whom I must answer for my conduct.

[Question] What makes you believe you will win at the convention?

[Answer] The overwhelming response of the people.

[Question] And what makes you believe you can win the election?

[Answer] The fact that I believe that I can unite the country. Costa Rica needs to feel united, so that we all have confidence in each other and can all work for a single purpose.

[Question] You are frequently criticized as being an aristocrat incapable of eating "anything" in humble homes and with the people. What would you say against these statements designed to leave an impression?

[Answer] They are absolutely false. I am not at all an aristocrat, and on the contrary, I get along very well with the peasants. I have had real bonds of friendship with them. Those who have accompanied me on my travels can testify to this.

5157
CSO: 3010

U.S. INTERNATIONAL LAW 'VIOLATIONS' DESCRIBED

Introduction to Study

Havana REVISTA CUBANA DE DERECHO in English Jan-Dec 78 pp 261-264

[Article by Professor Miguel A. D'Estefano Pisani]

[Text] This paper includes seven chapters and conclusions. As pointed out in chapter I about "Antecedents," a study of such nature must begin by the previous historical analysis of the cuban/north-american relationships, because of the violations have an historical sequence which corresponds with the cuban people struggle-development for its independence along more than a century and, the purposes that the United States always encouraged regarding Cuba. It's a matter of relationships distinguished by United States violations against the International Law of its epoch regarding Cuba, that the Cuban Revolution triumph intensifies, at the same time that we reached our really and definitive independence.

Then the following premises have been established: 1) the history of the United States positions regarding Cuba preceeds inclusive the north-american Union existance itself; 2) the relationships between the United States and Cuba were established on the base of three principles that have a north-american origin: the Monroe doctrine, the "manifested destiny" and the "mature fruit" policy. The United States pursued, regarding Cuba, foreign policy ruler: the covet territories by United States must remain on the weakest hands while the United States cannot take them; that is, we must stay a Spanish colony while we don't pass to the United States hands by annexation, purchasing or Spain concession. The fact that Cuba was free and independent was a deep contradiction for then. The cuban people had a decadent enemy: Spain, and a growing enemy: the United States. Under the pseudo-republic and up to the revolutionary triumph, the first January 1959, we were still subjected to this enemy.

In Chapter II "The Aggressions," after explaining its concept the many forms that can be united from them are brought: political, ideological, economic and armed aggressions. The yankee imperialism policy against the revolutionary Cuba is nourished by aggressions' chain of any order, by any mean and under any pretext as for the United States, which this paper systematizes.

The political aggression has been carried out through the most different and insolent ways of intervention in the Cuban internal affairs, the transformation of this country embassy in Cuba in a spying, conspiration and subversion center, in diplomatical oppression of any kind and, finally the diplomatical relationships' rupture with Cuba. The Cuban and North-American relationships' chronology from 1959 speaks by itself.

The ideological oppression is which is produced by means of refuge, hospitality and helping to war criminals, to deserters and contra-revolutionaries, trying to organize them and finance them in their activities against Cuba; the economic aggression is a chapter too extended to be collected in a little space, as revolutionary Cuba is an specially illustrative example of the unilateral, arbitrary and criminal measures of such aggressions made by United States; the military aggression is presented in many ways used by the United States against Cuba, by means of armed aggressions promotion and payment, by maritime and air space violations, by terrorism and piracy brutal-actions, the use of military bases and other installations in the United States and other countries accomplices of yankee villainy against Cuba, including the "quarantine," the Playa Giron invasion and the use of the Guantanamo naval base, under cuban soil, pulled out from our fatherland at the beginning of this century. Other aggressions forms are given, including the transnational enterprises activities, that whether they cannot exploit us from inside they attack us from outside. The Cuban answer is given so as to state its consequent principle-position.

Chapter II is referred to "the coercitive means" (that is an aggression too, but in the Cuban case it requires an apart and previous chapter). Then, the "reprisals" are focused, as an aggressive and infringer excuse used by the United States; the "quarantine" resolved against Cuba during the so-called 1962 "October crisis" which Fidel defined as "a war action in a peace epoch;" the claimed "legitimate defense;" the intervention manifested in each step of the United States, presided by an openly interventionist purpose; the Guantanamo naval base which joints to its coercitive presence the big quantity of violations that took place from this base; and the thesis of the United States "self security."

Chapter IV, titled "The OAS: procuress and guilty" is focused starting from the fact that the best way to follow the imperialism steps is following the traces of their accomplices and besides the OAS is the instrument that lets know the yankee imperialism steps in our Latinoamerican countries to understand what the masters and the lackeys can do, when the panamericanism made in USA is analyzed. Seven pretexts that shape the OAS behavior against Cuba from 1959 are given, that is: 1) the "anti-communism" principle-allegation; 2) the "incompatibility" thesis between marxism-leninism and the OAS; 3) the pretended Cuban actions that were qualified as "characteristics of aggression;" 4) the exclusion of Cuba from the OAS; 5) the rupture of diplomatical, consular and economic relationships on the Cuban part; 6) the interventionist contrarrevolutionary "exhortation;" 7) the "warning" to the revolutionary Cuba; the OAS behavior in the "October crisis" is analyzed.

The OAS principles and mechanisms are rudely violated giving to the United States the possibility of complicity, but even the more servile representants of the OAS cannot hide the fact that they are definitively in a crisis and are without future. The chapter is completed by a large chronology for the OAS servilism and for the Cuban answer.

Chapter V, "Simple International delinquency," states that the imperialism is not only the author of crimes and the violator of international principles and rules, but the author of many manifestations of simple international delinquency, in the pseudojuridical or antijuridical structure where it moves, which is it manifested in a direct way or through the organisms as the CIA and the other official agencies. It is analyzed how the yankee imperialism has dusted the piracy and terrorism in the Paleontology Museum of the International Penal Law, in order to use them as action methods against Cuba; and look the CIA as the international crime agency, by analyzing the crime committed against the civil cuban airplane made explode by the CIA and their accomplices in the air over the caribbean island of Barbadoes. In the other hand, the more vile transagressions against the life of the Commandant in Chief, comrade Fidel Castro.

Chapter VI considers "The principles" to deepen in the sovereignty with the chronology of violations committed by the United States; the peaceful coexistence, the independence, the selfdetermination and the fact of the cuban solidarity with the national liberation struggles; it studies the process of nationalizations made by the revolutionary Cuba, and then after developing the aspect referred to Cuba and its principles policy, the United States policies, without principles, is developed, which it is more concretely a policy against the principles.

Chapter VII titled "United States-Cuba relationships: conditions and principles," and takes the Cuban relationships with the other States, the "conditions" that the United States pretended to impose to Cuba in order to render normal relationship including the trying to be the Cuban "creditor" when it results obviously the debtor of our country, and the real criteria analysis to our relationships, by fixing that the United States policy without and against the principles has conduced it to supposing that Cuba will negotiate its principles. As Fidel observed, if the United States government be engaged in a blackmail and oppression policy "as the same way that we fought against five presidents of the United States we will fight against the sixth president of the United States." A chronology of the Cuban and the United States positions on the relationships between both countries is given.

The research concludes giving forty conclusions that include the yankee imperialism aggressions' disposition and overtaking and the yankee imperialism endless guilty record that could completely tire their attorney-generals and judges. That is the pages, humiliating and impotent at the same time, of the United States violations against the Revolutionary Cuba at the light of the International Public Law and is the cuban people heroic answer.

Conclusions Given

Havana REVISTA CUBANA DE DERECHO in Spanish Jan-Dec 78 pp 169-184

[Passages enclosed in slantlines printed in boldface]

[Text] VII. Conclusions

1. As our commander in chief, Comrade Fidel, said, /the history of these revolutionary years "is the history of Yankee imperialist acts against our country,/ of a people that has had to defend its achievements incessantly."

2. We live in a society of workers, and Marx and Engels already said /that it is the task of workers "to be admitted to the secrets of international politics."/

Lenin maintained that the problem of foreign policy and international relations "is a central issue."

3. Analysis of imperialist actions allows us to become familiar with them, judge them, denounce them and condemn them better; /learning how imperialists think and act in view of international law is also a way to help combat and defeat imperialism./

4. The actions commited by Yankee imperialism against Revolutionary Cuba are /a summary of what is a constant in imperialism,/ characterized by aggression, a lack of respect for any principles, and the systematic and flagrant violation of international law and practice. It is a good idea to analyze all this, moreover, because it allows us to learn how far imperialism goes, /but also to what extent it is possible that the firm resolve of a people will triumph,/ along with internationalist solidarity for their struggle.

5. The study of the United States' violations against our country, to a great extent, serves to measure the scope of the United States' violations in Latin America, and the degree to which imperialism has used the entire continent against Cuba. It also gives an indication of how these actions have been paid for in the form of plundering and scorn for Latin America. Thus, Cuba's attitude has resulted in our triumph and that of Latin America's future, because the history of U.S. relations with the people of Latin America is the history of all kinds of abuses against our people. /At every moment, in every situation, there has been a Yankee interpretation, and a wide range of pretexts to justify Yankee aggressions./ They have created what the Second Declaration of Havana calls "an apparatus of force, political pretexts and pseudolegal instruments. . ."

6. /Cuba has historically been the victim of U.S. influence on the destiny of our country./ "Cuba," asserted Marti, "should become independent from Spain and the United States," and he warned with striking perception that the main objective of the liberation revolution was "for Cuba's independence to put a timely end to U.S. expansion in the Antilles, and prevent the United States from gaining in force and taking over our lands in America."

7. Thus, this paper must necessarily look at the past, because as Comrade Fidel said on 10 October 1968 at La Demajagua, "/We would not even be able to understand Marxism, we would not even be able to call ourselves Marxists, if we did not begin by understanding the very process of our revolution,/ and the development process of the consciousness and revolutionary and politcal thought of our country for 100 years. If we do not understand that, we can know nothing of politics. And of course, we have remained lamentably ignorant of many historical facts for a long time. If those who entered into alliances here with the imperialists were interested in hiding the history of Cuba, eclipsing the heroism, extraordinary merit, ideas and example set by our heroes, those who really have an interest in revealing that history, in learning that history, in finding those roots, in revealing those truths, are we revolutionaries."

Furthermore, as Comrade Fidel said, "/. . . revolution is the fruit of 100 years of struggle,/ it is the result of the development of the political movement, of a revolutionary consciousness, armed with the most modern political thought, armed with the most modern and scientific concept of society, history and economics: Marxist-Leninism. This weapon has completed the legacy, the arsenal of our revolution and the history of our country." And that idea is confirmed with the additional idea "of the nation that has existed since it came to life amid the blood of those who rose up here on 10 October 1868, the nation that was founded on that tradition, the nation that began its ascent and its awareness, that had the good fortune to have such extraordinary men as thinkers and combatants. And no one here today can say that we have seen the last of them. Now we are no longer just the nation that abolished slavery 100 years ago; /now we are no longer the last ones to abolish slavery, that is, man's ownership of man; now we are the first on this continent to have abolished the exploitation of man by man./"

In the report to the First Party Congress 7 years later, Fidel was to complete his thought, stating: "For that reason, if a revolution in 1868, to be considered a revolution, had to begin with the freeing of the slaves, in 1959 if a revolution wanted to be called by that name, it had the basic obligation to free the wealth monopolized by a minority that exploited it to its own benefit, to free society from the monopoly of wealth whereby a minority exploited man. What was the difference between a slave's shack in 1868 and a salaried worker's shack in 1958?"

8. To analyze the current aggressions by the United States against Revolutionary Cuba requires an analysis of past U.S. aggressions against Cuba, because there is a close relationship between the two situations. /The Cuban revolution did indeed provoke a sharp intensification of the aggressions,/ which are even more serious considering that in the past century many of these actions were not recognized under International Public Law as they are today.

9. That concept of our history, our people and their struggle, and of the development of international law, is very prevalent in the words spoken by Comrade Fidel on 1 May 1964: "Because the rights that this nation has won. . . are not a privilege that has been granted us; they are rights that were conquered by fighting. We did not win those rights in a lottery, nor by chance; they are the result of history, the result of the life of a nation. /And we know how to keep and defend the rights we have won./"

As stated in the preamble of our Socialist Constitution, we are "the heirs and successors of the creative effort and the traditions of combativeness, perseverence, heroism and sacrifice forged by our forefathers."

10. /The country which 100 long years ago refused to recognize the belligerance of those patriots of '68 who won independence with machetes in hand, is the same country which later recognized all the traitors and lackeys in our homeland, the same one which two decades ago broke off relations with Revolutionary Cuba./ During our wars of independence the United States ignored and persecuted our patriots and our governments at arms; that country always recognized the successive native lackeys in puppet Cuba, except for the nationalist-style government that lasted for 100 days in 1933-1934; later it broke off relations with liberated Cuba, while it hastened to recognize a counterrevolutionary "government" in exile.

11. On 30 August 1962 President Kennedy answered a question about the meaning of the Monroe Doctrine in light of the world situation and that of Cuba, by saying: "The Monroe Doctrine today means to me what it has meant since it was announced by Presidents Monroe and John Quincy Adams; that is, that we firmly oppose any intervention by a foreign power in the Western Hemisphere. For that reason we oppose what is happening in Cuba today; for that reason we have suspended trade with Cuba; and for that reason we are working with the Organization of American States and in other ways to isolate the communist threat in Cuba; for that reason we will continue fighting and devoting a great deal of our attention and efforts to this issue." /Obviously Kennedy's thoughts were hemmed in by geographic fatalism, manifest destiny and Monroism, which are now museum pieces in Latin American history./

12. /Imperialist soothsayers never predicted the glorious dawning of 1 January 1959./ On that day, we began to expose once and for all that imperialism, the treacherous Pan-Americanism, its ringleaders and its mechanisms.

13. /The littany of aggressions by the United States against Cuba goes on and on./ To be sure, paraphrasing Marx, we could say that the Yankee pharisaism exudes lies from its pores. Thus, by way of example, we recall that on 27 October 1959 a State Department communique from Washington said that "the Cuban Government can rest assured that the United States Government will continue to investigate with diligence, taking all measures allowed by law;" referring to the air piracy against our country, and specifically that day, the Cuban accusation that the deserter Diaz Lanz had bombed Havana from the north. The note from the United States added, "At the same time, the United States Government cannot but indignantly reject any inference that the United States Government, authorities or people have supported or permitted illegal activities against the Cuban Government." But the "indignation" of the State Department stemmed not from the "inference," but from irrefutable proof of its misdeeds; in the case in question, the deserter himself publicly acknowledged in the United States that the planes used in the action were based in Florida.

The aggression has taken another form, in that not only has it been practiced by the federal government and congress of that country, as well as judicial and mere state officials, but we have also been victimized by sheriffs such as those that appeared in the movie Westerns.

14. /The United States not only has committed all kinds of violations against Cuba, but has had the audacity to accuse Cuba of having been an accomplice./ Thus, on 5 July 1960 the United States Government declared that "the intervention in and appropriation of these refineries (referring to those which were taken over by the Cuban Government for refusing to process Soviet oil imported by our country) constitute one more proof and confirmation of the execution of an inexorable plan of /economic aggression by the Cuban Government,/ designed to destroy the traditional commercial relations and investments between Cuba and the real world." Thanks to Yankee magic, Cuba became the economic aggressor; the victimizer, not the victim; and a few months later Adlai Stevenson, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, said that the blockade against Cuba was a self-defense measure, and that the United States "had done nothing in its relations with Cuba but /react to Cuban aggression./"

15. /The United States broke the record for coercive measures in Cuba./ One does not have to go very far to find Yankee coercion on our very soil: /The USA liberators/ soon established the Guantanamo naval base, against the will of our people. They forced it upon us with illegal and null agreements, to turn it into a nest of conspiracy, subversion, espionage and aggression. Add to that the repeated violation of our sea and air sovereignty and piracy in its most medieval forms. The quarantine of October 1962 is one of the most shameless and piratical coercive acts ever committed against a sovereign nation in the history of international relations.

Those who have never accepted a precise definition of aggression in international law made assertions about our aggression; those who have never accepted a formulation of international security talk of "their security" as a pretext to threaten our country.

16. /The United States combined its own villainy with the complicity of its "Pan-American" marionettes, who danced on the puppet strings of the OAS;/ but in addition, to plot the vain attempt to show that Cuba was "a serious threat to Latin America," and that Washington was not reacting out of fear for the United States, but out of fear for Latin America, as evidence of the worst kind of paternalism. The Cuban Revolution has played the part of victim of all the violations of International Public Law in the name of hemispheric peace and security, perpetrated by the United States throughout the continent.

17. /Latin American countries have never accepted the "Monroe Doctrine,"/ if only because it is neither a doctrine nor the product of Monroe; internationally, it is not just a unilateral declaration by the United States, formulated at a given moment and interpreted always in accordance with what that country perceived to be its interests. Thus, nearly a century after its birth then President Woodrow Wilson stated that it was a United States declaration that "if certain things happen, the United States will do certain things. . ." In 1923 Secretary of State Hughes stated that the United States "reserves the right to define, interpret and apply it."

But on 14 July 1960 President Eisenhower maintained the validity of the Monroe Doctrine in the case of the Soviet declaration of support for the Cuban people, warning that "today this doctrine is upheld by the Pan-American security system contained in the Charter of the Organization of American States and the Rio de Janeiro Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance." Then the successive illegal assemblies of the OAS were held; thus the Eighth Consultation Meeting was held, alleging the existence of threats to peace and the independence of the American states, but there was no indication of what events justified the fear. An agenda was cooked up in which there was no aggression, aggressor or victim; there, what was not a crime and was not considered as such was condemned. Cuba was not even present. However, /what was considered to be a crime was exempt from punishment; this crime was committed repeatedly, and is specifically condemned by international law: Yankee imperialist aggression./

18. This and much more has been perpetrated by the United States and its lackeys. For our part, as Comrade Fidel has said, "/our people have the pride and satisfaction of having played our role, having fulfilled our duty in the face of imperialism;/ we can take satisfaction and pride in the fact that we fought not only for our destiny, but also to prevent other Latin American peoples from having to endure the circumstances that we had to undergo." In August 1974, he said before the Federation of Cuban Women: "In view of the imperialist crime and humiliation, the only response is a valiant gesture. That is what historians will write in the future: What governments were brave enough to make a valiant gesture at that time?"

19. The failure of the United States and its lackeys would come eventually. Revolutionary Cuba would develop and progress increasingly; and /they began to talk of restoring relations and "ending sanctions against Cuba."/ In that regard, Comrade Fidel said, "/Sanctions against whom? Who is really being sanctioned? Who should be sanctioned?/ The Yankee imperialists and the puppet governments that were accomplices in the aggressions against Cuba!" And Fidel added, "Morally and historically, the only ones to be sanctioned are they! And of course we cannot--nor can anyone--lift those moral and historic sanctions against imperialism and its henchmen."

20. /The Yankee violators did not hesitate to travel the road of mere common crime on the international level,/ by means and resources that are all too well known; there is the CIA with its interminable, macabre index card file of crime. It is true that its agents, its confidential informers, its clients, its "operatives," its brothels, its centers of "study," its courses for terrorists and its casinos have failed to bring down the Cuban Revolution, although they have brought grief and pain to our people.

21. /The endless rap sheet of Yankee imperialism would tax the patience even of their own prosecutors and judges;/ in this voluminous file we can find plots against our leaders, skyjackings, or the seizure of Cuban fishing boats. In May 1976 Comrade Fidel said, on the occasion of the kidnapping of a group of Cuban fishermen: "And if the problem of skyjacking was solved in the world, it was not Yankee imperialism but the Cuban Revolution itself that adopted the necessary measures to put an end to a problem that was plaguing all of humanity. But our commitment is not eternal. If the Yankees think that Cuba should do its part while the counterrevolutionary 'gusanos,' directly or indirectly led by the CIA, are free to engage in acts of terrorism and can attack our fishing boats, as they have already done once, our commitment to fight against skyjacking will not last. That commitment will depend on what the United States Government does to prevent these crimes from being committed with impunity against our fishermen or against our diplomatic representatives."

Six months later the sabotage of the Cuban airliner in Barbados took place, and the Cuban response to that abominable crime by the CIA, that is by the United States, was in line with the dignity of our nation and our revolution.

22. /Revolutionary Cuba has maintained a consistent policy of principles, principles/ which it has not abandoned, violated or negotiated. "Our policy," Comrade Fidel has said, "is not a policy of aggression against anyone. Our policy is not a policy of intervention in the affairs of other nations. Of course, it is another thing for Cuba to set an example. It is another thing for Cuba to teach a lesson to other nations."

23. /Cuba's international policy of principles confronts imperialism, which does not comprehend what a policy of principles is; imperialism contains a deeply rooted contradiction with any principle./

The United States does not practice a policy of principles, with regard to Cuba or with regard to the principles Cuba stands for; the United States, in threatening Cuba, is violating international law; because Cuba is free, and also because Cuba adheres to the principles of international law for itself and other nations. The United States violates the United Nations Charter; Cuba obeys it. The United States has turned its back on history; Cuba is with history. It is not that the United States and Cuba are incompatible because we have different systems of government, but because we adhere to principles against which the United States consistently acts.

24. /Revolutionary Cuba has clearly stated its willingness to seek ways to resolve its differences with the United States, but the United States has acted outside of and above international law,/ the United Nations Charter and its bilateral obligations, resorting to the use of threats or force as a means to resolve its differences, and assuming an arbitrary and illegal policy of all kinds of violations. Given that policy, as Fidel said on 1 May 1964, "no theory, no doctrine, no revolutionary principle obliges us to put up with that."

25. Concerning relations between Cuba and the United States, Cuba has urged them when the United States could erroneously believe that the revolution was undergoing unsurmountable difficulties, created by that country's aggression; now Cuba is still willing to negotiate, and the United States cannot have the slightest doubt of the strength of our revolution. /Before they did not want to negotiate with Cuba because they thought they could crush us; now they think they can negotiate with Cuba from imperialist positions./ They were wrong then; now they are wrong again.

26. The United States violated international law when it did not recognize us during our quest for independence and later when it broke off relations with Revolutionary Cuba; afterwards, when it tried to impose conditions for not assaulting us, and now when it is trying to impose conditions for restoring the relations it discontinued, it is still violating the law. The fact that the United States is trying to subject the restoration of relations to illegal conditions is evidence of a serious violation of international law, especially considering that the rupture of ties with our country was totally lacking in juridical validity.

/They also violated international law when they resorted to force and crime, and are doing so now through pharisaism and neo-Monroism. They have forgotten that that is a thing of the past./

27. /The issue of the restoration of ties is linked to that of the settling of accounts for the actions for which both parties are responsible./

In the United States there has been pressure to include among "the conditions" Revolutionary must meet in order to resume relations, the matter of indemnization for the alleged losses suffered and the supposed claims to be stipulated.

Although any nation has the right to rescue its wealth and resources and to nationalize, elements which have already been analyzed and developed within the strictest framework of international law, without ignoring the principles upon which these rights are based, in the United States electronic computer systems have been put to work to total the compensation "which we owe," in pesos and centavos. Some details are overlooked, such as: 1) our inalienable right to act in accordance with and adapt ourselves to what has been recognized by international law, such as the recovery of resources as an effective weapon for defending sovereignty and the existence and development of nations, and the promotion of the struggle against foreign occupation, exploitation and aggression; 2) the recognition that "nations have the right to the restitution of a complete compensation for the exploitation, depletion and damages caused to their natural resources and other wealth, in accordance with the principles of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and the Declaration of Dakar," as established in the declaration of the Fifth Conference of Non-Aligned Countries held in Colombo in August 1976; 3) the fact that in any negotiation between our states, consideration must be given to the following substantial deductions: a) the damages inflicted upon us by the various aggression policies practiced against Cuba; b) the economic blockade that has been carried out for decades in the most arbitrary, brutal and strict manner; c) the enormous profits reaped for more than a half century of puppet regimes controlled by American enterprises, including the mockery of internal legislation, extorsion and the socio-economic conditions that such actions led to among the Cuban people; d) the damages resulting from the sabotage and piracy committed by the counterrevolutionaries against the people and property of our country, whose financing, organization and execution were admittedly contributed to by the United States; and e) the measures to freeze Cuban assets in dollars that were deposited in U.S. banks, and the embargoed properties, stocks and real estate.

/The American computers should be ready to convert what they assume is an "asset" into a "liability."/

28. /Only by starting from the premise of what Comrade Fidel has called "realistic and objective criteria which we can discuss, negotiate, and bargain, and we can have diplomatic relations between the United States and us," can we make any progress along that path./ As Comrade Fidel indicated to the People's Government National Assembly on 24 December 1977, "We are willing to negotiate, we repeat, but we stress here, in our Congress, in front of the entire Cuban nation, that official negotiations cannot take place until the United States Government has rectified fundamentally the blockade policy. It is not a question of counting the steps that each side should take. If measures were to be used, the other side would still have a long way to go before approaching what international justice demands. /It is a question of negotiating on an equal footing, and we have already said that for us the blockade is a knife in the back,/ and we will never accept such a negotiating position."

29. /The United States was neither stingy nor remiss in giving us revolutionary lessons,/ as clearly demonstrated in numerous notes and declarations by its highest officials. They repeated that we had "betrayed the Cuban revolution." On 8 April 1960 President Eisenhower, in a letter answering a group of Chilean students, for the first time expressed the idea of "the betrayal of the revolutionary ideals by the Cuban Government;" and in the "White Book" published by the State Department on 3 April 1961, Cuba is accused of having betrayed "its own revolution" through our leaders. It added: "We request once more that the Castro regime break off its ties with the international communist movement, that it return to the original purposes that led so many brave men to the Sierra Maestra, and that it restore the integrity of the Cuban Revolution. If it does not heed this call, we are certain that the Cuban people, with their passion for liberty, will continue struggling for a free Cuba." That was 2 weeks before the aggression at Playa Giron. The United States had only to become the official interpreter of the Cuban Revolution and take it upon itself to tell us what that revolution's ideals were. It would appear that we were enacting the plot of a science fiction best seller; but no, the United States took the liberty of giving us official lessons in revolution.

30. No one would think of departing from the assumption that a state has no right or duty to defend its fundamental national rights. Cuba, to defend its rights and to denounce Yankee imperialist violations, has resorted to all legal means; it has appealed to world opinion and international organizations; as Fidel said, "Our people responded overwhelmingly to every aggression by imperialism."

Soon afterwards another circumstance arose, in that the counterrevolutionary groups from Cuba undertook to threaten, slander and engage in terrorist acts against aircraft, buildings and other Venezuelan property in the United States, of course with the acquiescence--at least-- of the CIA.

In this manner, in the analysis of the many violations committed by the United States against Cuba, we must consider how the interests of other states are often affected.

35. /Not all is "positive" for imperialism as a result of the violations and international crimes against our country. The crimes and the criminals, as actions and people that were organized, paid and directed, have turned against that country./ The professional criminals and subversives, whom Comrade Fidel has called "the most outstanding students of the CIA," have turned into a boomerang that is now turning against them.

In fact, as Comrade Fidel observed, "The CIA showed them how to handle explosives, the CIA showed them how to use the tools of death; and now even the CIA and the United States police forces are sometimes unable to control them." It is true, reasons Fidel, "that the counterrevolution has performed misdeeds abroad against our diplomatic representatives, but the crimes committed within the United States amount to more than is being done outside the United States at this time."

Fidel has turned to the question of air piracy, stating: "We recall, for example, when the imperialists invented skyjacking against Cuba. The first planes in the world to be hijacked were Cuban airliners. Amid applause and great praise, the hijackers were recognized /in that hotbed of crime that is imperialist society,/ which began to produce its own skyjackers. Eventually, there came a time when up to two or three Yankee planes hijacked in a space of hours would land at the airport in Havana in one day." By the same token, piracy and terrorism turned against the United States, and Fidel said in that regard, "And there they have it: now the Cuban counterrevolutionary terrorists, whom they trained, want to run the United States, to bomb American businesses that have ties with Cuba or the airlines that want to fly to Cuba. /They are now biting the Yankee hand that fed them!"/

But the United States' blunders do not end even there. It is well known, and it has been proven and confessed by the executive and legislative branches of the government, that the CIA is operating on all continents, using everything from plastic explosives to brothels; the scandals have been notorious, and the list of CIA agents includes individuals from all walks of life, including monarchs, political leaders, philosophers and gangsters (on a part-time basis). There is no need to go into what this means. But /other "Western" countries have learned the lesson and have organized their own CIAs to operate. . . in the United States./ The most recent and famous case is that of the South Korean CIA, with its actions designed to corrupt (if more corruption is possible) American politicians to the benefit of the Seoul regime. There is delicious irony in the fact that the United States is being contaminated with the initiatives taken by the Yankee CIA itself.

36. A detailed analysis of what relations with the United States have meant and continue to mean throughout more than a century and a half (including the period of our independence wars, the puppet republic and now the Cuban Revolution), reveals very clearly our willingness to normalize those relations within the framework of equality and mutual respect. It also reveals that the United States must be convinced that /"Just as we have fought against five presidents of the United States," as Fidel said, "we will continue to struggle against the sixth one."/

37. One thing has been made perfectly clear, and that is that /our attitude is backed up by our own resolve/ because as Comrade Fidel has stated, "This would not be a worthy nation if when it decided to defend its dignity and sovereignty it did so comfortably backed up by the forces of other countries; when it is a question of defending our own sovereignty and dignity, we do not consider how much strength the enemy has and how much we have. The only thing we consider is that we have the duty to defend that right." In view of all the dangers and aggression caused by the imperialists, Cuba has responded by putting into effect the factors that Fidel has specified: "(Acting) with intelligence and bravery. Bravery will not be lacking in intelligence, but intelligence will not be lacking in bravery either." He warned: "If the imperialists believe that they can intimidate us with shameless blackmail, with an exhibition of force, we say to them that /all power has a limit, and that limit lies where there is no fear./ That is the limit of any power!" Years later, in his report to the First Party Congress, Comrade Fidel said: "The United States might use all possible means to crush the Cuban Revolution, but its action would have no result but to accelerate the revolutionary process. The actions of the imperialists and the revolutionary response were inextricably linked to the development of events."

38. Fidel gives us an impeccable accounting of revolutionary development and the failure of the Yankee aggression in his report to the First Congress: "For those who wonder how it is possible that Cuba, 90 miles away from the United States, has managed to avoid a devastating war such as the one suffered by Vietnam 20,000 kilometers away, the facts explain it perfectly well. In general terms, it is like this: In the liberation war, they thought it was a simple matter of internal problems, and that Batista's army, with the help of Yankee advisers, could put down the rebellion. Then they did not even suspect the revolutionary potential. When they tried to maneuver a replacement of Batista and head off a revolutionary triumph, thinking they had plenty of time, the brilliant offensive of the Rebel Army at the end of 1958 surprised them. By 1 January 1959 there was no longer a mercenary army in Cuba. The diplomatic offensive, political pressure and brutal economic aggression that came later also failed. Subversion, armed counterrevolutionary bands, the attack at Playa Giron; the crushing of the invasion without giving the OAS time to intervene, the liquidation of the armed bands, and finally, obvious intentions to invade Cuba, the October crisis and the commitment not to undertake a direct military attack against our homeland. /Each of the fundamental steps that were taken or attempted by the imperialists came too late, and in every case there was gross underestimation of the Cuban people, their ability to resist and their combative spirit./ In this way our people, always displaying their resolve and heroic strength, supported by international revolutionary solidarity, spared themselves dangers which would have cost the lives of millions of Cuban sons and uncalculable material destruction."

All this confirmed what Fidel said on one occasion: /"Once more the dialectic of history has been demonstrated; once more revolutionary events and realities have shown how each action by our enemies has contributed to creating in our people a certain virtue and strength. We must say that without the implacable and criminal blockade unleashed by the imperialists against us, we would not have the revolutionary spirit our people have today."/

39. /These are the shameful, and at the same time impotent, actions taken by the United States against Revolutionary Cuba in violation of International Public Law./ And this is the heroic response of our people. We must add recognition for those who have extended their hands and hearts to us. In his historic report to the First Party Congress, Comrade Fidel said: "Our debt of gratitude to the glorious Party of the Soviet Union and its heroic people shall live forever in our hearts."

"In the solidarity shown for Cuba, a country thousands of miles away from the USSR, the internationalist dreams of Marx, Engels and Lenin were realized, and the immortal October Revolution left an indelible mark on the destiny of this continent. There will be many changes in the future; there will even be a time when U.S. capitalism will disappear, but our feelings of friendship toward the people who helped us in these decisive and critical years, when we were threatened with famine and extermination, shall be eternal. To that must be added our recognition of the people who paved the way for socialist revolution, and at the cost of millions of lives, freed the world from the scourge of fascism."

When the possibility of normalized relations between the United States and Cuba became apparent, Fidel said on 24 December 1977: "In this life, particularly in this revolutionary life, the most important thing is to be clear. The United States Government should be absolutely aware that /no improvement in relations between Cuba and the United States will alter in the slightest the close ties that link our people and our revolution with the Soviet Union./ The United States Government cannot pull out later, alleging fraud; no strategy along those lines would succeed. This is not just any government that can be bought or sold."

40. One day our national hero, Jose Marti, spoke of the "necessary war" against Spanish colonialism in our country; another day, the Cuban people, guided by Fidel, fought the "necessary war" against neocolonialism and tyranny; later, for nearly two decades, the Cuban Revolution has fought the "necessary struggle" to maintain sovereignty, independence and progress in our nation, and to hold the revolutionary torch on high.

/Now we are at the moment of the "necessary accounting,"/ with the same resolve with which we carried on the "necessary war" against Spanish colonialism first, the "necessary war" against neocolonialism and tyranny later, and the "necessary struggle" by our homeland against imperialist aggression. /This paper, which fundamentally or intentionally is just a systematic effort to document the violations by the United States and the Cuban revolutionary responses, represents an attempt to carry out the "necessary accounting."

Havana, 5 February 1978
Year of the Eleventh Festival

8926
CSO: 3010

SOLAR ENERGY USED ON SPACE FLIGHT MISSION

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 4

[Article by Orlando Gomez: "'Caribe' Goes Into Outer Space To Use Solar Energy"]

[Text] On many occasions since the existence of this nation as a country, the University of Havana played a significant political, moral, etc., role, especially every time national dignity was insulted and when the rights of the people were denied by the bourgeois rulers in power at the particular time.

Now, on this exceptional occasion, when, for the first time, Cuba and a Cuban directly participate in a space flight together with the Soviet brothers, this event also constitutes a noteworthy moment in its institutional history in the service of human intelligence and progress as the University of Havana marks its bicentenary.

This center of higher learning in the capital provided this space flight with a group of valuable experiments whose executors are professors and technicians from its School of Physics and Mathematics. The investigations conducted by Cuban specialists in the most varied branches, for continuation or review under space conditions, is obvious proof of the technical knowledge achieved in Cuba and constitutes a demonstration of the fact that our investigators are employing strict scientific methods to solve complicated problems to the benefit of mankind.

The group of experiments, whose symbolic code name is "Caribe," was planned and carried out--and now supplemented during the orbital flight by the Soviet Union and Cuba--by the following team of specialists: Pedro Diaz Arencibia, candidate for the degree of doctor of sciences and experiment chief; masters of science Julio Vidal Larramendi, Ralph Romero Aromi, Elena Vigil Santos, and Octavio Calzadilla Amaya and technicians Francisco Sanchez Diaz and Carlos Arencibia del Risco.

"Caribe" Experiment Group

Research work was started in 1967 in the electronics of semiconductors at the old School of Physics of the University of Havana. These studies--some of which were the object of analysis during this space flight--continue to be conducted at the LIEES (Solid State Electronics Research Laboratory). This unit has provided very important material support for those experiments which Cuban physicists carried out.

The "Caribe" experiments are aimed at obtaining monocrystalline semiconductors (bodies with peculiar electrical conductivity) which, under conditions of cosmic weightlessness, scores of thousands of meters away from Earth, facilitate a precise determination of the parameters which characterize the process of crystallization (alloying) of those materials.

On Earth, this exact determination of the characteristics of monocrystalline semiconductors, such as Germanium (Ge), Gallium arsenide (Ga As), Gallium arsenide with aluminum (Ga Al As), zinc-indium-sulfur (Zn In2 S4) and others has not been possible due to the influence of the Earth's gravity on the process of union of their molecules so as to form more perfect crystals in those materials.

This is why it is hoped that the Cuban experiments in the field of solid-state physics [physics of solids], in this case, the procurement of new semiconductor materials for important use in technology, may contribute to a better knowledge of some alloys (combination of two or more metals) which, due to fusion in electrical furnaces, carried on board the spaceship, such as the SPLAV and CRISTAL, may be achieved there.

It is useful for the reader to know something about the basis of those materials and to consult with the experts in these various techniques; in this way it has been possible to obtain the best semiconductor lasers, electroluminiscent diodes, solar cells, light modulators, light converters, and other presently known optical-electronic devices.

To give the reader just one example--since we have for many years been investigating in Cuba the use of solar energy to produce electrical energy--the solar cells, using an alloy of aluminum-gallium-arsenic, are capable of converting up to 25 percent of incident light energy into electricity.

The percentage figure just mentioned is considerable if we compare it to its immediate follow-on device, the silicon cell which today has only managed to yield 18 percent. Just one square centimeter of solar cell, made of aluminum-gallium-arsenic, supplies 40 amperes of electrical current when it is properly illuminated by the sun.

Thus, some of our experiments are quite novel because according to information available to us, they are being conducted for the first time under the conditions of orbital flight. These alloys, put together in outer space, will permit Cuban and Soviet specialists, among other benefits, to compare optical, mechanical, electrical, and thermal properties of the materials investigated, both on Earth and in outer space. In this way, decisions will be made which will contribute to their practical utilization in the field of electronics and future optical electronics.

Conclusions

The current space experiments carried out by a joint Soviet-Cuban crew may look like utopia to many people. Just 10 years ago, it would have been impossible to imagine that Cuban scientists could also carry out their investigations in outer space, an achievement which until a few years ago could be found only in the world's industrially most developed countries.

However, thanks to the scientific-technical development which socialism has given the country, specifically the new generation of Cuban specialists and technicians, and thanks also to the solidarity of the brotherly Soviet Union, which is decisively facilitating Cuba's participation in the Intercosmos Program, it has been possible--without having to invest large sums of money so that the Cubans might participate in this transcendental space flight--to culminate some of the scientific aspirations of a people who will know how afterward to place all this knowledge in the service of other Latin American brother countries, such as the Soviets are doing for us today in an exemplary fashion.

5058
CSO: 3010

SPACE FLIGHT MISSION SEEN AS STIMULUS

Havana GRANMA in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 4

[Article by Joaquin Oramas: "The Space Flight of a Cuban, Child of the Working Class, Will Have To Be Expressed Through Greater Efforts in Production and Efficiency in All Sectors"]

> [Text] The workers at the Mario Reguera Gomez print shop express their joy because a copy of the edition of "La Historia me Absolvera" and the "Manifiesto de Montecristi," which they printed, were taken into outer space by the Cuban cosmonaut.

When the experienced printing worker Jose Angel Popa announced to his fellow workers at the Mario Reguera Gomez' establishment, in the City of Havana, that a copy of the special edition, containing "La Historia me Absolvera" and "Manifiesto de Montecristi" are included in the documentation which the Cuban cosmonaut Arnaldo Tamayo Mendez took into outer space, there was great jubilation in the print shop.

"We feel doubly honored by this edition, first of all, because it was distributed among the delegates to the First Party Congress and now because it is in the orbital station where Soviet cosmonauts and the Cuban Tamayo Mendez are working for the progress of humanity," said Gerardo Vazquez, team leader, who during those moving moments recalled the time when Maj Ernesto Che Guevara told them that the printing plants are the factories of revolutionary culture. "And our small contribution to revolutionary culture is in the hands of the cosmonauts during this historical flight," he added.

The edition, reduced to miniature size by the offset system, was made by a group of workers from Mario Reguera Gomez and the Jose Maceo printing establishment. All of them talked to us about the care that is being exercised in assuring the quality of the printing work. During its 15 years of existence, the workers at this print shop turned out more than 1,000 titles.

Hector Diago Fernandez, who operates the printing machine, pointed out that the honor they have just received will be a stimulus in redoubling their efforts in meeting the establishment's production plan with optimum quality which calls for a little more than 27 million printed sheets of paper. "I believe that the admiration and pride which we 10 million Cubans feel because of this joint Soviet-Cuban orbital flight will have to be expressed at all production and service centers through the achievement of greater quality in our work," page reviewer Fidel Caballero Cepero repeated.

"This will be our grain of salt which, from the Earth, will be united with the heroic sand from the Bay of Pigs that now flies through outer space in the hands of our cosmonaut, as a fighting symbol," he concluded.

5058
CSO: 3010

FIRST MEDICAL EXPERIMENTS IN SPACE FLIGHT SECTOR DESCRIBED

Havana JUVENTUD REBELDE in Spanish 21 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] I. Support Test

The support experiment was pursued by workers at the Morphology and Biomechanics Department of the Commander Manuel Fajardo Higher Physical Education Institute.

A special shoe was designed for this experiment. Its purpose is to prevent or diminish the changes which occur in the foot, and as a result those in other parts of the human system, under space-flight conditions.

Studies of the bone structure reveal the presence of an organizational common denominator which supports the whole skeletal structure in man and in vertebrate animals in general. The existence of balances between the compression and tension values as factors in perfecting the bones and ensuring the best relations between them (joints) has been demonstrated.

In a weightless state, these balances are altered and as a result the relations between the bones are altered, mineral values decrease and weaknesses in the locomotor complex are created, which cause losses of functional capacity during flight and afterward make readjustment to normal conditions of life and labor difficult.

There is a close link between the foot and the spinal column. Through successive experiments, experts have been able to design apparatus making it possible to obtain values in connection with the stability of the system, functional capacity and other indicators.

Goals of the Study

The support experiment seeks to maintain the individual characteristics of the system and the cupular mechanism which the foot has on land conditions, through the apparatus named Cupula Sand 501 (which has the form of a sandal) during space flight.

It is a question then of establishing a prophylaxis to offset the effect of weightlessness and to contribute to the rapid readaptation of the human system to the effects of the force of gravity.

Through meticulous studies data has been obtained which facilitates an understanding of the functional details for the individual and designing the prophylactic apparatus called the supinator.

The apparatus is designed for use 4 hours a day during flight. Finally, records will be kept to establish the efficiency of the apparatus and its effect on the readaptation of the individual to normal conditions of life and work after his flight in space will be evaluated.

During a first stage, experiments were carried out to establish its validity under hypokinetic conditions, which demonstrated the desirability of the study. These analyses were undertaken at the Medical-Biological Research Institute in the Soviet Union.

It is expected that readaptation to the normal conditions of gravitational force and bipedal and stable activity can be effected speedily.

The Apparatus

We can picture the Sand 501 as a sandal which has the characteristic of being equipped with springs located at basic support points on the foot, which are fitted to an elastic compensating support which maintains the structure of the foot.

These springs are located between the supports (or supinator, fitted to the entire surface of the foot) and the base of the sandal.

The springs are activated by regulated pressure applied to some air pockets located in the upper part of the sandal.

This apparatus was produced at the center for technical development of the production of IMDER [National Institute for Sports, Physical Education and Recreation] and carries the guarantee of the Batos trademark in Cuba. Technicians from the Commander Manuel Fejardo Physical Education Institute, the Ministry of Communications, the Ministry of Basic Industry and the shoe enterprise also participated in its production.

The total weight of a pair of Cupula Sand 501 sandals is 1,400 grams.

Dr Roberto Hernandez Corvo, Candidate of Sciences Bruno Vallin, engineer Conrado Martinez and auxiliary worker Enriqueta Fernandez carried out this experiment working with a large group of technicians employed in the design and manufacture of this special apparatus.

II. Hydromineral Balance

The conditions to which an astronaut is subjected during flight (weightlessness, hypodynamia, acceleration, great emotional stress and others) have an effect on the body in various ways and produce different effects, one of which may be a decrease in body weight, which can be attributed to the temporary loss of body components (water, fat and muscle).

The decrease in body weight (which varies with the individual) is a demonstrated phenomenon. For example, on the voyage of the spacecraft Voskhod 1 (first flight with several crew members--one of them a doctor) it was observed that the 3 individuals lost between 1.9 and 3.0 kilograms of weight and that in addition, they experienced little thirst during the flight and did not drink water.

Urine tests in the 3 days following their return to Earth showed a decrease in the sodium, potassium chloride and creatinine excreted, among other indicators.

During other flights and in simulated experiments on Earth, this matter has been the focus of attention and ever more profound study. For example, during the Soyuz 6, 7, 8 and 14 flights as well as the joint Soyuz-Apollo expedition, this question about the metabolism of water and minerals in which the kidneys play a significant role, as do various hormonal systems in the body, as well as the skin (through perspiration) and other body organs, and which is influenced by many other factors such as weather (temperature and humidity of the air and other variables) and physical activity, were analyzed with a view to accumulating as much data as possible in order to design the prophylactic apparatus most apt to increase the well-being of the crew members.

The First Moments of Flight

The loss of water, fat and minerals the body experiences in the early days of a flight in space is a response provided by the system to the hemodynamic changes occurring during the early days of flight, with the redistribution of the blood and its accumulation in the upper portions of the body at the expense of the lower members and the abdominal cavity.

The individual has a "heavy-headed" sensation, and nasal mucous congestion causing a sensation of difficulty in breathing.

The body puts its self-regulating mechanisms to work to adapt to the new situation, which brings about changes in the hydromineral metabolism. Polyuria (excessive urination) occurs and electrolytes such as sodium, potassium, calcium, magnesium and chlorine are also excreted in larger quantities.

After the flight the mechanism reverses: the astronaut tends to drink a great deal of water and urinates less liquid and few electrolytes to compensate for the change in the hydromineral balance caused by weightlessness.

Goals of the Experiment

Dr Antolin Villamandos Prieto, a specialist in the Medical-Military Scientific Research Department, and a group of his colleagues proposed this test to study the changes which occur in an individual coming from the tropics, in the event that a Cuban citizen might participate in this inter-space-program expedition.

The participation of an individual who has lived and grown up in a tropical country could show certain peculiar phenomena in the development of the metabolism of water and minerals.

The fact is that this Cuban astronaut will have had to undergo successive adaptations to various climates very different one from the other.

This native of Cuba, with its tropical, island and savanna climate (with relatively high temperature and humidity), has spent his flight training phase in temperate climate zones (Star City, near Moscow), and then, in the stage immediately prior to the flight, travels to a desert zone (with very high temperature and exceptionally low humidity). Then he makes the flight and finally returns to Cuba.

These premises were the basis for the proposed balance experiments with a view to establishing the modifications occurring in the hydromineral balance of an individual from the tropics, and using the results to plan the necessary prophylactic measures.

Mechanics of the Test

A study will be made of two astronauts, before and after flight, through measurement of water consumed and urine excreted, body weight and other blood and urine tests. To this end the most accurate and reliable methods currently in use (flicker photometry, atomic absorption spectrophotometry, and others) will be utilized. The Cuban astronaut will undergo tests again on his return to Cuba.

No special equipment is needed for this analysis, since the apparatus in normal clinical use will suffice. The data obtained from the specific studies made of the Cuban astronaut will allow comparison with those of the Soviet crew member and others established during earlier flights for citizens from European countries and Vietnam.

III. Blood Circulation

When a reclining person sits up to adopt an erect position, a volume of blood and other body fluids pass into the lower parts of the body. A change in the body has occurred due to the action of Earth's gravity and the capacity of the blood vessels to distend.

Various compensatory mechanisms come into operation to move the quantity of blood necessary to provide the volume essential to the brain, heart and other organs into the upper part of the body again.

Acceleration of the heart rate, along with the reduction in the size of some blood vessels and an increase in the rigidity of their walls, constitute the main compensatory responses.

If this fails to occur, there will be inadequate flow through the brain and heart. This would result in loss of consciousness. These mechanisms respond with the proper speed to adapt the body efficiently to the new situation, with the participation of nerve reflexes, particularly that of the baroreceptor.

In space flight, in the phase when the astronaut becomes weightless, a drastic change also occurs in the distribution of the blood volume in the various parts of the body. In this case, the blood accumulates in the upper part of the human body.

The face becomes suffused, the eyes redden and movements become less precise, among other effects.

Under these circumstances, the accumulation of an excessive volume of blood in the thorax overburdens the heart, which undergoes an increase in its dimensions and its mechanical work regime, and its rate alters.

It should be noted that this increase in cardiac labor in response to the overload of volume has adaptive significance and is not necessarily proportional to the physical activity in which the astronaut engages.

Under conditions on Earth, the heart normally does mechanical work dependent on and proportional to the intensity of the work being done by the individual. A part of the work the individual does (although we do not realize it) develops to overcome the force of gravity (climbing stairs, lifting weights). Paradoxically, under conditions in space, the heart undertakes new work due to the phenomenon of weightlessness.

As a whole, it can be said that during the first stage of flight various physiological mechanisms are profoundly altered, the astronaut does not feel well and his working capacity decreases noticeably.

The increase in the volume of blood in the thorax intensively activates various reflex mechanisms. Among the most important reflex responses are those which begin in the volume receptors located in the thorax, causing a decrease in the volume of the antidiuretic hormone released and put into circulation, causing an increase in the elimination of liquids through the urine, which involves a reduction in total blood volume. The mechanism described functions while the detection capacity of these receptors is retained.

This is one of the adaptive responses to the overload of blood volume to which the upper part of the body is subjected.

The antidiuretic hormone also plays an important role, exerting an effect on some nerve centers which contribute to the regulation of the circulation of the blood.

Simultaneous with the activation of these mechanisms mentioned, others which function very actively under Earth-gravity conditions, such as the baroreceptors, are depressed.

It should be noted that these adaptive mechanisms do not entirely compensate for the profound cardiodynamic changes caused by weightlessness during space flight of short duration.

The adaptation process takes about a week, which is the approximate duration of a short space flight. It is this type of flight in which a Cuban citizen will participate.

Taking into account the fact that a short flight is involved, a group of researchers at the Cardiology and Cardiovascular Surgery Institute of the Ministry of Public Health, headed by Drs Alberto Hernandez Canero, Jesus Morlans Paz and Anastasio Cabrera Santos, working with specialists from the Soviet Union, propose to make studies to obtain information about the characteristics of the circulatory adaptation of the astronaut during and after flight.

Goals of the Study

In this experiment, an effort is made to study the cardiorespiratory alterations during space flight and additionally to continue evaluation of the advantages of using a technique called negative pressure in the lower part of the body.

In this experiment an apparatus called a prophylactic vacuum suit is used. This suit, already used on flights of long duration, covers the lower part of the body, from the hips to the feet, and is characterized by the ability to create a vacuum, i.e. a negative pressure which can be regulated.

In creating the vacuum, the blood is drawn toward the lower part of the body and this partially reestablishes the blood distribution regime with characteristics similar to those existing under conditions on Earth.

The tests will be made on two astronauts before, during and after the flight. Electrocardiograms, rheocardiograms, vital capacity tests and others will be recorded, and the optimal time during which the suit, which was developed by experts in the Soviet Union, can be used will be measured.

It is hoped that the results may contribute to the establishment of response patterns for human beings under the conditions of weightlessness, and to a better understanding of the adaptive circulatory mechanisms brought into play. Similarly, data will be obtained on the best system for using the prophylactic vacuum suit during short space flights, and the possibility of increasing the work capacity of the astronauts on short flights beginning with the first phase of the space venture.

5157
CSO: 3010

PLANS, PROSPECTS OF STEEL ENTERPRISE DESCRIBED

Havana BOHEMIA in Spanish 5 Sep 80 pp 17-23

[Article by Raul Palazuelos]

[Excerpts] Five years have passed since I first met Vasquez. He was in Nicaro then: there was already talk of rehabilitation and the monstrous northeastern industrial complex was battling to become a center promoting the first congress of the party. That year it won honorable mention, and, I remember it well, fulfilled its production plan for the first time in 7 years. It was there I first met Juan P. Vasquez. He put all his cards on the table and gave me his confidence and assistance rarely encountered at that time, and he took me to the Nicaro airport when I returned to Havana.

Now I have met him again at the Jose Marti Metallurgical Enterprise (Antillana de Acero). He has not changed an iota. With his huge body and more than 6 feet of height, his ruddy skin and great hand made for work eagerly extended, he welcomed me and again laid out on the table in full view all of the cards corresponding to my pack of questions. The following day he gave me written figures, for greater reliability and "greater accuracy."

Industrialization

"The horse is before the cart," goes the refrain. In the social economy, the horses which pull socialist development are accelerated industrialization, of semi-heavy and heavy industry above all, from which the basic means of production must come in order for this goal of a society of a new type to become truly concrete, to grow and develop in its full potential.

A second agreement between the governments of Cuba and the Soviet Union expanded the planned production range for Antillana. Now it would be 350,000 tons. This was in the year 1963.

In 1980, the growing demand for corrugated steel bars or rods needed for social development makes a further expansion of the capacity of Antillana necessary. In this third stage, the enterprise will be capable of producing some 600,000 tons of steel. This stage, with an investment cost of approximately 135 million pesos (51 million more than the second stage) will make it possible to produce goods worth 79 million pesos.

But even in the second expansion stage a grey iron casting shop was commissioned, at an investment cost of 8.4 million pesos. It will be capable of producing 11,200 tons and goods worth some 7.7 million pesos annually. The plan for this workshop for 1980 calls for 11,100 tons of grey iron for pig iron molds and the masses making up the tandems in the various lamination shops, identified according to the caliber of the profiles they produce: 720, 300, 250 and 200 millimeters.

The Antillana production includes ordinary steel in ingots, steel billets, cast steel pieces ("bathtubs," or furnace loading boxes, with pig and scrap iron, steel mill rolls and other pieces); rolled steel shapes, plates and sheets; wire rods for construction and other uses; woven mesh; balls of 25 to 90 millimeters (used as shot in the mills) and rods 25 by 38 millimeters (same use in the cement plants); corrugated bars for reinforcing concrete from 3/8 to 1-3/8 inches. Cast steel products include billet molds (molds for steel billets); bathtubs (for loading the iron smelting furnaces); cinderboxes; shaped and round counterweights (similar elements in the channels through which the cast metal flows from the furnace); 6- and 12-rail flanges (plate mounted on railroad wheels onto which the cast steel goes and from which, by siphoning, it goes to the billet molds); and also, some other grey iron products are produced.

Along with grey iron casting, one of the most important second stage productive installations is the 220-meter rolling mill, which can produce 150,000 tons of wire rods, dowels no thicker than an ordinary pencil, much wanted for construction, particularly by the construction and prefabricated materials industry.

This stage includes productive items and auxiliary installations, storage and transportation facilities which will guarantee the full use of the productive aggregates, the planned repair of their equipment and machinery, and will facilitate the hauling and movement of raw and other materials and finished production. The project for execution is based on this. Later I will return to the subject of this second stage of the expansion, because not everything is the color of cast steel.

The third stage in the reconstruction and expansion of Antillana, as already noted, will enable the industry to produce some 600,000 tons of crude steel. In its technical plans for basic items, which are still being drafted, a steel mill with an electric furnace and a continuous casting machine (a technological modernization whereby production and productivity literally flow in a stream); a 350-millimeter tandem laminator for medium and light profiles; a stranding (or drawing) workshop, producing thicker or thinner steel wire for the manufacture of nails, brads, screws, nuts, cable and other products. The proposal also includes a production workshop for refractory materials, which currently have to be imported, mainly from the socialist area.

Earth-moving work for the auxiliary workshops and the other installations for this expansion complex is scheduled to begin in 1981, while the basic work for the 350-millimeter laminator will begin sometime during 1982.

The First Link: Educating Man

The metallurgical industry in Cuba, which is particularly new, requires the development of an awareness, of a particularly dedicated tradition of labor, sacrifice if you will. Man must see in each ingot, each rod, each profile and each plate the realization of his ideals, and the means of meeting his needs. I wonder how many times the old workers, and also the young steelworkers, will reflect with pride that in each construction project carried out by the revolution in these years, as in future years, the revival of the "dead work" is present and latent in it, retaining their creative energy, the heat of the Antillana furnaces, the Antillana rolling mills, the creative fire of Antillana in the form of corrugated rods or bars, or profiles, or plates.

But man must above all be educated. A discouraging example of man's lack of education is to be seen in the machine workshop at the enterprise. Its current capacity (despite any other problems resulting from the expansion) is being only 50 percent utilized. Are machines or supplies lacking? What is lacking is men, skilled personnel, courageous people determined to work the swing shift, which is understaffed, or in the afternoons, when major errors occur. I think that basic education work combining moral and material factors would yield substantial results.

The linking of wages with production norms has well and truly demonstrated its mobilizing importance. In the welding sector alone the norms have been overfulfilled to the incredible extent of 200 to 300 percent. Recently an adjustment was made making it possible to measure the productive capacity of the workers in this shop accurately. For we must not forget that a norm without real technical basis tends to demoralize the workers.

The "Good Guess" Norm

Antillana, a city once scattered which is today tending increasingly toward integration on the basis of the main body of its industry, covers several dozen hectares, so many that the workshop formerly known as United Steels is situated some 2-1/2 kilometers from the city of Antillana. Thus getting to the enterprise poses a technical problem if serious work is intended.

We toured the present scrap iron base, a singular "dog's lair" located near the steel mill, the machine workshops, the central laboratory of the enterprise, where the results of adjustments, maintenance and repair work falling short of the necessary rigor and affecting the accuracy of some tools for analysis and chemical and physical checking, can be seen. Speaking of chemistry and physics, this journalist was surprised at the low quality of the food served the enterprise personnel, at least in the dining room of the steel mill (utilized by people who work in an environment with high temperatures, where much energy is consumed). However, together with Comrade Eddy Miranda, of the DOR [Revolutionary Orientation Department] of the party leadership committee at the enterprise, we had an exquisite sherbet with optimal quality norms. One nutritional respite, at least.

Immediately upon reaching the 720-to-300-millimeter rolling press, we observed a vast production accumulation due to lack of removal facilities. A few steps farther on I saw a scale where the bundles of rods should be weighed which has been broken for as long as anyone can remember. Are they unaware that in this way they cannot keep to the kilogram weight scheduled for delivery, working sometimes against the economy of this enterprise and sometimes to the detriment of that of others?

Opposite the Martin-Siemens steel mill furnaces, I was moved as I watched the loading of the furnaces, the preparations for the fining.

Equipped with the maps which Vasquez himself had honestly made available to me, I asked worker Manuel Alfredo Perez, a quality control expert and steel trade union propaganda worker, who had just taken a temperature measurement, what the most acute problems were. He confirmed what I had heard before: the lack of thermocouples to measure temperature requires the casting foreman to use the "good guess" method for removing a batch, generally at several degrees above the optimal norm of 1620° Centigrade--if it does not fall below that. "We cannot take a risk and we go above the norm," Perez told me by way of explanation.

But this in turn, like everything in industry, has a whole chain of effects. The higher temperature affects the refractory material in the furnaces (which is generally affected in turn by humidity since it is not stored long enough, due to lack of storage space). As a result leaks and losses of tons of cast material occur. This in turn lowers the temperature of the furnaces and requires that more energy be consumed to maintain the needed temperature.

On the other hand, excess uncontrolled temperature has a corrosive effect on the billet molds once the cast steel is poured. Rogelio Estrada, a casting foreman who has been in the industry for 15 years, 13 of them in casting work, told me: "The basic problems with the billet molds are maintenance and the unregulated temperatures in smelting for lack of thermocouples." Each batch yields between 58 and 82 ingots weighing 1.8 tons.

According to the norms established for the enterprise, between 15 and 20 billet molds should be used every day, and each one should last through an average of 12 batches. The enterprise, which should be self-sufficient in this important labor means, has been suffering from a shortage of billet molds, despite the systematic recovery work. But now there is an abundance of this product, and the work of maintenance must be much more substantial and sustained. For some types of steel, this task requires cleaning and "lubrication" (in reality, an internal refractory coating) work with a view to making the exploitation, utilization and durability of the billet molds more efficient. If this is not done, we have one of the many violations of technological discipline which sometimes affect our industry.

There is another equally costly shortcoming in the chain. The new scrap iron base in the second expansion stage is expected to make compact billets of light scrap iron. This will speed up the loading of the furnaces and will in the final analysis mean a savings in time and energy expended. But the scrap iron still has to go into the furnaces "in bulk," sometimes in large pieces difficult to smelt, thus requiring greater expenditure of time on casting and, as a result, a greater use of fuel energy.

Among the multiple technological problems from which Arillana has suffered, various facets of quality control do not function smoothly. For example the soaking furnace for the ingots which are to be converted into steel billets, and the reheating of the steel billets themselves, by means of which they are shaped into bars, profiles, etc, has suffered from serious quality problems.

On the other hand, immersion thermocouples--delicate, disposable tools one of which is used for each measurement and must then necessarily be discarded, because it is destroyed, although the apparatus in the head of which it is installed is not, and can be reused indefinitely--have been totally unavailable for some time. Only with this exact measuring tool is it possible to establish exactly the temperature of the steel mass being smelted. It seems more than logical to presume that such a valuable tool as the thermocouple must urgently be a supply scrupulously planned so that never--or at least with minimal frequency--will it be unavailable at Antillana, because of its great importance to the quality of the steel, the lengthening of the useful life of the furnaces and the billet molds, as well as the rational use of fuel, etc.

Norms Again, Now in Figures

Thus far the explanation has been purely narrative. We have brought in some figures to see how the problem has been developing with regard to production norms.

With a 90 percent quality norm established, the figures have averaged 84.6 percent during the present 5-year period, plus the first quarter of 1980:

1976	=	74.8 percent
1977	=	87.8 percent
1978	=	87.6 percent
1979	=	87.1 percent
1980	=	85.9 percent (first quarter)

Now the Antillana enterprise is taking steps with the technical education of the technological personnel in view, with corrective measures in the most serious cases. However, there are other material and organizational factors which will also require greater attention. Some of these have already been partially analyzed in this work. For it does not suffice merely to hold systematic discussions--which may become interminable and irrelevant--about the difficulties, and for the quality control network to engage in exigent and active labor. There are material needs, in particular in production, which no ambitions or subjective measures can meet.

We found an example of the above, again in the percentage of defective production by the enterprise, reported as 1.0 percent, although it really averaged 1.1 percent for the first 4 years in the 5-year period. However, by a skillful mathematical conversion, this journalist was able to reduce it to 0.98 percent, adding in the 0.5 percent obtained in the first quarter of this year. But, I wonder, would this be valid, would it contribute to the great recovery effort undertaken by the steelworkers at Antillana?

Without seeking to extrapolate situations, and going to the other extreme of productive business, the statistical table at the end of this work makes it easy to establish that the economic norms have not been very successful at this enterprise either. This is in itself a still-unprofitable result, but I think it only fair to remind the reader that the main raw material used by Antillana, that is to say pig iron, must be imported entirely from the Soviet Union, at stable prices thanks to the favorable treaty the great country of Lenin has offered us. Other factors at Antillana apart from the cost of raw and other materials--such as the fact that it has absorbed various productive and service activities--have a not-always-favorable effect on the overall productivity of the enterprise and its potential for making a profit. This situation may be surpassed, with a reduction in these factors to the point that the enterprise becomes profitable.

To be even fairer, it should be noted that there has been an increase, sometimes unstable due to factors such as the skill of the labor force, its volume, etc., in the productivity per worker. Despite this, both wage costs per peso of production as well as the cost of production per se have been above the norm, which, in the final analysis, is the technical-economic plan for each year.

But one must take it as it comes, as the old refrain says. And Comrade Vasquez, the director of Antillana, is optimistic, despite the objective and subjective problems which still plague the enterprise.

"The situation of the enterprise is not good because we are not fulfilling the plan," Vasquez admits in all rigor, but he says firmly that "the prospects are good. The second stage of the investment process should be concluded this year (1980). In the supply sector, we see that practical and positive solutions which should continue to bring improvement are being drafted.

"We must also improve on the technical-organizational level of control, supervision and management. This involves some necessary transfers of cadres so that they can be used on the basis of their best potential. Also we must achieve better planning and better use of the technical apparatus of the enterprise, which thus far has revealed certain correctable weaknesses."

Besides Vasquez, Alberto Fumero, secretary general of the leadership committee of the PCC, was with us during this frank exchange of ideas and information. He confirmed what has been said above: "I agree with what the director says," he stated.

"The prospects are good," Fumero went on to say, "after a number of years of non-fulfillment of the plan. Already in the early months of this year there was better fulfillment in steel-making, laminating and other sectors."

Before leaving the extensive premises of the Jose Marti Metallurgical Enterprise (Antillana Steel) one of the many comrades with whom this journalist talked said to me, in a vein somewhere between jocosity and irony: "Although it may seem a paradox of black humor, perhaps the non-fulfillment of the plan was not so negative, for otherwise we do not know where we would have stored all the rods produced."

This is indeed black humor. The truly important thing is the new horizon which is slowly but steadily opening up for metallurgical development in the country. Antillana would be a more-than-convincing example here for any skeptic. There is in particular awareness in the enterprise leadership, which must absolutely grow from within in order to provide better aid, and perhaps to be able to make more convincing demands of those outside the establishment.

In particular, I think, it is not enough to view the metallurgical industry myopically. One must cast his eyes back and see what did exist, what there is now, and above all what there can be in the near and more distant future.

As our commander in chief, Fidel Castro, said in his central report to the first congress of the Communist Party of Cuba, "The metallurgical industry constitutes an indispensable base for industrialization. It must become capable of supplying the raw material for our mechanical industry, the pivot of the planned industrialization."

During the 5-year period which is about to end, Antillana Steel had to confront a truly intensive production plan: 1,633,000 tons of ordinary ingot steel, i.e. an average of 332,500 tons per year. Until last year, the plan was 95 percent fulfilled. There remained 350,000 tons for the plan for the final 1 of the 5 years. In the first quarter of this year, the planned goal of 70,000 tons could only be 94 percent fulfilled.

It really seems that it will be difficult for the enterprise to complete the sizable volume of tons remaining. Or can it perhaps succeed? There are many difficulties facing it, and with the determination to triumph, it will take up the challenge.

From these few pages in BOHEMIA, we say to the Antillana collective and its director, Comrade Vasquez, forward, comrades! This periodical will not fail to congratulate and point out the triumphs at Antillana when they occur. In the final analysis, the pivot of our respective sectors of work is but one--the triumph of our mutual ideas and the development of this Cuba, planted in "our America" like an upright ingot of steel.

Principal Economic Indicators for the Jose Marti Metallurgical Enterprise (Antillana Steel)
in the 1976-1980 5-Year Period, Including the First Quarter of 1980

(1) Indicadores	(10) U. Med.	1976 (11) Real	Real	1977 (12) Comp. del plan %	1978 Real	1978 Comp. del plan %	1979 Real	1979 Comp. del plan %	(13) I trimestre de 1980 Real	I trimestre de 1980 Comp. del plan %
(2) Producción mercantil	Miles de (15)	53 862,4	53 480,2	100	52 034,0	90	54 086,3	99	10 983,1	81
(3) Fondo de salario	"	7 340,1	7 574,2	99	8 593,0	109	9 084,2	101	2 339,9	99
(4) Promedio de trabajadores	Uno (14)	3 798	3 783	95	4 059	99	4 256	102	4 514	100
(5) Productividad por trabajador	Pesos	11 549	14 215	100	12 820	91	12 873	99	2 433	81
(6) Salario medio	"	1 935	2 013	105	2 117	109	2 146	100	518	100
(7) Costo del salario por peso de producción	"	0,16	0,14	100	0,16	114	0,17	121	0,21	134
(8) Costo por peso de producción	"	—	1,054	100	0,930	96	1,088	113	1,106	110
(9) Rentabilidad		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

Key:

1. Indicators
2. Commercial production
3. Wage fund
4. Average number of workers
5. Productivity per worker
6. Average wage
7. Wage cost per peso of production
8. Cost per peso of production
9. Profitability
10. Unit of measure
11. Real
12. Plan fulfillment
13. First quarter of 1980
14. One
15. Thousands of dollars

Antillana Then and Now in Productive Capacity

(11) Talleres de producción	1959	1980	(12) Máximo a lograr
1.—Taller de Acería	80,0	300,0	300,0
2.—Laminador 720 (de 28")	140,0	505,0	505,0
3.— " 300	80,0	100,0	100,0
4.— " 250	—	150,0	150,0
5.— " 200 [*]	35,0	50,0	50,0
6.—Taller de bolas	—	13,4	13,4
7.— " " mallas	—	4,5	4,5
8.— " " fundición de hierro gris	—	11,1	11,2

Unidad de medida = miles de toneladas (9)

[*] En 1977 y 78 llegó a producir 84 000 t. (10)

Key:

1. Steel mill
2. 720-millimeter rolling mill (28")
3. 300-millimeter rolling mill
4. 250-millimeter rolling mill
5. 200-millimeter rolling mill [*]
6. Ball shop
7. Mesh shop
8. Grey iron casting shop
9. Unit of measure is thousands of tons
10. [*] In 1977 and 78, 84,000 tons were produced.
11. Production workshops
12. Maximum to be achieved

How Did the Energy Consumption Norms Develop in the First Quarter of 1980?

Despite the technological problems faced by the Antillana Steel enterprise, its energy consumption during the first quarter of this year was not excessive, while on the other hand modest savings were effected in comparison to the norms, which vary for each type of steel in the broad range the enterprise produces, depending on the characteristics of the product to be manufactured.

(1) Energéticos	(2) Plan	(3) Real	(4) Por ciento
— Petróleo [1] (5)	25 103,9	25 043,9	99,5
— Electricidad [2] (6)	13 648,9	13 483,1	98,8

[1] = miles de toneladas (7)

[2] = megawatt (o millones de watt-hora). (8)

Key:

1. Energy source
2. Plan
3. Real
4. Percentage
5. Oil [1]
6. Electricity [2]
7. [1] In thousands of tons
8. [2] In megawatts (or millions of watt-hours)

5157
CSO: 3010

COUNTRY TO MANUFACTURE 100-HP BOILERS

Havana TRABAJADORES in Spanish 7 Aug 80 p 1

[Article by Aleyde Diaz]

[Text] The workers have committed themselves to carrying out the production plan in 11 months as a tribute to the Second Party Congress.

Raising our steam-power capacity through the manufacture of boilers capable of producing more horsepower and completing the 11-month production plan constitute the fundamental commitment of National Boiler Services Enterprise workers as a tribute to the Second Party Congress.

To achieve this goal, they are for the first time working on the production of 100-HP boilers and taking steps to organize the work.

From its beginnings in 1965, this enterprise has concentrated its efforts on the purchase, installation, getting into operation and maintenance of boilers and the treatment of water. It got involved in the construction of boilers for the first time in 1978, the year in which it succeeded in manufacturing 80 15, 30 and 45-HP boilers.

This year, the plan provides for 80 30, 45, 75 and 100-HP boilers, to be completed in November.

In celebration of that great Cuban Communist event, the workers have pledged themselves to perform major repairs on the boilers of the Damaji Paper Mill in Cienfuegos, the Moderna Paper Mill in Havana and those of the Evelio Rodriguez Carbelo Gas Plant.

11,466
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

INTERSPUTNIK MEETING--The ninth meeting of the Intersputnik Council opens in Havana today and will last until 2 November. The delegations of Afghanistan and the Soviet Union led by Mohammad Aslam Watanjar and V. A. Shamshin [as heard] Afghan and Soviet communications minister, respectively, arrived in Havana yesterday to participate in the meeting. They were received at the airport by Cuban Communications Minister Pedro Guelmes Gonzalez. The delegations of the GDR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Bulgaria, Poland and Romania already have arrived in Cuba to participate in the important meeting. [Text] [FL271115 Havana Domestic Service in Spansih 1100 GMT 27 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

ARMY ANNOUNCES MILITARY REGISTRATION FOR ALL MALES

PA240107 Guatemala City DIARIO DE CENTRO AMERICA in Spanish 14 Oct 80 p 4

[Quotation marks as published]

[Text] Brig Gen Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores, commander of the "Gen Justo Rufino Barrios," military zone general command issued a communique calling all male Guatemalans, by birth or nationalization, over 18 years of age to obtain prior to 30 November of this year their military registration cards.

Considering that this communique is of interest to the people in general, we shall publish it as follows:

"Brig Gen Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores, commander of the "Gen Justo Rufino Barrios" military zone general command, has decreed that military conscription for the second semester will be opened from 1 to 30 November.

Chapter I

Article 1. The army's basic law establishes that all Guatemalans on reaching their 18th birthday are compelled to appear before the military authorities to be registered as soldiers. This obligation also extends to naturalized Guatemalans.

Article 2. Military conscription extends to all males from 18 to 50 years of age, if suitable for active garrison duty, field duty or for auxiliary army services in time of war.

The only exceptions are the following: chronic patients incapable of doing any work, the blind, the deaf, deafmutes, paralitics and mental deficients. These conditions must be established by the military health service.

Article 3. The candidate must make a personal appearance at the "General Justo Rufino Barrios" military zone general command or at the departmental military reserve commands within each citizen's jurisdiction starting on 1 November and ending on the 30th of the same month.

Article 4. In order to be conscripted all applicants must show their identification document and two small photographs. The time and place of the conscription will be noted on the identification document.

Article 8. [as published] Every Guatemalan over 18 years of age must present his military conscription registry when requesting a passport to leave the country.

Chapter II

Article 1. All persons who do not appear before the military authority to be registered upon reaching 18 years of age must prove that forces beyond their control prevented them from doing so. For noncompliance the departmental military reserve commands will apply, according to each case, the respective economic punishment according to the following scale:

a. For not registering within the semester in which they reach registry age: 10 days in prison or .50 quetzales.

b. For not registering during the following semester: 15 days in prison of 10 quetzales.

c. For not registering within the following semesters: a fine of 15 quetzales, 20 days in prison for every semester.

According to article 63 of decree 1782 of the National Congress, the chiefs or managers of government offices, school directors, employers or middlemen must allow the personnel under their control the time needed to obtain their registry certificate without salary deduction for the time used.

The military police can demand the presentation of the respective military conscription card. Army organizations as well as private and public concerns are compelled by the law to demand the presentation of this document in any negotiation or activity on the part of interested parties.

All persons having relatives outside the country are informed that, persons residing abroad, or residing outside the country provisionally, must register at the nearest Guatemalan Consulate where they will be issued their conscription registration.

Given at the "General Justo Rufino Barrios" military zone general command, by Brig Gen Oscar Mejia Victores--Cavalry Colonel Dem. [Expansion not given] Secretario and Personnel Officer S-1 Gundemaro o de Leon Diaz."

CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

CLERGY DEPART UNDER DEATH THREAT--Five priests from Asturias, who worked as missionaries in Quiche, Guatemala, have had to leave the country because their lives were in danger. According to the Oviedo Archbishop, systematic and implacable persecution by powerful and uncontrolled forces turned the priests, who have left Guatemala, into sure victims without any chance of defending themselves. According to Monsignor (Merchant), several missionaries have been killed with impunity and the Quiche Bishop has been threatened with death by enemies of the people, who maintain a situation of injustice and oppression there. In view of the gravity of the incidents occurring daily in Guatemala under Gen Fernando Romeo Lucas' regime, the Guatemalan Episcopal Conference has decided that it would be best if all priests and nuns left Quiche, the prelate added. [Text] [PA251613 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1200 GMT 25 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

'TIEMPO' SAYS LACK OF UNITY DESTABILIZING NATION

PA191736 San Pedro SULA TIEMPO in Spanish 10 Oct 80 p 6

[Editorial: "When a Crisis Gets Out of Control"]

[Text] The word crisis is used a lot in our country although its exact meaning is not known by all.

None of us like to use the term but the fact is that many abnormal situations exist in the country. There is not enough production and it is not distributed well. There are many able people without a steady job. There is hunger and poverty and those who work cannot make ends meet on their salaries and as a result, protests and strikes are frequent.

The organized students constantly struggle for a reduction in costs at semiofficial schools and it is obvious that the government cannot meet their demands.

Political situations such as that resulting from the popular protest in Cholona against the hike in transportation fares show not only the partiality of the security authorities but also the lack of trust in the economic policies of the government.

From an institutional viewpoint, there is no longer the trust that existed in other times. The peasant organizations do not follow the lead of the National Agrarian Institute as indicated in decree No 91, the food price lists that the economy and commerce minister publishes or the statements of the spokesmen of the Natural Resources Institution when they say that there will be no shortage of basic grains.

The fact that the government demands the payment of taxes in advance and that, at the same time, the metropolitan council and the city of San Pedro admit they have debts of several million lempiras helps us clear up the situation.

From a political viewpoint, there was the illusion that the results of the 20 April elections would represent a solid basis for the solution of all of Honduras' fundamental problems: legality, institutionality and stability. However, 5 months after the event, we still do not see a clear path for a normal national life.

The population does not have a clear view of the immediate or intermediate future.

In certain sectors it is evident that there is fear of the future and everything possible is being done to delay the coming of that feared mystery. Those who do not fear it, no longer talk about it as something that could become a reality.

And if we add the rumors about unusual changes at the political top, the state of insecurity grows even more.

Those who govern apparently do not form a bloc, are not united to attain national goals and do not have a common policy, whereas the working people are demanding a better life and an income that will correspond to the incredible hikes in the price of staples.

This being the situation, everybody believes that the first obligation of the government is to reduce the cost of living. But in order to achieve this important objective, the government must put an end to the political crisis so it will be possible to find the best road to national peace and trust.

These are not impossible objectives as long as the will to overcome the ambition for power exists.

Intransigence, exclusivism, hegemonism and disregard for the rights of others are factors that do not promote stability. On the contrary, they destabilize the nation just as much as, and perhaps more than, the poverty and hunger that millions of Hondurans endure.

We have to see Honduras' true situation the way it is in order to face it with firmness and good faith through agreement with all the social sectors who have not lost the hope of overcoming the abnormal situation that the crisis has brought to Honduras.

To continue fighting for a hegemony of a political or economic nature, as it has been done until now, means to increase instability and to prolong an unnecessary agony that approaches an act of treason against the fatherland.

It is not enough to soothe conflicts; there must be joint work plans.

CSO: 3010

EDUCATION MINISTER CLARIFIES SCHOOL-TO-WORK PROGRAM

Reactionary Attempts at Disinformation

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 1 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] The lowest echelon committee at the Ministry of Education wants to make it clear once and for all that the ill-intentioned attacks appearing daily in the newspaper LA PRENSA on the subject of the school-to-work project are but an ideological imposition of the imperialists and reactionaries still to be found in the country.

In this unequalled flow of disinformation, the sold-out bourgeoisie, the native petty politicians and other reactionaries, have for some time now been openly manifesting their ideological diversions through LA PRENSA, attempting to confuse the people and claiming that "conditions are being imposed so the students can join the productive work force."

It is very significant that reactionary sectors, the enemies of our Sandinist people's revolution, have come out in defense of those for whom they have never in their lives shown concern: the workers and peasants, whose jobs, according to them, will be taken away. The reactionaries are using this most important activity for the economic and social development of the country in an effort to prejudice parents against the school-to-work program, as a means of turning them against the revolution.

What Is the Goal of the School-to-Work Program?

Education which is unrelated to reality, which does not serve to transform that reality, never becomes true education. On the contrary, education which from the beginning links theory with practice, education with apprenticeship, concepts with reality, is the integral education our people need, that which will enable them to emerge from underdevelopment and dependence.

When the Ministry of Education offers this new educational prospect what it is doing is carrying out the most important task of transforming education and placing it in the service of the revolutionary process in which all of Nicaraguan society is plunged.

Moreover, the integral education of the young person is impossible without education and labor. Labor contributes to training the mind, the will, feelings of solidarity, etc., and therefore it is an indispensable component and family and school pedagogy. As a component in the integral training of man, labor provides happiness and satisfaction. The young people who participated in the crusade have already had this experience, which caused them to grow as men and as citizens.

On the other hand, it is already specified in the school-to-work plan that those young people will go to the rural sector who regularly leave their educational tasks to join in productive activity, cutting sugarcane, cotton, coffee, or working on cattle ranches, absenting themselves for almost the whole of the month of December to earn income and thus to contribute to the family economy. By this we mean that those who will go to the rural sector are basically those students in the rural schools who have experience in harvesting in the sectors mentioned above, although those young people who voluntarily want to join in these agricultural tasks can also do so. It should be reiterated that the participation of city young people in the rural work will be entirely voluntary. These young people may also join in communal work--painting schools, creating athletic fields, repairing streets, participating in surveys, mass vaccinations, repairing public buildings, etc.

Respect for the December Traditions

Nothing could be more false or ill-intentioned than to claim that the school-to-work program will affect the traditional Christmas and New Year's celebrations, because it will be carried out between 1 and 20 December. The entire educational system will enjoy a vacation from 21 December through 4 January.

At no time has it been the goal of the Ministry of Education to prevent the people from enjoying Christmas. On the contrary, the Ministry of Education, following the traditions of the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] and the directives of the national reconstruction government junta, respects all expressions of the religious faith of our people. Education against the native values of the Nicaraguan people would not be education rooted in our nationality. The reactionary and pro-Somoza forces were those which for decades sponsored the cultural penetration of our people. It is revolutionary education which is leading to the recovery of our values. Parents, therefore, should not be surprised by the campaigns of the commercial bourgeoisie, which is affected by the recent decree on the non-commercialization of Christmas, and their spokesman, LA PRENSA. All of these gentlemen are more interested in having our youth spend their vacations wasting time, as in the Somoza past, or taking up vices, drugs and other social evils which corrupt their bodies and their minds.

School-to-Work Does Not Disrupt the Family

Some parents have expressed the view, through the reactionary daily newspaper, that the "state wants to take our children." A similar campaign was waged by the reactionaries when the national literacy crusade was launched. The strength of fact demonstrates quite the contrary. Nicaraguan homes were further consolidated and united and families became more important, with the total and unprejudiced integration of the young people from the city with the humble Nicaraguan peasants.

Never in the history of our people have parents had such security about the education of their children as with the Sandinist people's revolution. Never before in the country had such a climate of freedom existed as does now. Never had there been such great concern on the part of the state for their children, for the students, for the young people of this country--the young people who in the genocide era were captured, harrassed, tortured and assassinated in the educational centers themselves.

The War of Disinformation

And as they cannot return to their old political-social-economic structures, they use the most varied means ranging from crime to the war of disinformation. It is then an open or in many cases disguised campaign involving criticism of the revolution in the false costume of democracy, with seeming impartiality or feigned objectivity in an effort to disorient, confuse and deceive the people.

But all of these attacks, slanders and distortions by the reactionaries will be vain and useless! The Nicaraguan people, the parents and the children, will have the last word! Just as in the national literacy crusade, we Nicaraguans set the world an example, achieving a feat unequalled by any other people, so too will our educators and our young people now respond to the directives of the revolution --every student a worker and every worker a student.

Sandino yesterday, Sandino today, Sandino forever!

To educate is to wage the revolution!

C.B.S. (Carlos Bernheim Tunnerman), Ministry of Education, Managua, 29 September 1980.

Communique Issued

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 30 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] The Ministry of Education wishes to clarify the enrollment period for the school-to-work program. In view of the concerns which have developed about the enrollment period for the school-to-work program as shown on the 1980-1981 school-year calendar, the following information is provided:

1. First of all, it should be noted that Resolution No 74AA dated 9 June 1980, which established a period (1 December to 4 January) for school in the rural sector, was abrogated by Resolution No 90AA dated 20 August 1980, which replaced it. This new resolution established this same period as that for enrollment in school-to-work.

2. This provision was inspired by two specific facts: first of all, there has always in the producing cities and rural sectors in Nicaragua been a number of young people who regularly leave their educational tasks to go to cut cotton, sugarcane or coffee, absenting themselves for practically the whole of the month of December to earn income and thus contribute to the family budget. Secondly, during the national literacy crusade all the students and teachers collaborated in the farm work and carried out great tasks along with the peasants, to such an extent that some of them built small bridges, or modest classrooms, while others dug wells or latrines. In all, valuable experience was gained which we should use, rather than forgetting it, to the benefit of our great fatherland which needs to be rebuilt from the base.

3. The combination of school and labor, a basic variation on the principle of linking theory with practice, school with life and education with production, is a principle which will be implemented in our educational system gradually beginning in the 1980-81 school year.

The goal is to prepare the student for social life, his tasks and functions in society, so that he will be inseparably linked with labor, with the activity a human being must pursue throughout his life. Man will be educated among other things for production, for services, and to carry out his most basic social obligations.

The transition to this type of education presupposes a basic change in the social functions of the schools. From a teaching center training contingents of students mainly for higher education, the schools will become one of the basic channels for vocational, theoretical and practical training of the youth for future labor activity in all sectors of the national economy. The schools are called upon to train young people in respect for any socially useful labor. The principle of combining study and work represents one of the methodological successes bequeathed to the Nicaraguan people by the national literacy crusade. The experience acquired by our young people and our teachers is worthy of definitive incorporation in the educational commitment the Ministry of Education has to the people.

The application of the work-study principle on the various educational levels combines two goals of importance to education--one formative, and the other productive and social.

1) The formative goal seeks the development of an awareness as a producer of social assets, so as to proceed to create the conditions for eliminating the prejudice resulting from the division between manual labor and intellectual labor.

2) The social productive goal is designed to integrate in the country's economy the labor force of hundreds of thousands of students who, while devoting the adequate proportions of time to regular study and participation in production and cultural, aesthetic, sports and creative activities, can obtain multilateral and harmonious training.

Specifically, with the enrollment in a productive school-to-work program it is hoped that the students will become capable of:

1--Valuing labor as a tool in the general and integral education of the individual.

2--Understanding the means of production and the labor market.

4. Beginning next 1 November, each educational community, that is to say teachers, students and parents, will plan how to put into practice this period of enrollment in school-to-work, bearing the following guidelines in mind:

1) This program is solely for young people in the 5th and 6th grades of the primary level and those in secondary education.

2) Only the students in the rural schools who have experience in cutting coffee, cotton and sugarcane, or those in the neighboring cities or coffee-growing regions where the harvest requires manpower, will go to the rural sector. Participation in labor in the rural sector will be entirely voluntary for young people from the cities.

3) Enrollment in labor in the cities may involve:

a) Joining enterprises in the people's or private ownership sector.

b) Engaging in community project work: painting schools, improving them, developing athletic fields, repairing streets, cleaning up neighborhoods, participating in surveys, mass vaccinations, etc. It is hoped that the educational communities will use their creativity in proposing tasks of social interest which the students can complete.

4. The period of enrollment in school-to-work will not affect the traditional Christmas and New Year's celebrations, for which reason it will be carried out between 1 and 20 December. The entire educational system will enjoy a vacation from 21 December to 4 January, inclusive.

5. The Ministry of Education will establish the academic recognition to be granted for this period. Those who do not participate in the program will not receive this recognition.

Ministry of Education, Managua, 22 September 1980.

5157
CSO: 3010

DEBATE CONTINUES OVER SCHOOL-TO-WORK PROGRAM

Lawyer Defends Parental Authority

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 27 Sep 80 p 5

[Report on interview with Dr Eduardo Rivas Gasteazoro, civil attorney and author; date and place not given]

[Text] Dr Eduardo Rivas Gasteazoro, an experienced civil attorney, granted an interesting interview about the School-to-Work program. To enlighten our readers about one of the most controversial issues of the day which has led to concern among many Nicaraguan parents, we are reprinting the text of the interview:

[Question] How is the law of patria potestas being administered?

[Answer] Under the Civil Code of 1904, patria potestas is established. In the Universal Declaration of the Rights of Man of 1948, Article 3 establishes that the rights of parents over their children take precedence over the state's rights in that regard, considering that the family is the nucleus of society. Therefore, no law can be passed by a state if it interferes with familial rights.

"Article 26," the jurist went on to say, "establishes in paragraph 3 the preferential right of parents to choose their children's education." When asked if parents have a right to express an opinion about the educational programs and standards set up by the state, he said that not only can they express an opinion, but they should be listened to by the state. "A general petition regarding the issues that concern their children is a perfectly legal thing for parents to do," continued Dr Rivas. "The state should legislate in accordance with the feelings of the parents when it comes to their children, because the government is nothing but the sum of all families. Therefore, it cannot pass laws contrary to fundamental statutes, or laws that violate the rights of parents or the Declaration of Human Rights or the San Jose Pact, both of which Nicaragua signed.

Legal Action by Parents

[Question] What actions could parents take within the legal context of Nicaragua?

[Answer] They could petition the government to modify those provisions, and if that was ignored, the next step would be to go to the competent courts in this type of matter, such as the Human Rights Court headquartered in Costa Rica.

"In addition," said Dr Rivas, "the Statute of Rights and Guarantees of Nicaraguans reaffirms what is stated in the Universal Declaration of the Rights of Man, in Article 34: 'The family is the natural element of society, and the parents are obligated to concern themselves with the education of their children,' which means that they have the right to participate in that education and to plan it."

[Question] Does the Ministry of Public Education have the right to regulate it?

[Answer] Yes, in the case of internal affairs, but always in accordance with the laws of Nicaragua. For that reason, adjustments should be made so that these regulations do not interfere with the rights of Nicaraguans. The regulations should not run counter to the feelings of the majority of interested parties, and since the regulations were not made public when they were implemented, public opinion had no opportunity to comment on them.

If the state passes legislation that runs counter to the aspirations of the people, it ceases to be representative. In this case, there has been a violation of the parents' right to obtain an education for their children that meets with their aspirations.

[Question] Is that decree a law?

[Answer] This issue comes under the law because of its importance. It deserves public discussion; it should not be passed off as a simple regulation. It is a good idea to teach all Nicaraguans to love the land, but that could be done in "school orchards," without damaging the agricultural fields with inexperienced labor.

[Question] Could we sum up, Doctor, by saying that in Nicaragua the rights of parents take precedence over the right of the state?

[Answer] In fact, parental rights came before state rights. That does not mean that the state should not legislate or regulate, but it should always do so in harmony with the people it represents, and in accordance with basic law. Only in the so-called socialist countries does the state have all the power, surpassing other sectors. In fact, parents have lost patria potestas there. Moreover, in Articles 244 and 245 of the Nicaraguan Civil Code, parents are said to have the obligation to protect, guide and defend their children. This implies that they have the right to exercise those duties.

[Question] So parents have the right to express an opinion about the school programs imposed by the Ministry of Education, concerning the militarization of education, for example?

[Answer] Yes. Generally the curriculum has been centrally managed by the state, ensuring government control over education. But it has not always been that way. In Nicaragua it was the Liberal Party that implemented a central educational plan. In other countries there are free universities. That issue falls within the legal purview of parents.

"Generalized discontent with government regulations indicates that they are unrealistic. The decree modifying the Right to Asylum presented a similar case, in that a violation of human rights was institutionalized (the decree violated the Declaration of Human Rights), and damage was done to the democratic order as well as the image of the Nicaraguan revolutionary process. For this reason, the civil action taken by the population is a positive step to prevent decrees that infringe upon human rights from being approved by the state," concluded Dr Eduardo Rivas Gasteazoro.

Sandinist Youth Stresses Voluntary Work

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 23 Sep 80 p 6

[Text] Carlos Carrion and Father Fernando Cardenal, both in charge of the 19 de Julio Sandinist Youth organization, stated yesterday at a press conference at the Casa Ricardo Morales Aviles that the program whereby Nicaraguan youths will go to the countryside during the first 20 days of December, sponsored by the Ministry of Education, is strictly voluntary.

This means that all Nicaraguan youths who want to stay at home during the time when Nicaragua traditionally celebrates "Purisimas," can freely do so.

Cardenal expressed an interest in having Nicaraguan youths heed this call by the Sandinist Youth, because "austerity, hardship and sacrifice are part of the education of the new man.

"Before, Nicaraguan students never worried about the results of the harvest or about crop yield. Now this sacrifice will help integrate our youth into the national economy," commented Cardenal.

Father Cardenal's remarks are timely, because there has been a series of protests by some parents who do not agree with the measure taken by the Ministry of Education to integrate as many youths of both sexes as possible into rural labor during the first 20 days of December.

He added that on 1 and 2 October about a thousand youths will meet at the First Assembly of the 19 de Julio Sandinist Youth, Commander Pedro Arauz Palacio.

At that assembly an undetermined number of young people representing all parts of the country will discuss the objectives of their organization, the National Literacy Crusade and topics related to their own problems.

"I am not going to get involved in the protests by those parents, and I suppose that they are the same ones who opposed the Crusade," stated Father Cardenal.

When asked about the methodology that will be used to gather the youths together at the end of November, Cardenal answered that they will go to their destinations from their homes or from departmental Institutes. Father Cardenal stressed that this is strictly voluntary; citizens should know that Nicaraguan youths can choose to participate or not in the School-to-Work program.

The program itself says that "only children in the fifth and sixth grades of primary school and those in the middle grades will go to the countryside." It adds that "only students in rural schools who have experience in cutting coffee, cotton or sugarcane will go to the countryside, from neighboring cities or coffee regions where the harvest requires manpower."

In one paragraph the plan says that city youths will participate in the labor on a strictly voluntary basis.

Parents Association Expresses Support

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 30 Sep 80 pp 3, 4

[Text] Dear Parents: With regard to the questions that have been raised about the School-to-Work program, planned for this school year by the Ministry of Education, we in the National Parents Association would like to express our opinion and findings on the matter. This should serve as a guideline; we will not be a tool of elements that are trying to distort any measure that benefits our children.

Education in our country is not an isolated activity; it is a system planned for our entire society. Education is determined by its goals and objectives, and all education rectors have stated very clearly that they should be in line with Nicaragua's socioeconomic realities.

The social system which we Nicaraguans envision is one which will benefit the vast majority of the people. There will be widespread participation in decisionmaking, and for that purpose we need people who are capable, who are integrally developed intellectually, physically and spiritually. It is for [words missing] to participate, and the School-to-Work program provides that opportunity.

Independence is acquired not only in theory, but also when there are opportunities to realize dreams, convictions and abilities that each human being has. The School-to-Work program gives us that opportunity in the development of our people.

Our country, which is underdeveloped, should be up to date with all the social and economic advances that have been made in other countries. That will always be our concern, and for that reason we will promote the development of the skills of students wherever they can evolve independently, wherever knowledge is put into practice, wherever the needs of the people are always taken into consideration. That situation is provided by the School-to-Work program.

Since all parents want education to be scientific in nature, it should be based on facts; theory and practice should be combined so that students understand their teachers, their parents and all men in society with whom they interact; that is provided by the School-to-Work program.

In addition to these modest reflections, we believe that those who are entrusted with national education programs will take into consideration other ideas that are being expressed each day in the press, orally and in writing. We are certain that with the help of their advisers they will come up with a well-planned program that will benefit all Nicaraguans.

Fraternally,
Juana Ruiz de Narvaez, General Coordinator

Free Fatherland or Death!

"Parents in action in the year of reactivation, in the year of education."

Youth in Other Countries Cited

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 3

[Commentary by Jose Santos Rivera]

[Text] Since Agreement Number 90 AA of the Ministry of Education for the upcoming school year appeared in print, establishing a period of integration of school and work during the first 20 days of December, there has been a wave of complaints, demands and protests in LA PRENSA. Most of these have come from Chinandega, the most agriculturally progressive province of Nicaragua, where no one is afraid or reluctant to get his hands dirty in the sacred task of working the land. There, children and youths are born and raised to identify with the land.

In its desire to introduce innovations, better systems, and updated educational programs that follow modern trends, the Ministry of Education has put into practice the principle of "Work-Study" at the different levels of education. The agreement is very clear when it points out that agricultural labor shall be carried out by the students of the fifth and sixth grades of rural schools, and that city children shall participate in the rural labor on an exclusively voluntary basis, and that the work period will last from 1 to 20 December, etc.

For many years, Costa Rican students have participated in rural labor. We read in magazines and newspapers that in the United States of America students, even the children of artists and wealthy people, when on vacation sell newspapers or pick apples to earn money. In England it is a requirement that university students learn some trade before obtaining their degrees so that professionals will be able to appreciate the work of laborers and rural workers. Many of our children, whose parents have a limited income, work at all kinds of jobs to put themselves through school. There is no reason whatsoever to justify the uproar that has been unleashed, when this program benefits the education of our youth and helps our economy in an underdeveloped and until recently superexploited country.

Many years ago in other countries, an effort was made to identify school with work, with the productive activities that took place in the environment in which youths grew up. The specific goal in integrating school and productive labor is to ensure that students are able to value work as a tool for general and integral education, and to learn about the means of production and the labor market.

Our youths need to identify with the activities of this country; they should not continue as before, in ignorance of our situation and alienated from the economy and the life of the nation.

A program of educational innovations for development is indispensable; it is more and more evident that the reorganization of educational systems is essential for the adaptation of education to the social, economic and cultural needs of the nation.

Thus, we read in the UNESCO CHRONICLE several years ago that in Canada schools are decentralized, and classes are held in private homes, museums, churches, meeting halls, factories, etc. It said that in Norway there is an experimental program that promotes the creation of multipurpose schools in the second cycle, where general and professional instruction are combined. In Singapore the labor shortage has inspired a program of multipurpose mid-level education combined with mandatory work in shops (woodworking, metalworking, electricity).

In the Soviet Union, mid-level education has gone through a complete reorganization to give students basic skills: laboratory work, practical experience and visits to businesses have become more common, and schoolwork is combined with practical work in industry and agriculture.

We see, then, how education has been revised in countries of different economic and political levels, searching for innovations that will lead to progress and enhanced development for youths and for the economy of their own people.

8926
CSO: 3010

UPN CHIEF AGUIRRE DENOUNCES CHURCH DOCUMENT

PA270417 Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 19 Oct 80 pp 1, 19

[Article by Danilo Aguirre Solis: "A Disappointing Answer!"--passages within slantlines denote uppercase and boldface as published]

[Text] The response of the episcopal conference to the honest and self-critical declaration of the Sandinist National Liberation Front [FSLN] regarding the situation of religion in Nicaragua, which for some time has been manipulated by elements interested in recovering the privileges they lost with the fall of Somoza and his system, has been a document full of arrogance and rage against the Sandinist popular revolution, a document with scorn for the working class, a document bitter because the exploiting class has been removed from power, a document of insults against priest-public officials and priests who support the revolution, a document that even contains the infamies being uttered against the fraternal Cuban doctors and professors.

Two things are clear from this document: The representatives of the traitorous bourgeoisie who have remained in Nicaragua have been able to secure the eclesiastic hierarchy as an ally in confronting the revolution and the Christian church that took the side of the poor.

The second thing that is clear is that the beautiful idea of having our revolution march now the same way it marched during the insurrection, all hand-in-hand and making a church of every battle trench, will definitely face the stubborn opposition of those who subordinate the well-being of the people to a blind obedience to slogans born out of the most reactionary Latin American conception of a revolution and the role of Christians in a revolution.

The use of quotation marks in the episcopal document to point out almost all the phrases used against the Nicaraguan revolution in and out of the country has caused amazement. Such a practice represents bragging about a self-identification that is not in line with the mission that the authors of the document uselessly try to portray.

/The Positive Side/

There is something positive in the extremism of the document, however. In Nicaragua we are used to being the vanguard of many of the original situations that have shaken the continent. It is being original that those who are against the revolution do not understand because, for them, being original does not mean rejecting the societies that do not satisfy their interests, but copying the societies that satisfy their plans of domination.

We are sure that the hidden struggle that is being waged in Latin America between religious men who are with the people and religious persons who are with those who exploit or who have exploited will emerge in Nicaragua and will be decided in Nicaragua. We are sure that it will be in Nicaragua where the church will be consecrated forever as the faithful interpreter of the Christ of the poor and the oppressed, thus erasing all the phoney and involved intrigue about an incompatibility between the Christians and the revolution, both in the temporal life and in the prophetic mission.

/Brief Commentaries on the Document/

In the ideological portion of the document, the general idea is a defense of the exploiting class in the new society that is being built in Nicaragua. Only at the beginning of the document is it mentioned that it is possible that this class had privileges in the past. There, the document states that if construction does not take place as they say, "we would not overcome the times of the princes and potentates, the /alleged/ 'class' or group 'privileges'." The document states further on in several paragraphs that it is "unjust to give privileges to any ideology /or social class./" The document, finally, pretending to ignore the economic laws that have ruled and still rule mankind, states that "justice is not a class privilege /or any class/ over any other. It is the basis of common rights and respect that does not permit mutual destructions."

The document puts in doubt the exploitation by the princes and potentates and denies to the working class the right to recompense when it reaches power. It is a denial of this right because how else can recompense be achieved if they are not achieved at the expense of /the class which gave rise to exploitation and humiliation and which deprived the workers of the right to have access to the wealth they produce and to live with the human dignity the Gospel proclaims./

Common rights and common respect have no room where there are unjust relations of production and distribution of wealth /because no one can claim respect and the right to exploit./

Respect and rights are valid in treating persons and their integral needs. It is for this reason that the Sandinist popular revolution has been working so that no Nicaraguan, regardless of his role in society--if he is not guilty of any crime--will see his human condition diminished. However, this can happen only when the working class, which has no reason for exploiting former exploiters or anybody else, is in power. It cannot happen when the exploiters are in power because they are interested only in the growth of their capital, a growth that is directly proportional to the degree of exploitation.

/Disrespect for Martyr Priests/

The document states that "being a Christian does not mean seeking death to gain glory and power over others."

Regardless of whether this remark is directed at martyr priests or at heroes and martyrs in general of our war of liberation, we see it as a most serious offense against those who gave their lives to remove the chains of slavery from our people. We believe that no writing can be more anti-Christian than that which states, as this document does, that Father Gaspar Garcia Laviana and 40,000 other martyrs went to war to gain personal glory and power over others. In this paragraph we see the advisory layman who tried during the time of fighting and later, after the victory, to hide his lack of personal bravery, which is not a crime, with polemic writings aimed at justifying his "pacifism," for which no one has ever thought about reproaching him and which is nothing but a matter of conscience.

With instant contemptuous references to the "masses" and obvious allusions to the organizations born within the revolution, the document states that everyone went to war "on the basis of his own, specific religious responsibility," as if to separate the church as a community from the insurrection, and states finally that "weapons without the people easily evolve into forces of occupation." The quotation marks are ours, but the last two words are in quotation marks in the document to make it consistent with other phrases in the text which hint that Nicaragua is occupied by foreign soldiers, particularly Cubans.

We do not know to what country those phrases refer, because it is enough to visit the garrisons of the Sandinist peoples army or of the militias to realize that Nicaragua's military corps consist of the people themselves in arms.

This is also an offense to our youth, who for the first time in Nicaragua have been removed from the licentious activities that characterize the societies without hope (at least the great majority of them). Full of convictions and enthusiasm, the youth are now engaged in noble tasks and, moreover, are filling the churhces with renewed fervor, with the knowledge that their pastors share their ideals. The authors of the document are seeking to destroy this last phenomenon, that is life-giving for the church, because at the hour of choosing, the youth will again choose the revolution.

/Against the Cubans/

Echoing the rumors, the lies and even the slander that persons and groups with particular interests have started against the disinterested aid given by our Cuban brothers, and placing itself in the anti-Christian position (another part of the document says that one should love even one's enemies), of describing /all Cubans/ as beings from another planet, denying them the right to also be "children of God," the document states the following:

International aid is humiliating and contrary to the dignity of the people when it results in "invasions" (these quotation marks are from the document, and others occupy the place of the citizens and make decisions for them or over them. Our people have stated on various occasions and by various ways and means that they reject new invasions that represent a threat to the originality of our process, /that in fact promote aversion to the religious beliefs of our people./

Another paragraph, without mentioning Bluefields, discusses the events there, repeating exactly the biased version of those who have approached the issue from the viewpoint of their particular interests, which are none other than to exploit or encourage everything that tends to destabilize the Nicaraguan revolution.

We believe that by just reading these paragraphs, the Nicaraguan people will realize how the evangelical mission has been completely distorted, not only as regards the anti-Christian reference to the Cubans, but also the gross manner in which a number of lies are accepted as truth. It would be enough to talk with our peasants, who have received attention in the areas of health and education, to dispel these lies. Moreover, it does not seem honest that such a great lie as the charge that the Cubans are engaged in antireligious teachings should be recorded in a document as serious as the ecclesiastical hierarchy's reply was supposed to be.

/Citizens Rights and the Manipulation of the Priest/

This subhead is not ours. Incredibly, it comes from the document and any doubt as to the scope of this phrase is dispelled by the following expressions?

"By manipulating the priest the religion he represents is manipulated. History shows us that it is one thing to call on the priest to exercise his priestly ministry and it is another to incorporate him into a system to 'justify' that system or to 'give it an image' of religious justice." (The internal quotation marks are from the document.)

"One need not be inside the church to sow divisions in it. It is sufficient to distort or weaken priestly actions in any field of human life. Christ himself denounced the strategy of 'smiting the shepherd to scatter the sheep.' It would be sufficient to introduce disorder and indiscipline among its ministers /with flattery and privileges,/ through well-known human trickery. (The capital letters are ours.)

These paragraphs are terribly insulting to our priests who are ministers. First of all, the document denies that they have a will and judgment, an expedient position for later representing them as victims and accommodating the phrase about the shepherd and the sheep. However, in the end, because of the great spite, even though it is inconsistent with all the previous arguments, it says that they have been brought by the revolutionary government.

It seems to us that this does not merit further comment. The magnitude of the charge is such that it has left us stunned.

/Final Notes/

The FSLN document went as far as to publicly criticize any analysis or recommendation tht any Sandinist military persons may have made regarding the way to handle the religious issue in Nicaragua and we all know to what it referred, but now in reply, the document stresses those statements previously disavowed by the FSLN in order to build an entire antirevolutionary case on that basis.

The document manipulates--and this is indeed manipulation--the concepts of respect for freedom of conscience, practically demanding that Nicaraguans be denied the right to profess no religion. It claims that this is individualism, or liberalism and even seeks to identify the FSLN with those who, in the name of that doctrine, murdered and exploited the Nicaraguan people.

The document even contains unprecedented reproaches for omissions in speeches made by the hierarchy at public ceremonies, disguised in the frequently repeated phrase that the participation of the church "must be delivered."

This pronouncement will generate profound disillusion. It is almost impossible to believe that the defense of class interests that have exploited our people for so many years and that to a certain extent refuse to renounce this exploitation, should have been placed above the Christian dream of the Nicaraguan people of seeing their church hierarchy marching along the path of the revolution, guiding, correcting, giving of itself to the poor in a communion that only our revolution could have achieved. However, we know that this unity, like any other, is brought about only in the dynamics of deeds. The insurrection was a test and the struggle to safeguard and consolidate the revolution will also be another test. We have no doubt that it will be resolved in favor of the dispossessed and exploited /masses,/ in upper case as we put it, of Nicaragua.

CSO: 3010

CUS REPLIES TO BORGE'S ACCUSATIONS

PA241904 Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 13 Oct 80 p 6

[Letter from the Confederation for Unity of Trade Unions to Interior Minister Tomas Borge Martinez--date and place not given]

[Excerpts] Tomas Borge Martinez
Interior Minister and Commander of the Revolution,
Interior Ministry

Dear Companero Minister:

The newspaper BARRICADA, the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN) official newspaper, publishes in the front page of its 2 October edition an item with the following headline: "The Revolution Will Not Permit Antipatriotic Provocation" and a subslug: "Agitators Were Launching Program in Bluefields To Divide Nicaragua."

First, companero interior minister, we must begin by establishing that in the Nicaraguan vocabulary, the word "agents" you used, is synonymous with a member of repressive or secret organization and the Nicaraguan people can never forget the agents of the infamous security office of the Somozist dictatorship. Therefore, we believe that the use of the phrase "agents from the Confederation for the Unity of Trade Unions (CUS)" is intended to link us with the crazy and unpatriotic separatist plan and also to make the Nicaraguan people believe that the CUS is a conspiratorial and clandestine labor organization. We want to establish that we are neither conspirators nor are we acting clandestinely. We hereby affirm that our leaders labor activities are carried out in broad daylight and their addresses are well-known by public authorities.

We are sure that you would not use the world "agents" if you were referring to the leaders of the Sandinist Workers Central (CST) and the Farm Workers Association (ATC). Therefore, companero minister, we are asking that once the investigations regarding the regrettable incidents in Bluefields are completed, you publicly rectify any involvement of CUS with the aforementioned incidents and please, in the future do not try to confuse our trade union activities with criminal activities or by using one of your favorite phrases, with counterrevolutionary activities.

Finally, companero minister, since we are of the opinion that the strange and unjust involvement attributed to the CUS with Bluefields incidents, only exists in your words--because as FSLN political leader you still insist on the idea of a single trade union that our workers with the love for freedom have rejected--we feel that on this occasion we must set forth our labor policy which we plan to carry out in the following manner:

1. We will continue to participate in the process of the transformation of Nicaragua, simply because we are Nicaraguans and particularly because the CUS actively participated in overthrowing the Somozist dictatorship. Let us say that just like in the FSLN, this participation cost the lives of many of our leaders, such as our secretary general, Companero Luis Medrano Flores and the president of the Federation of Workers of Chinandega, Companero Alberto Martinez Tapia. In other words, the CUS is not a recently formed labor organization. The CUS has a long list of sacrifices on behalf of vast sectors of our working class and for this reason we feel we have the same right as any FSLN labor organization, to organize the Nicaraguan workers anywhere in the country.

2. We will continue with our usual union activities throughout the republic in the private, mixed and state production sectors, despite your unjust accusations, because we sincerely did not have anything to do with the separatist plan, or in promoting the burning of houses, stores and others. In other words, we are acting according to the proverbial phrase: "He who has nothing to hide, has nothing to fear."

3. We must say that we do not consider it a crime not to profess Marxist-Leninist ideas, because we believe that Somoza was overthrown so that we could have a country with freedom of ideas; that is, a country with broad freedom for political and labor organization.

To conclude, we want to inform you that the CUS address in Managua is the following: from Radio Corporacion, one block toward the lake and 15 yeards south.

Sincerely yours,

The CUS Executive Committee, 13 October

CSO: 3010

COMPOSITION OF COUNTRY'S MARXIST LEFT GROUPS DETAILED

Caracas EL DIARIO DE CARACAS in Spanish 26 Aug 80 pp 16-17

[Article by Pastor Heydra: "The Archipelago of the Left"]

[Text] The Venezuelan Marxist left is polymorphous. It appears in different forms, without any basic change in its nature.

After the politicomilitary defeat that it suffered during the 1960's, an atomization process occurred in its two main organizations (PCV [Communist Party of Venezuela] and MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left]), which worsened after 1968 with the worldwide crisis in Marxism starting with the "Prague Spring" and the entry of some of its groups into the legal, democratic struggle.

At present, we have ascertained the existence of 27 groups comprising the "Polynesian type" world of the Venezuelan Marxist left. Even though, in the 1978 elections, the eight leftist groups which participated as a whole won 13.49 percent of the votes, and in the 1979 municipal elections they won an electoral accord which brought them 18 percent of the vote, their real situation is a scattered combination of groups, efforts and votes, making up a chromatic archipelago with varied political philosophies: some in favor of rupture, and others in favor of evolution. Their only view in common is the search for a utopia that has been called socialism up until now.

Classification

It is difficult to make a classification of what is commonly known as the left. There are too many nuances of Marxism to select that course of action. There are too many indefinite aspects to use the phrase "the path to socialism." Hence, the quantitative alternative has proven simpler: the weight that each organization carries on the basis of the number of votes that it won in the 1978 elections and the number of members that it has.

There are four groups which have succeeded in winning over 1 percent of the vote and which have a membership ranging between 8,000 and 40,000 persons. Included here is MAS [Movement for Socialism], the leading party of the left, which represents over 40 percent of its strength. There is MEP [People's Electoral Movement], with a sizable trade union influence, representing 17 percent. There is MIR, with a considerable strength among students which, however, is impossible to gage because of the process of division that it experienced in 1979. In 1978, it had a representative status among the left amounting to 17 percent. And there is PCV, with important international relations and a strength equivalent to 8 percent.

MAS, MEP, MIR and PCV are the basic groups for the determination of the mass policies of this Polynesian type world. MAS and MEP have certain ideological affinities, although, as a whole, they share in the waging of social and political battles using the routes of democracy.

Next come the groups which participated in the electoral process but which did not win 1 percent of the vote. These include Vanguard, the Socialist League, Cause R and GAR [Revolutionary Action Groups]. In all, they represent 15 percent of the left.

There are 14 groups which have not participated in electoral processes and whose influence among the population is therefore difficult to gage, although it may be estimated as being slight, and it may be said that their membership totals 300 individuals or fewer. They include PRV [Party of the Venezuelan Revolution], Revolutionary Tendency, PST [Workers Socialist Party], EPA [The People Advance], May Day, MPDIN [expansion unknown], Political Process, MCR [Revolutionary Communist Movement], PRAG [expansion unknown], MRP-BUS [People's Revolutionary Movement-Socialist Unity Bloc], CLP [Popular Struggles Committee], The New Venezuelan, CUP [People's Unity Committee], Wind From the East, etc. In all, they should account for 5 percent of the left, although they have as an essential feature that of being radicalized groups with a small but highly active membership.

Finally, there are three groups which have not joined in legal activity, and the size of which is very small: BR [Red Flag], BR-ML-FAS [Red Flag-Marxist Leninist-FAS], and MRT [Workers Revolutionary Movement]

Such is the picture of the Venezuelan left in 1980, if, in fact, points of unity can be found to warrant giving this archipelago of groups a generic name.

Electoral Alternatives

This part of the Venezuelan political spectrum has begun a discussion of electoral policy and, in fact, without its having been mentioned publicly, it has started the race for the presidential nomination. In this respect, the alternatives appear to be as follows:

1. Total unity of the left. 2. Partial unity determined on the basis of the agreements that are reached. 3. Single candidate from MAS, opposing a candidate from the other groups. 5. Single candidate of the left and other forces. 6. MAS candidate opposing a candidate from one part of the left and other sectors.

Among these six options, if it does not come out ahead, the left will amuse itself by debating in what remains of 1980 until 1983.

Descriptive Chart of the Left

Leftist Parties Legalized With the CSE, Winning Over 1 Percent of the Vote in the 1978 Elections

Features: They are the leading leftist parties, fully incorporated into the democratic process. Their memberships fluctuate between the low five-figure range and the medium five-figure range.

Movement for Socialism, MAS

It came into existence in January 1971, as a result of a division in the PCV. It calls for a Venezuelan route to socialism. It is not officially defined as Marxist, although that philosophy predominates among its leadership.

It is the major party of the Venezuelan left. In the 1978 elections it won 6.08 percent on small ballots [votes cast in congressional elections] out of 13.49 percent won by the other remaining leftist groups.

It recently held its Fifth Convention, at which there was evidence of the existence of two major movements, "Pompeyism" and "Teodorism," grouped around its main leaders and seven submovements.

According to its census, its membership is estimated at 40,000, and its activists at 4,000. Its top-ranking leaders are: Teodoro Petkoff, Pompeyo Marquez, Freddy Munoz, Eloy Torres, Tirso Pinto, Bayardo Sardi, German Lairet, Antonio Jose Urbina, Argelia Laya, Rafael Thielen, Victor Hugo De Paola, Rafael Guerra, Carlos A. Pardo.

It is a movement which operates on a national scale. Its principal strength lies in professional people and students.

People's Electoral Movement, MEP

It came into being in December 1967 from a split in Democratic Action. It calls for national democratic socialism. It is not defined as Marxist, but is affiliated with the Socialist International (Social Democratic) as an observer. It is the party with the greatest labor force on the left.

In the 1978 elections it won 2.20 percent of the small vote. It began to call for socialism after a process of delimitation and self-determination which started when it was founded. Its votes have declined from the 1968 elections (475,909 votes) to those of 1978, but it is still an important force in the trade unions.

It recently held its National Convention, at which there was evidence of the existence of two major generational trends.

Its membership is estimated at 30,000, and its activists at 3,000.

Its top-ranking leaders are: Luis Beltran Prieto Figueroa, Jesus Angel Paz Galarraga, Siuberto Martinez, Adelso Gonzalez, Salom Meza Espinosa, Carlos Torres Bracho, Isaac Olivera.

It is a movement which operates on a national scale. Its principal strength lies in labor. It publishes a newspaper called UNIDAD.

Communist Party of Venezuela, PCV

It is the dean of the Venezuelan leftist parties. May Day 1931 is given as the date of its birth, when it launched its first public manifesto. It is defined as a Marxist-Leninist party. It is particularly important for its international relations. In the 1978 elections it won 1.44 percent of the small ballots.

Throughout its history it has suffered various splits, which have given rise to such organizations as FLN [National Liberation Front], FALN [Armed Forces of National Liberation], PRV, MAS and Vanguardia, to cite those which have appeared since 1966.

It has no major problems involving tendencies within its membership.

It is estimated as having a membership of 10,000.

Its top-ranking leaders are: Gustavo Machado, Jesus Faria, Alonso Ojeda Olaechea, Pedro Ortega Diaz, Hector Mujica, Radames Larrazabal, Americo Diaz Nunez.

It operates on a national scale. Its spokesman is TRIBUNA POPULAR.

Movement of the Revolutionary Left, MIR

It came into existence in April 1960 from a split in Democratic Action. It has undergone a process of divisions and subdivisions that is unique in Venezuelan political history. Its first one was that of the hard MIR and the soft MIR (dissolved). The MIR remaining in 1968 was subdivided into the "trio commandership" of the Antonio Jose de Sucre Guerrilla Front and the MIR headed by Simon Saez Merida, who later was to be excluded, Moises Moleiro and Americo Martin. The FGAJS [Antonio Jose de Sucre Guerrilla Front], in turn, underwent a process of splintering which we shall observe subsequently and which was to give rise to the Revolutionaries Organization, the Socialist League and the Red Flag, to cite a few.

The MIR (of Moleiro and Martin) participated in the 1978 elections, winning 2.33 percent of the small votes and ranking as the second leftist force and the fourth national party, with particular influence among student sectors. By the end of 1978, its membership was estimated at 8,000. In December 1979, it underwent a process of division which led to the formation of the following movements or groups:

MIR, Moleiro. Top-ranking leaders: Moises Moleiro, and Hector Perez Marcano; it, in turn, suffered a split in 1980, involving the so-called MIR Proletarian.

MIR, Americo. Top-ranking leaders: Americo Martin and Estanislao Gonzalez.

MIR, Nini: Romulo Henriquez, Alfredo Caraballo and Lino Martinez.

Marxist Tendency: Rigoberto Lanz.

MIR Proletarian: Alberto Francesqui and Julio Castillo.

The name MIR is currently being disputed by Moises Moleiro and Americo Martin with the CSE.

Participated in the 1978 Electoral Process But Did Not Win 1 Percent of the Vote

Features: Movements with memberships from the high three-figure range to the low four-figure range.

Vanguard

It emerged from a division in the PCV which occurred in 1974. It calls for revolutionary socialism. It is defined as Marxist. In the 1978 elections it won 0.87 percent of the vote.

Its top-ranking leaders are: Guillermo Garcia Ponce, Eduardo Machado, Antonio Garcia Ponce, Laureano Torrealba.

Its spokesman: VANGUARDIA and the magazine DECADA 80.

Socialist League

It resulted from a political mutation process that originated in the FGAJS which, upon becoming divided, gave rise to the OR [Organization of Revolutionaries]; and from the latter (which later dissolved) there emerged the Socialist League, an organization founded by Jorge Rodriguez in 1973 to participate in the current elections with the plank of a null vote.

Later, the Socialist League became incorporated into the electoral battle and participated in 1978, winning 0.57 percent of the small votes.

Its top-ranking leaders are: Julio Escalona, Marcos Gomez, Carmelo Laborit, David Nieves. It operates on a national scale, and has influence in student circles.

It calls for Marxism-Leninism, and the revolutionary route to socialism.

Its spokesman is EL PROLETARIO.

Cause R

It resulted from a division which occurred at the birth of MAS in 1971. Its strength lies mainly with the trade unions. It operates through the Matancero Group in Guayana, and has had outstanding activity in the Catia area of the city of Caracas. It participated in the 1978 elections, in which it won 0.24 percent of the small votes.

Its top-ranking leader is Alfredo Maneiro. Its spokesmen: CAUSA R and MATANCERO.

Revolutionary Action Group, GAR

It was created in 1974 as a result of a process of agreement among various groups, including the Christian Left of Rafael Irribarren and personages such as Domingo Alberto Rangel, who came from the MIR soft, and Basilio Anton, from URD [Democratic Republican Union], who later abandoned the GAR.

With activity confined basically to Carabobo, Nueva Esparta, Merida, Guayana and DF [Federal District], it participated in the 1978 elections, in which it won 0.16 percent of the small vote.

Its spokesman: PA'LANTE.

In 1980, a division occurred among its members, and it was split into:

Unified Revolutionary Action Group, GARU, headed by Gustavo Mendez and Vicente Marquez.

Revolutionary Action Group, GAR, headed by Rafael Irribarren.

Leftist Groups Operating Publicly But Which Have Not Participated in Electoral Processes

Features: They are radicalized groups with local action, whose membership is in the two-figure range and the low three-figure range.

Venezuelan Revolutionary Party, PRV

It is a mutation from FLN-FALN which emerged from a division of PCV that took place in 1965-66.

The PRV Rupture came into existence in 1970.

Its top-ranking leaders are: Douglas Bravo, Argelia Melet, Francisco Prada, Diego Salazar, Gloria Martin, Clever Ramirez, Ramon Morales Rossi.

It operates basically in the western section of the country, Aragua, DF, Guayana and Sucre.

Its spokesmen: RUPTURA and RUPTURA CONTINENTAL.

In 1979, it underwent a division, from which a new group emerged, called:

Revolutionary Tendency, TR

Headed by: Ali Rodriguez, Julio Chirinos, Humberto Vargas Medina, Armando Daza.

Workers Socialist Party, PST

It was created in the mid-1970's by former dissidents from leftist organizations who were regrouped. It operates basically in Carabobo, Lara, Aragua and DF. The sectors known as Trostskyites have joined it. The recent defections from MIR Moleiro and MIR Proletarian have swelled its ranks.

Its top-ranking leaders are: Emilio Ortiz, Alberto Francesqui, Julio Castillo.

Its spokesman is VOZ SOCIALISTA.

The People Advance, EPA

It is an offshoot of the UCAB [Andres Bello Catholic University] movement which operated in the renewal movement at UCAB, and a group which was initially linked with the Christian Left. It is headed by Edwin Zambrano, Aurelio Gil Beroes and Rafael McKey. It operates basically in Caracas and Guayana. Its spokesmen: EPA, DAZIBAO and TRIUNFO SOCIALISTA.

May Day

It resulted from a division in the Christian Left. Its top-ranking leader is Oliver Belisario.

MPDIN

This is a group comprised of dissidents from leftist groups, mainly former PCV members. It operates essentially in the El Cementerio section of Caracas. Its top-ranking leader is Jesus Marquez.

Political Process

This is a mutation of groups created during the renewal process at the Central University of Venezuela from 1968 to 1970. Its top-ranking leaders are Carlos Blanco and Luis Lander. They have a publication of the same name.

Revolutionary Communist Movement, MCR

It emerged from a split in the Socialist League which occurred in 1978. It is a movement of pro-China tendency, and operates basically in Lara.

PRAG

A movement which emerged from the postrenewal movement at UCV [Central University of Venezuela] in 1972. It joined other groups, founding the PRAG-Cause R movement, with Alfredo Maneiro. It later became separated from Maneiro. Its top-ranking leaders are Edgar Yajure and Christian Burgassi. Freddy Rodriguez later became dissociated from it. There are currently two PRAGs: one with the R to the right and another with the R in the opposite position.

People's Revolutionary Movement, Socialist Unified Bloc, MRP-BUS

It emerged in 1978 from the convergence of former members of leftist groups. It operates basically in 23 de Enero and UCV. Its top-ranking leaders are: Freddy Yepez, Rafael Ramirez, Pedro Lozada. Its spokesman is UNIDAD SOCIALISTA.

Popular Struggles Committee, CLP

This is a mutation of Red Flag, following the split of that movement into several groups. It was formed in 1973 after the so-called null vote policy promoted by various radicalized sectors.

It operates basically in the eastern part of the country and in Caracas.

Its top-ranking leaders are: Armando Diaz, Argelia Silva.

Its publicity organ is the newspaper QUE HACER.

The New Venezuelan

This is the last group founded by Domingo Alberto Rangel, associated with a publication of the same name. After a tour of AD, MIR, MIR Soft and GAR, Domingo Alberto Rangel founded this group in 1979. It operates basically in the DF.

People's Unity Committee, CUP

A movement which started as a leftist cultural movement. Its leading promoters are Ali Primera and Luis Cipriano Rodriguez.

Wind From the East

A group which operates around the Venezuelan-Chinese Friendship Committee. Its top-ranking leaders are: Victor Jose Ochoa and Camilo Arcaya, who come from the Nationalist Popular Vanguard, a movement which defected from URD during the 1960's and which is dissolved.

Leftist Groups Which Still Have Clandestine Status

Features: Local groups with small memberships; ultraradical positions.

Red Flag, BR

It resulted from the process of divisions that occurred in the Antonio Jose de Sucre Guerrilla Front in 1970, when FGAJS split into Red Flag (BR) and Organization of Revolutionaries (OR), headed by Julio Escalona and Marcos Gomez.

Subsequently, in 1977, there was another division in Red Flag which led to the creation of two groups:

Red Flag: headed by Gabriel Puerta.

Red Flag, Marxist-Leninist-FAS: headed by Carlos Betancourt, Argenis Betancourt and Pablo Hernandez Parra.

Carlos Betancourt withdrew from political activity, Argenis Betancourt died and Pablo Hernandez Parra decided to found a movement known as M-28, 28 October Movement.

Workers Revolutionary Movement, MRT

It was created in 1979, a result of the convergence of former members of leftist groups. Its top-ranking leaders are: Carlos Lunz Rodriguez, Carlos Pinto, Edgar Toledo. It publishes the newspaper AL ROJO VIVO.

(1) A.D.
(2) M.I.R.
(3) M.E.P.
(4) MIR Blando
(5) MIR Duro
(6) FGAJS
(7) PRIN
(8)
MRP BUS
(9) OR
(10) BR
El Nuevo Venezolano
(11)
MIR
(12)
(13) CLP
BR.FAS ML (14)
MIR (15) Moleiro
MIR (16) Américo
MIR (17) Nini
(18) M.28
MIR P.S.T. Proletario (19)
Tendencia Marxista (20)
(21) Liga Socialista MEUP
MCR (22)
(23) P.C.V.
(24) M.P.D.I.N.
(25) FLN FALN
(26) MAS
(27) Vanguardia
(28) P.R.V.
(29) CAUSA R
(30) PRV Ruptura
(31) Tendencia Revolucionaria
(32) PRAG

Key:

1. Democratic Action (original party)
2. Movement of the Revolutionary Left
3. People's Electoral Movement
4. Movement of the Revolutionary Left-Soft
5. Movement of the Revolutionary Left-Hard (dissolved)
6. Antonio Jose de Sucre Guerrilla Front (dissolved)
7. Revolutionary Party of National Integration (dissolved)
8. People's Revolutionary Movement-Socialist Unity Bloc
9. Organization of Revolutionaries (dissolved)
10. Red Flag
11. The New Venezuelan
12. Movement of the Revolutionary Left
13. Popular Struggles Committee
14. Red Flag-Socialist Action Front [?]-Marxist-Leninist
15. Movement of the Revolutionary Left, Moleiro
16. Movement of the Revolutionary Left, Americo
17. Movement of the Revolutionary Left, Mini
18. 28 October Movement
19. Movement of the Revolutionary Left, Proletarian-Workers Socialist Party
20. Marxist Tendency
21. Socialist League-Popular University Students Movement [?]
22. Revolutionary Communist Movement
23. Communist Party of Venezuela (original party)
24. MPDIN [expansion unknown]
25. National Liberation Front-Armed Forces of National Liberation
26. Movement for Socialism
27. Vanguard
28. Party of the Venezuelan Revolution
29. Cause R
30. Party of the Venezuelan Revolution, Rupture
31. Revolutionary Tendency
32. PRAG [expansion unknown]

Key:

1. Committee of Independent Political Electoral Organization (Social Christian Party) (original party)
2. Others
3. Christian Left (dissolved)
4. Political Process
5. Revolutionary Action Groups
6. May Day
7. Andres Bello Catholic University, Free
8. Wind From the East
9. Revolutionary Action Groups
10. Revolutionary Action Groups, Unified
11. The People Advance
12. Workers Revolutionary Movement

2909
CSO: 8048/93

END

JPRS 76789

10 November 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2213

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76789

10 November 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2213

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

Briefs

Colombian, Venezuelan Border Programs 1
Uruguayan Ambassador to Brazil 2
Salto Grande Dam 2
Colombia, Venezuela Invest in Bahamas 2
Atmospheric Research Meeting 2

ARGENTINA

Press Reaction to Nobel Peace Prize Distinction
(LA NACION, 15 Oct 80; LA PRENSA, 14 Oct 80)..... 4

Nation's Antiterrorist Tradition Stressed
Perez Esquivel's Merits Cited, by Manfred Schoenfeld

BOLIVIA

Government Attempts To Reduce Coca Production
(PRESENCIA, various dates)..... 7

President Appeals to Farmers
'PRESENCIA' Hails Initiative, Editorial
Report Cited
Price of Coca Protested

BRAZIL

President Figueiredo Interviewed Prior to Chile Visit
(Joao Figueiredo Interview; QUE PASA, 9-15 Oct 80)..... 13

Poll Shows Decline in Government Popularity
(O GLOBO, 2 Oct 80)..... 16

SECOM Contests Poll Showing Decline in Figueiredo's Popularity
(O GLOBO, 8 Oct 80) 18

PP: 'A Party Born With a Calling for Power'
(O GLOBO, 5 Oct 80) 20

Right-Wing Newsman Interviewed on Political Press
(Adirson de Barros Interview; CORREIO BRAZILIENSE, 28 Sep 80) .. 26

Continuing Reportage on Trade With East Europe, USSR
(Various sources, various dates) 39

Exports to East Europe Up
Polish Ship Sales Promoted
Oil From USSR, Angola
Titanium Exports to USSR
Trade With East Europe

Nigeria Seeks Increased Exchange in Goods
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 26 Sep 80) 44

Delay in Obtaining Oil Substitute May Create Difficulties
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 5, 10 Oct 80) 45

Lack of Decision Observed
Alternate Energy Sources Insufficient, by David Renault

Hydroelectric Energy Given Priority by ELETROBRAS President
(O GLOBO, 30 Sep 80) 56

Army To Support Industry To Consolidate Military Technology
(O GLOBO, 26 Sep 80) 58

Candidates for 1982 Gubernatorial Elections To Be Nominated
(FOLHA DE SAO PAULO, 28 Sep 80) 60

CHILE

Brazilian Newspaper Interviews Pinochet
(Augusto Pinochet Interview; O GLOBO, 8 Oct 80) 62

Foreign Investment Risks, Benefits Discussed
(M. Eugenia de la Jara; QUE PASA, 9-15 Oct 80) 67

Air Force To Revitalize Antarctic Scientific Base
(EL MERCURIO, 7 Oct 80) 74

Document Issued in Protest of Plebiscite
(HOY, 8-14 Oct 80) 77

Briefs
Copper Production Rises 79

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Jorge Blanco Discusses PRD, Guzman, Pena Gomez
(Salvador Jorge Blanco Interview; LISTIN DIARIO, 9 Sep 80).... 80

Paulino Perez Rejects Ties to Trinitarios
(LISTIN DIARIO, 9 Sep 80)..... 82

Military Assistance From Taiwan Reported
(LISTIN DIARIO, 12 Sep 80)..... 84

HONDURAS

Deterioration of Venezuelan Relations With Cuba Seen as Positive
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 30 Sep 80)..... 86

Nicaraguan Regime Urged To Heed People's Wishes, Protests
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 2 Oct 80)..... 89

Salvadoran Church's Attempts To Isolate Leftists Praised
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 16 Sep 80)..... 92

MEXICO

PEMEX Oil Sales to Japan Discussed
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 1 Oct 80)..... 95

Saudi Arabia Shows Interest in Deal With PEMEX
(EXCELSIOR, 4 Oct 80)..... 96

Israel Continues To Buy Mexican Oil
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 23 Sep 80)..... 97

Budget Secretary Predicts 25-30 Percent Inflation
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 4 Oct 80)..... 98

Minidevaluation on Peso Predicted
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 2 Oct 80)..... 101

Admiral Calls for New Legislation on Navy
(EL DIA, 2 Oct 80)..... 102

URAMEX: Enough Uranium for CFE Needs
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 29 Sep 80)..... 104

Campeche Bay Oil Production Predicted
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 4 Oct 80)..... 106

Diaz Serrano Discusses Increased Oil Production
(EL DIA, 2 Oct 80)..... 107

Cadereyta Refinery Soon To Go on Line
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 26 Sep 80)..... 108

Country To Produce, Repair Jet Engines
(EL DIA, 2 Oct 80)..... 109

Columnist Discusses Gasoline Price Rise
(Mario Ezcurdia; EL DIA, 21 Sep 80)..... 111

JLP Pledges Food Self-Sufficiency Soon
(EXCELSIOR, 22 Sep 80)..... 119

Changes in Federal District Water, Electricity Systems
(METROPOLI de EL DIA, 2 Oct 80)..... 122

New Water System for Capital
Electricity From Tilostoc Ended

Briefs
New Ambassador to Egypt 125

URUGUAY

Military Officers Comment on Political Process
(EL PAIS, various dates)..... 126

Luis V. Queirolo, by Leonidas Pirial
Boscan Hontou
Julio Cesar Rapela

Colorado Party Meets With COMASPO, Communique Issued
(EL DIA, 9, 10 Sep 80)..... 129

Party Spokesman Discusses Meeting
Report by COMASPO Chairman

COMASPO Chairman Estimates Banned Citizens at 228
(Andres Vilizzio Fello; EL DIA, 5 Sep 80)..... 133

Austrian Doctors Expelled for Meeting With Families of Detainees
(EL PAIS, 3 Sep 80)..... 136

ANCAP President Says Oil Reserves Enough for 90 Days
(EL PAIS, 26 Sep 80)..... 138

Energy Bulletin Cites Increased Consumption in July
(EL PAIS, 14 Sep 80)..... 142

Geological Institute's Gold, Uranium Prospecting Activities
(EL DIA, 12 Sep 80)..... 144

Briefs
Crude From Iraq 146
Yugoslav Mission Arrives 146

VENEZUELA

Esteban Rey Views Reagan, Cuba, Foreign Policy
(Luis Esteban Rey; EL UNIVERSAL, 17 Sep 80)..... 147

Leftist Youth Protest COPEI Policy on Universities
(TRIBUNA POPULAR, 12-18 Sep 80)..... 151

Exporters Association Analyzes Caribbean Policies
(C. R. Chavez; EL UNIVERSAL, 1 Sep 80)..... 153

BRIEFS

COLOMBIAN, VENEZUELAN BORDER PROGRAMS--Maracaibo 16 Sep --The binational enterprise Prointegracion, formed by the Colombian and Venezuelan governments, will reactivate and intensify its programs for the development of the border zone between the two countries. The undertaking was set forth by Colombian engineer Gonzalo Gomez Hernandez, who assumed effective today the general management of Prointegracion, which has been without a head since November of last year. In his first statement to journalists, he said his main commitment and desire are the reactivation of this enterprise that the Venezuelan and Colombian governments, showing good judgement, formed in 1977 as an embodiment of prointegrationist ideals. "And within those terms of reference and philosophy," he added, "we will combine our efforts to advance the projects on which Prointegracion has been working, which are a joint aspiration of Colombia and Venezuela and which have been given form in this enterprise for the promotion of programs that will benefit our two sister nations. Based on these concepts, Prointegracion has devoted itself to defining the criteria for the attainment of its objectives and bringing to an end the further putting off of border integration plans." He indicated that work has been going forward on some projects that in his judgement warranted priority because of their higher degree of feasibility and better chances of success. "These projects, which I consider banner projects," he said, consist of a precooked maize plant; a plant for exploiting the African oil palm, which would be located in Paraguaipoa; putting to use the coking coals of Norte de Santander; and the installation of a leather industry in the border zone of Guajira. I consider that the programs I have cited must be brought to realization through intensive effort by the two countries, and that they would bring economic and social life to the border zones, to that depopulated geographic universe which merits the attention of us all." The new general manager of Prointegracion, who says he is a native of the department of Guajira--although he stresses that his ancestral origin is Korean--mentioned other projects, among which he cited the possibility of forming a transport enterprise that he considers a pressing need. Lastly, he said that what he most wants is to be useful to Colombia and Venezuela and that he hopes to achieve his aspirations in this regard through Prointegracion. [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 17 Sep 80 p D-8] 9399

URUGUAYAN AMBASSADOR TO BRAZIL--The Uruguayan Government has appointed accountant (Roberto Gonzalez Casal) new ambassador to Brazil. (Gonzalez Casal) will replace Gen Eduardo Zubia, who has resigned. [PY132000 Montevideo Radio El Espectador Network in Spanish 1600 GMT 22 Oct 80 PY]

SALTO GRANDE DAM--Uruguayan and Argentine officials today attended a ceremony to put into operation the fifth turbine of the Salto Grande Dam, which is being built by the two countries. [Montevideo Radio El Espectador Network in Spanish 1600 GMT 2 Oct 80 PY]

COLOMBIA, VENEZUELA INVEST IN BAHAMAS--San Cristobal, 15 Sep --Colombian and Venezuelan plenipotentiary missions will meet tomorrow in Bogota to initiate a negotiation for acquisition of a sugar refinery in the Bahama Islands. This was revealed here by Joaquin Perez Rodriguez, president of CENAZUCA [Sugar Refineries], who added that both missions have official government status and that after talks between themselves in the Colombian capital they will go to the Bahamas to negotiate directly with that government for the refinery. Perez Rodriguez also indicated that 200 million bolivars will be invested in the border refinery: 100 million of these will go into the Zulia plant (Colombia) and the other 100 million into the Occidente plant operating in Urena. He said 75 million bolivars are currently being invested in enlarging the Venezuelan plant and that this phase is to be concluded early in the first quarter of 1981. Perez Rodriguez indicated that this sugar cane milling and grinding plant, which now covers 2,500 hectares, is being enlarged to cover 10,000 hectares. It will become the country's largest in the months to follow. The participation of the Colombian sugar producers, especially in the Norte de Santander department (Cucuta) is certain to increase beginning next year when the enlargement of the Urena plant has been completed. [Text] [Caracas EL NACIONAL in Spanish 16 Sep 80 p D-6] 9399

ATMOSPHERIC RESEARCH MEETING--A meeting of experts from American air forces was opened in Montevideo this morning to discuss the world program for global atmospheric research. [Montevideo Radio El Espectador Network in Spanish 1600 GMT 20 Oct 80 PY]

CSO: 3010

PRESS REACTION TO NOBEL PEACE PRIZE DISTINCTION

Nation's Antiterrorist Tradition Stressed

Buenos Aires LA NACION in Spanish 15 Oct 80 p 10

[Text] This year, in accordance with the established rule, the Norwegian Parliament has granted the award bearing the name of Alfred Nobel, conferred for peace. For the second time, the distinction has been granted to a fellow countryman of ours, the sculptor Adolfo Perez Esquivel. It was previously given to Dr Carlos Saavedra Lamas who, as foreign minister, brought the war waged between Paraguay and Bolivia to its conclusion.

The decision, regarding which there have been controversial interpretations as to its obvious political connotation, is unquestionably, beyond any doubt, a satisfaction for Argentina.

Adolfo Perez Esquivel, who heads the so-called Peace and Justice Service, with headquarters in Buenos Aires and branches in other Latin American countries, has distinguished himself with a dedicated campaign on behalf of fundamental human rights. According to the Norwegian committee, it has been based exclusively on nonviolent methods. As a result, the granting of the prize is by way of encouragement of solutions to conflicts through means of that nature, as was the case when the Soviet dissident, Andrey Sakharov, was selected in 1975.

The express recognition, set forth in the whereas clauses of the resolution, of what Argentina has suffered as a result of the action of extremist terrorist organizations "which created an atmosphere of insecurity and fear, through assassinations, attacks, kidnappings and blackmail," is quite significant, because it demonstrates the features of a dirty war wherein the government and people of our country had to defend themselves from aggression and combat it with outright efficiency. In the extremes surrounding the urgent, necessary and just repression of the excesses that caused so many innocent victims, it is possible that there were mistakes and overlimitations. The latter may have prompted Perez Esquivel to make a protest, which could have been sincere, although not always correct.

In any event, the grounds invoked by the Norwegian committee contribute to the assumption that, in future awards, the prize may be granted symbolically to those who died, or who suffered physical wounds or moral damage as a result of the criminal activity of terrorists. In this way, the undeniable significance of the award would be exemplary, and would serve, in a way, as reparation for the individuals or countries that were its victims.

In our history and during the period cited by the organization making the award, there were Lt Gen Aramburu, Gens Juan Carlos Sanchez and Jorge E. Caceres Monie, Cesareo A. Cardozo and Carlos O. Actis, Lt Col Larrabure, Capt Viola and a long list of military from the three branches, businessmen, labor leaders and individuals dissociated from any political struggle. All of them died as a result of attacks by the subversive groups and "special formations." Their memory demands justice which could be done posthumously, as noted, or in some similar fashion.

Unfortunately, Argentina is not the only country in which extremist violence has operated in such a merciless manner; and one need only consider what is happening every day in Italy, Spain and many other European, African, Asian and American countries, in order to be assured that the Norwegian committee, as it has cited what occurred in our country, will find a way to decide in this matter.

Decisions such as the one conferring a prize on an Argentine fellow citizen are an opportunity to state that, in our country, there is a desire for the total force of human rights, without implying that a political or ideological label is placed on a protest. If it is to be effective and authentic, it will have to be universal, without stalling by any sector or faction.

No one can evade solidarity with nonviolence, and that trend of opinion should be gratified by the aforementioned selection. It proves that, on two occasions, Argentina has aroused the world's attention, through the endeavor of one of its sons, with the invocation of mankind's responsible conscience.

Perez Esquivel's Merits Cited

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 14 Oct 80 p 11

[Article by Manfred Schoenfeld: "An Award for Pacification, Reconciliation and Human Dignity"]

[Text] The day before yesterday, we were given the privilege of seeing and hearing on the television screen the Pope delivering his message to Argentina on the occasion of the closing of the Marian Congress in Mendoza. The views of John Paul II were, in general, on the lofty spiritual level that marks his person, action and thought; in other words, there was no part of the brief address that could be regarded as superfluous phraseology or conventional verbosity. Nevertheless, we think that one of the highlights (in our opinion, the highlight) was when the Roman pontiff said:

"...Love your brothers, especially those who are suffering and weeping now, so that the Argentine society, consolidated on the pillars of fraternal love and reconciliation, can truly exclaim: 'See how good and delightful it is to live together as brothers.'" (As we know, the latter quotation comes from the Psalms.)

The echo of this appeal from John Paul II on behalf of those who "suffer and weep" had not yet died out in our consciousness when, the next day (at a relatively early hour yesterday morning) the cable from Oslo brought us the news that an Argentine (one of those who have worked for several years in their own country and in others, on behalf of pacification, reconciliation and human dignity) was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize.

Nonviolence

Our fellow countryman, Adolfo Perez Esquivel, received that highest expression of international recognition because his effort for assistance and consolation was made in a nonviolent manner. He is, in his own way, without being a clergyman, an evangelizer, because (as he noted upon being interviewed after the granting of the award had been announced) the Gospel is present in his sentiments, his endeavor and his life.

He has collaborated with personages of international renown (in Brazil, for example, with Bishop Camara and Cardinal Lorscheider), and he had already been nominated once, 2 years ago, as a candidate for the Nobel Peace Prize by Mairead Corrigan, one of the two courageous Irishwomen who had won it in 1976 for their unprejudiced and tolerant effort on behalf of the pacification of Northern Ireland, which has been bloodied and destroyed by hatred and pseudoreligious fanaticism.

The Cause of Human Rights

It is important to point out that architect Perez Esquivel by no means considers the award that has just been conferred upon him an expression of hostility directed ostensibly against the Argentine Government.

It is true that Perez Esquivel was imprisoned for over a year, but he did not renege on his effort on behalf of human rights on that account. The fact that he has not done so is precisely what makes him different from many who have tried to become involved in that cause in order to exploit it for political purposes.

He has not capitalized on the grief of others to carry water to any sinister ideological gristmill, nor has he allowed his endeavor to become a tool for subversion.

Hence the term "human rights," as indicated by his effort and his statements, has recovered the natural dignity that is inherent in it, and is not, rather, a quid pro quo in the international diplomatic arena, as it has unfortunately been interpreted on more than one occasion, both in our governmental areas and in those of other countries (for example, the United States).

The Peace Prize

With the passage of years, the Nobel Peace Prize has evolved in the same way that the world has changed since these awards were created by the inventor of dynamite.

At that time, the main concern in Europe, because the awards were for years essentially of "Eurocentric" orientation, revolved around peace, the formal maintenance thereof among the powers and the reduction in armament and in the number of military troops kept permanently on call.

As the years elapsed, the Peace Prizes at times assumed an inevitable appearance of being "politically loaded." But this was obviously due to the fact that there were regimes which considered themselves alluded to or offended, after some citizen subjected to their tyranny received the award: the German writer, Carl Von Ossietsky, who was a winner in 1935, while jailed in Hitler's Germany; the black pacifist,

Albert Luthuli, in 1960, imprisoned by the government of the Republic of South Africa; or, finally, Andrey Sakharov, the great physicist and fighter for peace and human rights in the Soviet Union, who received it in 1975, and who is now paying for it indirectly, exiled in Gorkiy.

The Oslo Storting (the legislative Diet of the Kingdom of Norway) which grants the award is above suspicion of the "political charge," and in any event has a right to maintain, tacitly, that "if the shoe fits, put it on."

However, Argentina (which, with Adolfo Perez Esquivel, now has four Nobel Prizes, ranking it ahead of any other Latin American country from this standpoint) has in its possession two who are related to the changing method of contributing to the reign of peace in the word: the first, granted to Dr Carlos Saavedra Lamas, in 1936, for his intensive endeavor crowned with success which put an end to the Chaco War between Bolivia and Paraguay; and now the second, which relates to peace in the broader sense, namely, that of the struggle against the factors which, by violating human dignity, end up by destabilizing the world.

2909
CSO: 3010

GOVERNMENT ATTEMPTS TO REDUCE COCA PRODUCTION

President Appeals to Farmers

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 21 Sep 80 pp 1, 12

[Text] Cochabamba, 20 Sep--The president of the military junta, Gen Luis Garcia Meza, said: "We have to replace coca production with other products so that it will not be said of us that we are a nation of cocaine addicts." Garcia Meza added that to achieve this the National Reconstruction Government will take "drastic and harsh measures toward living with dignity and so that we will not be accused of poisoning the Bolivian people with cocaine."

He said that for 20 years the politicians did not do anything, "because instead of working for their homeland they worked to line their own pockets, by taking money abroad to live like pashas."

Garcia Meza announced that to organize peasant cooperatives he has delivered five tractors so that the Seventh Division Command can distribute them to rural centers.

He said he will immediately enact a decree through which all the production of Chapare will be centralized in Sacaba. He added that the Tutumayu and Warawara dams will be built but that the peasants have to demand the achievement of these projects from the district authorities, since the latter are ready to work. If they were not, they would be "replaced."

Peasant Demonstration

The chief executive made these statements at a peasant rally that took place this afternoon in the main square of Sacaba, Chapare Province. Garcia Meza was welcomed by schoolchildren, peasants and general public.

Various ministers of state and military chiefs, as well as district and provincial authorities, attended.

President Garcia yesterday visited the district prefect, Lt Col Javier Pammo Rodriquez at Setton Hospital where the latter underwent delicate surgery. This morning, before going to Sacaba, Garcia Meza was in the Magy restaurant and attended the national horse show.

Tomorrow he will be in Cliza where his wife, the first lady of Bolivia, will be named "favorite daughter" of Cliza, where a new anniversary is being celebrated. In the afternoon Garcia Meza will fly by helicopter to Morochata and Calchani, some 200 km from the capital.

The events in Sacaba began with the welcoming address of Mayor Fidel Via. Then there were speeches by the president of the civic committee, Carlos Angulo, and agrarian leaders Tomas Quiroga of El Morro Peasants Union and Leoncio Torrido, departmental executive of the farmers. They all expressed their support for the National Reconstruction Government and offered to fight against extremism. They asked that several projects be carried out, such as dams and the centralization of products from Chapare in Sacaba.

The President Speaks

The Chief of State made the following address: "As we have been doing since the military-peasant pact was again brought up to date, today we are again seeing this massive spontaneous demonstration by our brother peasants and the people of the town of Sacaba, as a show of support by all of you for the National Reconstruction Government.

"We have often thought--and when we go through the various towns in Bolivia, we see that we have not progressed at all--we continue as we were 20 years ago, and we also wonder what the political parties did, what the politicians have done for Bolivia, what the politicians have done for their peasant brothers, what they have done for the workers and the miners. All they have done is make the people not have faith in anything. All they have done is make the Bolivian people's backwardness continue. Now the new National Reconstruction Government, with a new generation and new men believes that we cannot deceive the Bolivian people, and we cannot end up promising that which we are not going to do. We have come, and for a long time we have been carrying out a dialog with our peasant brothers, with the worker and with the miner, to find out their needs. We are coming to realize that we need everything, because we do not have anything; because instead of working for their homeland, many rogues who are deceiving the Bolivian people have started to work to line their own pockets. And that they have not even left in Bolivia all the resources that they have put into their pockets. Rather they have taken them abroad to live like pashas, while we, the Bolivians who love our land, are living under the same conditions and thinking about how to repair our nation. We are thinking about how we are going to straighten out the economic problem.

"Nevertheless, during these 3 years, the politicians, through constant and continual elections, have emptied the national treasury. They have used the money of the poor and of the children, leaving them without food and without bread, to pursue their election campaign, to deceive their peasant brothers. There was a Genaro Flores who was selling our peasant brothers to an extremist party, to a party that does not love Bolivia, to a party that was also selling Bolivia to certain foreign powers. Peasant Brother, for this reason we are here to speak with you in plain Spanish, so that we all understand one another, and let us speak the same language and not talk promises. We do not come with promises. We come to find out your needs, because the Armed Forces are going to work alongside all of you.

"Peasant brothers, what this National Reconstruction Government asks is that once we start to work, our nation needs the efforts of all its children. The government is starting to distribute the necessary tractors so that our peasant brothers will form cooperatives. For Sacaba we have brought five tractors that we are going to deliver to the commander of the Seventh Division for the cooperatives to be organized, and then the tractors will be handed over to them.

"A short time ago, the president of the civic committee asked us for a decree to centralize all of Chapare's production in Sacaba. We are going to order the decree, but since the government is giving them what they need, they also have to support this government, not with political consciousness but with nationalistic consciousness. We have to change the face of Bolivia, peasant brothers, and you, who are near Chapare, must replace coca with other things, so that it will not be said of us that we are a nation of cocaine addicts. To this end the government is going to take harsh and drastic measures, because it is better for all of us Bolivians to live with dignity and not be accused of poisoning the Bolivian people with cocaine. You must improve your thinking, so that you make suggestions to plant a better product than coca."

Finally, Garcia Meza announced that construction is underway on the Tutimayu and Wara Wara dams [as published]. He said that the peasants must demand these projects from the local authorities "so that they will fulfill what the President is speaking about. If not, the authorities will be replaced."

Garcia Meza added that the government has raised the flags of Villarroel, Busch and Barrientos, through which action "we have now called upon all the nationalist forces."

He declared, "We are forgiving those who hold foreign or mistaken policies, because we are all Bolivians, and I believe that it is necessary for us to examine our conscience and live first as Bolivians. Let us work for our homeland, for our household and for the community that you represent."

'PRESENCIA' Hails Initiative

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 22 Sep 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Coca Growing"]

[Text] The problem of cocaine manufacturing in our country is at least 25 years old, and it has not been met with sufficiently effective measures. We cannot say that nothing has been done, but preventive and punitive measures have not substantially decreased manufacturing and trafficking in cocaine. Moreover, the tremendous profits obtained from this illegal trade have attracted more and more persons-- including peasants-- with the result that the authorities' struggle is increasingly difficult, despite all the willingness they may devote to this effort.

The situation has led to the President of the Republic himself, in a recent visit to Chapare, stating to the peasants the need to eliminate coca growing and replace it with other products that will not bring the same results. Thus, he touched upon one of the solutions that can be effective, as similar ones taken in other countries have demonstrated.

We must emphasize the harm that Bolivia has suffered up to now because of the narcotics traffickers' activities. Above all, the country's good name is at stake. For many years we have had the unfortunate reputation of being one of the big suppliers of cocaine for the whole world. But this is not all the damage. Given the ease of obtaining the narcotic, Bolivian drug addicts have already become evident, especially among youth. In the face of this dangerous fact we will have to react forcefully, because this problem touches a sector of the population especially deserving of protection.

The profits from this business do not go to the nation. The gains are for the drug traffickers, for gangs of international scope, and as crumbs for some coca growers who have observed that this item attains considerable rises in price.

No crime results from a single cause. But we can and must try to eliminate some of the foundations of these causes. Among these causes is, certainly, the fact that the raw material coca can be obtained in Bolivia at low prices; only some recently enacted precautions for its marketing have to win out. One of the basic points, perhaps the main one, lies in coca production. Therefore, if the growing were reduced, we would have taken a big step in regulating this type of offense.

Let us not forget that there have been other countries that faced similar problems. This happened, for instance, in Iran, which up to a quarter of a century ago was the main supplier of opium and its derivatives to the Western world. Since then the production of narcotics decreased because the government eliminated growing legally and physically and closely supervised the enforcement of these measures. Something similar was done in other nations, such as Turkey, with good results.

In Bolivia regulation over growing has to be extended, and those dealing in cocaine should be seriously investigated. The quantity required is small to supply the domestic market and to satisfy a habit that, otherwise, must tend to disappear.

Obviously this action will harm some growers. But we have to consider that it is not possible to follow the present course, with a production that we know for the most part ends in physical and mental damage both domestically and abroad. The excuse that there will be growers who are harmed is not acceptable. We will have to stress the need to replace the products being grown, even with less profitable ones, but which are also less dangerous. We do not believe that, in the long run, there is a lack of means and of foreign and international help to carry forward this campaign that has to be fulfilled, as much through an effort of persuasion as by vigorous punishment, if necessary.

Report Cited

La Pas PRESENCIA in Spanish 21 Sep 80 p 8

[Article: "International Report: Excessive Growing of Coca Threatens Agricultural Production in Bolivia"]

[Text] A report by the International Commission on the Fight Against Drugs points out that Bolivia's agricultural production is threatened by the excessive growing of the coca leaf.

It notes that traditionally Bolivia was compelled to produce the necessary food products. The report states that a large part of the country is not suitable for agriculture and that half of the population has to work at farming to satisfy the people's minimal food needs.

"But now," it adds, "in view of the expansion of illegal narcotics production, the Bolivian farmers are replacing the planting of food products with the coca leaf."

The report determines that unless this trend is corrected, Bolivia will soon be facing the problem of not being able to provide the necessary food for its people.

The commission explains that signs of an imminent food shortage are seen in the markets, where the prices of essential items, from potatoes to corn, are rising rapidly, and the effects are being felt by workers tied down to a salary. The report adds that "the only ones who have not been affected are those holding the largest part of the profits from the narcotic drugs industry."

According to the International Commission, the profits from illegal trading in this alkaloid have created 50 new millionaires in Bolivia, some of them on the scale of more than 30 million dollars. "Also," the commission says, "this trade has created countless new, poor farmers who must earn their living dangerously by growing coca shrubs high up in the mountains, while most of the population is facing an alarming shortage of food products because the farmers are no longer planting food products."

The report states that the other by-products of the illegal coca industry are well known. It adds, "Recently accusations were exchanged among government bodies responsible for reducing the narcotics traffic." It says rumors are common of bribery and that addiction is increasing. The report goes on to point out that the regions where coca production is the main occupation have become virtual states in which drug traffickers rule through heavily armed gangs.

Government Action

The document which, on the whole, refers to Bolivia, states that the government, upon realizing the low production of food products, has taken measures to reduce the harvesting of coca leaves. A special license, says the report, is needed for growing and selling coca. The Bolivian police force is carrying out inspections throughout the country to find and destroy the illegal coca shrub plantations. Despite this action, an increasingly larger area is being devoted to growing coca, since the profits for selling this plant illegally are greater--between 40 and 100 percent--than the profits from selling coca legally.

Referring to ways of battling the excessive production of coca, the International Commission suggests that the government increase its operations against the traffickers, since these measures would make trafficking in the refined drug much more risky. The report adds that the government must focus its efforts on programs that will allow the poor farmers to have an adequate income so that they do not have to resort to the illegal growing of the coca leaf.

Price of Coca Protested

La Paz PRESENCIA in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 9

[Text] The continual increase in coca prices on the legal market is causing serious economic damage to the mining industry, states the National Mining Board, which unites Bolivia's small miners.

A letter sent by the organization to Minister of the Interior Col Luis Arce asks that urgent measures be taken to check the excessive rise in coca prices, to avoid problems with the mine workers.

According to the small miners, "The supplying of coca leaves for our workers, who number several thousand, has substantially worsened, creating at the present time a grave problem, first because of the tremendous difficulty in obtaining coca on the legal market and secondly because of the unrestrained and excessive rise in prices, which have reached an incredible increase of 1,400 percent."

"The seriousness lies in our not being able to compete in price with the illegal market," adds the small miners' letter, which suggests that a way be studied to make easier the supplying of coca to the mining districts.

The letter suggests that coca consignments seized by the authorities of the Office of Control of Dangerous Substances be transferred for sale to workers in the mining companies.

Prices

According to the small miners in January 1979 a drum of coca cost 600 Bolivian pesos. At the end of 1979 the price rose to 3,000 Bolivian pesos.

The price rise continues. Last August a drum of coca sold at 9,000 pesos.

The small miners are asking that the system of price restraints be improved in the legal coca market, as an aid to the fight against narcotics trafficking.

9545
CSO: 5100

PRESIDENT FIGUEIREDO INTERVIEWED PRIOR TO CHILE VISIT

Santiago QUE PASA in Spanish 9-15 Oct 80 pp 10-11

[Interview with President Joao Figueiredo by Lillian Calm; date and place not given]

[Text] Who is President Figueiredo? We ask him to describe himself and his description reflects his personality: "It is difficult to describe him. It is even more difficult for me to describe myself (to say nothing of being dangerous and embarrassing). In order that the question does not go unanswered, I will say that the president is what he has always been as a Christian, as a man, as a soldier and as a citizen."

President Joao does not let any questions go unanswered. That is why he answered our questionnaire--very near closing time--only two days before he arrived in Chile.

What is the significance of your trip to Chile? He does not hesitate to answer: "My trip is part of the traditional cordial relations between Brazil and Chile. Our policy in Latin America calls for coexistence that contributes to the intensification of cooperation among the nations of the region. The Chile visit will be an important and significant point in the strengthening of our friendly relations which have led to bilateral initiatives that are more and more promising." And he adds: "It is likely that new agreements will be signed. Nevertheless, I believe that more important is the exhaustive and broad study of the different aspects of our relations whose outlook is favorable to the undertaking of activities that are mutually beneficial to both nations."

We then asked him what role he would assign to Brazil in South America. He replied that his country "fully assumes its condition as a Latin American." He explains: "We share the principles and norms which govern regional coexistence. In addition we are ready to work together with our Latin American brothers, in the spirit of solidarity and mutual respect, so that we may reach adequate levels of economic development. Cooperation and integration efforts are important parts in the formulation of strategies and proposals for economic development and should be furthered.

South America is not a geographic arena for Brazilian foreign policy. There is a sharing of values and a willingness to work in common. There is a tradition of solidarity and a desire for cooperation. Ethics and the magnitude of specific methods of cooperation are the elements which define our role on the continent."

Instability Rather Than Stability

Why was Brazil not interested in becoming a member of a future Southern Cone Pact sponsored by Argentina?

"A pact of that nature was not proposed to us," the president answered. "Brazil's Latin American policy is basically guided by cooperation and solidarity which are based on strict respect for the principle of non-intervention. Therefore, our policy is coexistence with everyone as we seek to contribute to harmonious relations among nations. We seek a position that will permanently aid expansion of continental relations." And he continues: "At the same time, we reject as a natural corollary to our position any form of political ambition or hegemony that favors actions guided by 'balance of power' mechanisms. I firmly believe that this is not our vocation and this kind of political attitude, in addition to being unnecessary, goes against the tradition of cooperation on the continent. From this political picture in which coexistence is the basic norm, it is easy to deduce why we oppose the idea of participating in a Southern Cone Pact. In this respect, I would like to make a correction because I don't believe that the idea has an official sponsor. It is a concept that the press has aired informally but it has never been formally proposed precisely because as I see it it is not in keeping with our traditions of coexistence. In short, I don't believe that a pact of this nature favors the efforts of continental solidarity. It would create divisions that should not exist. It would lead to actions, facilitate instability more than stability. Our road is another one. It is the road of solidarity."

And a question on internal matters: Is the democratic opening process which Brazil is experiencing a planned action or has it developed naturally from events? President Figueiredo states: "Today there is no doubt about the democratic philosophy of the 1964 Revolution. There is no doubt about my government's intention to promote the task of returning democracy to Brazil. Thus there will always be an element of deliberation in the process, an element of will which governs its initial impetus. It is important to note that the element of will is not isolated. It is necessary to remember always that the process begun in 1964 clearly has a sense of popular support which has been maintained to the present in several ways. At the same time, the process cannot be disassociated from events because it is bringing about democratic changes. It cannot be isolated from the full impact of the movements in society."

And he adds: "A democratic program not based on the intent and will of the diverse groups in our society, one that does not accept pluralism and its manifestations, would be incoherent. There will be an element of uncertainty in the process which is essential to the construction of democracy. Events are not contrary to deliberation, they interact and in the pluralistic framework they weave the institutional framework for democracy."

Faithful to Nonintervention

We again focus on foreign policy. Is Brazil closer to a Bolivia governed by General Garcia Meza than it would have been to a Bolivia governed by Siles Suazo? His reply is categorical: "As a neighboring Latin American country with whom we maintain the most traditional friendly relations, have intensive trade and share important projects, we will always be ready to have close ties with Bolivia. As for the internal changes in Bolivia, we have no opinion. We are unconditionally faithful to the principle of nonintervention."

We then ask a question about Itamaraty, the Brazilian foreign ministry which sets an example, not only on the continent but throughout the world, of professionalism in foreign service. What role does Itamaraty have in the Brazilian government? Joao Baptista Figueiredo states: "Itamaraty is responsible for Brazil's foreign relations in its various dimensions. It is the president's main advisory group in the formulation of foreign policy. It is the agency responsible for the many daily tasks of our diplomacy." And he reiterates: "It is a professional body. We take special care in training our diplomats and only those who have studied at the Rio Branco Institute are admitted into the service. I believe that this fact coupled with the tradition of clearly defining our foreign policy objectives distinguishes Itamaraty as a foreign ministry."

One final question. What is Brazilian foreign policy based on? "It is based on principles of nonintervention, on the peaceful solution of controversies, self-determination, respect for treaties and others which constitute the doctrinal values of the principles and purpose of the UN and OAS charters. These are philosophical bases which guide concrete and specific diplomatic action at every turn. It is precisely this coherence of principle and action which has characterized Brazilian diplomacy." He adds: "On the other hand, at the theoretical level, we have oriented diplomatic tasks using the guidelines of universalism, of excellent coexistence and national dignity. To properly carry out the basic principles of our foreign policy, we feel that universal coexistence is mandatory. The international community should adopt forms of conduct which accept pluralism and in which differences are a driving force for closer ties."

President Figueiredo concludes: "Universalism is a proposal for participation and frank dialogue based on mutual respect in which there is a genuine search for effective solutions to the great problems affecting us. These could be summarized in two words: peace and development."

8599
CSO: 3010

POLL SHOWS DECLINE IN GOVERNMENT POPULARITY

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 2 Oct 80 p 4

[Text] Sao Paulo--The level of the popularity of President Joao Figueiredo's government dropped to its lowest point last August, when 59 percent of the Brazilians questioned in a Gallup Institute survey indicated their disapproval, while another 33 percent expressed satisfaction with the federal administration. Eight percent had no opinion.

The study was carried out between 10 and 28 August, with a sampling of 2,896 persons living in urban areas in all the Brazilian states, with an age, sex and socioeconomic level breakdown similar to that characteristic of the national population.

The Gallup Institute study, entitled "Declining Approval of President Figueiredo's Government Among Brazilians," had but a single question. "How do you feel President Figueiredo is governing the country: very well, well, normally, badly or very badly?" The results showed that there was greater approval of the functioning of the government in 1979 than in 1980.

According to the study, the percentage of approval increased between May and October of last year, when 59 percent approval was recorded as compared to 47 percent in the first study in May.

Between October of last year and January of this year, according to the Gallup Institute, there was a great drop in popularity, with 52 percent of those surveyed expressing disapproval of the government. A section of the document released yesterday explains the reasons for the decline.

"A drop in the popularity of the Figueiredo government occurred between October of 1979 and January of 1980. It will be remembered that a sudden change in its style of government occurred during this period as a result of the episodes which occurred in Santa Catarina at the end of November 1979. Until that month, President Figueiredo had maintained relations with the population reflecting greater informality."

Apart from this reason, which was the cause of a "certain popular discontent," the survey body listed the successive increases in living costs due to rising oil product prices, and the development of "greater popular discontent with the current economic conditions Brazilians are facing."

From January to April of this year, according to the Gallup Institute, the figures reflecting approval of the present government remained stable, between 27 and 39 percent. In August, however, a new factor contributed to the declining prestige of the government: younger persons and those with greater purchasing power began to express discontent.

Disapproval of the federal government in the age group between 18 and 29 was 63 percent, as compared to 59 percent in the group between 30 and 40 years of age and 50 percent for persons over 50.

In economic class A, disapproval of the government ran at 70 percent, while in group B discontent was expressed by about 61 percent, with figures of 56 percent and 50 percent for groups C and E respectively.

In terms of sex, 60 percent of the men surveyed expressed disapproval of the government of the president of the republic, while this was the case with 58 percent of the women.

In surveys made in the southern states (Parana, Santa Catarina and Rio Grande do Sul) and those in the Southeast (Sao Paulo, Rio de Janeiro, Minas Gerais and Espirito Santo), greater government unpopularity was revealed than in the North, Northeast and Center-West.

The southern states expressed 60 percent disapproval, while the figure for those in the North and Center-East was 51 percent. In all the states, the highest level of discontent was seen in the middle-sized towns.

Minister Questioned

Communications Minister Said Farhat declined to express any view on the Gallup study, noting instead that the SECOM [Mass Media Secretariat] released an opinion poll in August which had been taken in July showing support of the government of President Joao Figueiredo on the part of about 60 percent of the population. In Minister Farhat's view, the comment by the Gallup Institute that there was a change in the style of the government of President Joao Figueiredo after the incidents in Florianopolis in November of last year is also without foundation.

"The style only changed in the view of those who have not observed the president during his trips, those who cannot follow him personally. Those who see the president on his trips throughout Brazil see the fraternization which always marks his visits to the cities and the enthusiasm with which he is welcomed by the people," Said Farhat said.

5157
CSO: 3001

SECOM CONTESTS POLL SHOWING DECLINE IN FIGUEIREDO'S POPULARITY

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 8 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] Brasilia--Yesterday afternoon, the Mass Media Secretariat (SECOM) of the Presidency of the Republic distributed a note contesting an analysis by the Gallup Institute made from a public opinion poll which showed that the popularity of President Figueiredo is declining. SECOM explained that the figures collected by Gallup in August, when compared with those of IBOPE [Brazilian Public Opinion and Statistics Institute] in June, are similar, and that the difference lies only in the analysis.

According to SECOM, the Gallup Institute considered the answer "fair" to the question about President Figueiredo's performance as being "negative," whereas, in its opinion, the rating should have been "neutral." The IBOPE poll, taken in June throughout the country at the behest of SECOM, was analyzed as highly positive for President Figueiredo's image. That of Gallup, taken in August on its own initiative, showed through its analysis that the president's prestige was declining.

The note from SECOM read as follows:

"Comparison between the Gallup poll of August 1980 and the IBOPE poll taken in June 1980.

"Gallup, August		IBOPE, June
"Question: President Figueiredo is governing		Question: How would you rate President Figueiredo's performance for this first year of his administration:
"Very well	61 percent
"Well	27 percent
"Fairly	34 percent	6.4 percent: optimal
"Badly	12 percent	22.9 percent: good
"Very badly	13 percent	38.9 percent: fair
"No opinion	8 percent	12.5 percent: poor
		16.5 percent: very poor
		2.8 percent: no opinion

"Observations:

"1. In both instances, the possible answers are equivalent: two are clearly positive (very well, well; optimal, good); and two are clearly negative (badly, very badly; (poor, very poor).

"2. Both polls included a neutral answer, namely: 'fairly' (Gallup) and 'fair' (IBOPE).

"3. Therefore, the correct analysis of the data should be made by adding the positive answers, on the one hand, and the negative ones, on the other.

"4. Thus, we find: Gallup: very well plus well equals 33 percent. IBOPE: optimal plus good equals 29.3 percent. Badly plus very badly equals 25 percent. Poor plus very poor equals 29.0 percent. Fairly equals 34 percent; and fair equals 38.9 percent.

"5. As is evident, the indexes of approval increased between June and August: from 29.3 percent (IBOPE) to 33 percent (Gallup).

"6. And the indexes of disapproval decreased during the same period, from 29.0 percent (IBOPE) to 25 percent (Gallup).

"7. It is quite natural that, when answering a question which involves such a complex judgment as that relating to an entire government, the frequency of intermediate positions, such as 'fairly' or 'fair' should be greater. And that is exactly what happened in both polls, with rather similar percentages (34 percent in the Gallup poll, and 38 percent in the IBOPE one).

"8. Now the analyst could arbitrarily include that group among the approvals or the disapprovals. But by so doing he would completely change the numbers represented in the answers, according to his preference."

Mistake

The government's leader in the Senate, Jarbas Passarinho, attributed the results of the poll on President Figueiredo's popularity released yesterday by the press to a mistake in interpretation.

According to Passarinho, the information that he has on the Gallup poll is that the answers rated as "fairly" were added to the opinions "badly" and "very badly"; and hence it arrived at a decline in the prestige of the president of the republic.

This is also the view of the government's leader in the Chamber, Nelson Marchezan: He said: "What we all know is that President Figueiredo is understood and backed by the Brazilian people. He enjoys popularity, and that is obvious. Therefore, the results of that poll are not consistent with the reality that we know."

Uniformity

The PP [Popular Party] leader in the Chamber, Deputy Thales Ramalho, ascribed the decline in President Figueiredo's popularity to "the lack of uniformity among the members of the government."

He also included as reasons the economic policy adopted by the government, and the high cost of living.

The president of the PMDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement Party], Deputy Ulysses Guimaraes, claimed that he was expecting results of this kind, "because the major problems which are besetting the underprivileged classes, such as inflation and the cost of living, must be blamed on the government."

2909
CSO: 3001

PP: 'A PARTY BORN WITH A CALLING FOR POWER'

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 5 Oct 80 p 6

[Text] Brasilia--In numbers, the Popular Party [PP] is smaller than the three major parties in the National Congress. It has 64 deputies and seven senators. Insofar as ambition is concerned, it is the only one which describes itself as "a party with a calling for power." PP is striving to obtain a majority in the two legislative houses and to win the largest number of governors in the 1982 elections. For this purpose, despite the fact that it came into existence under the distrustful gaze of both the opposition and Planalto Palace, PP has recorded in its book of founders the names of individuals who are illustrious and who have long political experience, in the South, North, Center and East of the country. "It is a party which has cadres," as its top-ranking leaders are fond of stating.

With 62 representatives in the Chamber of Deputies and eight in the Federal Senate, PP was formed from the dissident groups of ARENA [National Renewal Alliance] and from groups in PMDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement Party] which did not want to remain with the former comrades from MDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement].

Emerging from the remains of bipartisanism, in its beginnings PP was not given many prospects in the Brazilian political context.

Furthermore, PP came into being with the accusation of being an "auxiliary line" of the government, or at least of being the "reliable opposition" that the Planalto Palace hoped to have in the establishment of its plan for political openness.

At the time, two things were said about those who joined PP: The former ARENA members would not forget their past in the government, and the former MDB members would have a vast area in which to express opportunism, a minority tendency in the former MDB.

In any event, the Popular Party was organized weakly in some states and strongly in others, such as Rio de Janeiro, where it began with the leadership of the state executive branch. During the week, O GLOBO listened to the top-ranking leaders of the Popular Party and, on the basis of their statements, is revealing the basic guidelines of the group, its political proposals for the country and what those leaders think now about the accusations that they received when they were actually arranging to organize a new party.

"There was never any fact which would entitle anyone to imagine PP as an auxiliary line for the government."

The secretary of the Popular Party, Deputy Miro Teixeira, emphatically states that "practice has determined the profile of the party." He says that PP is "in the vanguard of the discussion of national issues, assuming pioneer positions, which are always followed by the other opposition parties."

According to Miro and other leaders of the party, that question of the nature of the party does not make sense: PP is on the opposition, with its program and action. The fact is, they observe, that PP, being on the opposition, is striving assiduously for one goal: to come to power. It is in that area that the party will show its pragmatism in its entirety.

Deputy Herbert Levy remarks: "Our party is the most viable path for the non-radical forces which are turning increasingly against the government. The members of PP cannot be accused of radicalism and inability; hence the government is convinced that the solution is really PP; since, if a radical opposition considered unprepared to assume the responsibilities of government should win in 1982, there would be a crisis which would result in a setback owing to reaction from the Armed Forces."

Thales Ramalho says: "It is unfortunate that there are people who think that the shortest path is that of a straight line, always advancing."

Aged 57, Deputy Thales Ramalho is the PP's leader in the Chamber and a politician recognized by everyone as one of the most able in the National Congress. Speaking softly and slowly, Thales depicts the future of PP, and explains the reasons which have led to the perception of such favorable prospects for the party.

In his opinion, the Popular Party "has not come to engage in the politics of retaliation." He asks, maliciously, "Should the opposition alone know the summons to advance?"

Then he advises: "There are retreats which have fostered great victories." The leader of PP does not talk about merging the opposition, because he feals that, on the basis of the government's attitudes, "there is at present an opposition front in Congress which flows naturally, without anything written, and that front has had a uniform performance in Congress."

The Popular Party is attempting to express its point of view in all matters. For example, it left open the question of voting on the permit for the president of the republic to visit Chile.

It was an important decision, because it established very clearly the position of PP, which does not want to be the flunky of any party, and will not be, owing to its very nature and calling, Thales Ramalho explains.

Hence, the PP's fundamental commitment is "to put up opposition, but with its own identity."

The leader gives assurance: "PP does not want, and will not serve anything but a plan that will make democratic normality viable, without a coup orientation on either side."

In this process of transition toward democratic normality, for PP the 1982 elections appear to be a keystone to the party's plan to win power.

Deputy Miro Teixeira comments: "Time is on the side of PP, which was created to win. It has the leading members of the opposition in several states, and it is the party which has, more than any other, leaders who could be elected to the state governments."

In fact, the PP leadership is making estimates every day, taking note of all the possibilities insofar as the state governments and the state or federal legislative seats are concerned. Deputy Magalhaes Pinto, honorary president of the party, states:

"If there are no new unexpected events, our prediction is that we shall win 10 or more state governments, and hence govern half of the nation."

PP has strong candidates in the North and Northeast, such as Alberto Silva (Piaui), Aluisio Alves (Rio Grande do Norte) and Antonio Mariz (Paraiba).

Deputy Miro Teixeira, himself a strong candidate for the government of Rio de Janeiro, observes: "There were unquestionable spheres of influence of the federal government which now find in PP the only viable possibility of having an opposition government. No other opposition party can describe a status as definite as that."

The main argument for that optimistic projection among PP members is the party's balanced position and the fact that it is, they claim, "the only one representing something new."

Miro Teixeira claims: "The other parties have sought ideas, initials and alliances from the past, whereas we are aimed toward the future."

Reformist, not conservative, PP wants to sell the image of being an option for promoting the changes demanded by Brazilian society without traumas, and moderately. A symbol of that moderation, Senator Tancredo Neves gives the definition of the party which he heads.

"Reformist, democratic, of Christian inspiration, it wants to foster a legal, peaceful transition (without hatred or revenge) from the authoritorian order to the democratic order. It is the instrument of transition between authoritarianism and the establishment of a genuine democratic regime in Brazil."

A party with aspirations as immediate as coming to power and exercising it, PP hopes to motivate the electorate through the party program and the cadres who are in the association.

Leader Thales Ramalho claims: "PP is a party with great cadres all over the country."

That leader maintains that the Brazilian electorate consists mainly of the middle class; in other words, the class opposed to sudden changes in its life style.

"Ther is a list of options in the opposition, but what we are conveying appeals to the municipal leaders, who are opposed to radicalization and hence are on our side."

What will PP do if it comes to power? Senator Evelasio Vieira enumerates the basic points of reformism according to PP:

Agrarian reform wherein the government itself distributes its land and purchases or expropriates the large estates.

Creation of an agrarian justice system.

Construction of a national system of silos and storage facilities.

The establishment of agrarian insurance.

Creation of agricultural schools to train intermediate-level technicians.

Guarantee of remunerative prices to the producer, eliminating the presence of the middleman, to insure low prices to the consumers.

Tax reform, to improve the distribution of funds to states and municipalities, and to strengthen the federation.

Educational reform, with emphasis on intermediate-level technical instruction and on occupational education.

However, for all this to be able to occur, there must be 1982 elections. The Popular Party, through its leaders, has underscored the importance of this point; in other words, it has said that it would do everything to have the contest take place. But what it does not say is that PP adamantly trusts in the guarantees offered by the government, or that it is not worried that new situations might occur, impeding the progress of its own plan.

Deputy Miro Teixeira says: "We shall do what is incumbent on us to arrive at 1982. We must not allow ourselves to be affected by spurious fear; we must believe that democratization is an irreversible process."

Leader Thales Ramalho agrees, and has attempted to converse on that subject with other leaders of the opposition and the government. But he is very annoyed at the fact that the decisions "are still made outside of Congress."

At the meeting of the party's legislative group in the Chamber last Wednesday, several deputies expressed their distrust of the government's intentions regarding the 1982 elections. And they made various proposals.

"We must do everything to come to power" (Milton Figueiredo, Mato Grosso).

"We must force the government to show its hand" (Jorge Vargas, Minas Gerais).

"Those in the know are killing time; they are not expecting it to happen" (Carlos Santana, Bahia).

"We need to break the monopoly on initiative that is in the government's hands now, and submit bills that will guarantee the 1982 elections" (Miro Teixeira, Rio de Janeiro).

The Popular Party also has its internal differences. One of them is associated with the strategy aimed at the 1982 elections. Should the priority goal be winning the state governments or strengthening the legislative groups in the Chamber and the Senate?

Leader Thales Ramalho thinks that, "Under the present conditions, the election of a governor is a joke.

"The candidate will assume commitments that he will be unable to keep. The status of a state governor today is that of a beggar."

Without losing sight of the fact that it would be good for the party to elect governors, the leader thinks that the priority lies in the strengthening in Congress.

President Tancredo Neves, for his part, regards "the experience in the government of Rio de Janeiro as excellent," and recommends "an effort to strengthen the legislative representation without underestimating the importance of the state governments."

Magalhaes Pinto, honorary president, states that "the one thing is linked with the other," something with which secretary Miro Teixeira agrees, naturally placing a little more stress on winning the state governments than on the legislative reinforcement.

Although it was formed by politicians who came from MDB or ARENA, the Popular Party is a united party, its top-ranking leaders claim. In addition to that convergence of opposing origins, PP has another feature: the presence within the association of groups from the old Brazilian parties, mainly PSD [Social Democratic Party] and UDN [National Democratic Union].

The leading representatives of the party guarantee that the internal persuasion is democratic. As for the question involving UDN and PSD, they claim that it is merely a matter of Minas.

Leader Thales Ramalho explains: "Minas is a different political nation. Ideologically, PSD and UDN are the same, under the present circumstances. The former struggle was for power; and the people in Minas, attempting to come to power, reached an understanding. I do not discern major difficulties, because this was completely overcome in the party organization. In Minas Gerais, the municipal leaders have reached an understanding and have made the party stronger. It must have the largest number of votes in the state."

The PP's Numbers

The Popular Party has 64 federal deputies and seven senators, "for the present," notes its leader in the Chamber, Thales Ramalho. He is sure that, by 15 November of next year, the final legal date for party options among those entitled to run a candidate in 1982, his party will have more members in both the Chamber and the Senate.

Until that occurs, PP has seven representatives in the Senate, two indirect and five elected directly. The most senior is the president, Tancredo Neves, 70 years of age and with experience ranging from council member to prime minister of the parliamentarist regime, including membership in the state and federal legislature, and the position of minister of justice during the second presidency of Getulio Vargas.

The most junior senator is leader Gilvan Rocha, representative from Sergipe, who is 48 years old. The remaining five are from 50 to 60 years of age. Three are lawyers, two are engineers and one is a doctor. Two have served as professors, and three are from industry. They all came to the Senate with political experience. Two were state governors, two were secretaries, two were mayors, and four were state or federal deputies. Four came from ARENA and three from MDB.

Chamber

The most senior member in the Chamber is Marshal Paulo Torres, aged 77. The one with the most lengthy record of service is the honorary president, Deputy Magalhaes Pinto, who, at the age of 71, has served as state governor and minister of foreign affairs, having also serving in the Senate.

The lawyers are also in the majority, with 35 representatives. There are 14 professors, nine doctors and six journalists. Of those with more than one profession, nine are in business or industry, and six are engaged in agriculture and livestock.

The majority of the congressmen are between 40 and 49 years old, and number 24. Next, 16 are between 50 and 59 years old; 13 are between 30 and 39; and nine are between 60 and 69. In the first legislature, PP has 33 deputies; in the second, 15; in the third, 13; in the fourth, two; and there are five with five or more legislatures. The deputy leader, Herbert Levy, has the most federal terms: he is holding a seat in the Chamber for the ninth time.

Rio de Janeiro, with 20 deputies, and Minas Gerais, with 17, when combined, have over 50 percent of the party in the Chamber. Para, Mato Grosso, Parana and Santa Catarina have three deputies apiece. Sao Paulo, Bahia, Sergipe, Pernambuco, Rio Grande do Norte and Ceara have two; and Goias, Piaui and Maranhao have one apiece. In the other states, the Popular Party has not yet obtained any federal deputy who would adhere to its program.

2909
CSO: 3001

RIGHT-WING NEWSMAN INTERVIEWED ON POLITICAL PRESS

Brasilia CORREIO BRAZILIENSE in Portuguese 28 Sep 1980 p 4

[Interview with ULTIMA HORA newsman Adirson de Barros by CORREIO BRAZILIENSE; date, time and place not given]

[Text] Abominated by the left, newsman Adirson de Barros of the newspaper ULTIMA HORA of Rio de Janeiro writes a daily column which is religiously consulted by all those wishing to know what the right is thinking or wanting. He, obviously, does not consider himself a right winger but rather an anticommunist democrat interested more in reforms and the solution of Brazilian problems, among which democracy is not a priority except in the long term.

Attacked, calumnied and railed at by all the liberals from the center to the extreme left, Adirson de Barros is, however, an actor with a definite role on the Brazilian political scene. Whether you like him or not, his opinion expresses a political position which is in a greater state of agitation than ever before. And he courageously assumes this uncomfortable position, making it a point to declare that although he has military information sources, he is neither a stool pigeon nor a pimp for them. He writes what he thinks or knows and he signs what he writes.

Some of the gems among the ideas of Adirson are: "Leftists are irresponsible and bohemian. They drink at night and during the day they go to the multinationals. They work for the multinationals or for government agencies, and they would even work for the security agencies if they paid well, however, they do not..."

"Security personnel who fought against the guerrillas have to react against any opening movement because they fear that it will be used against them."

"The Revolution no longer has the support of businessmen or the middleclass, which is the class with real political importance in the country, and it does not have the support of the Church. These were the three forces which carried out the 31 March Movement to save the country from communism."

The Figueiredo Government is isolated "and this reminds me of the Hitler 'bunker' in the last days of the war, already undergoing bombings by allied air power, he still signed orders firing generals on the battlefront..."

[Question] Adirson, you are considered the voice of the radical right, do you consider yourself a radical and extreme rightist man?

[Answer] I consider myself radically democratic. Now it is obvious that generally for the left and the communists everyone who is not a leftist or a communist is from the right, a radical and a right wing extremist. Formerly they sold out to North American imperialism, which no longer exists--it was replaced by Soviet imperialism--and they also sold out to Shell or Esso, something that no longer applies because it is easier today to sell out to PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] which is more powerful.

[Question] Did you ever pass through the left?

[Answer] I passed through it a lot, but only to say "goodby."

[Question] From your ideological point of view, how do you describe the Brazilian Left?

[Answer] There are several Brazilian Lefts. There is an intellectual, Marxist Left, which I consider serious. There are few of them. I am going to give you some names as an example. There is no problem...An Antonio Houass, for example, is a respectable man. An Oscar Niemeyer is a respectable man. They are Marxists and respectable. There is another left, the commercial left, the left involved in working, which means the partying left. It is the irresponsible, Bohemian left, which drinks at night and during the day goes to the multinationals, works for the multinationals or government agencies and would even work for the security agencies if they paid enough, which they do not, so as to be able to pay for whiskey and champagne at the bars and nightclubs of the South Zone...

[Question] In terms of political opening, do you or do you not think we are on the right path?

[Answer] I do not believe so...

[Question] How come?

[Answer] I do not believe so. I believe that the political opening is a very generous move by President Figueiredo, however it was not understood by either the sectors of the left or of the Brazilian opposition, which is incompetent and consists of truly incompetent men, and not...

[Question] And not even by the right?

[Answer] And not by the extreme right, to put it that way...I do not believe that an extreme right wing exists in Brazil. Ideologically, an extreme right no longer exists in Brazil except for some remnants of the integralist movement. There is a tailor over there in Curitiba, who appears to be the chief of the movement, the replacement for Plinio. There is no ideological extreme right. To confuse the members of security agencies with rightist extremists is a dangerous error. They are only protecting their own necks. They do not have a right-wing ideology. They are anticommunists by training, just as every Brazilian military man is an anticommunist by training. And they were involved in an underground war against international communist movements in Brazil, which were financed and trained in Cuba, the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia and so forth. Now those military men and civilians of those security agencies are with a rope around their necks and that is why they react against any movement with an excess of democratization because they fear that one day this country could be controlled by a group from the left. To say that the communists are not a majority in Brazil means nothing. Communism is not even a majority in Russia or any communist country; not even in Cuba, because if there were elections they would not receive more than three or four percent of the votes. However they can very well seize power. They seized it in several countries of the world and they can seize it in Brazil. It is obvious, therefore, that personnel of the security agencies who fought in 1968 and 1973 against guerrilla warfare have to react against any movement of democratization because they fear that such an opening will be used against them.

[Question] Your analysis, then, reveals that for security sectors or for persons, who during the more violent repressive period were in the security agencies and who today are no longer active, there is or would be a real danger that the political opening ordered by President Figueiredo would slide into an uncontrollable situation?

[Answer] Clearly, obviously, there is no doubt. It is not that the Brazilian people are of the left. They are not. Even the Brazilian worker is a reactionary. The Brazilian worker is a conservative of the right, to say it that way. The left does not speak for the workers; what there is, is an attempt to exploit the workers. But the greatest danger, the one which worries the military, the primary concern of the Brazilian military today, and I believe it should be the primary concern of the entire nation, is the subversive activity of the Church in Brazil headed by the well-known communist Cardinal Evaristo Arns, dom Helder Camara and tens of bishops like Hipolito, for example. Adriano Hipolito, from Rio de Janeiro, has already been involved at one time in skirmishes with security agencies. He has just received a check for 1 million marks from a German organization. He went to Germany in May of this year and gave a lecture in Germany, broadcast on television, in which he made an appeal to the Germans to help the Third World. You know that the Third World is used for everything, for any bunko game, the name of the Third World is invoked for any skin game. He managed to take a million marks from the German Catholics, who are generous and naive and do not know Brazil. Then this bishop, who is notoriously communist--and to prove this it is enough to say that his coat of arms is a stylized hammer and sickle--who is notoriously subversive, heads all agitation throughout the Rio de Janeiro Basin. Anyway, this bishop today has a million marks, which means $2.5 million. What is he going to do with it? The pretext for taking all that money was to pay lawyers for the peasants being persecuted by the Brazilian Government. There is no report of any peasants being persecuted in the Rio de Janeiro Basin. There are reports that speak of bandits pursued by the police. Then this money, it is obvious, is destined for communist movements in Brazil. This is being done in the face of the government and no one takes any measures because they are afraid to persecute a priest, as if a priest had immunity. Another example is the subversive priest of Pernambuco, an Italian who refused to celebrate a mass of independence, which means, he slapped the face of the Brazilian nation which harbored him. The Pernambuco security agencies made a complete investigation of his activities from as far back as Italy, where he was born in Sicily, in the Mafia, I do not know where. Gen Florimar Campelo, commander of the Fourth Army, endorsed the dossier of the security agencies and requested in writing--he cannot say this officially but it is the truth--that this priest be expelled from Brazil. Well and good, the matter came to the Ministry of Justice last week. Governor Marcos Maciel, who belongs to the illustrious political class, made peace with don Helder when the Pope visited Recife. Don Helder does not resist government palace, he was born a courtier. He does not resist. He has already given up his fascist-communist past and is now a courtier, an aide to the governor. Then don Helder asked the governor to interfere in the affair. The governor telephoned Sinelio Ribeiro, secretary general of the Ministry of Justice, and asked him to reduce the question to a minor question of municipal scope and to pigeonhole the matter, which up to now is in the office of the minister of justice.

The question then is: Is it a minor municipal matter when a priest, a foreign citizen, who has been in Brazil for a few years with a tourist visa, promotes agitation in the rural areas, strikes in the sugarcane fields and then refuses to celebrate a mass in honor of the independence of the nation which accepted him? Is this a municipal question? Then this country no longer has any honor. As far as Governor Marco Maciel is concerned, it appears the country no longer has any honor.

[Question] Adirson, what is known is that during the period of the clampdown by the regime, the Church activated and promoted a sort of broad front in defense of human rights. However, today it is involved, particularly after the visit by the Pope, in the differentiation between political and ideological positions. That is the reason why a large part of those persons with a community of interests have closed ranks with Lula in the Workers Party [PT]. Do you not believe that the Church is returning to its natural course after the period of greatest repression?

[Answer] I do not believe so. I believe that the presence of the Pope in Brazil was very important. He defined that well but he was not heeded. It is not being respected, at least by the majority of Brazilian bishops. I want to withdraw the case of don Helder because Helder is trying to become a cardinal. He is already 70 years-of-age and wants to be a cardinal. To be a cardinal he has to be less radical, obviously, and he is making up to the government. This is so much so that he no longer accepts invitations to go abroad.

But the case of dom Evaristo Arns...He is the Brazilian Khomeini. He wants to found a theocratic, Marxist state in Brazil.

[Question] Do you believe that he has political power ambitions?

[Answer] Of political power. The Church, let us say of the left to define that of Dom Evaristo Arns, believes that it has the conditions for arriving at power, of seizing power. Therefore, he is seeking power. The ecclesiastical rank and file communities are nothing more or less than the old Communist Party cells we have known for many years except that they are more dangerous because they are Catholic cells, which means that they manage to involve the Brazilian Catholic community entirely. Almost all of them are of the extreme left and to confirm this it is only necessary to read the texts produced by the CNBB [National Conference of Brazilian Bishops] which is the Church "politburo" in Brazil, of the church of the left. It is enough to read the books the CNBB prepares through Northeast-1, Northeast-2, Southeast-1 and Southeast-2, the entities used to evangelize the children, evangelize the Indians, evangelize the poor of the Amazon Region. They are Marxist books written by communists and not by priests, not by Catholics. Christ and Mary are used to imbue people with a Marxist mentality. Then the Church, that church of the left, has one objective, the installation of a Marxist-Christian regime in Brazil, probably under the leadership of Cardinal Arnes, if he were still in Brazil by then.

[Question] In the column in ULTIMA HORA you continue to attack the Church which you consider the left, the communists, however, you also attack the economic policy of the government violently. Do you believe that this economic policy is also a factor for destabilization of the system?

[Answer] Obviously, obviously it is.

[Question] Explain it...

[Answer] With an inflation of 120 percent...and that is the official inflation because real inflation is much greater since there are prices and fixed prices. For example, the price of beans is not used in computing inflation by the Getulio Vargas Foundation [FGV]. Beans are not considered even though black beans weigh heavily in inflation in Rio de Janeiro. Powdered milk has a fixed price and has vanished from the market. If the prices are fixed, the product vanishes. Therefore, real inflation is obviously much greater than officially announced by the FGV. Then, the economic policy, not only in my opinion but in the opinion of all the Brazilian population, which is suffering the effects of shortages, of the high cost of living; in the opinion of practically all the businessmen who have disassociated themselves from the government of the Revolution, they who were the mainstay of the 31 March revolutionary movement, are all, practically all, against the government [Sentence as published]. Some say it publicly, as does Erminio de Morais, who is independent and more courageous. Others simply do not speak because they owe the Bank of Brazil and are afraid of foreclosure. However, talking with any Brazilian businessmen it is seen that they are all against it. The middleclass, which was another support of the revolution, was martyred by that economic policy, not only this policy of the Figueiredo Government but that of all the revolutionary governments, particularly that of the Geisel Government. This middleclass is having its savings destroyed because they have an inflation rate of 120 percent and a savings return of 55 percent. Therefore, it withdraws its support from the government entirely and would vote for the opposition if the polls were to be opened tomorrow. There is no doubt whatever. As happened in 1974, it is going to vote more overwhelmingly now. The Figueiredo Government and the revolution are without support, they do not have a base of support.

[Question] In your analysis, they are isolated...

[Answer] Exactly, they do not have the support of businessmen, they do not have the support of the middleclass, which is the class which truly has political importance in the country, and they do not have the support of the Church. These three forces carried out the 31 March movement to save the country from communism.

[Question] Then how can a practically isolated government, practically in a vacuum, according to your definition, carry out a plan of political opening?

[Answer] Because it has the support of the Armed Forces military system. That and nothing more. The Figueiredo Government is supported only and exclusively by the armed forces. Now I do not know up to what point the armed forces can maintain the Figueiredo Government against everything and everyone: against the political class, against the business class, against the middleclass, against the working class, which is obviously being manipulated by the left and by the church, and against the church of the left, which is the majority, and against the CNBB, which is the political party of the Church.

[Question] Then you do not see a solution within that picture?

[Answer] I do not see a peaceful solution. There is always a solution...

[Question] Within that view that there can be a solution, but not peaceful, for the present crisis, do the bombs being thrown now mean the creaking of that nonpeaceful door?

[Answer] I do not know because up to now the Federal Police...

[Question] How do you view those bombs?

[Answer] A bomb can be thrown by a lunatic, a madman, an insane person, or it could be a political protest in a way, whether it be from the right, the left or even from the center. Up to now no one has aired the hypothesis that the bomb could be from the center. The bomb, for example, could come from Tancredo because a bomb would place the government against the wall and the government would be forced to come to a political agreement with the PP [Popular Party] and Tancredo would become a minister. Then who knows that the bomb did not come from Tancredo, was not made in the laboratories of Minas Gerais? It could be that also. It is a hypothesis, and all hypotheses are valid. The fact is that up to now the origins of the bomb have not been discovered.

[Question] But is it a political protest?

[Answer] It is a political protest, a political ploy, unless it is the work of a lunatic. Was it meant to kill the president of the Brazilian Bar Association [OAB]? I do not know. Was it from the left or the right? No one knows. The OAB, which is one of the leftist organizations of the country today, which plays the game of the left, considers itself the victim of the right. Why? If it considers itself the victim of the right, if it believes the bomb came from the right, it is because it is an entity of the left. It confesses that it is an entity that plays the game of the left. However, I do not understand it to be that way.

I believe that the OAB is a conservative organization, a national institution of great importance, and the right generally respects the institutions. The left does have the objective of destroying national institutions in any country of the world, the right does not. It respects Freemasonry, the Bar Association, the Institute of Lawyers, in short, all the great institutions.

[Question] But do you not even accept the hypothesis that the personnel who feel their neck is in danger could be protesting through those means?

[Answer] It is also possible and if I were in their place I would do the same thing. It is obvious that I would be protesting because I would not be happy with the situation the country is now undergoing.

[Question] Then, based on the isolation of the government which bars that political plan from having a peaceful solution, according to your opinion, the PDS [Social Democratic Party] and the 1982 elections are all a chimera?

[Answer] This reminds me of Hitler in the bunker already being bombed by allied air forces. With Russian troops 2 kilometers away from the bunker, he was calling Martin Bormann and signing orders firing generals on the battlefront in Russia. And Martin Bormann obeyed because they were all afraid of him until the last minute, until he died. Obviously he would go out with the orders but did not even reach the door with them. The orders were never transmitted. This means that Hitler continued to run Germany, the war and everything, with allied air forces already bombing the bunker.

[Question] But do you see some relationship between the Figueiredo Government and that situation?

[Answer] No, no, no, no. It is more or less this: I knew, for example, that within the framework of the government they are already planning the political situation of 1982. There are people making statistical estimates as to how much the PDS could have in Rio, Sergipe, Rio Grande do Sul and so forth. However, no one knows if Brazil is going to survive the war of Iraq because we have fuel stocks for 2 or 3 months, or 109 days, according to Minister Cesar Cals with his extraordinary mathematical accuracy; 102 days plus a few hours perhaps...We are not paying attention to the war, which is the number one problem of this country, and we are involved in the Middle East War as is the entire world. But we are also involved because of the incompetence of the oleocrats of PETROBRAS, who tied us down to a 50-percent dependence on a single country, an unstable irresponsible country such as Iraq, which is also bound to the foreign policy of the Soviet Union. Therefore, we are in the war. We do not have soldiers over there but we have our petroleum blocked and if that war lasts another 3 months, the country is going to come to a standstill; it is going to sink. While this is going on, there are technicians, political experts of the government, making estimates on the PDS. This means that they are looking only at 1982, but we do not know if we are going to reach 1981 safely. And they are making calculations for 1982: candidacies, candidates, schemes, alliances, statistical estimates as to where the PDS is going to win, how many councilmen, and so forth. They are programing the electoral college for the succession to President Figueiredo.

[Question] That is the spirit of the bunker?

[Answer] That is the spirit of the bunker, it seems to me. They are planning on an unreal country. That country does not exist. This country is a country which has a 120-percent inflation rate today; it has 40 million illiterates, 30 million diseased persons, and 15 million people without schools, and no one thinks of that because no importance at all is attributed to education. And I am not being a reactionary. I beg the left's pardon but they obviously do not concern themselves with those problems. Then this country is undergoing a grave economic and social crisis and is involved in a world war today, the war of petroleum, and it could come to a standstill tomorrow. While this is going on, the political analysts of the government are making statistical calculations on the PDS. If the country runs the risk of not reaching 1981, what would the PDS or PP say?

I was in the Senate yesterday, one of the most lamentable things. They were discussing tommyrot, completely out of touch with reality; they know nothing. Well, it seems to me that government personnel do not know anything either because from what we have seen in the past few days in matters of information about the Middle East, I had a feeling of wanting to buy an atlas from the "Melhoramentos" [Improvement] Edition and sending it to them with some arrows pointing out where the Straits of Hormuz, the Persian Gulf and the exits to the Mediterranean are. This was because even the minister of state was saying that there will be no problem whatever for Brazil. PETROBRAS, for example, declares that there will be no problem whatever for Brazil. Who guarantees that?

No one can guarantee it. And we heard the irresponsible statements by Brazilian Government authorities. This is irresponsibility. The government has to make the people aware of the gravity of the crisis. It has to make them aware of the gravity of the situation. We are in a war. There is no talk of rationing, which is a forbidden word erased from the official dictionary as if it were a dirty word. We are in a war and in a war we are forced to ration. The government will have to put rationing into effect whether it wants to or not.

[Question] With or without war?

[Answer] With or without war because it does not help. We do not have the money to pay for petroleum. However, while all this is going on, the PDS is being taken care of, it is very important...

[Question] Let us return to the situation of the bunker here. Adirson, do you not acknowledge that there are serious people in the opposition and even in the left with reasonable proposals for the Brazilian situation?

[Answer] Well, there are serious people, obviously. The opposition has many serious people as does the government party also. It would be boring to list here the senators, deputies and public men of the opposition who are very serious, who have made their suggestions, generally as much out of touch and removed from reality as the politicians of the PDS. I find the political class removed from reality. It is very concerned with its immediate problems, with its political future and obviously poorly informed. The Congress is an institution which knows absolutely nothing. It is truly poorly informed. Therefore, they cannot make specific realistic proposals on Brazilian problems.

[Question] In your opinion, the completely alienated and uninformed political class is not helping or benefitting from the political opening. Does that mean that only the military is supporting the political opening?

[Answer] Exclusively the military. The political class, because of misinformation, because of incompetence and because of incapacity is absolutely not helping in any way for the political opening. Even Saturnino Braga, who is a serious politician, even being a man of the left, in a televised interview last week confessed with all tranquility that the political contacts he is maintaining in Rio de Janeiro have led him to conclude that the people do not even want to hear talk about politics. The people are primarily concerned with the cost of living, and number two, with schools, health, welfare, pollution and so forth. The people do not want to know about politics, about the PDS, the PT Chagas Freitas or similar things. The people are completely alienated from national political problems. He went as far as to say, surprising even Villas-Boas, that if it were up to the people, there would be no opening. The people are little concerned whether the opening will continue or whether a dictatorship of the right or left is going to be installed in Brazil, it makes no difference. The people are concerned with their immediate problems, with the day-to-day problems; with an inflation of 120 percent which is the real bomb. The OAB bomb is a miniscule bomb compared to the inflationary bomb, inflation is the real bomb.

[Question] If, according to Saturnino, the people are not interested in the opening, and according to you, neither is the left, the Church, the middleclass or the workers, how can you explain the position of President Figueiredo?

[Answer] The president has a political commitment to the nation to install a democratic regime, something which is a duty of all, let us say, of all the elites with the exception of the left, of course, which has the so-called dictatorship of the proletariat, actually the dictatorship of the technocrats of the left. However, I believe the armed forces are bent on creating a democracy in Brazil. Only it is not easy, because it is not easy...democracy is a "tender plant," as the elderly Otavio Mangabeira said and is a system which requires national prosperity. Democracy cannot be brought about in a country of 120 million inhabitants of which 40 million, according to the IBGE [Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics], are completely left out of the process of production, of the economic process. Therefore, you absolutely cannot build a democracy with juvenile delinquents in the streets of Rio and Sao Paulo and with 30 million children out of schools.

[Question] Within this context, how do you view the struggle of the politicians, primarily those of the opposition, for the reestablishment of the prerogatives of Congress?

[Answer] They want to be immune from criminal prosecution? This is the prerogative they want, which means a privilege because the constitution says that all are equal before the law. Exempt the political class? They may not be prosecuted for calumny, libel and defamation? At least they do not want that, right? Then is that democracy? In my opinion it is not. A democracy of that type is truly impractical.

[Question] You do not believe there is a peaceful solution to that crisis. Does that mean that you see a clampdown by the regime, also with violence? Do you advocate violence?

[Answer] I am absolutely against violence. If I were in favor of violence I would already be in the front in this war...

[Question] Throwing bombs...

[Answer] Even throwing bombs. Since I am antiviolence, I am peaceful, then, obviously, I cannot believe that the country is entering a new phase of violence. I also believe the armed forces are able and determined to prevent that. Now, what is the system that could come instead of the so-called opening, instead of democracy which has not arrived yet and will never arrive...

[Question] But in the long term?

[Answer] A long term, yes, obviously, but I believe that the most important thing is not the opening or the prerogatives of Congress. It is there that I say there is a distance between the political elites and the national situation. The important things in this country are not the prerogatives of the National Congress. The people are not concerned about that nor do they know what the word "prerogatives" means, not even the students of MOBRAL [Brazilian Literacy Movement], who are very intelligent, are capable of deciphering that word. They do not know. Therefore, there is a great distance between the political class, including the government, and national reality. Obviously, therefore, we are not going to create any democracy, that is an illusion. We are only supporting a regime of democratic opening because there was a regime which clamped down for some years with AI-5 [Institutional Act 5]. AI-5 was abolished, press censorship was revoked—there is even an excess of freedom, with censors now being preoccupied with not censoring because they now have a censorship complex.

[Question] They are inhibited?

[Answer] They are inhibited, constrained. They are inhibited, they feel ashamed, embarrassed at censoring something and so they censor nothing at a time when censorship should exist on radio, television and so forth; not the press, but radio and television obviously have to be censored. RADIO MEC broadcasts Marxist texts daily. Recently...and RADIO MEC is Radio Ministry of Education! Recently it interviewed the illustrious historian, Nelson Werneck Sodre, who is even mentioned in the Soviet encyclopedia as our best historian. This on a government radio station! RADIO JORNAL DO BRASIL of Belo Horizonte, recently, some 15 days ago, broadcast a text of the Brazilian Revolutionary Communist Party (PCBR), a manifesto to the nation! There is no censorship, why? Why is there no longer any censorship of the cinema? We are now going to experience the era of pornography that Portugal experienced after the communist revolution of April 1973, an excess of pornography and so forth. Now, returning to the question of an opening, we are only in a process of opening, in an experience of an opening, which could or could not work. In my opinion it is not going to work despite the good intentions of the president, his honesty and the intentions of the armed forces, because there is an economic-social reality in the country, in the first place, and in the second, there is an international reality, which does not permit it, added to the problem of petroleum and the economic impasses we are experiencing—this is so much so that next year we are not going to have any credit unless we go to the IMF. In the third place, there is the reality of the Brazilian extreme left, today manipulated by the Catholic Church, by the so-called Marxist Church headed by the CNBB. You spoke of a party a short while ago about, about what is being done in the bunker with respect to the future being planned for the PDS. The party of the future in Brazil is not the PDS but the PP...

[Question] The PP?

[Answer] The PP, the government ignored Lula...

[Question] You are talking about the PT.

[Answer] The PT, the workers party, is it not? It is the party of the future because it is the party of the leftist church. Therefore, this is the party which is being formed on the basis of communities in districts throughout the country. In Petropolis, where I spend my weekends, Brother Leonardo Boff, a well-known communist, is putting together the party of Lula. The PT is being organized throughout Brazil. In Sao Paulo it is Cardinal Arns and all his red bishops.

[Question] Then you believe that this opening is being prepared only for the PT?

[Answer] I believe that it will be the main beneficiary of the opening in the long run. It is going to be the great national party, not the PTB [Brazilian Labor Party] of Dona Ivete, which has not the slightest national influence; not in Sao Paulo or any other place because she is only the heiress of an illustrious name, and certainly it is not the PP of Minas Gerais or the PDS, which is a party predestined to disappear.

8908
CSO: 3001

CONTINUING REPORTAGE ON TRADE WITH EAST EUROPE, USSR

Exports to East Europe Up

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 5 Oct 80 p 36

[Text] Brasilia--Brazilian exports to the East European countries increased 35 percent during the first half of this year, in comparison with the same period last year; while the overall trade increased 31 percent during the same interval. According to Itamaraty, that progress reflects the resumption of the high rates of exchange recorded up until 1976, after which there was a decline.

Even last year, the trade with the Socialist European countries showed an advance of 32.6 percent in comparison with that in 1978. In absolute figures, the total trade increased from $1 billion in 1978 to $1.3 billion in 1979, a figure rather close to the record in 1976, which was $1.349 billion.

This year, the prospects are even better, because during the first half of 1980 alone, the trade with the East European countries (East Germany, Bulgaria, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Poland, Romania, Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union) amounted to $744.428 million, as compared with $564.965 million during the first half of 1979. In the same period, the total Brazilian exports amounted to $455 million in 1979 and approximately $616 million in 1980. Hence, there are indications that the trade with East Europe will set a new record.

Consecutive Contacts

More recently, the trade relations with East Europe began progressing so well that the fact caused a certain amount of euphoria at Itamaraty. In the midst of that enthusiasm, one diplomat in the area went so far as to state:

"In 20 years of relations, we have not observed such great dynamism as is anticipated for the months of September, October and November of this year."

The expert cited the number of contacts between Brazil and the Socialist countries of Europe, through diplomatic and commercial missions, and the holding of trade fairs, displays, exhibitions and meetings of joint commissions and, in particular, business commissions.

To indicate the frequency with which the contacts have been made, Itamaraty listed some of them: From 2 to 5 September, a mission from the Ministry of Agriculture was in East Berlin to negotiate the sale of agricultural products; on 5 September, the chief of Itamaraty's European Department, Ambassador Ivan Bataglia, visited Yugoslavia to make official contacts between the two governments; from 1 to 5 September, the secretary-general of the Finance Ministry, Eduardo de Carvalho, headed a mission to Warsaw, charged with negotiating a long-term supply of sulfur (an essential fertilizer for Brazilian agriculture); from 8 to 11 September, the Brazil-Hungary Joint Commission met in Budapest; from 12 to 16 September, it was the turn of the Brazil-GDR Joint Commission, which met in East Berlin; between 17 and 19 September, Minister Cesar Cals was in Czechoslovakia, heading a mission assigned to negotiate an exchange in the iron and steel area; from 12 to 21 September, Brazil participated in the International Fair at Zagreb, Yugoslavia; and, starting on 26 September, it particiapted in the International Fairs in Plovdiv, and Budapest, Hungary.

Also in September, a mission consisting of 20 Brazilian politicians participated in an interparliamentary conference held in East Berlin, proceeding from there to visit Romania, Czechoslovakia and Poland.

The following contacts with Socialist Europe are scheduled for this month: from 4 to 12 October, a visit to Brazil by the Soviet deputy minister for iron and steel, N.A. Tulin. He arrived in Sao Paulo yesterday, at the invitation of the Brazilian Mining and Metallurgy Company (CBMM). He will next go to Brasilia, for talks with the government. From 6 to 10 October, Brazil will be participating, through 235 firms represented by the Comexport Trading Company, in a commercial exhibit in Warsaw, wherein Brazilian products ranging from toilet soap, textiles and ready-made clothing to bicycles, motorcycles, automobiles, buses and minibuses will be displayed. Between 26 and 29 October, some of those products will be exhibited at a "sectorial consumer goods fair" sponsored by the Brazilian Embassy in Moscow. From 9 to 13 October, a mission headed by the president of SIDERBRAS [Brazilian Iron and Steel Corporation], Henrique Brandao Cavalcanti, and the president of CSN [National Iron and Steel Company], Benjamin Mario Batista, will go to Poland, for the purpose of inspecting the Brazilian-Polish operations in the areas of iron ore and coal.

Almost simultaneously, the Brazil-Yugoslavia Joint Commission will be meeting in Brasilia to discuss the expansion of bilateral trade, under the direction of the minister for cooperation with the developing countries, Vuko Dragasevic.

Scheduled for next month is a visit from the undersecretary of foreign trade of East Germany, Gerhard Beil.

New Business

According to Itamaraty, the unprecedented number of contacts between Brazil and the East European countries means, of course, that business is progressing very well. For example, during the meeting of the Brazil-Hungary Joint Commission, from 8 to 11 September of this year, in Budapest, the long-term sale of Brazilian iron ore, starting in 1981, was arranged.

A joint operation involving Brasilinvest and Metrimpex was negotiated in the field of civil engineering on third markets, initially in Africa and the Middle East.

Other Sao Paulo companies are studying an association with the Hungarians, also in the civil construction sector, especially in connection with the construction of hydroelectric facilities, schools, hospitals, transmission lines, railroads and highways.

In Budapest, there was also negotiated an association between Brasilinvest (which will be turned over to a firm affiliated with the group) and a Hungarian enterprise, for the manufacture of incandescent light bulbs in Brazil. The Hungarian Government is also interested in the creation of a joint firm for exploration and processing of coal, including the transfer of Hungarian technology. In the agroindustrial field, a Brazilian-Hungarian firm is due to be created in Goias, for the exploitation of hogs. Finally, the two countries are in the process of concluding long-term contracts for Brazilian exports of agricultural and iron ore products, manufactures in general, textiles and footwear. Recently, INTERBRAS [PETROBRAS International Trade, Inc] concluded negotiations with Hungary for the supplying of automobile and bicycle accessories at a price of $6 million.

During the meeting of the Brazil-East Germany Joint Commission, held from 12 to 16 September, an agreement on cooperation was signed between the National Confederation of Industries and its German counterpart, to facilitate the contacts and negotiations between the business firms of both countries. An evaluation was made of the results of a memorandum of understanding signed in 1978 between firms of the two nations, and the conclusion was reached that, by 1983, the Brazilian and German firms will have done business amounting to $5 billion.

The Brazilian delegation, comprised of diplomats and business owners, also arranged joint operations on third markets with the GDR, with an immediate association between Brasilinvest and German firms for the construction of a cement factory in Peru.

Polish Ship Sales Promoted

Rio de Janeiro JORNAL DO BRASIL in Portuguese 8 Oct 80 p 18

[Text] Brasilia—The government of Poland, through its official bank, has placed at the disposal of Brazilian shippers a line of credit amounting to $150 million, to finance the purchase of 12 ships to be manufactured by Polish shipyards. A proposal for this has already been received by the Ministry of Transportation, and sent to the National Merchant Marine Superintendency (SUNAMAM), which is examining the financing terms.

This information was provided yesterday by the secretary of international affairs of the Ministry of Trnasportation, Mr Vande Lages Magalhaes, who considered the Polish financing terms, from the standpoint of time period, interest and waiting interval "better than the normal ones on the international market." If that financing is accepted by the Brazilian authorities, it will be made directly to the shippers, through the intervention of SUNAMAM.

As a result of the interest of the Brazilian and Polish Governments in intensifying bilateral trade, the line of credit of $150 million will be earmarked to finance 12 special vessels not produced in Brazil, such as two ships with a reinforced hull for breaking ice (Iceclass type), used on some frozen routes, container-carrier ships, vessels for transporting cellulose and propane ships (for gas transportation). Mr Vande Lages Magalhaes added that the credit line from the Polish Government to Brazilian shippers will cover only part of the total cost of the 12 ships, the estimated unit cost of which is $30 million.

A Brazilian mission headed by the superintendent of SUNAMAM, Comdr Joao Carlos Palhares, will go to Warsaw this week to discuss the terms for implementation of the maritime transportation agreement signed between the two countries in 1977, It has not yet gone into effect, having been postponed for a week at the request of the Polish Government itself.

Oil From USSR, Angola

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 8 Oct 80 p 22

[Text] Yesterday, PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] signed two more contracts for the purchase of oil abroad, this time with the Soviet Union (for 20,000 barrels per day) and Angola (for 8,000 barrels per day). The new contracts raise to 135,000 barrels per day the supply assigned to meet the volume of 200,000 barrels authorized by the National Energy Commission (CNE).

The remaining 65,000 barrels are being negotiated with other producing countries, and it is anticipated that the deals will be closed by the middle of the month. PETROBRAS also renewed the contract with China, guaranteeing a supply of 18,000 barrels per day by the end of the year.

Supplies

Last week, contracts were concluded for a total of 117,000 barrels per day with Indonesia (45,000), Gabon (38,000), Saudi Arabia (20,000), Ecuador (10,000) and Venezuela (4,000). Although the deficit left by Iraq is 400,000 barrels per day, the government has decided to obtain from other sources only 200,000, inasmuch as the remaining 20,000 may be saved by the measures limiting consumption.

Starting in November, executives from PETROBRAS will begin a series of trips to the supplying countries, in order to sign contracts for 1981. They will attempt to close deals to bring the total supply to about 800,000 barrels per day, at the instruction of the federal government.

Titanium Exports to USSR

Brasilia CORREIO BRAZILIENSE in Portuguese 8 Oct 80 p 6

[Text] Campinas--Brazil may sign an agreement with the Soviet Union for scientific and technical cooperation and, as a result, become the largest titanium exporter in the world. The possibility arose yesterday, in the Eletrometal plant in the municipality of Sumare, during the visit of a Soviet delegation headed by the deputy minister of iron and steel, N. Tulin.

After they toured the Eletrometal vacuum metallurgy unit (which they claimed was more advanced than that of their country), the Soviets made the proposal for cooperation which, if accepted by the Brazilian Government, would make it possible to produce and export titanium metal.

With the largest titanium reserves in the world, Brazil does not have the technology for making the "sponge" which is used for the manufacture of titanium metal. In Eletrometal's vacuum metallurgy unit, the sponge can be converted into metal in an amount 20 times larger than the country's domestic consumption. The firm wants the technology for making sponge from the crude ore.

Tourists

The Soviet delegation spent all of yesterday morning at Eletrometal, but none of its members spoke with reporters, because they were all in Brazil merely as tourists. According to the president of Eletrometal, Jose Diniz de Sousa, the proposal was made at the conclusion of the visit. The Soviets initially offered cooperation in the technology for smelting and resmelting with plasma and smelting with the electron beam process.

The president of Eletrometal suggested that the cooperation be carried out in the area of titanium; and the Soviets, who export 60 percent of the titanium in the world, agreed. Lighter than steel and heavier than aluminum, titanium has applications in the aeronautical, petrochemical, chemical and weaponry industries. It is with titanium that the Soviet Union makes its missiles.

Trade With East Europe

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 2 Oct 80 p 28

[Text] The commercial exchanges between Brazil and East Europe have developed gradually. And they reached their height, from both a national and an international standpoint, when President Castello Branco appointed the then minister of planning, Roberto de Oliveira Campos, to head the Brazilian trade mission which went to Moscow. This is because, since he was an expert of recognized international repute known to have a liberal attitude, and had previously been Brazil's ambassador to Washington, his appointment as head of that trade mission had major positive repercussions.

Roberto Cmapos proved, during his visit to Moscow, that a statesman plays a constructive role in economic and trade relations, not depending, for his success, on political or philosophical preconceptions, but only on trade relations. Castello Branco assigned the mission to Roberto Campos because he was aware not only of his objectivity, but also of his lack of doctrinal preconceptions with regard to trade relations.

Russia is one of the communist countries which has maintained exchanges with Brazil in convertible currencies. This situation is advantageous to us, but it is in our inteest that constant purchases and sales be made, so as thereby to strengthen our position with respect to the leading exporters. Moreover, from the Brazilian standpoint, the benefit of multiplying our sources of purchases and also of exports has been understood. Our commercial exchanges with the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia (dissident), Romania (half dissident) and orthodox Czechoslovakia have been maintained in convertible currencies. With East Germany, potentially a major exporter of manufactured items and an importer of agricultural and livestock products, the currency is that agreed upon. Hence, we have a surplus which can only be eliminated with large discounts, which virtually force us to pay considerably higher prices than the international ones. Therefore, we should establish as a principle that of making exchanges solely in convertible currencies, and this applies to all countries.

2909
CSO: 3001

NIGERIA SEEKS INCREASED EXCHANGE OF GOODS

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 26 Sep 80 p 25

[Text] Rio de Janeiro--Nigeria hopes that its bilateral trade with Brazil will reach about $500 million this year, the ambassador to Brazil from that country, Timothy Anaele Mgbolowere, announced yesterday in Rio, where he welcomed a Nigerian parliamentary mission en route to Brasilia. Stressing that if this goal is achieved, Brazil would become the second-largest Latin American exporter to Nigeria (Argentina ranks first), Mgbolowere said that the steady increase in trade between the two countries is the result of the policy of closer relations which has been pursued for some time.

"Brazil's exports to Nigeria totaled only $500,000 U.S. in 1971. In 1978, however, the total came to $233 million U.S., and for this year, on the basis of the data available now, we hope that our bilateral trade will reach the $500 million U.S. level," he stressed.

Noting that currently the trade balance favors Brazil, the Nigerian ambassador said that in addition to the parliamentary delegation which arrived yesterday, another 10, each comprising a specific commission, will visit Brazil by the end of October. He confirmed that the ministers of agriculture and communications will also visit Brazil before the end of the year.

Currently Nigeria is exporting oil (40,000 barrels per day) and rubber to Brazil. In exchange, it imports various manufactured products, foodstuffs, automobiles, buses and trucks, among other items.

A delegation of 13 parliamentarians, members of the science and technology committee of the Nigerian Chamber of Deputies, arrived in Brasilia yesterday and visited the national congress, the Itamaraty Palace, and the SERPRO [Federal Data Processing Service] in the afternoon. The head of the delegation, Sam Alu, said that the purpose of the trip to Brazil was to discuss problems related to development in the science and technology sector. He added that Nigeria is very interested in exploring certain areas of mutual cooperation, in order to expand the trade relations between the two countries.

5157
CSO: 3001

DELAY IN OBTAINING OIL SUBSTITUTE MAY CREATE DIFFICULTIES

Lack of Decision Observed

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 10 Oct 80 p 26

[Text] The delay in substituting other energy sources for fuel oil could create an extremely difficult situation for national industry, which would be forced to halt its activities if there were to be a cutoff or a substantial reduction in supplies of petroleum to the country. Alternate sources exist and are even viable, however, lack of planning (transport, supply and resources) and clear guidelines is driving industrialists to despair. Substituting other sources for petroleum is risky and frequently too costly without government help. Ironically, moreover, while the businessman hesitates, authorities enclosed within the four walls of their offices in Brasilia,threaten to punish him. In view of that situation, one cannot expect a significant reduction in consumption in coming years, despite the initial efforts of sectors such as cement, iron and steel and paper.

The problem, which affects everyone, is the lack of guidelines. Plans exist, and depending on the choice of any one of them, one can opt for results which are more and more dazzling despite being utopian. An example of inertia is the long-awaited decision by the government to substitute coal for fuel petroleum.

There can be no thought of coal for the great urban centers such as Sao Paulo, warns Horacio Cherkasky, president of the National Union and Association of Paper and Cellulose Manufacturers. According to him, it is obvious that coal should not be transported to Sao Paulo "because we would be hauling ashes at a very high cost."

The solution is gas from coal, says Cherkasky. This is also the opinion of Francisco Lotufo Filho of the Union of the Ceramics Industry for Construction and of Luiz Prestes Barra, president of the Union of the Ceramic Tile Industry. But, supposing that coal gas is the alternative chosen by the government (and up to now the government has not made a decision, say the businessmen), how is the gas going to reach Sao Paulo?

The question by industrialists is valid. Secretary of Industry and Commerce of Sao Paulo, Oswaldo Palma, speaks of a gas pipeline running through the states of the southern part of the country to the great urban centers. The National Energy Commission [CNE], particularly Professor Celestino Rodriques, speaks of a gas pipeline (natural gas) coming from Argentina, passing through Foz de Iguacu and avoiding the southern states. There are those who say we should wait for the gas pipeline coming from Bolivia. Since everyone talks and nothing is decided, the industrialists wait and the substitution goals remain on paper and in speeches.

The more daring industrialists, those most concerned with the survival of their companies, have opted for individual solutions. In the ceramics sector, for example, several factories are opting for electric furnaces. The demand for power for industrial purposes has grown and the electric power concessionaires are now beginning to see their deficits aggravated and are beginning to prohibit any conversion above a certain level. And the industrialists remain even more confused. There is talk of using wood. However, there is no industrialist interested in running the danger of investing in the conversion of his equipment without first having supplies assured, at least not in the big cities. No one in Brazil is guaranteeing anything today, and those businessmen are waiting.

"It is necessary to put an end for once and for all to that debilitating inertia, that general sedative applied to society. It is not only a Brazilian phenomenon, it is general. This already-existing crisis is not being taken very seriously," declares Professor Alberto Pereira de Castro, director superintendent of the Technological Research Institute [IPT] of the University of Sao Paulo.

The professor is not being an alarmist. He explains only that in his opinion the government, industry and research institutes should become real members of a state of general mobilization: "A mobilization such as that of 1945, a mobilization of emergency, of a state of war. President Joao Figueiredo has already spoken of a state of war but few actually heard him," he says.

Research laboratories and institutes know that in these modern times they need to abandon their traditional academic activity and turn to practical results, which must be discussed vigorously with industry, continues the superintendent of the IPT. The professor thinks back to 1932 because "it was there that the IPT was born and the older people can evaluate its contribution to the mobilization and integration of research, development and industry."

Unless it is for the cement and the iron and steel sectors, up to now there is no overall planning at the government level for a reduction in the use of fuel oil. There are not even any projections as to how much industry as a whole could economize. The Ministry of Industry and Commerce acknowledges that it is not possible to substitute for the fuel used by the industrial sector "from one day to the next." It also admits that a substantial reduction in the use of fuels will only be possible in the medium and long terms by means of the use of other energy products, something which implies great expenditures.

Gen Oziel de Almeida of the National Petroleum Council [CNP], does not think that way. Supporting him is Professor Celestino Rodrigues of the CNE. Both declared recently that the government intends to punish the industries which did not stop using fuel oil. The general, however, went even further: "No industry which uses fuel oil in its activities may continue to use it after 1 January 1981." It is either a joke--if the general is speaking seriously the entire country will come to a standstill next year--or it is an error of speech by the general, who could have been referring only to the grain-drying sector.

The general makes no distinction and places even those companies which already have signed agreements with the government on the same level. Threats like those worry the industrialists. Horacio Cherkasky, for example, declares that his greatest fear is that the CNP in an emergency situation will cut the supply of petroleum across the board, making no distinction between those who are already investing in conversion and those who are not. "In an impulsive and emotional action, anything can be expected. After all, Brasilia is a long ways from Brazil," comments another businessman who did not identify himself so that he would not be deprived of fuel oil.

In that confused picture, it cannot be denied that the sectors which consume the most fuel oil (cement and iron and steel industries), are engaged in a serious program. Paper and cellulose should follow the same road and assume very significant commitments. There remains, however, a large variety of industrial sectors and within them a large variety of industries of different sizes in different regions. Despite everything, it will not be difficult to reduce national dependence in the medium range (by 1985), because it is known that just 200 national industries alone use nearly 70 percent of the total. Only a coordinated and intelligent action to make a decision is lacking. Brazil lacks that today say the businessmen, and it is there "that the burro balks," concluded another businessman.

Best Alternative Still Unknown

Only times of abundance and bonanza could have led an entire industrial sector using lumber as its primary raw material to believe that it was easier and more economical to burn fuel oil in their boilers. The situation has changed today and the paper and cellulose manufacturers already know that they can obtain alternative lumber byproducts to burn to replace increasingly scarce and expensive fuel oil.

Evidence that industry, in order to guarantee its economic-financial survival in the medium term, is seeking practical solutions, lies in the goals the sector has set for the next 5 years. The intent is to reduce present fuel oil consumption to 50 percent in 1985. Today the paper and cellulose industry consumes nearly 1.1 million tons per year and it intends to consume only 564,000 tons in 1985, which should even change the profile of great industrial consumers of that petroleum byproduct, among whom the paper and cellulose sector is now included with a significant seven percent of total consumption.

The paper and cellulose industry--It has already prepared a document of intentions to save oil but has not yet signed it with the CNE--is ahead of any decision by the government. "What exists is a lack of coordination between the will and ability to do something and the decisions required for beginning to do it," declares Horacio Cherkasky, president of the National Union and Association of Paper and Cellulose Manufacturers.

The sector did not wait for guidelines and by anticipating them it generated some serious concerns for itself: When will federal resources be released to cover part of the financing already contracted for? Are options for alternate sources already made by industries the best ones? What are the guarantees of supply? Will the industries already engaged in processes of conservation and conversion from fuel oil be benefitted in case the government were forced to make cuts in the present amounts of oil?

Despite this insecurity, the sector is investing heavily. A very recent survey by the National Association of Paper and Cellulose Manufacturers indicates that the sector is spending 14 million in ORTN [National Treasury Notes] for equipment for substituting for nearly 50 percent of the present oil consumption, without taking into account the rationalizations which may be made in the future. In addition, the survey showed that the sector is very concentrated and that only 35 companies represent 80 percent of the overall consumption of the sector.

The survey made among industries concluded that 23 companies have already contracted for boilers that burn wood, which up to January 1983 (when all will already have been installed), will be burning 330,000 cubic meters of wood per month all together. Another 15 similar boilers are planned for complementing and replacing those now installed. Another six boilers (three already contracted for) will use coal. Some companies also elected to use other energy sources such as electric power, alcohol or bagasse.

The survey made by the association of companies shows that of a total of 83 companies of the sector 55 percent do not believe it will be possible to reduce consumption by 80 percent by 1986, while the rest believe it will. As for the reasons given for not believing in the goals of the sector, the main one indicated raw materials as the greatest obstacle, followed by high costs, short deadlines and other reasons, according to the 76 replies obtained.

According to the document to be signed with the government, the paper and cellulose sector pledges to equip itself so as to be able to consume 200,000 tons of fuel oil as of 1985, when its consumption is scheduled to be 1.4 million tons per year. Besides the 200,000 tons of oil, the rest will be substituted for by other energy resources. In 1982, the scheduled substitution for oil will be 500,000 tons; 700,000 in 1983; 900,000 in 1984; 1.2 million in 1985; 1.3 million in 1986 and 1.6 million in 1989.

In the paper and cellulose industry substitution program, the share for coal is 160,000 tons per year as of 1983, dry wood nearly 800,000 tons per year as of 1982 (reaching 1.5 million tons in 1989) and biomass, 1.5 million tons in 1982 (until it reaches approximately 10 million tons in 1989).

Steel and Iron Industry Economizes

One year after the signature of the commitment between the iron and steel industry and the federal government for a reduction in fuel oil consumption, the Brazilian Iron and Steel Institute can already state that "the objectives of the plan will be attained." Statistics produced by the sector assert that by the end of the 1980-1985 5-year period, consumption reduction will reach 1,568,900 metric tons. Surveys also show that during the first 4 months of this year the iron and steel plants managed to reduce their fuel usage by 3.7 percent.

The agreement signed with the government stipulates that by June 1981 the iron and steel industry will save 290,000 tons of fuel oil annually; from July 1981 to December 1982, 400,000 to 492,000 tons per year; and from January 1983 to September 1984, 430,000 to 520,000 tons per year. To do this, the use of alternate fuels is stipulated: In the medium term (by December 1982), from 80,000 to 120,000 tons per year of refined charcoal; 52,000 to 75,000 cubic meters of alcohol per year; 800,000 additional megawatt-hours per year of electric power. In the long term (by December 1984), it is foreseen that from 500,000 to 1.1 million tons of coal will be used annually, 20,000 additional tons of refined charcoal, another 14,000 cubic meters of alcohol per year, 800,000 additional megawatt-hours of electricity and 520,000 gigacalories per year of vegetable oils.

For this, the government guarantees the availability of financing up to the limit of investments under suitable conditions of time, interests and monetary correction to the industries.

In the Sao Paulo Iron and Steel Company (COSIPA), the addition of 15 percent hydrated alcohol to the fuel oil in the furnaces showed complete practicality, according to power and utilities manager Rosenval Jorge de Oliveira. However, the company has other savings plans under consideration such as a garbage-fueled plant scheduled for 2 years from now, and coal gasification of the coal from Santa Catarina together with ULTRAFERTIL. Oliveira points out that in the agreement signed with the government, COSIPA is 30 months ahead of schedule in its fuel oil rationalizing plan.

USIMINAS [Minas Gerais Iron and Steel Mills, Inc] in turn, intends to reduce its consumption by 33 percent as of 1982 and 100 percent as of 1985 with the installation of a coking plant which will produce the additional coke for the blast furnaces and a certain amount of a semicoke which will be gasified, generating a poor quality gas to substitute for the gas used in the blast furnaces. The coking plant, costing $160 million, should be operating in 1985, allowing the company to effect a saving of 335,800 tons of fuel oil per year.

Belgo Mineira expects to use only 23 percent of the oil used in 1977 in 1985. To do this the company plans to replace the Siemens Martin steel mills with the new LD steel mill, in addition to using gas generated by the blast furnaces of the mill itself, to use the "submerged blast" process in the present Siemens Martin mills and to rationalize the use of fuels.

Difficulties With Coal

The cement industry is the one which uses the most fuel oil, nearly 18 percent of Brazilian industrial consumption. It was the first to sign an agreement with the government whereby it commits itself to replacing the equivalent of 640,000 tons of petroleum with 1.2 million tons of domestic coal. The use of 5.5 million tons of coal is stipulated by 1984, something that will cost around 1.5 billion cruzeiros but save 2.7 million tons of oil. It is not known whether the goals can be attained, primarily because of difficulties in obtaining coal and also because of difficulties in obtaining financing with government guarantees.

The food and beverage, chemical and petrochemical, ceramics, textile, smelting and glass industries, which burn nearly 55 percent of the fuel oil used by the industrial sector of the country, are willing to rationalize the use of petroleum byproducts and to substitute for their share in the consumption of them. The field of alternate sources is broad but no one knows which one to choose because any decision made runs head on into the lack of guaranteed supplies and uncertainty as to the economic practicality of the alternate energy source. Therefore, despite the advantages of signing an agreement with the government, committing themselves to promoting substitution in exchange for financing and subsidies, there remains this doubt: What fuels are available and how much do they cost?

It is a time of waiting. The ceramic industries, for example, which are responsible for burning 12 percent of industrial fuel oil, estimate it is immediately possible to save 18 percent of the amount consumed through oil rationalization and conservation measures. With respect to substitution, however, the alternatives are few: basically natural gas (or coal gas) or electric power, according to Francisco Lotufo Filho of the Construction Ceramics Industry Union in the state of Sao Paulo.

"Indeed, we have neither the one nor the other. The electric power companies in the southeast are reacting negatively to the proposal of an increase in consumption by the industry. There has been no decision on gas yet," he emphasized.

In view of this lack of guidelines, there is only one solution for the companies located in the large cities: The construction of a gas works at their own expense, declares Luiz Prestes Barra, vice president of the Rock Dust Tile, Porcelain and Clay Tile Ceramics Industry Union of the state of Sao Paulo. "Patriotism aside, the problem is one of survival," concluded Lotufo Filho.

And it is for survival that the owner of Porcelana Chiarotti in Maua is fighting: "I am saving 5,000 liters of oil per month to the detriment of my production because the only way I could find to do that was to extinguish the continuous kiln for 3 straight days," says Nelson Chiarotti, criticizing the government for the lack of guidelines.

Even in the areas outside the large cities, where wood has shown itself to be a reasonable substitute, the problem is the lack of a guaranteed supply of that energy source. Therefore, that which is present today in the sector is the result of individual risk-taking by the industrialist who chooses whatever energy source is available.

Porcelana Schmidt of Maua has taken an isolated initiative in that respect. It is saving 250,000 liters of fuel oil per month--which would cost nearly 4.5 million cruzeiros, by installing a gas generator, which according to Werner Besten, maintenance and production manage of the company, costs 330,000 cruzeiros per month.

Petrochemical Industry: Nothing Specific

Preliminary studies by the Brazilian Chemical Industry Association (ABIQUIM) propose substitutions for oil consumption, with rationalization measures, on the order of 10 percent in the petrochemical, chemical and fertilizer industries. In 1979 those areas used 3.7 million tons of fuel oil (79.5 percent of which was used by the chemical industry, 18.8 percent by the petrochemical industry and 1.7 percent by the fertilizer industry). Alternate energy sources being studied are basically charcoal and coal. However, there is nothing specific up to now with the exception of isolated solutions.

Among those is the project to be initiated by the Northeast Petrochemical Company [COPENE] in the petrochemical comolex of Camacari in Bahia, which, using the process of pulverized charcoal injection will save 160,000 tons of oil per year.

Another study by the National Confederation of Industries [CNI] emphasizes that petroleum refineries, which in 1978 used nearly 2.04 million tons of fuel oil, can reduce their consumption by seven percent. The remainder of the petrochemical industry (including chemicals and fertilizer) can achieve an average reduction of eight percent through conservation measures.

Food Industry Awaits Study

The thermal installations of the food and beverage sector, which used 1.4 million tons of fuel oil in 1978, or nine percent of the overall domestic consumption, are prone to be wasteful and for that reason, according to a study by the CNI, a saving of 15 percent could be expected.

In the case of the food industries--which by themselves use eight percent of the fuel oil used in the country--some attempts at energy conservation have been made such as a better use of ovens or the use of coal-fired boilers.

There is no specific program, however, for substituting for fuel oil. The sector is waiting on studies ordered in March--and not yet initiated--from the Technological Research Institute. According to Hugo Crespi, president of the Brazilian Food Industry Energy Council (ABIA), of which the Cica, Nestle, Chiclets Adams and Gessy Lever Companies are part, substitution could be made by converting equipment to the use of charcoal, coal or gasified coke.

Glass: Some Results

Since fuel oil is one of the "raw materials" of glass, it being used predominantly in the melting ovens, the industries of the sector have been making energy rationalization studies since 1976.

Moreover, in 1979 the Technical Association of the Automated Glass Industry (ATBIAV) created an energy commission to work together with the Glass and Flat and Hollow Glassware Industry Union of the State of Sao Paulo, seeking to disseminate rationalization measures such as thermal insulation in the areas of melting ovens, change in the geometry of ovens when they are replaced, electrical support in the boosters and feeders used in some industries, increase in the regeneration and recovery of heat in the preheating of combustion air and the installation of automatic controllers for the air-oil mixture.

With those measures, according to Maria Carolina Diniz Martins, executive adviser to ATBIAV, the sector--which was responsible for 3.5 percent of the fuel oil use for industrial purposes in the country--managed to reduce that share to 2.4 percent last year. In addition, ATBIAV, according to its president, Roberto Prado, in June sent a draft of the agreement to the government in June. Solutions advocated for substitution for oil are natural gas or coal. For that, however, it is necessary for the government to provide those fuels because only on the basis of alternate energy sources can the industry begin to plan new types of installations, which is a long-range process, emphasized Prado.

Smelting Industry Awaiting Guidelines

There are options for the smelting sector, declares Luiz Paulo Salleiro, technical director of the Brazilian Association of Iron and Steel Smelting Industries (ABIFFA). What is lacking is a guideline from the government on the availability of alternate energy sources and primarily their economic practicality. "We do not have any guarantees as to the behavior of prices of energy sources. There is a lack of relationship between the price of fuel oil and the other items," he concluded.

The greatest consumption of fuel oil in the smelting industry occurs in heat treatment, welding of iron and steel and in the driers for foundry molding cores. The cheapest option for substituting for fuel oil, according to Salleiro, is coal gas, not from naphtha (which also comes from petroleum), or a mixture with alcohol, something which is being studied by CONGAS.

Electric power would be an expensive option because it would require large-scale modifications in the furnace system. Those alternatives are also being studied by the Energy and Environment Commission of ABIFA, which according to Manoel Gomes dos Santos, secretary of the body, will try to enter into an agreement with the Secretariat of Industrial Technology.

Textile Industry Will Issue a Manual

The steam systems for providing steam for the process and for generating electric power are responsible for fuel oil consumption in the textile industry. According to studies by the CNI, the sector used nearly 790,000 tons of fuel oil in those systems in 1978, representing five percent of the overall consumption for industrial uses in the country. The possibilities for savings in the sector, according to the CNI, are very great and for that reason a savings rate of 22 percent will be reached in coming years. In that respect, the Spinning and Weaving Industry Union, together with the IPT, is preparing an energy rationalization and conservation manual.

Since 1976, however, the Rhodia group has had a rationalization program, according to its director of planning, Thomas Unger. The first phase of the program was that of internal savings of fuel oil which included measures ranging from thermal insulation of the boilers to making the workers aware of faults which cause waste. That resulted in a saving of 25 percent in fuel oil--an item responsible for spending equal to 10 percent of the sales of the group. The second phase is partial substitution, which will begin in 1981, with four pilot plants using alternate energy sources: wood in Recife; peat--the first phase in the geological formation of coal--in Sao Jose dos Campos; charcoal in Paulina and gas in Santo Andre. The third phase, according to Unger, will completely discontinue the use of fuel oil in the units the company will install in Camacari, Bahia, within two and one-half years, one for the production of nylon powered by electricity, and the other fueled by animal wastes.

Alternate Energy Sources Insufficient

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 5 Oct 80 p 55

[Article by David Renault: "Alternate Sources Far From Enough To Cover Needs"]

[Text] The reduction in consumption of petroleum byproducts through rationalization and restrictions such as a price increase and even restrictions in supply, is the only way that Brazil can cut down on its imports immediately because the so-called national alternate sources will only have an effect on overall consumption in coming years.

The war between Iraq and Iran, with the subsequent cutoff of a large part of the oil imports by Brazil, led the government to seek new formulas for "hastening the reduction of consumption," particularly gasoline, fuel oil and diesel fuel, which are the products mainly responsible for the need for national petroleum imports.

An analysis of government programs for substituting for those three byproducts, however, shows that their immediate effects will not be so great. They will contribute to minimize future problems, since the trend is for petroleum supplies to become more and more difficult to obtain.

Official figures of the CNP show that in 1979, 55,503,602 cubic meters of imported petroleum were processed, which amounts to 969,762 barrels per day, plus 9,113,211 cubic meters (159,227 barrels per day) of domestic petroleum. As an average, each barrel yielded 23 percent gasoline, 30 percent diesel fuel, 32 percent fuel oil and 15 percent of other byproducts.

CNP figures also indicate that last year 15,537,571,000 liters of regular gasoline, 108,534,000 liters of premium gasoline, 15,859,576,000 liters of fuel oils and 16,982,359,000 liters of diesel fuel were consumed in the country, not including in those figures the deliveries to direct consumers and supplies to national ships, among others. Production of diesel fuel in national refineries, according to the CNP, was 17,833,288,000 liters.

In the area of substitution for petroleum byproduct energy sources, the National Alcohol Program (PROALCOOL) is the most advanced government plan. Production in the 1980-1981 season is forecast at 4.1 billion liters with a possible reduction of sugar production.

Today, hydrated alcohol is being mixed with the regular gasoline sold in almost the entire country in a proportion of 20 percent. Last year, of the overall consumption of gasoline, 15.5 billion liters, 2.2 billion liters were actually alcohol. The PROALCOOL goal is the production of 10.7 billion liters in 1985. This, however, is less than the present consumption of gasoline. At this moment there are studies being made to advance the 1987 goal of 14 billion liters to 1985.

The initial government plan was for fuel alcohol to be used in Otto cycle engines (gasoline) [four-stroke internal combustion engines], which in Brazil appear mainly in automobiles. The argument is that alcohol has a calorific power close to that of gasoline and thus can be used without a substantial increase in consumption.

The Industrial Technology Secretariat (STI) of the Ministry of Industry and Commerce encouraged the conversion of Otto cycle engines in light vehicles--up to 10,000-ton capacity [as published, presumably means 10,000 kilos]--to use alcohol and has already approved some models which can be produced in factories or converted in authorized automobile conversion shops.

The STI plan is that light-vehicle diesel motors should be exchanged for Otto cycle motors as a way of contributing to reducing the overall consumption of that fuel. The secretariat also encourages a system called "double injection" which consists of the placing of two tanks in heavy vehicles, one for alcohol and the other for diesel fuel.

By means of a small adapted system, those two fuels reach the motor at the same time, and there is simultaneous combustion. According to the STI, tests, including road tests, indicated that with this system a usage of 40 percent alcohol and 60 percent diesel fuel can be reached, with the consumption of the vehicle remaining practically the same and with only a small loss of power.

The so-called "alcohol additive" system, consisting of a mixture of an additive and alcohol, also in substitution of diesel fuel in motors, is not accepted willingly by the STI. It is argued that vehicles consume 60 to 70 percent more fuel as an average, and in addition, the additive that is being used, particularly by Mercedes Benz, is imported.

Brazilian alcohol production this season will at most be 4.5 billion liters, not reaching 6 billion next season. Whatever the use of this product may be--mixture with gasoline or its use alone for automobiles, buses or trucks--its share will be quite small with respect to the present consumption of gasoline and diesel fuel. Those two products, taking the CNP figures for 1979, represent a total per year of nearly 30 billion liters.

Still in the area of diesel fuel, the STI is proposing the alternative of vegetable oils. The secretariat itself acknowledges, however, that this is not an immediate program. The proposal by Secretary of Industrial Technology Jose Israel Vargas, now being examined by the CNE, is that of the 25 billion liters of diesel fuel to be consumed in 1985, taking into account an increase in consumption of around seven percent, vegetable oils replace 2.5 billion liters.

Technological tests, according to the STI, clearly indicate that several vegetable oils can be mixed with diesel fuel in a proportion of 30 percent with a satisfactory performance of motors. Since diesel fuel consumption is more concentrated in certain parts of the country, the 30-percent mixuture would be made in those regions, which would conclude by representing 10 percent of all the oil consumed in the country.

8908
CSO: 3001

HYDROELECTRIC ENERGY GIVEN PRIORITY BY ELETROBRAS PRESIDENT

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 30 Sep 80 p 28

[Text] The new president of ELETROBRAS [Brazilian Electric Power Companies, Inc.], General Costa Cavalcanti, said yesterday as he assumed his post that hydroelectric projects will have absolute priority under his administration. He also mentioned as programs which should be carried out the utilization of thermoelectric power plants burning coal and the implementation of the nuclear program.

"It is generally known that in recent years the national energy problems, necessarily coming within the world context, have become much more complex, and now require that the electric sector, like many others, seek to adapt itself to the new situation. One aspect on which we must focus in the electric energy sector is the broadening of the spectrum of economically usable sources--hydroelectric, thermic and coal, nuclear and others--although with water sources predominating."

The ceremony to install General Costa Cavalcanti was attended by a large number of businessmen from various sectors, ministers (Delfim Netto and Cesar Cals), governors (Antonio Carlos Magalhaes of Bahia, Paulo Maluf of Sao Paulo, Alacid Nunes of Para, Marcelo de Miranda of Mato Grosso do Sul and Jorge Teixeira de Oliveira of Rondonia). The commander of the First Army, General Gentil Marcondes, and former President Emilio Medici were also present.

The crowd overflowed the small ELETROBRAS auditorium (with a capacity of a little over 100 persons). Dozens of persons who could not be seated for the ceremony waited in the corridors.

Problem

"Against the undeniable priority which must be given the battle against inflation," the former president of the enterprise, Mauricio Schulman, said, "we must now weigh a necessary program of projects demanding increasing investments in the electricity sector so that we can be sure to meet the present and future demand for electric energy, the increase in which, of about 12 percent per year in recent years, reflects Brazil's undeniable future in the ranks of the developed countries. There are many difficulties. Resources are limited and the requirements are great. Budget sources are committed, foreign loans have to be limited because of their inflationary effect and because they exert pressure on the balance of payments. Domestic loans, if channeled into the electricity sector on a larger scale, would hinder the development of private activity."

One of the factors which led to conflict with the minister of mines and energy was precisely the lack of resources with which to carry out the program given priority by the enterprise.

General Costa Cavalcanti stated in his address that the question of limited resources is of great concern.

"It should be said that we will have to manage resources which are certainly not abundant and possibly will be in short supply, but will prove to be sufficient to encourage and guarantee the implementation of the programs established, which will probably lead to the need to make some adjustments in the planning to obtain resources for the sector."

Costa Cavalcanti defended a tariff policy with periodic and differentiated adjustments for the various sectors of consumption, with a view not only to seeking tariff realism but also to making adequate profitability possible for the enterprises in the sector.

Efficiency

"His role in ELETROBRAS means that the electric sector can once again count on his efficient work capacity. This gentleman must seek to maximize the projects in the sector in order to contribute to the anti-inflationary policy of the government."

This statement was made by Minister of Mines and Energy Cesar Cals, who presided at the ceremony. He noted the large number of individuals present as evidence of the prestige General Costa Cavalcanti enjoys among businessmen and government officials.

After the ceremony, the new president of ELETROBRAS held a press conference at which he stated that to date no plan for the establishment of the summer schedule has reached his hands. He said that any opinion would be impossible until he has studied this matter in detail.

General Costa Cavalcanti said that the priorities defined at the beginning of the present government term for the electrical sector remain the same--construction of the Itaipu complex and its transmission lines, Tucurui and the transmission lines interlinking the North and Northeast regions and the building of nuclear plants. He said that the cuts in ELETROBRAS investments this year will come to about 5 billion cruzeiros, and that there should be no major problems as a result of this. The investments previously planned total 233 billion cruzeiros.

5157
CSO: 3001

ARMY TO SUPPORT INDUSTRY TO CONSOLIDATE MILITARY TECHNOLOGY

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 26 Sep 80 p 8

[Text] Brasilia--The army high command decided at a meeting held yesterday, with Minister Walter Pires presiding, to support national industry in order to consolidate Brazilian military technology and to take steps with a view to resolving the current problems caused mainly by the present economic situation in the country.

Among the measures defined during the meeting of the highest army body was the reduction of military movements to the minimum essential for the functioning of the service.

The meeting was attended by Gens Milton Tavares de Souza, Second Army commander; Gentil Marcondes Filho, First Army commander; Antonio Bandeiro, Third Army commander; and Florimar Campello, Fourth Army commander; department heads Gen Benedicto Pinto de Almeida, war materiel; Gen Geraldo Alvarenga Navarro, training and research; Gen Ruy de Paula Couto, general services; and Gen Antonio Ferreira Marques, engineering and communications; as well as the commanders of the Planalto Military Command, Gen Heitor Almeida, and the Amazon Region Military Command, Gen Leonidas Pires Goncalves.

The meeting was held at the army staff headquarters, and the next meeting is scheduled for November. It will be the last attended by the Third Army commander, Gen Antonio Bandeira, who is completing his service.

Agenda

The subjects taken up at yesterday's meeting, according to reports from the army advisory office, were the following:

1. Adoption of measures and intensification of procedures designed to deal with the temporary problems which, deriving mainly from the present economic situation of the country, are affecting the life and activities of the army.

The following were the leading items in the list of such measures designed to save on resources:

A. Research and support of civilian industry, with a view to the consolidation of domestic military technology.

B. Reduction of military movements to the minimum essential to the functioning of the service.

C. Transfer or exchange of non-essential premises in order to obtain resources for new military quarters and training fields.

D. Intensive use of cadre exercises, without involving troops, preferably carried out near military quarters.

E. Increase in the use of simulators of various types in training.

2. Studies and measures designed to revitalize the provisions directly linked with military and troop training and the functional efficiency of the land forces.

3. Dynamization of social and medical-hospital aid to military families, particularly through the following measures:

A. Improvement of the transit hotel network;

B. Construction, within the current potential, of domestic residential premises at garrisons where these are lacking; and

C. Steps to improve the medical-hospital care facilities for military personnel and their dependents, through the dynamization of the medical aid system established in the middle of last year.

5157
CSO: 3001

CANDIDATES FOR 1982 GUBERNATORIAL ELECTIONS TO BE NOMINATED

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 28 Sep 80 p 4

[Text] Brasilia--The formal nomination of candidates to run in the 1982 elections for state gubernatorial posts will begin the day after the congressional approval of the amendment reestablishing direct election of the governors. This provision, announced by the leaders of the Popular Party (PP), is designed to ensure the proper holding of elections.

The amendment calling for a return to direct election of the governors is to be approved in November, and the PP has already planned various meetings for launching the candidates for the state governorships.

Moreover, the PP believes that, with the exception of Rio de Janeiro, the only state in which the governor is already a member of that party, there will be no difficulty in preparing the foundations for an electoral coalition with the opposition parties, in particular the PMDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement Party] to challenge the PDS [Social Democratic Party].

Candidates

The list of possible PP candidates in the coalitions with the PMDB, PT [Workers Party], PDT [Democratic Labor Party] and PTB [Brazilian Labor Party] includes various alternatives. In Bahia, for example, it is considered likely that the main opposition parties in the state--the PP and the PMDB--will nominate as candidates to succeed Antonio Carlos Magalhaes former Governor Roberto Santos, Deputy Francisco Pinto and former Prosecutor General of the Republic and former Deputy Valdir Pires.

Sao Paulo and Rio

The purpose in launching the gubernatorial debate in Sao Paulo is to keep Governor Paulo Maluf's field of negotiation limited, along with that of the individuals who nurture electoral hopes through the PDS. The coalition possibilities include on the one hand Franco Montoro, Orestes Quercia, Ulisses Guimaraes, Olavo Setubal and Lula, while another faction plans the sponsorship of Laudo Natel, Janio Quadros and Delfim Netto.

The situation in Rio, which is a politically atypical state, since the PP is already in office, is the other side of the coin for the PP members. There the group plans in principle to sponsor the candidacy of Deputy Miro Teixeira, but not until the middle of 1981, in order to avoid causing the administration of Governor Chagas Freitas political difficulties. Even so, the PP believes that it will be necessary to sponsor a successor, under pressure from the opposition factions in the state.

According to the calculations of the various parties, the PP candidacy of Miro Teixeira may have to compete with the coalition-sponsored Roberto Saturnino (PMDB), Leonel Brizola or Lisaneas Maciel (PDT), and where the PDS is concerned, against the subslates expected to include Minister Mario Andreazza, former Prefect Marcos Tamoio, Mrs Sandra Cavalcanti or Deputy Celio Borja.

In the South

In Rio Grande do Sul, PMDB members Pedro Simon and Paulo Brossard and Deputy Alceu Colares of the Brizola labor faction will compete with Jair Soares (minister of welfare and social security) and Nelson Marchezan (majority leader in the Chamber). In Santa Catarina, the combination might be Senator Jaison Barreto (PMDB) and Senator Evelasio Vieira (PP). In Parana, it might be PMDB members Jose Richa and Alencar Furtado and PP candidate Afonso Camargo, against Saul Raiz of the PDS.

Other States

In other states, there are prospects for a compromise between PMDB candidates Jarbas Vasconcelos and Marcos Freire, and the PP and laborite factions in Pernambuco. In Para, the prospect of a break in the structure of governmental forces --Messrs Jarbas Passarinho and Alacid Nunes--could benefit the PMDB if the candidate were Jader Barbalho, provided the various opposition parties there unite. In Goias, the candidacies of Iris Resende (former prefect of Goiania) and Senator Henrique Santillo, of the PMDB, are regarded as unbeatable if they join together.

Minas Gerais is regarded as the most difficult situation, because there the government is sponsoring candidates from the former PSD, such as Minister of Justice Ibrahim Abi-Ackel and the "bionic man," Murilo Badaro, as well as Carlos Eloi and others. On the other side are Itamar Franco (PMDB), Jose Aparecido, Renato Azevedo, Magalhaes Pinto, Tancredo Neves and Helio Garcia. The greatest difficulty seems to involve the choice of candidates capable of promoting the coalition without internal disruption.

5157
CSO: 3001

BRAZILIAN NEWSPAPER INTERVIEWS PINOCHET

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 8 Oct 80 p 4

[Interview with Chilean President Augusto Pinochet; date and place not given]

[Text] Santiago--In an interview with O GLOBO, the president of Chile, Gen Augusto Pinochet, stated that he was "quite certain that, in the near future, many joint projects would be developed among the dynamic Chilean and Brazilian business owners which would result in mutual benefit."

Pinochet declined to express an opinion on the process of political openness that is under way in Brazil, claiming: "The government of Chile has been categorical in specifying its faithful observance of the principle of non-intervention, a fundamental bulwark for harmonious coexistence among states."

[Question] During the campaign for the plebiscite which has just been held in Chile, overt action on the part of your political adversaries was noted. There were statements by leaders, demonstrations and propaganda for the "no" vote. Was that action circumstantial, or will it continue to be allowed? And what is the significance of your appeal to Chileans to join a civilian-military movement to aid Chile? What will your next 8 years in power be like? What are your goals? Why were the blank ballots in the recent plebiscite counted as "yes" votes? How many were there?

[Answer] Naturally, during the month preceding the plebiscite, there was an intense debate on the information and concepts contained in the constitutional plan. The profound significance of that issue, which transcends any contingent political position, warranted this. However, the regulations relating to the recess of the political parties and of their activities are still in effect and will continue to be. This cannot by any means be regarded as a setback in our institutional process, because the new Constitution stipulates a precise, definite period for the full operation of the democratic system, a period during which the direction of the government's action will have to be adjusted. To be sure, all this does not preclude the fundamental points in the Constitution, such as those associated with economic and social rights (which it guarantees to all persons) and with the legal and jurisdictional mechanisms for requiring due respect and protection for those rights, from going into effect in their entirety as of 11 March 1981. For all these reasons, our chief goal during the next presidential term will be to consolidate that institutionalization for which the Constitution is the legal basis, putting particular emphasis on the extension of cultural and material progress that will allow for the stable operation of that new democracy. To channel the generous, united effort of all Chileans, without which any effort by the government would be insufficient to attain these goals, is the significance of that appeal for civilian and military cooperation.

[Question] The opposition, both that of Gen Gustavo Leigh (former member of the Government Junta), of former President Eduardo Frei, of the Church and of the constitutionalists in the Group of 24, criticized the results of the plebiscite, claiming that a popular consultation is not legal without electoral registers and without access to the news media for the opposition. It also maintains that the plebiscite was held with the country in a state of emergency. What does Your Excellency have to say about this?

[Answer] In the campaign which preceded the plebiscite, the opposition groups made a desperate effort aimed at discrediting the new Constitution, which was then subject to popular ratification, concentrating their criticism on formal aspects of the process. Without overlooking the fact that this criticism was proven to be unfounded, what is really important is that it constituted mere propaganda devices, because the plebscite process took place in an orderly way, with complete calmness and with massive participation by the citizenry.

The news media gave full coverage to the newspaper reports of the groups in favor of or opposed to the constitutional plan. The same liberty existed for those news media to publicize the propaganda that they deemed necessary.

As for the electoral registers, the very ones who are now criticizing the plebiscite of 11 September exposed on more than one occasion the fraud and irregularities that were committed under the old system of electoral registers. On this occasion, however, a complete register of all citizens was prepared in the voting records, which will be compared, by computers, with the registration number on the identity card which, in Chile, is a complete, stable system of registry. Finally, with regard to the state of emergency, it is obvious to anyone who experienced our situation during the days preceding the plebiscite that its being in force in no way affected the public debate on the institutional issue, because the opposition could even hold mass meetings to express its views, not to mention the many debates which took place in the universities and trade unions.

[Question] Does Your Excellency believe that the nearly 2 million votes "do not prove that there has been attrition in the government and that the latter should take into consideration some of the demands of the opposition"?

[Answer] The results of the plebiscite prove that the great national majority which sought our intervention in 1973 and ratified our institutional process in 1978 is still backing the government for the fulfillment of our goals. In any case, now as in the past, the government is still willing to receive any constructive contribution that is made to that national endeavor; so long as that contribution does not represent a disregard for the legitimacy of the current process, or reincorporating into civic debate totalitarian doctrines such as Marxism, or the groups which act as agents for those same doctrines.

[Question] The Christian Democratic leader, Eduardo Frei, upholds the establishment of a civilian-military government in Chile. This leads one to assume that there may be sectors of the Armed Forces in favor of that idea. Would the backing from the three branches of service for your government be monolithic? If, during the 8 years when Your Excellency will remain in power, there should be what you consider conditions for calling elections, would you do so?

[Answer] The features of the next term are clearly defined in the constitutional regulations passed on 11 September of this year, and the government will manage to abide by them faithfully. In any event, those unfounded assumptions of Mr Frei are an offense against the Armed Forces, and show a lack of consistency between the claim and the reality.

[Question] What were the most negative aspects and the most positive ones during your 7 years of government?

[Answer] It is discouraging to find that the sovereign decision of the Chilean people to break off from communism and freely build their institutional destiny is still an object of misunderstanding among foreign nations which claim to share our same principles of liberty and respect for human beings. In any event, closely related to this, it is of the greatest significance to us to prove that the direct beneficiaries of our action (all Chileans, and particularly the women of our nation) understand the profound significance of the work that we are doing, and are confirming it with their effort and support. Moreover, we can display today with pride high and constant rates of growth in our national product. And the country is progressing resolutely along the path of economic development. We have succeeded in reducing inflation drastically, and we are realistically and efficiently combating the effects of the extreme poverty in which some of our fellow countrymen are living.

Every day, we are being visited by foreign delegations and foreign investors interested in engaging in commercial activities. Our foreign trade has grown considerably, with a substantial increase in exports. Finally, many international financial and economic agencies which have made objective, scientific studies acknowledge our success and the positive indexes that we can submit.

[Question] International agencies and the foreign press are still accusing your government of violating human rights. What does Your Excellency have to say about that?

[Answer] The lack of sincerity and objectivity, and the obviously discriminatory moral judgment with which those agencies express themselves, boasting of judging Chile but keeping an ignominious silence at the atrocities and genocide being witnessed by the world, are factors which detract any significant influence from those views. Any Chilean, and any foreigner who visits us and assesses our situation, is a witness to the atmosphere of social peace, public equanimity and freedom that prevail in Chile. And, on the other hand, one would do well to take into account the analyses of agencies and technicians, and the views which give clearcut support for our work and our successes.

[Question] There are over a million Chileans outside of the country. Will Your Excellency allow them to return, or will the doors continue to be closed to the exiles?

[Answer] In the first place, I must emphatically point out that the Chileans living abroad can by no means be categorized as exiles; and it is also incorrrect that they number a million people. As an example, it should be remembered that thousands of Chileans had to leave the country when the Marxist threat was hovering over us. Our government has been emphatic in stating that, although we are quite willing to receive all those who are ready to participate in the nation's endeavors, we shall never allow the return of those who were responsible for the process of violence and destruction which led us to the brink of civil war, and which we are surmounting with enormous sacrifice. Their return is even less acceptable if we consider the fact that, during those years, they have publicly reiterated their intention of repeating the Marxist experiment in Chile, insofar as possible.

[Question] After the victory in the plebiscite of 11 September, and your legitimate instatement in the position of president of Chile, does Your Excellency feel more inclined to deal with the problems of borders with two of your neighbors, Argentina and Bolivia?

[Answer] Chile has no unresolved border problems with Bolivia. And, in connection with Argentina, the dispute over the southern zone has been subjected to mediation by His Holiness, Pope John Paul II. Having said this, I should note that, although it is true that the results of the plebiscite of 11 September constituted obvious backing from the sovereign will of the people of Chile for my government, I think that the country's border problems should be dealt with regardless of the circumstances and at any time, with the same interest, steadfastness and calmness, taking into account the value of and respect for legal regulations.

[Question] Other countries, such as Brazil, are reducing their territorial waters to 12 miles. Does Chile intend to follow that example, which would facilitate the negotiations on the Beagle Channel?

[Answer] According to the terms of Article 593 of the Civil Code, Chile's territorial waters consist of 3 miles. In 1952, Chile, Ecuador and Peru signed the "Declaration of Santiago," which established an economic zone of 200 miles, for the purpose of protecting and conserving the renewable and non-renewable resources in that area. Recently, during the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea, our country upheld territorial waters of 12 miles and an exclusive economic zone of 200 miles.

[Question] The negotiations with Bolivia were interrupted during the government of Hugo Banzer, slightly over 2 years ago, and since then the relations between Santiago and La Paz have been broken. Shortly after the coup of 17 July, General Garcia Meza said that he would resolve the question of his country's "outlet to the sea." Have any contacts been made in this regard?

[Answer] The diplomatic relations between Chile and Bolivia are actually suspended, as a result of a unilateral decision by Boliva which, without giving any valid reasons, broke off negotiations which involved both countries, aimed at fulfilling Bolivia's aspiration to procure a sovereign outlet to the Pacific Ocean. To date, the government of Chile has not received any proposal from the Bolivian authorities, either to reactivate the dialog or to normalize the ties with our country which have been cut.

[Question] Trade relations with Brazil have been progressing well in recent years. The volume of business between the two countries has increased from $300 million to $1 billion. The implementation of joint projects among private groups from both countries is proceeding well. Would the differences between the economic policies adopted by the two countries (Chile does not offer incentives or protectionism) be an obstacle to the execution of joint projects?

[Answer] The granting of incentives is not necessarily the only stimulus for economic development. The greatest evidence of this lies in the Chilean experience during the past 5 years. Since Chile became opened up to international trade, the economy has been developing at a far higher rate than during the 3 previous decades, a period wherein exemptions and special concessions were the only incentive to start any economic activity.

The great institutional stability in Chile, added to a market social economy system which fosters accelerated development, incentives for foreign investors based on impersonal, non-discriminatory regulations, and the complementation that exists in many areas between the economies of Chile and Brazil warrant our complete certainty that, in the near future, many joint projects will be developed among the dynamic Chilean and Brazilian business owners which will result in mutual benefit.

[Question] How does Your Excellency view the political openness in Brazil?

[Answer] The government of Chile has been categorical in specifying its faithful observance of the principle of non-intervention, which in our opinion is a fundamental bulwark for harmonious coexistence among states. Therefore, our rule of conduct is not to make statements concerning the political processes that other countries are undergoing, nor even to express views concerning them. Every state is free and sovereign to select its political destiny in accordance with its experience and its own idiosyncracies.

[Question] Whom would Your Excellency like to see elected president of the United States, Reagan or Carter?

[Answer] In line with the previous response, I can say that my government hopes that whatever government takes office in the United States in 1981 will conduct its administration with respect to our country on the basis of the fundamental standards of respect and dignity which should govern relations between two traditionally friendly countries.

[Question] The United States will open the Letellier case, and will probably insist on the extradition of the Chilean officials involved in the attack. What is Chile's position?

[Answer] The position assumed by the Chilean Government regarding the Letellier case is rather well known to international opinion. The question of the extraditions sought by the United States was aired in the Chilean courts which, in a free and independent decision, did not accept the North American petition. The Government of the United States, with an attitude which, in our view, is not consistent with the principle of non-intervention, attempted to apply to Chile some measures of reprisal for that decision of the Chilean courts that was adverse. Now, any negotiations started in this regard must be directed through the normal judicial channels, whose decisions the Chilean Government has always abided by.

2909
CSO: 3001

FOREIGN INVESTMENT RISKS, BENEFITS DISCUSSED

Santiago QUE PASA in Spanish 9-15 Oct 80 pp 30-34

[Article by M. Eugenia de la Jara: "Large Flow of Capital to Come"]

[Text] The Foreign Investment Statute--better known as Decree Law No. 600--established that the term in which the investor must outlay capital will be fixed in the contracts between the investor and the Chilean Government. It specified: "This term will not exceed 8 years for mining investments and 3 years for the rest. However, the Committee for Foreign Investments can, by unanimous agreement, extend the term to 12 years for mining investments when prior exploration is needed, considering their nature and estimated duration."

This legal definition serves as the first, although not the only, answer to those who ask why investments for almost $4.5 billion were approved from 1974 to September 1980 but real income is only about $1 billion. We said that it is not the only explanation because studies and reality demonstrate that not all investments which are approved actually materialize. Since Decree Law No. 600 has gone into effect, there have been about 80 rejected requests that, of course, are not included in the $4.5 billion to which we referred above. They demonstrate that not all projects are finalized.

The study called "Presence and Participation of Multinational Enterprises in the Chilean Economy" by Eugenio Lahera, an ECLA consultant, stated that it is improbable that the total amount of approved investments will materialize. "However, it can be expected that a relatively large portion will be finalized." Lahera also made another estimate when he said that "15 projects--out of a total of 421--in the mining sector represent 88 percent of total authorized investments as of the end of 1979. The failure of several of these projects to materialize would decisively affect the total amount of new investment."

The ECLA study, published in August 1980, was optimistic based on the amount authorized so far and "the fact that the number of investment requests processed in the past 6 years surpassed all those carried out under the Investor Statute between 1954 and 1970." That study reported that 494 requests were approved between 1974 and September 1980 compared to 311 between 1954 and 1970."

Foreign Investment Authorized Between 5 August 1974 and 3 September 1980 (Decree Law No. 600)

Year	No. of Projects	Value (Thousands of Dollars)
1974	12	21,547
1975	69	137,052
1976	57	150,090
1977	57	885,028
1978	72	1,293,045
1979	122	1,726,607
1980	105	152,500
TOTAL	494	4,514,069

Source: Committee for Foreign Investments

1980: Verdict for "Los Pelambres"

Another concern to those who observe the development of foreign investment is the fluctuation from 1974 until now. Ignacio Errazuriz, executive secretary of the Committee for Foreign Investments, answered: "The total number of requests is always growing but, obviously, the large mining investments that we received from Exxon in 1978 and from Anaconda in 1979 make some people think that interest in bringing foreign capital to Chile has decreased this year since we have not had any investment of that size."

Nevertheless, it is probable that a mining project for about $1.5 billion with a preliminary investment of about $30 million will materialize soon. As far as QUE PASA could determine--since the committee maintains absolute secrecy about the request--it would involve exploration in a broad area of Norte Grande to discover deposits not precisely detected.

If the committee authorizes this new investment, it would mean the approval of $1,652,000,000 in foreign investments this year--that is, only slightly less than the 1979 total.

The mining investments lead to a crucial question asked by the majority of people who study and analyze them. How long will our mineral reserves be the greatest attraction for foreign investors? Does Chile have other possibilities that might interest a multinational enterprise in planning a 12-year investment for $1.5 billion like Anaconda did with the Los Pelambres mine?

Errazuriz thinks that the important thing is to look at other sectors since mining investments will always be large and surpass the others.

He maintained that, as foreigners have learned of other alternatives for profitable investments in Chile, they have allocated capital. "This year interest in construction, agricultural property, agroindustry and services has increased. This last category includes banks which represent the measure of confidence that other countries have in our economic and political stability."

Errazuriz added that the smaller investments usually materialize almost immediately for the total or major part of the amount approved. The larger investments, on the other hand, like mining investments outlay capital as the project advances.

Capital Outlay from 5 August 1974 to 31 August 1980 (Decree Law No. 600)*

No. of Projects	Value (Thousands of Dollars)
17 mining	383,043
420 nonmining	448,463
Article 14	107,321
TOTAL	938,827

*Information provided to Committee for Foreign Investments plus amounts entered in September show the total outlay today is close to $1 billion.

Source: Committee for Foreign Investments

This is the case, for example, of Anaconda whose investment of $1.5 billion to explore and exploit the Los Pelambres mine was approved in June 1979; by 31 December 1979, $21.5 million had entered the country. Manuel Vargas, a lawyer and representative of that U.S. enterprise, explained the allocation of that sum to QUE PASA: "Twenty million dollars were spent to buy the rights of the former owners. Another $500,000 were invested in buying land next to the mine and the remaining $1 million were allocated for probes and drilling." Vargas added that $10 million have been budgeted for this year and another $20 million will be spent in 1981. The representative of the U.S. enterprise stated: "By the end of next year, we will be in the position to know with certainty if the mine meets the requirements of profitability to justify the large investment approved last year."

The Benefits...

In spite of the fact that the government has given foreign investment a very important role in the development of its economic policy, there are those who feel that its importance decreases as it is replaced by foreign credits that, as is known, have arrived and continue to pour in, especially for the private sector.

Nevertheless, there are several aspects that make direct investment different from credit; the latter cannot replace the former. The investment capacity of our country, generated by domestic savings, cannot take care of major projects, at least at present. What Chilean enterprise, group or consortium can commit more than $1 billion for a long or medium-term project without absolute certainty of success? Under our present economic system where the state will not participate in major projects which would mean large debts, it seems certain that we can only expect this from multinational enterprises. This is, without doubt, one of the great benefits of allowing foreign investments.

This first aspect also shows the undeniable increase in the investment capacity with the subsequent improvement in domestic savings and increased productivity. Foreign capital also brings an additional contribution of modern and sophisticated technology, the opening of new markets and, in many cases, new sources of employment. In his study, Eugenio Lahera maintained that, at this time, foreign enterprises with direct investments help provide 13 percent of the total employment in the country.

And the Risks

Along with the benefits, there are always risks. The almost unrestricted authorization to encourage foreign investment also means risks, in the opinion of the experts. The first well-known argument of those who criticize Decree Law No. 600 refers to the loss of independence implied in permitting multinational enterprises to participate in our development. They say that their large investments can also mean intentions of intervening in economic and even political decisions.

Since foreign investments will mainly go to proven profitable sectors with comparative benefits, this may mean a risk for the country because the foreign selection is not exactly in agreement with national interests and objectives for development.

The deficiencies in the Investor Statute are even more serious since it does not demand certain conditions from those who extract our nonrenewable raw materials. On the basis that only large capital can extract products like copper, for example, the foreign investors are given free rein. They only have to pay taxes--almost 50 percent between income taxes and others--like any national enterprise. They market the product outside the country and can keep all their profits. Chile receives the money collected for taxes as long as the natural resources last. Then what?

Some suggest that the state could negotiate some conditions with the foreign companies like, for example, the requirement that they process in Chile at least some of the raw materials that they extract. In this way, the country would acquire new technologies and could receive benefits from the marketing of both stages of production.

The last important risk in foreign investments is that it can become a monopoly if the participation of the enterprise is not limited, for example, to several national affiliates in the same sector. Otherwise, it could become so large that it could control the market.

Concerning the importance of foreign capital for the development of a country, Ricardo Ffrench-Davis said in his book "Economia internacional, teorias y politicas para el desarrollo" [International Economics, Theories and Policies for Development]: "The key to this discussion lies partly in the role given to foreign investment: whether it is primary or secondary; whether it is the mechanism chosen to finance development; or whether it is the means by which we can obtain access to some foreign technologies and markets that otherwise would not be obtainable by the recipient country."

Then he added: "It also depends on the specific characteristics of the foreign investment like which sector of the economy the investment is made in, the characteristics of the productive process used or the access to the international market obtained for that production."

Distribution of Investments Authorized Between 3 January and 3 September 1980 by Economic Sector

No. of Projects	Value (Thousands of Dollars)
31 industrial	65,709
40 service	55,321
16 construction	17,165
5 mining	8,100
12 agricultural	4,955
forestry*	500
1 transportation	250
TOTAL	152,500

*Increased capital from a project approved in 1979
Source: Committee for Foreign Investments

Speaking of foreign investments and credits, Ffrench-Davis concluded that it is feasible to complement these with internal efforts under circumstances like "temporary imbalances in the balance of payments, unconditional long-term loans as a complement to domestic savings and direct investments as a means of access to certain technologies and markets." To the economist, "the unrestricted opening and concession of franchises to foreign private capital so that its massive entrance is the resource that permits the economic development of the country should be rejected."

Changing Interests

For many years before 1970, most foreign investments concentrated on the mining sector. Lahera's study stated that this represented 57 percent of the total in 1967 while the manufacturing sector received less than 10 percent, services had 27 percent and the financial sector only 0.5 percent of the total investment.

The policy begun in 1970 noticeably altered this distribution. The participation of the mining sector was reduced to less than 20 percent, the manufacturing sector received more than half the total investment while services decreased and the financial sector was reduced to only one foreign bank left in the country.

During the past 6 years, the distribution of investments has again changed with the principal difference, as we said before, being the renewed importance of the mining sector. Almost half of the flow of direct foreign investments between 1974 and 1979 went to that sector. However, it still has not achieved the significance that it had at the end of the previous decade. According to the data supplied by the ECLA report, industry will always be in second place in the distribution of investments with 23 percent of the total, services (banks and trade) will receive 14 percent and other sectors will have the remaining 18 percent.

Since a new mining investment of the magnitude of those approved in 1978 and 1979 has not been finalized, the sectorial distribution will change in 1980 and the total amount will be less spectacular. As of 3 September, this reached $152.5 million.

The Fifty Largest Foreign Investments Between 1974 and 1978 (Thousands of Current U.S. Dollars)

Foreign Investor	Recipient Enterprise	Accumulated Total 1974-1978
Exxon Minerals	La Disputada de las Condes*	173,166
Marris Co.	Minera Mantos Blancos	19,225
Exxon	Esso	15,899
Shell	Shell	11,644
San Jose	El Indio San Jose Inc.	10,617
The Goodyear	Goodyear*	10,103
Gasocean Sudatlantica	Naviera Interoceangas	8,243
Holderbank	Cemento Polpaico*	7,827
Firestone	Firestone	7,350
Superior Oil	Cia. Minera Santa Ines	4,834
Metallgas	Minera Toqui	4,670
Diamond Shamrock	Petroquimica Chilena*	4,555
Cia. Inversionista de Desarrollo	Banco Nacional del Trabajo	4,433
Nipon Suisan and Mitsubishi Co.	Empresa Pesquera de Desarrollo	4,427
Banco do Brasil	Banco do Brasil	4,000
Citibank	Citibank	4,000
Banco Real de Sao Paulo	Banco Real de Sao Paulo	4,000
Banco do Estado de Sao Paulo	Banco do Estado de Sao Paulo	4,000
Banco Exterior de Espana	Banco Exterior de Espana	4,000
Bank of America	Bank of America	4,000
Muscamo, Canada	Catecu	3,794
Banco de Santander	Banco de Santander	3,770
Inversiones Caspio S.A.	Banco Nacional del Trabajo	3,525
Basi	Anilquimica Ltda., Polimeros Nacionales	3,391
Geomin	Minera Chilena-Rumana	3,095
Fabrica Espanola de Magnetos	Femsaco	2,400
NCR	NCR	2,381
The Coca-Cola	Coca-Cola	2,372
Philips	Philips	2,285
Nipon Mining Co., Ltd.	Cia. Cobre Iquique	2,276
Citibank	Adelantos y Creditos	2,250
Backitt and Colman	Industria Atlantis	1,930
3M	3M	1,900
Rosenthal	Porcelana Florencia	1,839
Presser ag Harbison	Refractarios Chilenos	1,591
Overseas Manufacturing Co.	Bata	1,589
Compagnie Financiere Eternit et. al.	Pizarreno	1,544
L'Interpeche	Pesquera Iquique	1,529
Nestle	Savory	1,521
IBM	IBM	1,500

[Continued on following page]

Foreign Investor	Recipient Enterprise	Accumulated Total 1974-1978
The Swedish Match Co.	Compania de Fosforos	1,430
Hoescht	Hoescht	1,400
Akso Pharma BV and Betrex BV	Hormoquimica de Chile	1,387
Asfalim, Itafa, Soc. Fin. de Dev. Ina., Affisa	CHIPRODAL [Chilean Food Products Company]	1,311
The Antofagasta and Bolivia Railway	The Antofagasta and Bolivia Railway	1,249
Roche	Roche	1,220
Citroen	Automotriz Arica*	1,200
Wolfran Inv. Co.	Forestral Carampangue	1,168
Sandoz	Sandoz	1,015
Hamco Co.	Astilleros Marco	1,000

*Purchase of shares
No direct foreign investment
Source: "Presence and Participation of Multinational Enterprises in the Chilean Economy" by Eugenio Lahera

Banks: Interest Barometer

In spite of the recent provision by the Banco Central de Chile which raised the minimum capital of any bank--national or foreign--from $4 million to $10 million, the interest of investors in opening branches in Chile of the main foreign banks has not diminished.

As of 30 September, the Committee for Foreign Investments had approved requests for 17 branches, the majority of which are already operating with elegant local offices although they have few accounts so far.

The 30 offices of foreign banks approved in recent years should also be included. They do not have large buildings or deal directly with the public but are in Chile for other business. In many cases, they represent the interests of multinational enterprises which have subsidiaries in our country.

Foreign Banks in Operation

Banco do Brasil	Banco Sudameris
Republic National Bank	Chase Manhattan Bank
Bank of America	American Express
Citibank N.A.	Banco de Colombia
Banco Real	Banco de Tokyo
Banespa	Banco de la Nacion Argentina
Banco de Santander	Banco Central de Espana
Banco Exterior	Continental Illinois
First National Bank of Boston

Source: Superintendency of Banks and Financial Institutions, Committee for Foreign Investments

AIR FORCE TO REVITALIZE ANTARCTIC SCIENTIFIC BASE

Santiago EL MERCURIO in Spanish 7 Oct 80 p 6

[Text] After 16 years, the FACh [Chilean Air Force] Presidente Gabriel Gonzalez Videla scientific base in the Antarctic will be reactivated. This effort or opening is one of many development projects that will be initiated next month. They will permanently erase the image of isolation and solitude for our territory on the frozen continent.

The only airfield that stays open the entire year for all models of transport airplanes will be expanded to 1,300 meters. In this way, the FACh Teniente Rodolfo Marsch base will become a connecting point for all national installations. The work will be done around the beginning of the summer and involves several projects which representatives of the Chilean Army, Air Force and Navy announced to EL MERCURIO.

The Antarctic base commanders also related particular details of their work, revealing that the main efforts were aimed at exploration and penetration toward the southern part of the Antarctic territory. The reason for this exploration is to locate airfields in order to install new scientific and research bases.

End of Isolation

The main projects undertaken by an expedition organized by the FACh which will have the support of more than 150 men, heavy machinery and modern equipment will be carried out at the end of November. These involve the construction of a large hangar for Twin Otter, Buffalo and Hercules airplanes and UH-1H helicopters that are being used in the Antarctic for transportation between the bases and the continent.

Also a complete air terminal will be built by the end of 1980 or January 1981. This building will receive tourists and delegations that now arrive at the Teniente Rodolfo Marsch air base in larger numbers than the average 100.

"Cafeterias in the Antarctic?" EL MERCURIO asked the spokesmen, Commander Guillermo Aird, project chief, and Commander Miguel Camus Saldias of the FACh. "Well, there will be some installations for the people who arrive in Antarctica. At present, they get off the airplane and must wait outside until they are taken to shelter. Generally, the tourists include elderly women. At times, we have had to help these elderly women walk because climbing and walking in the snow is not the same as walking on land and their balance changes."

He was asked: "What other projects are included?"

"In addition to the airfield that will end the isolation of the Antarctica and provide absolute safety for landing transport airplanes--which is the fundamental part--navigation aid will be increased through the installation of equipment including a VOR-DME radio beacon. This will permit airplanes and ships to operate with greater safety," explained Commander Aird.

He said that the installation of the Racal communications system now operating expanded radio communication to the whole world and put the Chilean Antarctic territory in the position of meteorological representative.

All this infrastructure and the expeditions toward the South Pole mean that the Antarctic personnel barely rest. "The people work 20 hours at a time. I remember in 1979 we did not stop until 2000 hours on 24 December and we ignored New Year's Day and devoted ourselves to work," said the commanders. They have lived there for long periods of time, preparing this great project to promote a territory that, according to the treaties, is a "place of peace."

Soundings for Krill

On 6 November, it will be 40 years since the signing of Decree 1747 which fixed the definite boundaries of Chilean Antarctic sovereignty. The document stated: "The Chilean Antarctica or Chilean Antarctic Territory is formed by all the land, islands, reefs, glaciers and other known and unknown areas and the respective territorial sea within the boundaries of the cap formed by the meridians Longitude 53° West of Greenwich and Longitude 90° West of Greenwich."

This historic anniversary and the news from their bases were analyzed in person by Capt Pedro Romero and by telephone by the top chiefs in the Antarctic.

"The revolutionary events include the first soundings for krill which will be done in February 1981. The expedition will use the Biomassfibex method and will include the Hitzumi ship from the Undersecretariat of Fishing which will be carrying 12 scientists from different countries," he said.

"I think the Antarctic territory is a very valuable patrimony which Chile should know and exploit scientifically. Research in all disciplines should be done there; this will also increase our sovereignty," he ended.

"Hello, the Base Here"

A lot of snow fell in the Antarctic. "Hello, the base here. We are reviving after the terrible loss of our officers," said Group Commander Horacio Lopez del Castillo, top chief at Teniente Marsch base. He was referring to the helicopter crash a few days ago.

"The meteorological center has greatly improved since the installation of the new communications equipment. At this time, Chile is one of the countries, with the United States and the USSR, which is a regional meteorological center. All the communications pass through here and our country has attained an importance it never had before. This has notable influence on our sovereignty," he said.

"As to the projects, we are ready to receive our instructions and to make expansions and repairs. Everything is ready for the arrival of foreigners this summer. With the installation of the airfield which is open all year, we have only been alone about 45 days. Before, we could speak of isolation but no longer. (The aviators here noted that an airplane can fly from the capital to the base in 16 hours and return to the southern part of the continent.)

"The most important task is maintenance of the airfield; we spend a lot of time on this. This spring we received a lot of snow. Thank you for the call. In my own name and that of my officers, let me express my pleasure in talking with EL MERCURIO."

Road to the South

Commander Juan Morales Salgado from O'Higgins base spoke with these reporters concerning the significance of the human, military and Chilean presence in a place like Antarctica.

"We are pleased to fulfill our tasks. It is a sacrifice that will accentuate our sovereignty. This is delicate, selfless and at times dangerous work. We have reached a stage of 40 years of developing sovereignty," he said.

"We want to continue expanding our dominion and knowledge toward the South Pole and to achieve more stability. We are now preparing for the summer work--to make the base ready to receive scientists and tourists. I have heard that some authorities will visit us soon. It would be an honor for us to receive our superiors here. Tell everyone that we can properly welcome Chileans and foreigners here at O'Higgins base."

At the Capitan Arturo Prat base, the first one built on the Guesalaga Peninsula, Puerto Soberania, there was also fatigue and dynamism. The principal functions of synoptic and surface observation, exploration and developmental work are combined with planned research. One will be soundings for krill which will provide new information about this small crustacean.

7717
CSO: 3010

DOCUMENT ISSUED IN PROTEST OF PLEBISCITE

Santiago HOY in Spanish 8-14 Oct 80 p 9

[Text] The opposition presented a document signed by 45 people to the National Examining College which contained reasons that the "plebiscite" (between quotation marks) lacked "any legal validity or moral credibility."

This presented a question that might or might not have an historic effect. It is possible that some day, by invoking that document, it will be possible to demand the replacement of the Constitution of the present regime although EL MERCURIO indicated that "the attempt to invalidate the plebiscite will not have any internal legal or political effect." It added that all the sectors must work "based on this fundamental fact" (the plebiscite as a reality).

The document presented to the National Examining College (18 pages plus an attachment of 30 documents) was signed by the following, among others: Manuel Sanhueza, Patricio Aylwin, Alejandro Silva Bascunan, Ramon Silva Ulloa, Jaime Castillo Velasco, Gonzalo Taborga, Joaquin Morales Abarzua, Alberto Jerez and Maximo Pacheco.

The document primarily cited the objectionable conditions (the "climate") under which the plebiscite was held. Alluding to the anomalies and irregularities observed in the 11 September vote, the signers noted that, on that occasion, "the mission of the FFAA [Armed Forces] was to guarantee order and others--old and new experts in the field--used that order to mount their electoral operation."

It noted, for example, that the provision to nominate two members by lot was not carried out in the immense majority of the communities. In some areas, certain persons whose loyalty to the government was questioned were replaced by others.

Excessive votes: According to the document, the voting places were picked and set up without any public participation or supervision. The indelible ink was not indelible and the stamp put on the identification card could be easily taken off which "left the doors open to double voting by government partisans." In spite of the fact that the number of votes at each voting place could not exceed 300, a large number of them surpassed that figure and reached 400 and even 500 voters.

The vote examination was done, according to the document, with the public kept 2 to [illegible]eters away from the respective sites. There were differences between the votes [illegible]nted and the signature book.

There were also data to make the signers think that there were "serious allegations of vote exaggeration." In the metropolitan region, a comparison of the figures from the January 1978 plebiscite and the September plebiscite showed an average increase of 18.4 percent, "surprisingly different from the increase in population in the same region in the same period of time." Also voter abstention in the last three presidential elections (1958, 1964 and 1970) fluctuated between 13.2 percent and 16.5 percent; this time it barely reached 6.8 percent.

Because of all this, the signers asked the National Examining College to accept the denunciation of anomalies and irregularities which "nullify" the referendum.

The government responded with a note issued by the Social Communications Division.

It indicated that the demand "lacks any legal or moral basis since it is based on purely political evaluations and does not contain any concrete fact that shows an infraction of the law."

Along with reaffirming the legitimacy and validity of the plebiscite, the government indicated that the demand "is a desperate combination of all the false statements formulated before, during and after the plebiscite," which in no way contributes to national unity. It added that if they cannot prove their statements, the accusers "will always carry the stigma of having seriously offended thousands of honest compatriots and of having once more aided the international conspiracy against Chile."

7717
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

COPPER PRODUCTION RISES--At the end of the present decade, the El Teniente Division of CODELCO [Copper Corporation] Chile should produce 325,000 tons of pure copper per year. This represents an increase of 27.95 percent compared to the total produced by this deposit this year. This estimate was announced by Nibaldo Cordova, head of the Mine Engineering Department, and is one of the first conclusions of the 1979 prefeasibility study done by the U.S. consulting firm, McKee. That same firm will complete a feasibility study by December which will define the production levels, costs and other important factors for the future of El Teniente. A similar project, although at a less developed stage, is being done by the U.S. consulting firm, Bechtel, on the Chuquicamata deposit. Both "studies of global development"--as CODELCO calls them--try to determine the optimum "high or low" production level with respect to the present situation in Chuquicamata and El Teniente. The projects are based on the known fact of the gradual decrease in content in the two deposits which will require increased treatment if the present production of pure copper is to be maintained. The reports made public by the El Teniente executive are the first from these studies and indicate the need to gradually increase the present ore treatment capacity at that deposit. The El Teniente treatment plant now processes 62,000 metric tons per day. By 1986, this capacity should increase to 80,000 tons, to 100,000 tons between 1989 and 1990 and to 110,000 tons by the middle of the next decade. In this quarter of a century, the purity of the ore in this deposit will decrease from the present average of 1.54 percent to 0.9 percent. Nibaldo Cordova said that the required investment for El Teniente in order to take care of the decreased content and, at the same time, increase the annual production of pure copper is one of the major factors the McKee feasibility study will estimate. He felt that the amount required could "involve more than $100 million." [Text] [Santiago LA TERCERA DE LA HORA in Spanish 6 Oct 80 p 4] 7717

CSO: 3010

JORGE BLANCO DISCUSSES PRD, GUZMAN, PENA GOMEZ

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 9 Sep 80 p 2

[Interview With Salvador Jorge Blanco by Epifanio Rodriguez]

[Text] Santiago--The senator for the National District of the Dominican Revolutionary Party [PRD] has described as very fruitful for his party and the country the meeting between Dr Jose Francisco Pena Gomez and representatives of the business sector.

Questioned by this journalist, Dr Salvador Jorge Blanco said that the meeting clarified matters of great importance, in view of the influence of the business sector and Dr Pena Gomez on the country.

He stressed that the meeting, which took place several months after Pena Gomez' explanations and observations about Dr Luis Augusto Ginebra's speech before a group of businessmen, reveals that it has been possible to determine, define and explain important points.

As you will recall, Ginebra referred in his speech to the so-called advance of communism in the Dominican Republic after the installment of the constitutional government headed by Antonio Guzman.

On another matter, we asked Jorge Blanco to define his position on the agreement between the Dominican Government and Gulf and Western in relation to the multinational company's debt with the Dominican state.

Essentially, the political leader answered by analyzing the legal aspect of the matter. He said that before evaluating the agreement, it is necessary to establish its nature.

He explained that it is a matter of a compromise agreement to avoid litigation between the interested parties and indicated that the settlement is a legal action which is taken to prevent a lawsuit or annul one already in progress or resolved by the courts.

He stated that the compromise implies reciprocal sacrifices from the parties. He added that a fruitful agreement had been reached which put an end to the difficulties arising from Gulf's reported $38.7 million debt to the Dominican state.

Dr Jorge Blanco was also asked about signs of increased reconciliation between the PRD and the government resulting from the meeting between Pena Gomez and President Guzman.

To this he said that conciliation and harmony permitting an understanding between the party and the government would require something more than President Guzman's visits to the PRD National Headquarters or visits from PRD leaders to the National Palace.

He recalled that 2 months ago a document was delivered to the Political Commission which contains the guidelines of what the understanding between the Party and the government should be in order to facilitate the party's tasks and also to cooperate for the success of the current government.

Jorge Blanco said that as yet the PRD Political Commission has not reached any solution concerning the above-mentioned document, which has 10 points he considers cardinal.

The document reiterates views which have been stated since the very beginning of this government.

In addition, we discussed the theme of Dr Jorge Blanco's hope of being nominated candidate for president by his party at the 11th convention. Specifically we asked him whether he believed that influential sectors of the government could thwart this hope.

He recalled that there have already been obstacles on previous occasions, but warned that he could not jump ahead of events and pointed out that it is necessary to wait before evaluating the real situation.

He stated that his party is struggling constantly to make internal democracy prevail and to remove the vestiges which impede the path toward the establishment of a climate of respect and freedom which at the same time tends to strengthen the PRD.

With respect to the difficulties which have arisen during recent trips, including his being prevented access to the Party's premises in the city of Montecristi, he also stated his position.

He said he believes these situations stem from the actions of middle-level and grassroots leaders, without any decisions involving the party's top leadership.

Finally we asked Jorge Blanco to evaluate his status. He said that in general terms he has been gaining ground and talked about his satisfaction with the work that has been done.

He said that hundreds of leaders are working to educate and to raise political awareness concerning domestic problems and problems of general interest to the Dominican Republic.

9341
CSO: 3010

PAULINO PEREZ REJECTS TIES TO TRINITARIOS

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 9 Sep 80 p 4

[Text] A former leader of the Trinitarios group stated last night that he has severed all ties with that organization and, specifically, that he is in no way involved in the criminal acts that are being attributed to him.

Ramon Emilio Paulino Perez said in an interview with the editors of LISTIN DIARIO that last Friday he visited the National Police where he spoke to Colonel Delmonte who is in charge of the department of crimes against property for the purpose of clarifying his situation with regard to several acts in which that department has implicated him.

Paulino Perez stated that Colonel Delmonte had assured him explicitly that "the National Police are not seeking you in connection with any armed attack carried out during the last few days."

The official also assured him that they are also not looking for Lorenzo Mejia Frias, whom the authorities accuse of having participated in those acts.

Paulino Perez stated that he wants to make it very clear that he is not involved in the acts that have been attributed to him and that he has never been wanted by the police.

He also stated that he had called on District Attorney Julio Ibarra Rios, and that he was asked to visit that office again this morning in order to clarify his status once and for all.

In its 5 October issue this newspaper published a report which stated that the National Police had confirmed that leftist elements connected with the Trinitarios group headed by Guillermo Rubirosa Fermin were responsible for certain armed attacks, assaults and other criminal acts which have taken place in Santo Domingo during the past few days.

Among those being sought were Lorenzo Mejia Frias, alias (Clay), along with his brother Rogelio and Ramon Emilio Paulino Perez.

According to the report the police had asked the Mejia Frias brothers and Paulino Perez to surrender so that they might be brought to trial.

Mejia Frias (Clay) and his brother were definitely involved in an attack on the manager of a business engaged in the repair of air conditioners.

Meanwhile, Paulino Perez, while stating that he is not a member of the Trinitarios group, said that he shares its political stance since the group has stated that it will work politically without performing acts of violence.

"But if there is repression, they can rest assured that we will take the road to violence," Paulino Perez said.

Finally, he said that the police had agreed to state that he was not linked to recent criminal acts, but had not done so.

9204
CSO: 3010

MILITARY ASSISTANCE FROM TAIWAN REPORTED

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] The deputy chief of the Chinese Joint Chiefs of Staff visited the secretary of the Armed Forces yesterday, and promised full cooperation in the aid his government is providing to our military training system.

Gen Yao Chao-yuan came to the ministry accompanied by Chinese Capt Ti Ta-san; by Andrew Wu, interpreter; and by Air Force Col Leonel A. Munoz Perez, his aide-de-camp.

Air Force Lt Gen Mario A. Imbert Mc Gregor and the senior Chinese military officer spoke about the Dominican irrigation projects and the cooperation that the Armed Forces of both countries may be able to provide each other in the future.

During the visit the head of the Dominican Armed Forces and the deputy chief of the Chinese Joint Chiefs of Staff exchanged greetings.

General Chao-yuan was later invited by Air Force Lieutenant General Imbert Mc Gregor to the Center of Operations of the Armed Forces and the National Police (COFA) where he was introduced to the personnel of the General Staff.

Col Jaime Nunez Cosme spoke about the activities and the organization of our Armed Forces and a film was later shown which showed the different aspects of military development in the Dominican Republic, including training, civic action, sports, agricultural cooperation, public health assistance, social events in military clubs and so forth.

The narration, which was conducted by Osvaldo Cepeda y Cepeda, a military officer attached to the Armed Forces Secretariat, was translated by Mr Andrew Wu.

After the film had ended General Chao-yuan asked various questions about the armed forces institutes of the country which were answered by Air Force Lieutenant General Imbert Mc Gregor and Colonel Nunez Cosme.

Present were personnel of the General Staff, including Maj Gen Ramiro Matos Gonzalez, chief of the General Staff of the National Army; Air Force Maj Gen Pablo I. Garrido Medina, chief of staff of the Dominican Air Force; Maj Gen Dr Virgilio Payano Rojas, a lawyer and head of the National Police; the staff under secretaries of the Armed Forces, Air Force Maj Gen Alfredo S. Imbert Mc Gregor and wife, and Brig Gen Luciano Diaz; Medical Corps Brig Gen Dr Jorge A. Diaz Vargas, director general of the Military Medical and Health Corps of the Armed Forces; Rear Adm Julio Cesar Ortiz Pena, deputy chief of staff of the Navy, representing Navy Chief of Staff Vice Adm Francisco Amiana Castillo, who is abroad; Col Dr Bolivar Soto Montas, a lawyer and legal adviser; Col Ramon Zorilla Santana, chief of the Logistics Division; Col Luis J. Martinez Cabrera, chief of the J-2; Col Amable Bueno Oviedo, chief of the Communications Division; Col Orlando A. Saillant Ornes, a parachutist and chief of Public Relations; Col Rafael Diaz Hernandez; and Lieutenant Colonel Morales, chief of the Office of Personnel.

9204
CSO: 3010

DETERIORATION OF VENEZUELAN RELATIONS WITH CUBA SEEN AS POSITIVE

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 30 Sep 80 p 7

[Editorial: "Venezuela and Cuba -- Logical Split Between Democracy and Totalitarianism"]

[Text] Perhaps when this editorial is published the break in relations between Venezuela and Cuba will have already been made official. The ties between the most prosperous democracy in Latin America and the communist dictatorship in the Caribbean have been eroding rapidly since President Luis Herrera Campins came into office. According to the most recent information, they reached their lowest point on 28 September.

What set off the crisis was the withdrawal, unexpected and without official notice, of the Cuban diplomats (altogether 27) occupying the Cuban Embassy in Caracas. Castro's representatives left Venezuela abruptly, a few hours after receiving a telephone call from the island dictator in which he informed them of his irritation over a court judgment handed down in the fatherland of Bolivar.

The judgment acquitted four men (two Cubans and two Venezuelans) who had been tried in 1976 for the supposed crime of placing a bomb on an aircraft of the Cuban Airline Enterprise, which was destroyed in flight by the explosion.

After he learned the decision of the court that tried the case, Castro delivered a harsh speech in which he called the Venezuelan leaders "hypocritical Pharisees" and hinted that the military had brought pressure to bear so that the accused might be declared innocent.

Both the embassy and consulate of Cuba in Caracas, as well as the office of its press agency, were deserted on the same night as the final judgment. It was learned that the members of the legation did not even take leave of the Foreign Ministry.

Meanwhile, in view of the virulent attacks by Cuban radio and by Castro himself, the Ministry of Foreign Relations of Venezuela issued a communique rejecting the dictator's statements as "false, disrespectful and unacceptable."

The Caracas Government's message states official "amazement" over the desire of Cuba's strong man that Venezuelan justice should act in accordance with Castro's criteria.

"The Cuban Government cannot understand," the communique states, "why Venezuela feels proud of its state of law. And, therefore, accused persons can only be sentenced or acquitted in accordance with the facts and not by what governments in office may think or order."

Finally, the text described Castro's statements on a presumed interference by the court-martial on the decision to acquit the accused as "rash and malicious."

When Venezuela was governed by Carlos Andres Perez, who became famous for his histrionics and demagogy, to the point of becoming the international figure of a political snob, the terms of the relations between the two countries were very close, in view of the fact that the Socialist International, run at that time by Olof Palme, another great prima donna of the "revolutionary" gibberish, who visited Cuba and was filled with wonder at its great "economic and political achievments," played into the Cuban dictator's hands with unspeakable deliberations and proposals.

But both Palme and Perez lost elections in their countries (Sweden and Venezuela) and were replaced by more serious leaders, consistent with democratic thinking and responsible to their countries and to the international community.

As a result of the existence of the free election system, the Social Christian Party (COPEI) came into office in Venezuela and the honeymoon between Castro and the presidential palace began to wither.

Venezuela's Christian democrats have not allowed Castro to put his hand in the country's internal affairs and they have not believed that the popularity of a government official or a party is enhanced by playing into the hands of a Marxist dictator who, regardless of how much he invests in propaganda to make him pass as a hero, is just another tyrant, with a rhetoric different from Somoza's but equally cruel (if not more so) when it is time to deal with his opponents.

The sovereign decision to issue a court decision on the Cuban Airline incident was the drop that made the cup overflow. But, basically, what there is is a deep-seated contradiction between democracy and totalitarianism, between freedom and oppression, between the system of laws and a police regime.

It is interesting to observe the phenomenon for various reasons. One of them, because it is proved once more that communism does not respect the people's sovereignty. Another, of extremely current interest to Honduras, because it is made obvious that a Christian democrat party, loyal to its doctrinary principles, cannot go very far in its relations with a totalitarian party and the third reason, because it teaches us when the forces of moderation do not play into their hands, the extremists abandon the fiction of friendship and go off on the shortcut of aggression.

It may be that the break will not be declared right now. Perhaps it will. But, regardless of whether or not it occurs, the important thing is that, for the nth time, what Pius XII said is verified: "Communism is intrinsically perverse," and to clear away all doubts it is confirmed that, as Lenin said very well, "there is no brotherhood possible between the wolf and the sheep."

10,042
CSO: 3010

NICARAGUAN REGIME URGED TO HEED PEOPLE'S WISHES, PROTESTS

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 2 Oct 80 p 7

[Editorial: "People and Cubans in Nicaragua"]

[Text] The news coming from Managua, Nicaragua, and disseminated in similar terms by every news agency, to the effect that the people of the neighboring country are already beginning to protest -- strongly and with street demonstrations -- against the presence of Cuban military personnel and political police, camouflaged as "physicians" and "teachers," seemed very significant to us.

"One person was killed and two more were wounded in disturbances that occurred today in the Atlantic port of Bluefields, during street demonstrations protesting the presence of a group of Cuban physicians and teachers, the authorities have reported," according to an AP dispatch.

"Over 5,000 persons demonstrated in the streets of Bluefields, some 150 kilometers from this capital, shouting against the presence of the Cubans. It is said that there are 300 Cuban physicians, in addition to an undetermined number of teachers of that nationality."

The Cubans have been in Nicaragua since the beginning of the year, assisting the National Reconstruction Junta in its literacy and public health drives.

The protest began on Sunday (28 September) and continued on the next day, obliging the authorities to mobilize Army troops toward the region. But the troops were in their barracks today (1 October) while members of the junta went to Bluefields.

According to reports received here, one of them, Dr Sergio Ramirez Mercado, tried to engage in a dialogue with the demonstrators. Another junta member, Dr Rafael Cordoba Rivas, in Managua, described the situation as "very critical."

The Bluefields event, which cannot be analyzed at this distance in all the detail that a sociologist would regard as necessary for arriving at a correct conclusion on its deep-seated motives and real objectives is, nevertheless, a clue, evidence that the people of Nicaragua do not feel in solidarity with or committed to the Cuban "physicians" and "teachers," but rather quite to the contrary. They reject their presence and are asking that they be invited to leave the country.

We must necessarily ask ourselves: can it be that the inhabitants of Bluefields have gone crazy and are rejecting the medical care and the education offered by the Cuban "volunteers" sent by the Marxist government in Havana?

Or can it be that there are a large number of grounds and that the self-proclaimed physicians and teachers are nothing more than an expeditionary force, in civilian clothes, that has arrived in Nicaragua to act as the vanguard of the Soviet empire?

The people of Central America are noble, simple and grateful. When physicians came from the United States in those famous caravans conducted periodically by American physicians, bringing instruments and medicines, visiting rough, inhospitable and remote places, and administering care to rural people free of charge, the people not only received them with affection and gratitude, but also even gave them a hen, a rabbit or a hog from their meager family treasury.

But what would happen if these men, dressed as physicians (or as teachers, which is the same, for practical purposes) should come to impose an ideology, a domination, an iron discipline, brainwashing and, finally, subjection of communities and country to a foreign government?

Simply, the protest would not be long in coming. First, with street demonstrations, as in Bluefields. Later, no prediction can be made. Perhaps it would start with isolated attacks on the agents of imperialist penetration. That is how General Sandino began his struggle. In the long run, the sum of those acts of rebellion might degenerate into a revolution, especially if the masses of the people are organized, trained politically and become aware that the men in the government are the ones who have sponsored the country's invasion by a foreign force, advocating intolerance, violence and totalitarianism.

The representative of the Nicaraguan Junta is telling the truth when he states that the situation in Bluefields is "very critical."

In the first place, because it reveals that the people on the lower level do not want the struggle that their brothers, sons, husbands and fathers waged against a dynastic regime to come to an end in the establishment of another oppressive government. In the second place, because what happened in Bluefields at the end of September will have an effect on other communities in Nicaragua and will continue to spread progressively to the whole nation.

We believe that it is still possible for the neighboring country to avoid arriving at the disastrous situation of poverty, servitude and dependency in which Cuba is with regard to the Soviet Union.

It can be avoided in two ways: for the Sandinist commanders to study sincerely the spontaneous reactions of the people and return the country to the original plan of government advocated by a nationalist, popular revolution, without dependencies of any kind, which is not very likely, in view of the circumstances, or for Nicaragua's democratic parties, which fought against Somoza and are opposed to totalitarianism, to intensify their relation with the masses and, on the basis of events like the one on which we are commenting, launch an offensive for freedom, with the support of the foreign forces that also backed the struggle against the dynasty in the past.

This process must, however, be started today. Tomorrow may be very late.

10,042
CSO: 3010

SALVADORAN CHURCH'S ATTEMPTS TO ISOLATE LEFTISTS PRAISED

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 16 Sep 80 p 7

[Editorial: "El Salvador -- the Church Draws Away From the Extremists"]

[Text] After a week full of violence, terror and blood, in which there were, according to unofficial figures, over 150 deaths caused by bombs and machinegunnings, terrorist fires and guerrilla attacks, the apostolic administrator of San Salvador, Monsignor Arturo Rivera y Damas, condemned the criminal methods used by the parties and said, with regard to the extreme left, that it is acquiring for itself the people's repudiation.

The unexpected statement by the acting bishop of San Salvador, heir of the deceased archbishop, Oscar Arnulfo Romero, was made after a series of bombs placed by terrorists of the various revolutionary gangs operating in the neighboring country caused the death of a number of persons who have nothing to do with the undeclared war being waged in Cuscatlan.

"Peaceful coexistence can be achieved only by respecting human dignity," the Catholic pastor said in his sermon on 14 September, in which he also maintained that the indiscriminate attacks by Marxist groups "have made them earn the repudiation of many people." In the opinion of Monsignor Rivera, the guerrilla fighters belonging to various radical groups are seeking the power "not by means of consensus but rather by force of arms."

Up to now, most of the acts of violence have been laid claim to by the Popular Liberation Forces (FPL), which not only state that they are the perpetrators of the acts involved, but also announce more and increasingly destructive operations.

The FPL members said that many of the persons killed had been "executed" for belonging to the Nationalist Democratic Organization (ORDEN), an extreme right group that was outlawed by the Government Junta.

While the government has limited itself to issuing very concise bulletins in which minor skirmishes are mentioned, the armed bands of the left have been extremely explicit.

In a recent message from the Unified Revolutionary Directorate (DRU), they stated that "they will resume their struggle against the fascist junta," adding that "the order for a general offensive against the enemy of our people is about to be given and all our hatred against injustice and exploitation is to be expressed in carrying it out."

Nevertheless, matters in the realm of leftist extremism are not moving at the pace or cohesion that the rebels would desire.

It is reported in the same message from the DRU that an organization called National Resistance has decided to separate itself from the above-mentioned directorate, which, as of that date, is made up of the People's Revolutionary Army, the Communist Party and the Popular Liberation Forces.

Recently also, the creation of a new labor union and political alliance was announced to the public: the People's Democratic Union (UPD), which proclaims its rejection of "repression," but, at the same time, has given its support to the agrarian reform implemented by the Government Junta and which is the axis of the program of changes started by the regime.

All this assumes, on the one hand, that the Marxist-Leninist opposition has been unable to achieve the total unification proclaimed by its spokesmen and, on the other hand, that the struggle against the military and the Christian democrats in office is very far from reaching its objective.

Now then, the sermon of Monsignor Rivera y Damas has a significance that merits separate reflection.

All those who closely followed the evolution of the political-military conflict in El Salvador know that the backing of the Church was decisive in isolating and finally destroying the government of Gen Carlos Humberto Romero, overthrown on 15 October 1979.

No one is unaware that, for several months and especially after the Christian Democrat Party was incorporated in the junta, the former archbishop, Monsignor Romero, encouraged the leftist groups and obtained the people's backing for them.

But today, when the situation has worsened and the partisans of violence have brought their true intentions out in the open, killing indiscriminately and making it clear that they are seeking to establish a Cuban-type dictatorship in El Salvador, the Church has reversed itself and has begun not only to denounce the Marxists under arms but also to use its enormous influence to isolate them.

This turnabout is extraordinarily important, because under the present circumstances being experienced by the neighboring country the word of a spiritual leader has decisive value.

It would not be remote for the left to decide, any moment now, that the bishop must be eliminated physically, but if that should happen, it would be difficult for it to change the present line of the magistracy. On the contrary, it would very probably strengthen it, owing to the intense rejection that usually follows a situation of terror.

In that state of affairs, it is increasingly unlikely for the partisans of totalitarianism to achieve the power in El Salvador. Nevertheless, the junta must decide, as soon as possible, on a political solution to the crisis, because it cannot go on as it has been too much longer.

Democracy -- political, economic and social -- is the only long-range answer to the problems of underdeveloped and oppressed countries. Those leaders who understand this clearly and act accordingly will live to see peace and progress and when they cross the threshold of the beyond, they will continue to live eternally in the hearts of their people.

10,042
CSO: 3010

PEMEX OIL SALES TO JAPAN DISCUSSED

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 1 Oct 80 Sec B p 3

[Text] Mexican Petroleum stated that the commitments for exporting oil assumed by Mexico are being carried out in accordance with the respective programs in each instance, noting that, starting today, sales to Japan will amount to 100,000 barrels per day.

The government oil company observed that the fulfillment of international commitments is a result of the assiduousness with which the various tasks of the sector are being carried out, both in exploration and in production and sales.

These comments were made by PEMEX, which explained that, based on the export commitments assumed with Japan, as of today the volume of sales will reach 100,000 barrels per day, a figure which does not represent any change insofar as the contracts are concerned.

It was commented that the documents which were signed indicate that the shipments would start with 25,000 barrels per day on 5 May of this year, and this volume increased until it reached the agreed upon figure, which is the one that will be maintained starting today.

It was said that the increases in sales were staggered and, when they reached the total volume, the terms would be fulfilled on time and PEMEX's export program with that country would be met.

The first shipment of Mexican crude to the Orient left on 5 May, bound for the Mitsubishi Corporation, which was already familiar with the Mexican product, and which had processed it in its refineries, so that it could become familiar with it on an industrial scale.

The Mexican oil company indicated that, to date, all the commitments for foreign sales have been kept in accordance with the contracts signed with all customers.

It was remarked that there has been no change in the sales programs, despite the fact that there have been requests from several countries to increase the volumes of our crude that are exported.

2909
CSO: 3010

SAUDI ARABIA SHOWS INTEREST IN DEAL WITH PEMEX

Mexico City EXCELSIOR in Spanish 4 Oct 80 Sec A pp 18, 27

[Text] Acapulco, Guerrero, 3 Oct--The general director of Mexican Petroleum, engineer Jorge Diaz Serrano, stated that, on the occasion of his recent trip to the Middle East, he found that a country as important as Saudi Arabia was interested in having several companies, especially Mexican Petroleum, participate in the implementation of the plans that it has devised, and announced that "we are ready to provide them with cooperation in two areas:

"First, by supplying high technology, which we would do in coordination with the Mexican Petroleum Institute; and, secondly, by engaging in projects of large scope, in which case PEMEX would back the contracting firms from our country working there."

And he added that he would soon be visiting the Far East, among other reasons, to obtain firsthand information about the oil industry in the People's Republic of China. He said that it was possible ("and we shall attempt it") that we might cooperate with that industry, by means of projects similar to those mentioned previously in connection with Saudi Arabia, including activities involving geological and geophysical exploration, as well as other exploration work both on shore and at sea."

The official cited the Chicontepec project, noting that it was estimated that the development of the paleocanal would require 25,000 workers; which means that approximately 150,000 persons would depend economically on oil. "Arrangements are now being made to supply training and skills to the work force in the area, so that the recruitment of qualified personnel (a fifth of the total number) can be made preferably (if not at first, then at a later stage of the work) among the local residents."

2909
CSO: 3010

ISRAEL CONTINUES TO BUY MEXICAN OIL

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 23 Sep 80 Sec B pp 1, 4

[Text] Jerusalem, 22 Sep--(EFE)--Even though the prices of oil of the OPEC nations may drop, Israel will continue to purchase it from Mexico and Egypt, its main suppliers of crude, claimed the minister of energy, Yitzhak Modai, who acknowledged the fact that, at present, Israel could buy hydrocarbons on the free market in Rotterdam (The Netherlands) at lower prices than it is paying, but that this would entail a risk for Israel.

According to the FINANCIAL TIMES of London, Mexico will sell Israel 60 percent of the 8 million tons that it consumes annually (160,000 barrels per day). The EFE Agency learned that Israel will pay the state company, Mexican Petroleum (PEMEX), about $30 per barrel.

Moreover, Modai told the Israeli press that "there are several foreign companies interested in exploring and drilling in our country, and if they so desire it is because they have real information about potential hydrocarbon reserves in our soil." Israel's entire oil production is confined to 22.98 percent of its needs, after having returned to Egypt the oilfields of Abu- Rudays (in 1975) and "Alma."

The current armed hostilities between Iraq and Iran (an important supplier of Israel until the fall of Shah Reza Pahlevi 2 years ago) have had no effect on the energy situation.

Israel proposes to purchase 20 percent of the crude that it consumes from Egypt. There is a formal commitment whereby Sadat's government must sell crude from the returned wells to Israel, in connection with the peace treaty between the two countries.

The Egyptians reduced the production from the 14 wells that the Israelis had drilled in "Alma" (currently the "Sharab 'Ali" oilfield), in Sinai, from 30,000 to 17,000 barrels per day. However, Cairo's national oil company intends to extract about 10,000 barrels from that area in the future.

The Israelis, facing the negotiations in November of this year, are wondering what price Egypt will ask for the crude from Sinai which, this year, costs between $5 and $10 less than that from OPEC, according to Radio Israel.

The commentator from the state broadcasting company gave a reminder that the return of the "Alma" wells meant an expense for Israel of $1.5 billion to import oil. Nevertheless, Israel is tending to "return to coal."

At the present time, in the locality of Hedera, construction is under way on a huge electrical powerplant, which will operate with coal from South Africa and Australia, and which will produce more than 50 percent of the volumes required by the Israelis.

BUDGET SECRETARY PREDICTS 25-30 PERCENT INFLATION

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 4 Oct 80 Sec A pp 1, 10

[Text] The inflation rate anticipated for the end of this year will not be under 25 percent, nor will it exceed 30 percent, according to a statement made by Miguel de La Madrid Hurtado, secretary of programing and budget, at the breakfast held for the "20 Women and A Man" group at the social center of the department that he heads, in Coyoacan.

La Madrid, discussing the inflation problem, remarked that, unfortunately, the rate this year will be higher than the 20 percent predicted, because of the country's accelerated development.

For this reason, the government has implemented a package of policies to reduce it without jeopardizing the nation's growth or employment policies, while at the same time protecting the consumption of the popular classes.

The subject of the interview went on to say that there are two causes for the inflation that we are undergoing: the international economic upheaval, an external factor, and a sharp recovery in the Mexican economy during the past 3 years. Our inflation is not related to stagnation, but rather to development.

Extremely optimistic about the accelerated development of our economy, the secretary of programing and budget said that our economic recovery has been such that there is currently a greater generation of jobs than an increase in the population, and that the demand for labor is greater than the supply, because now employers are having problems finding workers at the rate that they require. Nevertheless, he warned that, despite this satisfactory information, he has not failed to recognize the danger of inflation, a pathological behavior in the economy, and hence it must be combated with production and efficiency.

Owing to the growth in the Mexican economy, with the resultant public and private investment, Mexico will not lose its credit capacity. The public debt has grown, but at a slower pace than in past years, and less than exports. Our debt is in a proper relationship with the country's capacity for payment because the volume of hard currency and our growing economy provide that guarantee. At present, the foreign debt totals $32 billion. Mexico is one of the best debtors on the international credit market. Its debt is less than the credit offered it.

Policy on Subsidies

The purpose of a policy on subsidies is to encourage and stimulate the production of goods and services. It has two goals: to promote some of the economic activities in accordance with the development strategy, stimulating industry and the agricultural and livestock sector, and the protection of the consumption of the popular classes. The subsidy is a natural instrument of the government for the redistribution of resources, but a proper balance must be maintained. When subsidies are unrealistic, they can be a cause of inflationary ills and pressure; then they are described as "monstrous," because they cease to serve their purpose.

At the present time, 40 billion pesos in public spending are earmarked for subsidies, according to the secretary of programing and budget, who said that the majority are justified and others not. Therefore, there must always be a vigilant attitude, reviewing and adjusting them.

In discussing the possibility of an increase in gasoline prices, he said that it would be necessary to observe which social class was being benefited by the subsidy, whether it was the classes economically able to pay the real price of production of the product, or the popular classes, citing in this connection the protection of mass transportation.

Upon being asked why companies such as PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum] do not program their increases, the state secretary replied that this would be ideal, but that, when this does not occur, the necessary adjustment must be made. In the case of the hike in gasoline prices, the inflationary impact would be initial but, over the medium term, it would have anti-inflationary effects, because it provides the state with funds, preventing inflationary pressure. He noted that sometimes, in order to combat inflation, prices must be raised.

The Delay in Teachers' Pay, an Administrative Defect

De La Madrid admitted that the delay in paying the teachers' salaries was due to administrative defects, because in Mexico, with its rapid growth, everything is "too small, as in the case of an adolescent." However, last year a plan was approved for decentralization of payments, the implementation of which will take 2 years. It consists of a decentralization of administrative functions. This program has been introduced in 12 federal government entities and, by the end of this year, it will include all of them except the Secretariat of Public Education which will require a few more weeks, owing to its complexity.

It Is Better To Have a Plan Like SAM Than Not To Have a Fixed Direction

In response to criticism made of the Mexican Food System [SAM] to the effect that it is just another program, the head of the Secretariat of Programing and Budget said that plans are almost never carried out in their entirety, but that it is better to have them rather than risk the lack of direction, and of clearcut notions that will determine the action.

He said that SAM is a multiple, institutional strategy for attacking the problem of nutrition in Mexico. It is based on the recognition that there are large groups of Mexicans who are not properly nourished. It is also based on acknowledgment that the increase in food production has been downgraded, and that there is unemployment and low income among the farmers, and one of the priority goals of the government of Jose Lopez Portillo is adequate, sufficient food.

The plan is ambitious, and its strategy is complex; hence it requires a change in the production and distribution systems, and in the mentality of Mexicans. It is not a short term program, although this does not mean that we shall not see results soon. It is a comprehensive proposal from President Lopez Portillo, which demands great effort and the surmounting of apathy; but that does not mean that it is not valid. The action must be undertaken and, the sooner there is action, the sooner results will be accrued.

De La Madrid does not want Mexico to be a monoexporting (oil) country. In his opinion, Mexico is sufficiently developed to be a country exporting manufactured products, and hence a stimulus is being given to industrial production and exports; but if the latter have declined, it is because of the demand from domestic consumers and the recession that has occurred in many countries which are customers of Mexico.

2909
CSO: 3010

MINIDEVALUATION ON PESO PREDICTED

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 2 Oct 80 Sec A p 14

[Text] This year, inflation will reach a rate of 25 percent, but if the difference with respect to the United States inflation rate continues to increase, we shall have to expect further minidevaluations of the Mexican peso.

Furthermore, for those who make term investments in banks, it is very important now to note the periodic revision of interest rates, because only those related to terms of over a year have remained stable.

These comments were made yesterday by the analysis management of the James E. Day securities exchange firm.

The analysts said: "There is constant talk about the parity of the peso with respect to the dollar, and this should be analyzed objectively, without allowing ourselves to be influenced by unfounded rumors," because there are several factors which determine that parity and, at present, the only negative factor is, or could be, the difference in inflation rates.

For the present, the positive factors which would prevent a devaluation are the existence of reserves amounting to over $6 billion, a balance of payments which has improved and which is expected to continue improving, a wonderful supply of credit on the international markets, high economic growth of between 7 and 8 percent, political stability, oil reserves and an abundance of natural resources.

2909
CSO: 3010

ADMIRAL CALLS FOR NEW LEGISLATION ON NAVY

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 2 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] Yesterday, the under secretary of the Navy Adm Jose Maria Montejo Sierra, described to the deputies affiliated with the pertinent legislative commission the critical situation being experienced by the Mexican Navy, which is preventing it from effectively performing its function to safeguard the country's maritime resources.

During the work session breakfast, the admiral stated that the Navy's cooperative capacity has declined 15 percent during the past 4 years, stressing that many of its vessels are obsolete; that is, their design is unsuitable for the present conditions.

The offical observed that, according to a study made in 1976, the 102 vessels which were operating then at 40 or 45 percent of their capacity, are now operating at 35 percent thereof, owing to the normal deterioration of the units.

He also noted that, for this reason, the operation of the ships is a dangerous "chess game," in addition to the fact that the ships on hand are assigned to the critical areas related to oil, fishing and territorial defense.

Admiral Montejo Sierra emphasized that the budget of the Secretariat of Navy is clearly insufficient to meet the requirements of the service, because only 0.4 percent of the federal public budget is earmarked for this area.

He called upon the members of the Chamber of Deputies for new legislation relating to the National Navy, so that the present shortcomings could be surmounted, indicating that there is a need to expand the Navy's equipment and to improve the salaries of its personnel, which are currently meager.

He added that there must be legislation to speed up the granting of incentives in the social security area, as well as authorization for, and collection of pensions for retired seamen and for the widows and children of those who die in service, because, at present, it takes years for them to be processed, something which, he said, is a real martyrdom.

In answering questions from deputies on the Navy Commission, Montejo Sierra stressed that there is a lack of maritime awareness in the country, which is inconsistent with the fact that a large portion of Mexico's wealth lies in the 10,000 kilometers of coast, and their exclusive economic zone, which is an area comparable to the Mexican continental mass.

He added that it is because of the problems that have been cited that there are islands such as Coronado, which are leased to foreigners, and on which the national sovereignty is confined to the presence of a naval garrison.

The official commented that the Secretariat of Navy has initiated a campaign to create awareness, so that we shall not continue to turn our backs on the sea. As part of it, on 6 October there will begin lectures given in the Federal District in the riparian states and in the center of the republic, to publicize the need for rational exploitation and vigilance for our seas.

2909
CSO: 3010

URAMEX: ENOUGH URANIUM FOR CFE NEEDS

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 29 Sep 80 Sec B p 2

[Text] The country has sufficient uranium reserves to meet the fuel needs of the Federal Electricity Commission [CFE] to operate the nuclear electric plants. It is estimated that, by 1982, the present reserves of 6,700 tons will be multiplied by six.

The foregoing announcement was made by URAMEX [Mexican Uranium], an entity which noted that our country's nuclear problem is complex, but not impossible to resolve, and that it is anticiapted that the following goals will be met by 1982:

Having the human cadres to undertake research and development in the nuclear field, who will guarantee optimal use of our nuclear resources;

Establishing sufficient reserves by means of exploration of our uranium ore deposits. In the latter area (URAMEX remarked) the goal has been set to attain 40 percent exploration of 1.1 million square kilometers of national territory, an area considered to contain formations propitious for uranium and other radioactive ores.

An attempt is being made to multiply the 6,7000 tons of positive reserves recorded up until 1976 by six, and at present there are already 8,700 tons.

And finally, among the goals that it is hoped to attain, there is the one for obtaining the first 250 tons of Mexican uranium by the end of 1982, thus insuring the volumes that will feed the reactors of the Laguna Verde Nuclear Electric Plant.

To explain the optimism that prevails regarding the country's uranium reserves, the entity pointed out that, in uranium geology, there is the theory that this element exists in the world in two different ways: in sedimentary formations, and in acidic igneous rock.

It was said that, according to this theory, 90 percent of the uranium discovered to date is in sedimentary formations, and only 10 percent in igneous rock.

Therefore, Mexico has the majority of its deposits in rhyolites, which are acidic igneous rocks; in other words, it has uranium where it was assumed that there should be none, and this has been observed with great optimism along the Western Sierra Madre.

The entity reported that, to complete the explorationand development, six zones have been created, dividing the country: Sonora Branch, Chihuahua Branch, Coahuila-Durango Branch, Nuevo Leon-Tamaulipas Branch, Oaxaca Branch and the recently formed Central Branch.

In addition to performing the exploration work which, although it is still minimal, has made it possible to anticipate a larger supply of uranium in the country, construction is also under way on the first major ore processing plant, which will have a daily milling of 1,000 tons, producing 330 tons of uranium concentrates per year.

This plant is under construction in Pena Blanca, Chihuahua, while in La Coma, Tamaulipas, work has started on another plant with a milling of 700 tons per day, which will be able to produce 300 tons of uranium concentrate per year by the end of 1982.

It was emphasized that, for this reason there is a certainty that Mexico will have sufficient volumes of uranium to meet the country's nuclear electric development requirements.

2909
CSO: 3010

CAMPECHE BAY OIL PRODUCTION PREDICTED

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 4 Oct 80 Sec A, p 3

[Text] Yesterday, Fernando Manzanilla Sevilla, deputy director of the Mexican Petroleum Institute (IMP) disclosed that Campeche Sound will contribute 1.1 million barrels of oil per day to the country by the end of 1982.

He added that this sizable production will account for 40 percent of the national total, which by that time should be 2.7 million barrels per day, in accordance with the platform devised by President Lopez Portillo.

Interviewed at the conclusion of a function put on by IMP for 134 workers (administrative employees, technicians and superintendents who had worked for 10 years in that agency), Manzanilla Sevilla stated that Campeche Sound is currently producing 867,699 barrels.

The deputy director of IMP, representing its director, Agustin Straffon A., lauded the invaluable contribution from the personnel to "the historical era in which it is the country's destiny to live."

He said that the institute was in a period of growth exceeding all expectations, with a consolidated and aggressive development in its research on behalf of the technological requirements demanded in the field of petroleum.

Stressing their perseverance and professional maturity in their work, Manzanilla Sevilla urged all the workers to continue their activities within IMP in a constant, dynamic fashion.

Then there was a presentation of awards, which consisted of a certificate and a gold badge.

As a special award, the architect Fernando Licuona received a unique distinction, because he had never been absent nor taken any leave in 10 years.

It was noted that, in this way, IMP recognizes the effort and dedication of the personnel rendering service in the Institute. The ceremony, held in the IMP's own facilities, was also attended by many of its directors and officials.

2909
CSO: 3010

DIAZ SERRANO DISCUSSES INCREASED OIL PRODUCTION

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 2 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] Acapulco, Guerrero, 1 Oct--The director of Mexican Petroleum, Jorge Diaz Serrano, declared that it would take over 8 months to increase or expand the oil platform, because we would have to produce 500,000 additional barrels, which could be achieved by the middle of 1981 or perhaps slightly sooner.

After accompanying President Lopez Portillo at the opening of the 13th Congress of the Chamber of Industry and Construction, Diaz Serrano said that work is proceeding at a fast pace and that the growth has amounted to 30 percent per year. For the present, the military conflict in the Middle East is not having any effect on the Mexican production platform, which is 2.75 million barrels, subject to a 10 percent increase.

On the other hand, he noted that there is pressure from the fact that everyone is asking Mexico for oil, because it has become one of the countries which has most expanded its oil industry.

Diaz Serrano remarked that, at the present time, work is being done "in two directions: internally, with the total development plan, wherein we shall produce items for our domestic consumption and export what is necessary for our development; and externally, with the World Energy Plan presented to the United Nations by President Jose Lopez Portillo."

2909
CSO: 3010

CADEREYTA REFINERY SOON TO GO ON LINE

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 26 Sep 80 Sec F p 1

[Text] Monterrey, Nuevo Leon (OEM)--Engineer Gilberto Walls Cardenas announced that in 3 weeks' time PEMEX's [Mexican Petroleum] Cadereyta refinery will be producing 135,000 barrels per day, when the Number 2 combined distillation plant, now in a period of testing, goes into operation.

The petroleum complex's superintendent of processing announced that the new plant is in the "reception" process, and that it would start up during the first 2 weeks of October; whereupon the Cadereyta refinery will be complete insofar as the process is concerned.

All that is needed to make the refinery totally completed are two hydrodesulphurizing plants, a gasoline cracking facility and a sulphur recovery plant, which will be put into operation this year as well, the official added.

Walls Cardenas also disclosed the fact that two viscosity reducing plants and two high vacuum plants which were not included in the original plans for the refinery, but which had to be included to improve the services of the petroleum complex, are to be constructed.

He said that the two viscosity reduction plants reduce that of fuel, and save on the diesel and kerosene internal distillers which are currently used as thinners and are wasted.

The two high vacuum plants, in turn, will bring about an increase in the "loads" of the catalytic cracking plant.

In other words, the new plants will make use of the byproducts and rights to obtain higher quality refined products, and thus cause a qualitative increase in the refinery's operations.

2909
CSO: 3010

COUNTRY TO PRODUCE, REPAIR JET ENGINES

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 2 Oct 80 p 8

[Text] The country will avoid losses of 1.3 billion pesos per year from the flight of hard currency caused by paying for repairs, maintenance and the purchase of engine parts for commercial aircraft.

The CMA [Mexican Aviation Company] and Aeromexico announced that the foregoing will be possible as soon as the new enterprise, Turborreactores, a company with state and private participation, goes into operation.

The balance sheets and fiscal years of the two airlines indicate that one, CMA, is paying over 800 million pesos each year for repairs, purchases of parts for turbines and maintenance. For the same services, Aeromexico is paying about 500 million pesos.

When the agreement between representatives and directors of the country's national aviation companies and the SCT [Secretariat of Communications and Transport] was made official, the respective authorities indicated that, within 12 months, during the early part of September of next year, the facilities would be completely built and the company would complete and finish the first turbine in December 1981.

Francisco Heredia, director of Turborreactores, stated that, in its initial process, the company would be in a position to repair turbines for DC-9, 727 and 737 aircraft, which are the types most used by Mexican and Aeromexico. These companies, together with National Financing and International Support Systems, agreed to make an investment of 1.85 billion pesos to start the construction of the Turborreactores building, later beginning work involving high technology and specialization.

The official remarked that the building of the plant would reduce the need for replacement turbines. He said that the national airlines would save time and many thousands of dollars spent transporting turbines to the United States for the necessary repairs.

He announced that, starting in January, training courses would be given to the technical and specialized personnel who will be working for Turborreactores, and from this there would be derived complete Mexican technology to be used for the assembly and repair of engines for jet planes.

The work on the building of infrastructure and equipment for the new company is well under way. It will operate with the latest technical advances of international commercial aviation, and it is intended to meet the needs of the national airlines primarily.

Engineer Heredia also gave a reminder that Turborreactores would, in addition, render services involving the repair of jet turbines and of industrial gas turbines, specifically those used to generate electrical power, and to extract, refine and carry oil and gas.

He said that, at present there are in the world four plants similar to the one being build in the state of Queretaro: two in Great Britain, and two in the United States.

2909
CSO: 3010

COLUMNIST DISCUSSES GASOLINE PRICE RISE

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 21 Sep 80 p 7

[Article by Mario Ezcurdia: "34 Billion Which Could Hurt the Country Seriously"]

[Text] The scandal is taking flight: a hike in gasoline prices by the end of the year, and from what we surmise, it will be a big hike. There will also be a rise (although a lesser one) in the prices of diesel fuel and industrial gas. The views in this regard have been reaching a "crescendo," which has quickly converted the issue into the focal point of all discussions.

Thus, the debate has opened; but (surprisingly) it is being held on the basis of hypotheses and conjecture, because the substantive data on the matter remain obscure. How much does it cost in Mexico to produce each liter of gasoline? Is that fuel being sold at less or more than the national costs? Are Mexican Petroleum's finances going so badly that it would resort to a risky, complex step such as this?

Because (let the truth be told), one would need great political daring (or pressing financial needs) to promote a measure with repercussions so widespread and difficult to control, particularly during the fifth year of a regime. As we are well aware, every fith year demands political peace, extensive economic equanimity, and solid popular support. These are the ideal conditions for providing the system with complete control of its circumstances and calmness at the time of deciding on the transition to a new 6-year period that will guarantee the endurance of the institutions and the nation's advancement, without shifting its historical course.

The rise in prices of gasoline, diesel fuel and industrial gas (let us say so without circumlocution) will inevitably have a political cost, as well as economic consequences that would at least have to be described as disturbing. People are not in the habit of applauding when prices rise for them. The hikes are not an occasion for the people's rejoicing nor do they foster sympathy, especially during a year such as this, marked by the greatest inflationary pressure in our recent history, and by an unconcealable slowdown in the nonpetroleum industrial activity.

To what real (not theoretical) extent will an increase in fuel prices have repercussions on prices in general? What will be the magnitude of the real damage (not that based on a desk hypothesis) caused to the people's purchasing power, and how will the majority sectors of the population react to it? What will be the effect on industrial production, which is already harmed by the inflation here and the recession in the United States? How can we measure the psychological impact, which is inevitable and of major political importance?

There are many serious questions, and still no answer for them. In short, while those who are obliged to do so evaluate all these circumstances and publish the results of that evaluation (to conceal them would be a dreadful mistake at present), this column will attempt an analysis (backed with special information) of the terms and conditions on which the presumed rise in gasoline prices is proposed.

Eight Arguments and No Reason

Let us begin at the beginning. What are the arguments cited as causes for raising gasoline prices? Let us make a list of them:

1. That since, on the border, the American gasoline costs twice what ours does, there is major smuggling to that side, with the result that we are subsidizing the United States economy.

2. That gasoline is far more expensive nearly everywhere in the world, because it costs twice, three times and even four times more in countries such as Spain, Italy, France, Germany and the United States than it does here.

3. That, even among the oil-producing nations, our gasoline is very cheap; because the Mexican domestic price only exceeds those in Saudi Arabia and Venezuela.

4. That the low price is causing waste as a result of the excessive use of single person transportation: because, at present, in Mexico, as much gasoline is being consumed as in Italy and, very soon, if we continue along that path, it will reach the levels in France and Great Britain.

5. That the low price has fostered a jump in demand, because in 1979 gasoline consumption rose 15 percent, while in 1978 it increased only 4 percent.

6. That we are thereby subsidizing consumerism among the wealthier classes. because they are the ones who own the automobiles.

7. That the low fuel prices are monstrously subsidizing industry, concealing its inefficiency and fostering its excessive profits.

8. That there is a very large gap between the export prices (of oil and gas) and those on the domestic market.

These are the ones which have been given publicity to date. It has not been claimed that Mexican Petroleum has money problems nor anything of the sort. Hence, the arguments that are submitted have been based more on the feasibility of rationing consumption and reducing the gap with respect to prices abroad, than on the financial needs of the nationalized oil industry. And it is a good thing that this is so, because any report of financial imbalances in PEMEX would cause a deepseated (and highly negative) shock to public opinion. Oil is our great hope and the mainstay supporting our present economic recovery. If that mainstay should falter, or collapse, one assumes (again the psychological factor) that everything might topple.

Before embarking on an analysis of the points enumerated on the foregoing list, it befits us to try to ascertain the amount and the terms of the anticipated increase. Let us see whether such an act of guesswork is possible.

A 66.63 Percent Increase?

On 1 September (in his Fourth Report), President Lopez Portillo mentioned the cheapness of Mexican gasoline. On 15 September, a report from Mexican Petroleum was published containing observations and various information concerning gasoline prices and consumption. On 16 September, engineer Diaz Serrano declared that the enterprise that he heads would complete the studies on increases in prices of gasoline, diesel fuel and industrial gas at the end of that month; and that, immediately thereafter, they would be sent to the Committee on Prices and Rates of the Public Sector, so that a decision might be made in that regard.

Therefore, there is not yet any official information on the amount that the future price of gasoline may reach. Not officially, but unofficially, clues have been given which make it possible to learn that figure rather accurately.

For example, the Secretariat of Finance has calculated that the increase in gasoline prices will produce surplus revenue of 34 billion pesos per year. Since we know the daily consumption of regular gasoline is 33.5 million liters per day (at 2.80 pesos per liter), and that of premium gasoline is 11.5 million liters per day (at 4.00 pesos per liter) it turns out that the amount from gasoline sales is 139.8 million pesos per day (93.8 million from regular and 46 million from premium); in other words, an annual total of 51.27 billion pesos. Once we have that figure, it is very easy to infer (a simple arithmetical operation suffices) that the 34 billion pesos per year in additional revenue estimated by the Secretariat of Finance represents a price increase of 66.63 percent.

In other words, regular gasoline will (probably) cost 4 pesos and 70 centavos per liter, and premium, 6 pesos and 70 centavos. Let each individual evaluate the impact that such new prices would represent for his purse (in the event that this column's calculations prove correct). As for the total impact on prices and production, it is still (unfortunately) unpredictable.

The Fallacy of the Smuggling

Let us now proceed to examine the causes cited publicly as reasons for increasing gasoline prices. To take them in order, let us repeat, point by point. Let us observe the results.

1. That since, on the border, the American gasoline costs twice what ours does, there is major smuggling to that side, with the result that we are subsidizing the United States economy.

In fact, the United States border prices of gasoline are far higher than ours. Fuel equivalent (because of its octane rating) to regular costs $1.18 per gallon (6.03 pesos per liter) in El Paso; also $1 18 in Houston (a price that also prevails in the San Antonio area); $1.25 (6.38 per liter) in Los Angeles; $1.21 (6.18 pesos per liter) in Phoenix; $1.20 (6.13 pesos per liter) in Albuquerque and Tucson; and $1.26 (6.66 pesos per liter) in San Diego.

The national average price of that type of gasoline in the United States is $1.23 per gallon, that is, 6.28 pesos per liter.

Even using as a base the lowest border price (that in El Paso, Houston and San Antonio), which is 6.03 pesos per liter, the Mexican gasoline (at 2.80 pesos) is 3 pesos and 23 centavos cheaper. It is a good incentive for the smugglers, who take about a million liters per day to "the other side."

The situation is certainly annoying and must be remedied; yes, but not a remedy which, because it impedes the "crooked" business of the smugglers (remember, a million liters a day), irritates the entire country, which consumes the remaining 44 million liters daily. Strictly speaking, it seems exaggerated to upset the total production of gasoline when the problem lies only in a 45th part of that very production. Furthermore, why should we 70 million Mexicans end up paying for the guilt of a few "gringo" or "pocho" [Americanized Mexican] smugglers? Why (and so seriously) upset the economy of the entire country just because of what a few on the border are doing? What blame for this lies with the inhabitants of Jalisco or Chiapas, or any other state completely dissociated from the conspiracy of smuggling gasoline?

And something else: the increase in the price of regular gasoline to 4.70 pesos would most likely not put an end to the smuggling; it might even make it more intensive. The illegal profits of the smugglers may currently be reckoned at 3.23 million pesos per day. If gasoline prices rose, they would be reduced to 1.33 million pesos. Hence it is most likely that they would not stop smuggling, but would seek the means of increasing the volumes smuggled.

Thus, the argument that we might call that of smuggling does not hold up. It is really illogical to deal an impact of 34 billion pesos to the purses of consumers (in direct increments alone), merely to prevent a few criminals (which is what the smugglers are) from obtaining an approximate annual profit of 1.178 billion. There is no proportion between the two.

Let us continue.

Imitate the Evils of Others?

The second reason for raising the price of gasoline, according to the list included in preceding paragraphs, is:

2. That gasoline is far more expensive nearly everywhere in the world, because it costs twice, three times and even four times more in countries such as Spain, Italy, France, Germany and the United States than it does here.

True, but that is something which should make us proud, rather than concern us. All those countries have to import oil at international prices, and no one would deny that the level of those prices has had a negative effect on their economies, producing inflation and slowing down the development process. A direct relationship (cause and effect) has even been established between the high prices of fuel on the one hand, and inflation and slow growth on the other.

We do not want that for Mexico; on the contrary, we are bent (perhaps not so much as we should be) on curbing inflation and accelerating development. Then why propose a measure (the increase in fuel prices) that everyone recognizes as being at odds with those goals?

Moreover, the fact that the Americans, French, Italians, Spaniards and Germans are suffering the misfortune of high fuel prices is no reason for us to want to share the same misfortune. Furthermore, the prices in those countries (more or less) relate to the income there as well. Let us be given the $4,000 or $5,000 of annual per capita income that they receive in France and Germany (instead of the $1,800 which is the average in Mexico), and then no one would say anything if gasoline prices were to double.

Let Us Observe the Next Point:

3. That even among the oil-producing nations, our gasoline is very cheap; because the Mexican domestic price only exceeds those in Saudi Arabia and Venezuela.

Here, the well-known parable of the glass that is half empty or half full (a very popular one) is pertinent. Is it so cheap that only Saudi Arabia and Venezuela have lower prices, or is it so expensive that there are in the world only two countries (as oil-producing as we are) which can set a lower price on it?

As this involves a matter of domestic policy, the comparisons with the internal status of other countries are not valid. Ours has to be governed by needs, convenience and circumstances which are our own, not by factors which determine what occurs in other parts of the planet. They are not going to cut the price of gasoline in Germany because it is cheap here, nor are they going to raise it in Saudi Arabia just to imitate us.

Thus, those two arguments (those contained in points 2 and 3) are not valid either. Let us consider the following ones.

Three Points Which Are Not Convincing

4. That the low price is causing waste as a result of the excessive use of single person transportation; because, at present, in Mexico, as much gasoline is being consumed as in Italy and, very soon, if we continue along that path, it will reach the levels in France and Great Britain.

Consumerism is always bad. The waste of resources is one of the capital sins of our time. We Mexicans must certainly strive to battle against all that; yes, but to what point is the excessive use of single person transportation due solely to consumer-oriented arrogance?

In answering this question, it befits us to include the issues posed in points 5 and 6, which state:

5. That the low price has fostered a jump in demand, because in 1979 gasoline consumption rose 15 percent, while in 1978 it increased only 4 percent.

6. That we are thereby subsidizing consumerism among the wealthier classes, because they are the ones who own the automobiles.

False. Automobiles ([illegible] majority) are not owned by the wealthiest classes; the rich own luxury vehicles (costing 300,000 pesos and more), the number of which is far below that of the popular cars. In this regard (as proof), one need only consult the figures on vehicle production (Secretariat of Patrimony and Industrial Development), the Federal Register of Automobiles and (as a highly illustrative example) the data from the Directorate of Police and Traffic of the Federal District. It will be noted therein that three out of every four automobiles in existence are of the so-called "economy" types or mere "jalopies" of a very old model.

In a country such as ours (Mexico City is a dramatic example) with such poor and inadequate mass transportation, rather than a luxury, single person transportation is a necessity. There are many hundreds of thousands of workers who, by making an effort, purchase a "jalopy" in order to commute to work. It is they who would be hardest hit by the rise in gasoline prices. For the others, the wealthy (one out of every four of whom owns a car), any hike would be a mere trife. Even if a liter of gasoline were to cost 100 pesos, they would continue to use their cars, which have a high fuel consumption, to excess.

So long as there is no efficient mass transportation, it is utopian to imagine that the rise in fuel prices could make an appreciable reduction in the use of single person transportation. In the event of an increase, the hundreds of thousands of workers in this situation would have to choose between not going to their jobs, crowding more heavily (if they can climb into them) into the mass transportation facilities or "tightening their belts" further still to pay the new price of gasoline. And it should not be forgotten that, at present, Mexican workers (according to an estimate by the Labor Congress) must spend 20 percent of their wages on transportation.

What Shall We Do With Our Surplus Gasoline?

The Secretariat of Programing and Budget, in its Monthly Bulletin of Economic Information, states that, during the first half of this year, the extraction of crude oil increased 31.5 percent, and that gasoline production rose 16.2 percent, while that of diesel fuel and fuel oil increased 55 and 33 percent, respectively.

Hence, if the demand for gasoline in 1979 and thus far in 1980 has increased 15 percent we need not be concerned: the production of that fuel is ahead of the game, because it can easily cope with the increase in consumption, and even leave a surplus of 1.2 percent. In view of this information, congratulations are in order for the nationalized oil industry, but it can by no means be inferred that a hike in gasoline prices is needed.

The increase in demand is certainly very great, but the development of the producing industry is greater still, so that all is well.

Something else: If the increase in prices slows down the demand for gasoline, what shall we do with all our surplus? Keep it? Export it, perhaps? Or not expand the capacity of the refineries any further?

A less flimsy argument is the one contained in point 7: That the low fuel prices are monstrously subsidizing industry, concealing its inefficiency and fostering its excessive profits.

There is no doubt of the inefficiency of many Mexican industries, nor of their exorbitant profits, and of the fact that the low fuel prices foster this economically absurd and socially undesirable situation. Yes, but as soon as the prices of gasoline, diesel and gas rise, will the industries become efficient, as if by magic? It is a well-known fact that this inefficiency is due to flaws in what has been called "management capacity," the dearth of investments and technological lag, all added to production that is out of scale. Therefore, administrative efficiency will be achieved when the criterion of many business owners is changed, when sufficient investments are made, when the proper technology is obtained and when there is production on an adequate scale to compete in the area of quality and prices.

None of that will be achieved by raising fuel prices, much less over the short term. In that case, immediately we would only have the dreadful inflationary pressure that is caused by a rise in fuel prices (everything, things and people, is transported, and everything in industry is produced by using energy 80 percent of which comes from petroleum), with a direct blow to the purses of consumers and a negative impact on public opinion. The advantage of achieving an efficient industrial plant (if it can by attained by that means alone) would come many years later.

For the present, it is most likely that,since the vast majority of manufacturers operate with uncontrolled prices, they will simply pass on to the consumer (taking advantage of the opportunity to add a larger margin of profit) the new fuel prices.

Special Price to the Owners

Point 8 is also an irrefutable fact: the gap between the export oil prices and those of domestic sales in Mexico is very large. But, just as in the previous instances, that is no acceptable reason for justifying a hike in fuel prices.

A barrel of light oil is sold abroad for $34.50, that is, 793.50 pesos; and the heavy oil is sold for $29.00, the equivalent of 667 pesos. On the other hand, domestically, Mexican Petroleum calculates that each barrel of crude, already broken down into its byproducts, is sold for $6.00, that is, 138 pesos.

There is a very great difference between the two prices; but, strictly speaking, it is not legitimate to relate them to each other. What is exported is sold to customers dissociated from us, and for that very reason it should be regulated by the conditions on the international market. What is sold inside the country is being delivered to unquestionable, absolute owners of the oil and of the industry which extracts and processes it. The oil belongs to all Mexicans. Therefore, it cannot be the same thing to sell to foreigners as to distribute among the people of Mexico the products from an industry of which they are the owners, and which exists for the sole purpose of benefiting them and of serving the nation's development.

Since the space is filled, there will be one final observation: It seems dubious to use the term "subsidy" in the case of domestic oil prices in Mexico. Actually, there is a subsidy when the state contributes a fraction of a price of any cost so that the item (or service) can reach the consumer at a lower price. If PEMEX's production costs in the case of gasoline, diesel and industrial gas are higher than those at which such products are sold to the public, there is actually a subsidy. Otherwise, there is no subsidy; there are low prices (unfair when they foster consumerism or conceal inefficiency), and that is all.

And we have reached this point. The issue is lengthy and all-important; therefore, we shall have to pursue it in the subsequent commentaries.

2909
CSO: 3010

JLP PLEDGES FOOD SELF-SUFFICIENCY SOON

Mexico City EXCELSIOR in Spanish 22 Sep 80 Sec A pp 1, 10

[Text] Isla de Cedros, B.C.N., 21 Sep--President Lopez Portillo stated today that the Mexican Food System [SAM] is the answer to the problem of self-sufficiency, and that the country is on the way to achieving it in the very near future.

He gave assurance that, this year, good harvests are expected from the spring-summer cycle, explaining that he received a report indicating that dampness is entering the country on both coasts, which will avert the risk of frosts.

With regard to inflation, he noted that it would not be controlled this year, because the economists had estimated that it will reach 20 percent in 1980, and this month it exceeded that limit, but that owing to the effort which is being made, he expected that he would be announcing the attainment of that goal in the report which he will submit to the nation in 1981.

The chief executive also said that inflation is not an alternative, but rather a reality imposed by the rules of the economic world in which we live, since both the socialist countries and the capitalist ones are facing the same problem, owing to a series of repercussions and circumstances beyond the control of the governments.

At the press conference which he granted at the conclusion of the tour of the North Pacific islands (Coronado, Guadalupe and Cedros), the president of the republic stressed that what we must do is learn to live with inflation, control it, and see to it that it is not higher than in the countries with which we trade, as well as striving to reduce it by the largest possible number of points.

He said: "But this is an effort that depends on everyone, not just the government; the anti-inflationary consciousness must be fostered, for that is the solution."

He added that it is important for all of us Mexicans to be aware that this is a difficult period, and that, as a businessman once told him, "those of us who experienced the crisis of 1976 do not want it to be repeated." To a large extent, that crisis was experienced because of a subjective distortion, and a series of factors which accumulated and stimulated each other, undermining the system. Therefore, it is up to us to control it.

President Lopez Portillo who, during the interview (as well as during the entire tour) appeared to be in excellent spirits, joked with reporters, using one of them as a pole to knock on wood when he stated that, according to the forecasts, a good agricultural harvest is expected from the 1980 spring-summer cycle, claiming that this year is one of economic growth.

He remarked that, at the present time, we are in the last of the three phases proposed by his government program for administering the nation's economy. He reiterated that, during this phase, what we must do is curb inflation, although it will no longer be as serious as before.

He said that what put the anti-inflation battle out of control "was the VAT [value added tax] to a slight extent, and some other monetary problems which caused a rise of a few points above what was proposed; but I am certain that, after those sudden lurches, we shall be on the way."

He added that many of the goals proposed for his administration have already been attained, especially with regard to energy, and that has made it possible to bring up other issues.

To better explain his satisfaction at achieving self-sufficiency in energy, he said: "In 1974, when I was secretary of finance, I suddenly realized that we were going to have to spend 10 billion pesos to import oil, and it was a harsh blow to my financial consciousness of the country. Imagine what would happen now if we had to import, not that amount, but an even larger one. The goal was attained and, as a result thereof, many others are being attained."

Self-Sufficiency in Food

The president subsequently discussed the following subjects: self-sufficiency in food, the solution to the tuna problem with the United States and modernization of the Mexican Navy.

With regard to self-sufficiency in food, he said that we could not ask for the miracle of achieving it in just 1 year; but that, this year, good harvests are expected in the spring-summer cycle of 1980.

He explained that he received a report indicating that dampness is entering the country on both coasts, which would avert the risk of a frost, and that the crops are progressing quite well. The Mexican Food System is the instrumental answer to the food problem and, although it is impossible to perform the miracle of achieving self-sufficiency in food within 1 year, the country is on the way toward attaining it in the very near future.

Solution to the Tuna Problem

With respect to the tuna problem, he said that it was being solved. The United States boats are now requesting licenses and are paying the fee for fishing, with some friction but a minimal amount.

The options that exist in this problem are: either reach an agreement with the United States or impose the fee and license system. The latter is the one preferred.

President Lopez Portillo, who made the foregoing statements at the conclusion of the breakfast that he shared with some of the residents of Isla de Cedros, also said that the modernization of the Mexican Navy is progressing slowly. He remarked that he could not promise to complete that modernization within a certain period of time, because it is too serious a matter, and depends on the available funds in the budget. He said: "We are expending the maximum amount of effort, but the budget does not have room for that type of expenditure. Although we admit that the expenditures which are made for important things prevent important things from being accomplished, for lack of funds. But we must be very careful about the appropriations for the people."

2909
CSO: 3010

CHANGES IN FEDERAL DISTRICT WATER, ELECTRICITY SYSTEMS

New Water System for Capital

Mexico City METROPOLI de EL DIA in Spanish 2 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] Every second, 50 cubic meters of water are extracted from the water deposits in the Mexico and Lerma Valleys (water suppliers to the metropolitan area of Mexico City), representing 100 percent more from the natural resupply.

This overexploitation has reached its most critical levels, and has been reflected in sinking and cracks in the subsoil. Yesterday, technicians from the Mexico Valley Water Commission informed this newspaper that, with the Cutzamala system, there will be a gradual elimination of the operating wells, which are estimated as numbering 1,000, 700 thereof located in the metropolitan area.

The Mexico Valley Water Commission announced that the first 5 cubic meters of the first phase of the Cutzamala system will be made available, as a unit, to the Federal District Department in February 1981.

The investment for the entire system, divided into three phases, will be approximately 12.6 billion pesos, which will originate from French and Swedish financing, and that from the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB).

In all, the Cutzamala system will supply the city and its metropolitan area with 19 cubic meters. In the second phase, which will be completed in March 1983, an additional 6 cubic meters will be provided; and in the third phase, to be concluded in 1984, another 8 cubic meters will be supplied.

The Mexico Valley Water Commission reported that, during the first phase, the water will be brought from the Villa Victoria Reservoir; during the second, from the Chilesco Reservoir; and during the third, from the Valle de Bravo and Colorines Reservoirs.

The entity subordinate to the Secretariat of Agriculture and Water Resources noted that selection was made among 15 watersheds adjacent to Mexico Valley, of those of the Cutzamala, Amacuzac and Tecolutla Rivers, to meet the demand in the metropolitan area between 1982 and 2000. The potential volumes of flow to be obtained are 19, 13 and 22 cubic meters, respectively, with which the increasing population will be supplied and the overexploitation of the Lerma and Mexico Valley water deposits will be reduced.

The Mexico Valley Water Commission informed METROPOLI that, in February 1981, 1.5 cubic meters of drinking water will be made available to the DDF [Federal District Department] from a battery of wells in the Valley.

Treated Water

The CAVM [Mexico Valley Water Commission] also observed that sewage treatment plants would be built to be put to industrial use, thereby making more drinking water available for human use. The first plant, with a capacity of 400 liters per second, will be built in Lecheria, to serve the industrial zone of that section of the State of Mexico.

The volume of flow from the Cutzamala system will be carried to the city through seven pumping plants, two conduits measuring 90 kilometers apiece, two tunnels 18 kilometers long and a covered canal 9 kilometers long.

The water will be purified in a plant to make it potable, located in front of the last pumping plant, consisting of six modules each having a capacity of 4 cubic meters per second.

The Mexico Valley Water Commission also announced that the water would be raised from the lowest catchment to the top of the sierra which divides the Cutzamala and Lerma watersheds, to a total height of 1,100 meters (about seven times the height of the Latin American Tower), from which the water will be run off by gravity during the rest of its journey.

The CAVM technicians remarked that the Inter-American Development Bank has now approved a loan of $170 million, and the Swedish banks will provide another loan of $8 million,plus French financing of 85 million francs, to carry out the initial phases of the Cutzamala system projects.

The technicians stated that, in this way, a drinking water supply will be guaranteed to the residents of the city, with the intermediate program being started with the Cutzamala system.

Electricity From Tilostoc Ended

Mexico City METROPOLI de EL DIA in Spanish 2 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] According to a recent order from President Lopez Portillo, this is the last year that the water from Tilostoc in the State of Mexico will be used to generate electric power because, starting in 1981, part of its volume of flow will be carried to supply the Federal District with water.

According to a report from the Federal Electricity Commission [CFE], there will be a reduction in the generation of power from the Ixtapantongo hydroelectric plant (which is fed by the Colorines Basin) until all the supply from the watershed is taken to Mexico Valley.

The Ixtapantongo hydroelectric plant was the first major project which CFE undertook, its purpose being to carry electric power to the capital of the republic. It was also the first Mexican plant to exceed 100,000 kilowatts of installed capacity. CFE noted that the Ixtapantongo hydroelectric plant began its commercial operation in 1944, with an installed capacity of 106,000 kilowatts, and it now has five powerplants: Hector Martinez de Meza, Agustin Millan, Ixtapantongo, Santa Barbara and Tingambato, which can produce an average annual generation of 1.8 billion kilowatt hours, a production which in 1960 accounted for 20 percent of the national consumption and, in 1980, 2.5 percent.

CFE said that the exclusion of the Colorines system would not be felt much, because it consists of a group of small powerplants, and they will now perform the important function of supplying Mexico City with water until the year 2000.

Key:

1. Diagram of the Cutzamala System
2. Tuxpan Reservoir
3. Tuxpan Project
4. Del Bosque Reservoir
5. Existing canal
6. Chilesdo Reservoir
7. Villa Victoria Reservoir
8. Piping
9. Ignacio Ramirez Reservoir
10. Antonio Alzate Reservoir
11. Tank
12. Potable treatment plant
13. Pericos tank
14. Concealed water tunnel
15. Donato Guerra Basin for change of regimen
16. Tunnel
17. Metropolitan area of Mexico City
18. Ixtapan del Oro Reservoir
19. Tilostoc Reservoir
20. Colorines Reservoir
21. Valle de Bravo Reservoir

2909
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

NEW AMBASSADOR TO EGYPT--Yesterday, the Secretariat of Foreign Relations announced that, with the consent of President Jose Lopez Portillo, Mr Armando Cantu Medina was appointed Mexico's ambassador to the Arab Republic of Egypt. Mr Cantu Medina, a career diplomat, joined the Mexican Foreign Service in 1959, and has held positions in the Mexican Embassies in the United States, the Soviet Union, Austria, Brazil and Great Britain. [Text] [Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 2 Oct 80 Sec A p 12] 2909

CSO: 3010

MILITARY OFFICERS COMMENT ON POLITICAL PROCESS

Luis V. Queirolo

Montevideo EL PAIS in Spanish 21 Sep 80 p 1

[Article by Leonidas Pirial on statements by Lt Gen Luis V. Queirolo in Mercedes]

[Text] Mercedes--The commander in chief of the army, Lt Gen Luis V. Queirolo, made a brief statement to the press on his visit to this city, where Work and Joy Week is being celebrated.

It is shortsighted to describe only the Armed Forces as "winners," he said. His remark was in relation to a recent assertion of his to the effect that "conditions are not set for the winners." This assertion prompted a series of comments, and the commander in chief of the army elaborated then on his initial statement. He went on to say:

"I also think that it is ill-intentioned to suggest that there are factions within the Armed Forces, by pitting men against each other and thus clearly evidencing the scheme that we have been talking about.

"The aim is to polarize and divide the Armed Forces," he added, "to plunge the country into chaos and a period of darkness.

"That is why I am reasserting that during the current historical period there are and there will be winners and losers, and those who side with the latter will know why they are there. They should not toy with words to divert attention to the people in uniform."

When asked by a reporter what he understood by the word "winners," the army commander elaborated:

"The overwhelming majority during this process are the winners, a majority made up of the people, the people who think, walk, see, feel joy and sadness but who also have faith. These are the people who are here, the ones who remained and also those who came back. In short, the people who seek and long for a better destiny for the republic, which ultimately is their personal destiny. They thus feel that they are important parts of the process."

He was then asked about whom he would include under the heading of "losers," and his reply was:

"The losers were those who bet all their money on terror, crime, looting, the manhandling of minds, lives, property, on kidnaping, rebel justice, forced streetcar and bus tolls, insecurity at work, in companies and at school, on discontent at having to wait on lines to buy potatoes, kerosene and meat; the losers were those who bargained for votes with public jobs, with long waits in shameful anterooms for mortgage loans, with import quotas, with a section of a local road, with well-earned pension or retirement money; the losers were those who wanted to make people forget our homeland, the colors of our flag and even the verses of our national anthem; the losers were those who thought that they could shore up our economy by taking shameful trips to beg at world financial centers; the losers were those who sought to sell the gold stored up by our elders to the highest bidder.

"The losers were those who because of their longstanding apathy failed to promote our country's energy sources, and there were even some who talked of blowing up a dam for political motives; the losers were those who played along with a system of justice fear-struck by subversion; the losers were those who rejoiced at the impact of higher world oil prices; the losers were those who were after future security by holding a dialog with seditionaries; the losers were and are those who walk around foreign ministries and international organizations seeking to impair our sovereignty and independence; the losers were those who did not bother to build decent housing, passable roads and clean, garbage-free cities and towns; the losers were those who wanted to have ideologically corrupt Armed Forces devoid of moral strength and in which partisan politics would have free rein; the losers are also those who are fueling or endeavoring to cause splits in the Armed Forces. The rest were winners, and there are more of them."

Boscan Hontou

Montevideo EL PAIS in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Speaking at Carrasco Airport upon arriving from Santiago, Chile, the commander of the Third Army Division, Gen Boscan Hontou, asserted that if the "no" votes win at the upcoming plebiscite on constitutional reform, "there can be no elections or political party activities in 1981." He was optimistic, however, that the people would vote "yes."

General Hontou, who represented the Uruguayan Government at Chile's commemoration of its independence, was questioned during an interview with Radio El Espectador about the November plebiscite, and he offered the following forecast:

"I am one of those who are absolutely convinced that when the moment of truth comes, every good Uruguayan is going to want to return to an institutional period like the one programmed under the planned constitution."

No Elections

When asked to comment on the statements by other high-level military officers to the effect that if the "no" votes win at the plebiscite, the entire process might be reversed and elections put off, he stated categorically:

"Well, if the plebiscite is won by the 'no' votes, I can assure you that there can be no elections in 1981, nor will political parties be able to operate in 1981 either."

Julio Cesar Rapela

Montevideo EL PAIS in Spanish 27 Sep 80 p 13

[Text] "The country's political situation is normal, and the process continues," said the commander of the Second Army Division, Gen Julio Cesar Rapela, in Dolores yesterday, adding that the first draft of the constitution would certainly undergo modifications by the bodies that will soon be examining it.

General Rapela made these remarks to the press as he was attending a working meeting held at the Industrias Harineras S.A.-Molinos San Salvador building, at which various local groups explained what they were doing, as well as their plans for the future.

"The country's political situation is normal. The process continues. The pace of developments is quickening all the time, as the public is quite aware," General Rapela stated.

He was then asked about how studies are proceeding on the constitution that will be put to a plebiscite in November. The general replied: "The first draft of the constitution is going to be disseminated and talked over, and I am certain that it is going to undergo modifications, because like every first draft, it can be improved."

8743
CSO: 3010

COLORADO PARTY MEETS WITH COMASPO, COMMUNIQUE ISSUED

Party Spokesman Discusses Meeting

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 9 Sep 80 p 5

[Text] The Colorado Party "is united and definitely intends to remain united," Dr Carlos Manini Rios said yesterday, at the end of the first meeting that the COMASPO [Political Affairs Commission] of the Armed Forces held with the Colorado Party's representatives.

Manini Rios spoke in the name of the delegation which came to the headquarters of the Joint Staff yesterday morning; the delegation consisted of: Drs Eduardo Jimenez de Arechaga, Maximo Gurmendez, Enrique Tarigo, and Mr Jose Luis Batile Garcia. The deputy director of EL DIA, Mr Jorge Otero Menendez, who is a member of the delegation, was not present at yesterday's meeting as he was traveling abroad.

Right outside the door of the ESMACO [Joint Staff] Manini Rios spoke with several dozen journalists who were waiting outside for almost 2 and 1/2 hours, and said that the answers given by the COMASPO officials were "in principle, constructive."

"We came to begin a dialogue in order to do what we can to benefit the future of our country," said the spokesman of the group, and he added: "We represent all sectors of the Colorado Party, which is united and definitely intends to remain united in the future."

'Freedom of Action'

According to Manini Rios, during the meeting "current political issues" were discussed, and there was talk of the Party's "freedom of action to organize."

The Colorado spokesman also said that during the dialogue they spoke of the need to move quickly toward the reorganization of the parties so that they can operate.

When asked whether they discussed the issue of the bans, Manini Rios said: "We reemphasized what everyone knows; we believe that they have to eliminate all the bans."

He also said that "the statute on the political parties will be submitted to the Council of State next week; that is what they told us."

He reported that "they did not discuss the issue of specific constitutional guidelines, but rather the constitution issue in general."

To Reestablish Democratic Life

According to Manini Rios, the main concern of the COMASPO officials is "to reestablish democratic life in the nation after a transitional period."

According to the Colorado Party spokesman, the national authorities feel that "the political parties, especially the traditional parties, are essential in achieving a democratic movement."

"They said that when the disagreement with the then President Bordaberry arose," he pointed out.

This report will analyze the major issues of national interest and offer ideas on the dialogues that various groups have had with the members of the COMASPO.

This is the third meeting that the armed forces political group has held with public opinion sectors.

Members of the National Party and representatives of the Christian Radical Union were guests at the first two meetings.

Communique From the Provisional Executive Committee

Text of the communique released to the press by the provisional authorities of the Colorado Party:

This morning the Colorado Party delegation met with the Political Affairs Commission of the Armed Forces; this was one of the meetings scheduled by the Political Affairs Commission with representatives of the political parties.

The delegation was composed of: Drs Carlos Manini Rios, Eduardo Jimenez de Arechaga, Enrique Tarigo, and Maximo Batile Garcia. Mr Jorge Otero, who is also a member, could not attend as he was abroad.

The dialogue took place in terms of consideration and respect appropriate for the serious public interests which are at stake.

The delegation took the following position:

To ensure a healthy democratic future for the republic, we need strong and organized political parties.

Today the Colorado Party which this delegation is representing on a provisional basis spoke for all the sectors and parties, without exception, which acted under its banner in the 1971 elections.

We can assert that they are united in their thoughts and in their intentions for future action. United, and not just brought together on occasion.

If this determination is to be expressed in our national political life, some prerequisites must be established.

a. Unrestricted freedom to meet, for the present in closed premises, to be extended throughout the republic and completed by the freedom to inform the citizens through the press and the other media.

b. Freedom for all members of the party to act so that they can contact their fellow members directly and conduct party business. This should lead to the lifting of the ban, whose maintenance would seriously impede the Colorado Party.

As a corollary to the establishment of provisional party authorities for the purpose of organizing internal elections for officers, it seems that the administration and use of the Party Headquarters should be returned to the party.

The delegation pointed out that, given these conditions, the political parties will be able to proceed with the process of shaping and representing public opinion in a truly authentic manner.

The delegation and the nucleus of citizens it represents feel that with these measures, this type of dialogue will acquire the fluency and frequency which will quickly bring us to our patriotic goal of complete democracy.

Report by COMASPO Chairman

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 10 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] The chairman of the Armed Forces Political Affairs Commission, Gen Abdon Raimundez, said that everyone is quite familiar with the duties they must perform and the obstacles that will have to be overcome.

The statements by the army officer, reported yesterday by LA MANANA, analyzed the meeting with representatives of the Colorado Party, terming it very cordial and saying that its results were completely favorable.

The officer said that on this occasion there was some discussion of the problems of the nation, of political movements, and the proposed statute that will regulate party activities, as well as the November plebiscite, "all in a very constructive spirit."

He emphasized that in this "first step" it is very clear that the mistakes of the past will not be repeated; these past errors caused the political situation of the nation to deterioriate, and there must now be a new beginning on fresh bases.

He said that everyone is quite familiar with the duties that they must perform and the obstacles that will have to be overcome. He announced that in the future there will be greater facilities made available for holding meetings, so that the political parties can be organized. He said: "This has already begun to happen, and it is going on now."

General Raimundez emphasized that the meetings may be of a public nature and have speakers participating. The sole requirement that will have to be met, he said, is to request police authorization, but at the present time no permits are being refused for such purposes, and contacts and exchanges of ideas will continue to expand.

He closed by saying that "everyone has a strong desire to organize for the future; they all recognize that we are in a period of transition and that we must move forward gradually in this area."

7679
CSO: 3010

COMASPO CHAIRMAN ESTIMATES BANNED CITIZENS AT 228

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 5 Sep 80 p 11

[Article by Andres Vilizzio Pello]

[Text] Rocha-- Yesterday the municipal superintendent was changed here, with Col Homero Pereira replacing Col Ignacio Bonifacio. On that occasion the commander in chief of the 4th Army Division and the chairman of COMASPO [Political Affairs Commission] were present, along with the minister of the interior, Gen Manuel J. Nunez, and all the area superintendents. General Raimundez, the COMASPO chairman, made some comments on various current political issues, especially in reference to the commission he heads.

He first mentioned the political parties, saying: "That is a complex issue in which a number of factors are involved. I couldn't say that what the armed forces want are strong, united, disciplined political parties with democratically elected leaders. Recently some groups, with good intentions, have proclaimed themselves party leaders.

"Obviously this has no foundation in reality. COMASPO has sent them a memorandum to that effect and has shown them that they have no right to proclaim themselves party leaders, because they are not representative. We believe that our national reality should take precedence and it is not, then, appropriate that divisions between parties should be increased or encouraged.

"The political parties are having tremendous difficulties in forming coherent, representative groups that can act as spokesmen so that they can exchange ideas and hold dialogues. It is impossible to learn what they think, what they want, if they don't agree, not even in getting themselves organized, which is the phase they are in now."

Asked if there will be a dialogue with the Colorado Party, General Raimundez answered: "That would be appropriate. There has been a discussion already with the Civic Union and with a group that claims to be representative of the National Party. Now it is fitting that, as a matter of justice, we should talk with a sector that claims to be representative of the Colorado Party. We are in this process now and perhaps on Monday there may be such a meeting."

General Raimundez was then asked: "You said, a group that claims to be representative of a political party?" To this he answered, "That is a good and interesting observation. For 2 or 3 months now we have been in this phase; we are trying to see if, at least, this group can be a cohesive unit, because if two or three groups appear and they claim that one group is not representative, then we have to say that there is no unanimity. And when one group appears with an interest in exchanging ideas, several smaller groups may also appear. We believe that this group should be heard, although it is our aim to listen to all the political groups that want to talk and that want to work for the future of our nation. We should give priority to those groups that seem to express a majority opinion."

Asked about the statute on the political parties, he responded: "While this is entering its definitive phase, we still want to listen to the opinions of various groups. So we are now listening to the opinions, comments, and suggestions of the political groups with which we have talked on guidelines and on the future constitution. We are asking all of them for suggestions. The doors are open to those who come in good faith, with a desire to construct, without considering the present situation, or disagreements that may separate us in the economic, social, or political field at the present time. We are trying to construct on solid ground for the future."

Removal of Bans

The COMASPO chairman and commander in chief of the 4th army division was asked about the removal of bans. He said: "I think there are now 228 citizens who have been deprived of their rights. This is an ongoing task and I think that it has to continue to a greater or lesser extent. The Commission is continuing to work on this."

Asked about whether new meetings have been requested, he said: "Yes. Yesterday a group from the Colorado Party asked for a meeting. This request was made to the Commission and it will make the decision."

On the possible participation of a third political party, he said: "What we can do is to set the conditions and the rules of the game and work so that a third party or a fourth, if that is desired, can become a reality in the political arena."

The Constitution and Youth

On this topic General Raimundez said: "It is our intention to bring to our young people a knowledge of the guidelines of the constitution and of political issues, but this must be done in an educational and wholesome way, in the best possible conditions. In many cities in the interior upper level students have attended speeches by the members of the council; these students have the capacity to understand what consititutional law can be."

Finally, General Raimundez was asked what would happen if the plebiscite were not approved. "That is a complex issue," he said, "which cannot be discussed now because we are still several months away from it, and logically, we have to act honestly in this matter. We are honest and we are working to try to find an institutional system, so we can not be speculating about a problem in this process."

7679
CSO:: 3010

AUSTRIAN DOCTORS EXPELLED FOR MEETING WITH FAMILIES OF DETAINEES

Montevideo EL PAIS in Spanish 3 Sep 80 p 1

[Text] Two Austrian doctors who entered Uruguay as tourists and have been collecting reports from persons connected with seditious elements and opinions from former leaders of union groups have been expelled by the authorities, as they were violating the regulations governing their stay in the country. Claudio Weber and Reinhardt Dorflinger were preparing a report which was to be used against our country. This was determined from documents found in their possession. The details of the case were reported yesterday evening by DINARP [National Public Relations Bureau].

"Two foreign citizens who had entered Uruguay as tourists were expelled from our national territory after having flagrantly violated the regulations covering their stay as tourists in Uruguay.

"The two persons were Claudio Weber Castillo and Reinhard Dorflinger Dorflinger. Weber Castillo was born in Chile and became an Austrian citizen later and Dorflinger is Austrian. They are 37 and 27 years old, respectively; both are doctors.

"Because of their participation in activities alien to their status as tourists, which they claimed for entering Uruguay on temporary visas, the National Migration Directorate decided to order their departure from Uruguay within 24 hours.

"Before the expiration of this period, on the 20th hour of that day, the two foreigners left Uruguay from the Carrasco International Airport."

Authorization for Study

"In mid-August Weber and Dorflinger, who claimed to represent a private Austrian agency named 'Critical Medicine,' asked the Uruguayan authorities, by means of third parties, for authorization to investigate the state of health of some persons who have been detained and to draw up a general report on the health status of the nation's population.

"The request was accompanied by letters with a similar content signed by persons from private agencies in a variety of European nations, but even before the Uruguayan authorities had acted on the request, both doctors arrived.

"Some days before their arrival, however, relatives of detained subversives had been collecting signatures on petitions in front of the Austrian Consulate in Montevideo, asking that meetings be held with the doctors. The same thing happened later in the hotel where the visitors stayed when they reached Montevideo.

"Although they had not yet received a reply to the request formulated by their representatives, the two Austrian doctors held a series of meetings with relatives of the detained subversives both in the Austrian Consulate and in the hotel. They also met with union groups and with persons belonging to various religious groups."

Health: a Pretext

"The time came when the traffic both in the hotel and in the offices of the consulate became so heavy that the armed forces, asked to take action, found that the foreign doctors were compiling reports as wide-ranging as the state of health of some of the detainees--according to the report of their relatives--the labor situation in the nation, the real salaries, the activities of the Church in Uruguay, and the 'problem of the "bureaucrats" and their "small cars,"' in light of the recent provision of the municipality of Montevideo on this issue.

"Among the documents which Weber and Dorflinger had with them were a great number of reports from relatives of detainees, comments by former leaders of union groups and opinions of persons from a variety of occupations on a broad range of issues, notes and reflections of the doctors themselves on urban and civic aspects of the city. All of this relegates the alleged concern for health to the plane of a mere pretext for referring to our country in a manner that can well be supposed."

7679
CSO: 3010

ANCAP PRESIDENT SAYS OIL RESERVES ENOUGH FOR 90 DAYS

Montevideo EL PAIS in Spanish 26 Sep 80 p 9

[Text] We must conserve oil, the president of ANCAP [National Fuels, Alcohol and Cement Administration], Brig Jorge A..Borad, said yesterday. The oil tanker "Lavalleja" will not be able to pick up oil in Iraq, and it will be hard to replace this shipment.

"ANCAP will submit an analysis of the situation to the Executive Branch this week for its decision in this regard. We have a 90-day supply of oil, with Nigeria and Venezuela supplying the other half of our petroleum. The 'Lavalleja' is waiting for orders and will not enter the Persian Gulf. Our alternative is the spot market, on which prices are rising."

"It is essential to keep industry producing. We are not worried about gasoline shortages."

The ANCAP president made these remarks at a press conference, which proceeded as follows:

90-Day Supply

"We could say that our reserves for the moment are adequate for a country of our size, given the difficulties we have had acquiring crude oil in recent years," Borad said initially.

"The industrialized countries have joined in an organization called the International Energy Agency through which they have set up a sort of 90-day insurance reserve.

"We are getting close to that. Of course, they have the advantage of being able to exchange products when any item is in short supply. We are segregated from this rich and important area of the world and we have to avail ourselves of our own resources.

"We can hardly turn to our neighbors because Brazil is a heavy importer, and although Argentina is mostly self-sufficient, it also has to buy oil and thus cannot export what it has."

Our Own Resources

"Therefore, we have to make do with our own reserves while the crisis lasts. I repeat: We are in good shape. I would say that I am satisfied at the moment with the steps that ANCAP has taken. But of course this does not mean that we are in such good shape that we will probably not have to take some sort of emergency measure for the short run, because we do not know how long this problem in the Middle East, which is the world's leading oil supplier, is going to last. And predictions are as likely to be mistaken as accurate.

"I suppose that conservation measures are the most basic and perhaps the first ones that would occur to me or anyone else. These are the most logical, ever since the world oil crisis has been with us. In other words, we have to economize, especially with regard to anything superfluous. I would say that we have to look first to industry. We are not too worried, for example, if gasoline runs short or runs out at a given moment. But I would be worried if industry had to shut down or slow up, because it is the country's lifeblood."

Planned Measures

"It is not up to ANCAP to take measures. We are working on a plan in this regard to be submitted to the Executive Branch as our contribution to a program that it might implement if it thinks that this is a good idea.

"ANCAP's objectives are to purchase oil, manufacture the derivatives and put them on the market.

"All we do is emphasize the situation as we see it with regard to those objectives. I must comment that the world still does not realize that it is faced with an emergency according to a number of indicators.

"For example, the member countries of the International Energy Agency will begin taking emergency measures when supplies are down seven percent. That moment has not yet come for them, but it has for others. Of course this indicator does not apply to Uruguay because we are not a member of the organization and do not have supply insurance, nor does it apply to Japan, which has seen 65 to 70 percent of its supplies affected."

The 'Lavalleja' Awaiting Orders

"Iraq sells us half of the oil that we consume, but we anticipated from the outset of this conflict that we would not be able to purchase the 6 October shipment.

"We therefore told the 'Lavalleja' to slow down so that we could see how things developed. At present we are deciding whether to have it continue waiting or change course.

"We obviously were not planning to have it enter the Persian Gulf, because even though its access is not barred, it could not possibly make it to the ports of loading deep inside the gulf. So, as far as the'Lavalleja' is concerned, the situation is completely settled."

Supplies Unlikely Elsewhere

"As far as the repercussions of this unavailable shipment are concerned, we would simply say that the oil supplies that we expected in late October or early November are not going to arrive.

"Moreover, we cannot say definitely whether this shipment can be replaced by another of our suppliers. We have contracts with them for specific amounts, and they have other customers as well, depending on their output. So we do not know whether we can get them to boost sales to Uruguay.

"Unfortunately, I have to point out that there is no International Energy Agency in Latin America, even though at the last ARPEL [Latin American Petroleum Industry Mutual Aid Association] meeting both Uruguay and Brazil proposed such an agency. This move was not successful precisely because the producing nations on the continent were opposed."

The Spot Market

"Purchases on the spot market are our alternative, and prices there rise every time a conflict breaks out.

"The spot market is controlled by middlemen who speculate on holding back supplies for sale during difficult times. Prices had been dropping because nations had built up their reserves, filling tanks and even abandoned mines, for fear of future conflicts, but prices are now rising again."

No News From Mexico

"In recent hours there have been cable reports that Mexico would be able to sell us petroleum, but ANCAP knows nothing about this, despite its good relations with PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum]. Whenever PEMEX was consulted, it said that it did not have oil surpluses but that when it did, it would make us an offer. As of today, however, Montevideo has received no offer.

"In addition, ANCAP does not order increases for speculative purposes and is not going to do so now. We boost prices to maintain normal supply flows and to make timely investments.

"This gives me the chance to tell all of the people who criticized us because of last year's budget surplus that that money was invested in development and oil supplies, on account of which we now have crude oil stocks that have at least enabled us to avoid feeling the pressure from the very outset of the conflict."

Prices To Rise

"This shortfall, estimated at some 4 million barrels a day, is going to be carried over to the market and probably to prices as well, if we do not in some way make do with supply. We can take care of it if prices rise, but if there is an undersupply, we could run short of oil. But we cannot make any definite predictions that supplies are going to run short one month and increase another. The whole world is faced with an energy emergency because oil is still the major source of energy.

"Some 46 percent of the world's energy comes from black gold, and Uruguay is even worse off, because 75 percnet of our energy comes from petroleum. Only 25 percent comes from hydroelectric projects and other minor sources."

Future Measures

"Several factors have to be taken into account in deciding whether or not to adopt major measures in connection with domestic consumption. We have to see how the market and supplies develop and whether premature measures might not unnecessarily harm our economy and development. But we cannot fall asleep and take them too late either.

"So, the situation has to be assessed carefully, but I do not think that ANCAP should do this by itself, though it would help out. When the government deems it appropriate, it will take the proper restrictive steps.

"I personally think that we should quickly begin economizing on all superfluous items, and we do spend quite a lot on unnecessary things. There are thousands of ways to conserve on the personal, family and industrial levels. Industry already knows how much energy it is using inefficiently and that it ought to quickly convert its equipment.

"The ANCAP report to the Executive Branch on this issue will be ready this week," Borad said toward the end of the conference. Finally, when asked for an example of conservation, he inquired whether the newsman had come by car. He said that he had, and Borad commented that three or four persons could have ridden in the car or he could have taken the bus. "In short, there are countless examples," he emphasized with a smile.

8743
CSO: 3010

ENERGY BULLETIN CITES INCREASED CONSUMPTION IN JULY

Montevideo EL PAIS in Spanish 14 Sep 80 p 19

[Text] Uruguay's Monthly Energy Bulletin for July contains unquestionably interesting information regarding the consumption of electric power, hydrocarbon fuels and piped-in gas in our country.

The bulletin is published by the National Energy Directorate and lists the ups and downs in energy consumption and the reasons for them.

Electric Power

As expected, the month's electric power consumption figures point to a disproportionate rise over last year, but we should remember that there were very tight restrictions on consumption in 1979.

In July 1980 our steam powerplants generated 116,291 megawatt/hours, while our hydroelectric plants (Rio Negro and Salto Grande) produced a total of 189,929 megawatt/hours, making a grand total of 306,220. In July 1979 the total generated by both sources was 215,920 megawatt/hours, 41.8 percent less than in July 1980.

Although the maximum load for July, which was an all-time record for the UTE [General Administration of State Electric Power and Telephones], represented a 21.6 percent increase over the 1979 peak, it was just 12.6 percent over the 1978 maximum.

This maximum load was recorded at 1930 hours on 14 July, measuring 617 megawatts.

Hydrocarbon Fuels Consumption

July saw a broad-based upswing in all categories of demand, with the exception of UTE consumption. Thus, the overall drop is 13.5 percent so far this year in comparison to 1979. If UTE supplies are excluded, demand is down about five percent from last year.

July 1980 consumption totaled 208,340 cubic meters, as compared to 213,780 cubic meters in July 1979, a drop of just 2.5 percent. The UTE burned a total of 34,426 cubic meters of fuel oil to generate power, as against 48,173 cubic meters in July 1979. These figures indicate that UTE consumption was down 28.5 percent.

One of the categories that recorded a sizable jump in consumption was liquified petroleum gas, with 4,806 tons in July 1980 as against 3,983 tons in July 1979, an increase of 20.7 percent.

Piped-In Gas

There was a significant seven percent rise in the demand for piped-in gas in July 1980 as compared to July 1979. Hence, consumption over the first 7 months of the year is up 2 percent from 1979. With regard to the consumption of light naphtha for gas production, 1,692 cubic meters were used in July 1980, compared to 1,525 cubic meters in July 1979, a rise of 11 percent.

The consumption of piped-in gas for July totaled 2.24 million cubic meters, as against 2.084 million cubic meters in the same month last year, thus yielding the aforementioned 7 percent increase.

Cumulative consumption for this year stands at 11.261 million cubic meters, whereas at the same time last year the total was 11.041 million cubic meters, up 2 percent this year.

The cumulative total for light naphtha, which is used to produce gas, stands at 9,132 cubic meters, compared to 8,955 cubic meters for the same period last year, again up 2 percent this year.

8473
CSO: 3010

GEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE'S GOLD, URANIUM PROSPECTING ACTIVITIES

Montevideo EL DIA in Spanish 12 Sep 80 p 8

[Text] A report on the various activities conducted by the Engineer Eduardo Terra Arocena Geological Institute was given yesterday by the minister of industry and energy, engineer Francisco D. Tourreilles, and the director of the organization, Col Walter Perez.

At the beginning of the press conference the secretary of state said: "This government has shown and repeated on a number of occasions its clear determination to create a suitable framework for the operation of its extractive industries."

He then added: "The statistics we have available show generally stationary activity in the sector, where the production parameters are being maintained with few technological advances and a small amount of reinvestment. The greatest part of the activity is in construction materials and only the national production of gypsum is showing some degree of innovation."

He concluded by saying that with the plans that have been begun, and with the parallel cooperation of the state and of the private sector, mining in Uruguay can be developed and it can become a more important factor in our national product and in our exports.

Mining Inventory

Col Perez then explained the need to evaluate the mineral resources which Uruguay has. He said that for this purpose a mining inventory is being drawn up. This is now in its first phase, and at this time personnel are being trained by technical assistance from French specialists, and detailed geological exploratory studies are beginning in top priority areas, especially in northern Uruguay and in the departments of Maldonado and Lavalleja.

He pointed out the private and state efforts to proceed with gold mining; gold may exist in the department of Rivera.

He said also that in Cerro Largo and Durazno prospecting for uranium and other ores is proceeding, in order to evaluate both quantitatively and qualitatively, as a first step, the resources existing in those areas.

He then reported that geological studies are being conducted in northern Uruguay in order to determine whether the vein of coal existing in southern Brazil extends into Uruguay.

On another topic Col Perez said that his institution is now revising the Mining Code in order to establish practical, simple, and short standards.

He talked of the need for an accelerated expansion of the extractive industries, either at state initiative, through private investment, or by means of joint public-private companies.

Other Activities

During the meeting it was reported that a geological cooperation mission from the Federal Republic of Germany is working and training personnel in areas of economic interest in geology. They are now analyzing the supply of sand for construction purposes, and surveying deposits of limestone, clays, and talc.

The building to be the future headquarters of the Geological Institute is now under construction; it will cover an area of 2,400 square meters.

7679
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

CRUDE FROM IRAQ--The last shipment of crude to leave Iraq for Uruguay has arrived this morning. The 300-meter long Iraqi tanker [name indistinct], carrying 142,150 tons of crude is currently awaiting an improvement of the weather conditions to begin unloading. [PY132000 Montevideo Radio El Espectador Network in Spanish 1600 GMT 13 Oct 80]

YUGOSLAV MISSION ARRIVES--The Yugoslav mission headed by the chairman of the Economic Commission of Developing Countries began its activities today by holding meetings with representatives of several private sectors and government officials. The mission is interested in purchasing meat, leather, wool and clothes. In exchange they offer cars, fishing boats, tractors and all kinds of machinery. [Montevideo Radio El Espectador Network in Spanish 13 Oct 80 PY]

CSO: 3010

ESTEBAN REY VIEWS REAGAN, CUBA, FOREIGN POLICY

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 17 Sep 80 Sec 1, p 12

[Commentary by Luis Esteban Rey: "Footnotes"]

[Text] A Meeting on Central America and the Caribbean

Jamaican Prime Minister Michael Manley, who was in Caracas to attend the second meeting of the Socialist International Latin American Committee, visited President Herrera to discuss matters affecting his country and the Caribbean area and proposed a meeting of heads of Caribbean and Central American governments, which the Venezuelan president promised to study attentively.

Prime Minister Manley's idea appears timely and necessary. It has now become commonplace to say that the Central American and Caribbean area situation is truly critical. To the serious problems created by the political discontent that has broken out in acts of violence and of open subversion in some countries, there is added that of the precarious economic condition of most of the countries, verging now on despair, as in the case of Caribbean island countries, which contributes to exacerbation of the political problems.

It serves no purpose to elaborate or to dwell extensively on these themes. We are all aware of the increasing instability in this area of our America and of the possibility that rightist governments, adverse to all authentic reforms, will be replaced by extreme leftist ones that can hardly offer a real solution to the deep sufferings of the peoples of the region. The region in turn tends increasingly to become a zone of international tension, of confrontation between the superpowers, with the result that if the tension heightens it will be the region's peoples who will be endangered to the point where their very sovereignties will be in jeopardy.

Nothing is to be gained therefore by stopping now to dwell on regrettable and painful events of which we are only too well aware. What is needed is that we proceed with steps to make of Central America and the Caribbean a zone of peace and stability. Venezuela has proclaimed on more than one occasion that its policy in the area is directed toward the attainment of these objectives. And the Central American foreign ministers, meeting last March in Costa Rica, made it a point to insist on these very objectives. But thus far violence, terrorism and guerrilla actions continue, and, worse yet, are proliferating in the Central American countries and are seriously threatening the Caribbean island countries.

Position of Venezuela and Other Countries of the Area

It is true that Venezuela has for several years--and now jointly with Mexico--tried to alleviate the region's economic burden's through credit facilities it has granted in connection with oil purchases, facilities that have been augmented through Mexico's participation. Venezuela has moreover granted other forms of economic cooperation to several of the area's countries. But at this moment the primary and critical issue is the region's political instability and the probability of its further deterioration in this regard.

Be it through the heads of government meeting suggested by Manley to President Herrera or initiatives of other nature, the time has come for countries like Venezuela, Colombia, Mexico, Costa Rica and Panama to assume a collective and defined attitude toward achieving the effective transformation of Central America and the Caribbean into a zone of peace and stability. It would appear necessary that Cuba be included in a move of this nature. We would be at the edge of reality if we ignored its presence in the Caribbean and its influence over countries in the area. But it would reasonable to expect the inclusion of Cuba in a meeting such as that proposed by Manley to be based on Cuba's intent to exercise its influence in a positive sense. Fidel Castro's government should be one of those most interested in promoting peace and stability in the Caribbean and Central America. Chaos and instability could provoke reactions that in the final analysis would directly affect Marti's native land.

On the other hand, now is perhaps the time to make it clear that Venezuela cannot be the Caribbean antipode to Cuba, it being understood, of course, that Cuba would not be the antipode to Venezuela. The two countries must maintain relations and bring into being constructive policies. Thus, as we have pointed out on previous occasions, our nation's foreign policy must respond to the specific interests of the Venezuelan state and shy away from specific partisan involvements that in the final analysis would seem to be more concerned with saving souls than bodies: an undertaking that is undoubtedly important but not incumbent upon the policies of nations. Cuba in turn would have to practice a policy geared entirely to Cuba's genuine interests. Should this occur, a fruitful concurrence would be quickly established with all the countries that aspire to promote peace and stability in the Caribbean and Central America.

The Antidemocratic Bloc of the Southern Cone

It is of exceeding interest to strengthen democracy throughout the American ambit, because we have now seen that the military coup in Bolivia is but the product of a reaction by the militaristic dictatorships of the Southern Cone, which are being actively represented by the Argentine generals, and which are determined to impede by force the spread of democracy and freedom in South America. The resurgence of "ideological boundaries" is a reality. It was not by mere chance that Buenos Aires was chosen as the site of the anticommunist meeting that was held recently; nor that, without its being an official government meeting, it opened with an exchange of warm messages of mutual support among the heads of the military governments of the Southern Cone. Present at this meeting were the most outstanding spokesmen for the Latin American ultraright. The enemies of all reform. Representatives of a stupid capitalism that is digging its own grave. When they were discussing at that conclave the "lines of action against communist penetration," they were actually debating the lines of action against penetration by the system of democracy and of public freedoms in those countries where the latter system has been crushed or exists as an illusion only.

In large part, that assembly of the ultraright was a response to the political activity of the Andean Pact in behalf of freedom and human rights. And it is a good thing that at Riobamba the Andean presidents agreed to a line of conduct confirming their decision to struggle for democracy and establishing that human, political, economic and social rights must constitute a norm of conduct for the Andean countries, that the defense of these rights "is an international obligation to which all states must be bound, and that therefore joint action taken in defense of those rights does not violate the principle of nonintervention."

The Ultraright Relying on Ronald Reagan

That joint action becomes increasingly necessary because the ultraright and Latin American militarism has placed high hopes in the possible triumph of Ronald Reagan in the U.S. presidential elections in November.

The statements this eminent person has made on Nicaragua, Cuba, etc. are music to the ears of those who would like to see a friend and relative in the White House and the "marines" carrying a message of encouragement and the intransigent or idiotic oligarchies of the Southern Cone and Central America on the tips of their bayonets.

With such an undesirable prospect in view, the decision of the Socialist International Latin American Committee, meeting in Caracas, is understandable, which is to spread the alert to the entire democratic world on Ronald Reagan's conceptions, especially those that appear to advocate military interventionism by his country in our America.

It is to deal with these dangers that insistence must be placed on seeking agreements in the Central American and Caribbean region that will enable the establishment of governments based on democratic solidarity but capable of realizing truly profound economic and social reforms under new formulas that, respecting freedom, arise from national realities and idiosyncracies.

Peace and stability must be consolidated in these areas of our America to respond to the challenges coming from the militarism and reaction of the Southern Cone that are trying to convert it into an antidemocratic citadel and to radiate its influence throughout the rest of Latin America. We are not weaving hypotheses; we are looking squarely at realities that it would be suicidal to ignore.

9399
CSO: 3010

LEFTIST YOUTH PROTEST COPEI POLICY ON UNIVERSITIES

Caracas TRIBUNA POPULAR in Spanish 12-18 Sep 80 p 11

[Article: "Statement by the Leftist Youth on the Situation at the Universities"]

[Text] The political youth organizations which form the Leftist Youth Commando have met to analyze the youth policies of the Social Christian government.

The youths of the MAS [Movement for Socialism], the MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left], the PCV [Venezuelan Communist Party], the MEP [People's Electoral Movement] and the LS [Socialist League] believe that the administration of the current government is leading to new failure in dealing with the problems of the country and of youth. It is a government characterized by its antipopular policy, inefficiency and opposition to progress. The problems of youth, far from being lessened have become worse; the country is suffering a serious crisis which is slowly turning growing popular discontent into indignation.

The leftist youth condemn the government's refusal to grant the national universities a fair budget to adequately meet their needs. There can be no other explanation for such a refusal than the green [COPEI] government's wish to economically strangle these educational institutions in oreder to assume full control over them later on.

This government is trying to impose on the people and the universities a "policy of austerity" which it does not practice. On the contrary, it wastes the country's resources and favors the greater enrichment of monopolies and the bourgeoisie. Examples of this are the fact that the official bureaucracy consumes more than 75 percent of the national budget, and the infamous policy of price decontrol. But, still not satisfied, it is trying to modify the statutes of the Investment Fund to devote greater resources to nonproductive expenditures.

While the COPEI [Social Christian Party] government has refused the national universities a fair budget, it has given economic aid to the criminal military Christian Democratic Junta which is crushing the Salvadoran people.

In this sense, the leftist youth resolutely support the "Taking of Caracas" which will be carried out by higher education students all over the country next 25 September and exhort all youths to actively participate in this mobilization.

Finally, the Leftist Youth Commando estimates that the youth situation is very serious, not only at the student level, but also in the labor, cultural and sports sectors, and for this reason unity of action of all the youth and progressive student organizations to defend their rights is now more necessary than ever.

MAS Youth, Felipe Mujica

MIR Socialist Youth, Makario Gonzalez

Communist Youth, Noel Sirit

MEP Socialist Youth, Jose Antonio Martinez

Socialist League, Edgar Ortiz

Caracas, 10 September 1980.

9341
CSO: 3010

EXPORTERS ASSOCIATION ANALYZES CARIBBEAN POLICIES

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 1 Sep 80 Sec 1 p 34

[Article by C. R. Chavez]

> [Text] The Exporters Association makes a strong point for permanent contact with the Caribbean and establishes logical priorities to initiate a prosperous commercial relationship.
>
> A trade service that has a positive goal is being launched between Venezuelan ports and the Caribbean islands from Trinidad to the Dominican Republic.
>
> Venezuela can provide ongoing assistance to these many islands and subsequently enjoy an undeniable political advantage.

The Caribbean is one of the strong priority points in the new strategy launched by the Venezuelan Exporters Association [AVEX]. There are political, diplomatic and economic reasons which suggest the need for greater promotion in that direction. Venezuela already has an offer to export to the Lesser and Greater Caribbean areas, which could meet the demands of that region. And it is in the Caribbean, par excellence, where we can best test our exporting capabilities.

AVEX says that in Venezuela we have lacked overall understanding about the importance of this idea. Thus, we have failed to create the necessary means to make it feasible. In other words, we have lacked an overall coherent policy toward the region. Hence a series of mistakes have resulted. The most important of these is that we have tried to develop a series of promotional campaigns, without concerning ourselves with the infrastructure to carry them out. In this way, the exhibitions put on in the area, the commercial missions which often visit the region and the marketing studies which have been carried out, far from bringing about the expected results, have become, in a certain sense, harmful elements for Venezuelan business in the Caribbean. In fact, Venezuela is famous for offering and not delivering and for trying to solve many Caribbean problems by applying simple financial measures.

The reaction against this reality has gradually become another equally negative factor, expressed in the form of frustration, powerlessness and deliberate indifference. The Caribbean area is a market too limited for our country's development policy or our industry's capacity. This is a fact about which we only change our minds when we believe that external political circumstances compel us to think about the need for a policy of reciprocal, overall and integral cooperation.

Taking all these problems into consideration, AVEX has been proposing to the various national governments a Caribbean policy whose main guidelines are the following:

1. The need for joint overall action.

For example, it is usually estimated that the solution to our commercial problems in the Caribbean lies in the creation of a "line of transportation" which, occasionally, according to demand, would arrive at the ports of the region. It is enough to point out that no transportation enterprise would be able to bear the excessive cost derived from a scattered, inorganic and scanty demand like the one originating in the Caribbean Islands, to realize that this is not the solution. Consequently, there is a need for another essential factor.

2. Consolidation of cargo in the ports.

The demand in the Caribbean, including the area from Cuba to Trinidad, and the islands of Sotavento and Barlovento, is altogether quite large, although it has the serious inconvenience that it is scattered. Consequently, there is a need to "consolidate" the cargo--the cargo leaving Venezuela for that area, as well as the cargo which would come to Venezuela, if we are thinking in terms of exchange.

Concerning Venezuela, AVEX has found the solution in the use of warehousing companies existing at all our important ports. This consolidation service will be furnished by Almacenadora Caracas, S.A. and by Depositos Industriales, S.A. in Puerto Cabello, La Guaira and Guanta.

In the Eastern Caribbean Islands (Grenada, St Vincent, St Lucia, Dominica, Antigua, Montserrat, St Christopher-Nevis-Anguilla, Barbuda) another consolidation and distribution center would be established. This is an elementary principle, since it is impractical to "touch down" island by island.

3. Establishment of a permanent sea line with a fixed itinerary.

With the cargo consolidated in the above-mentioned ports, a maritime unit in coastal traffic will pick up the cargo every 15 days in Puerto Cabello, La Guaira and Guanta. Its first stop in the Caribbean will be Trinidad and then St Lucia, where it will unload at the In-Bond Warehouse, which has already been contracted for with the government of that country. From there, the cargo will be distributed by ship to the islands.

Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, as well as the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Jamaica and Cuba will be served by other ships with the same 15-day frequency, according to the volume of demand in those islands.

Establishing a "permanent line of transportation" and consolidation centers is not enough; it is also necessary to create other conditions favorable to these mechanisms.

9341
CSO: 3010

END

JPRS 76809

13 November 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2214

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76809

13 November 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2214

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

Bahamas' Pindling Says Ship Sinking by Cubans Does Not Affect Ties
(THE TRIBUNE, 14 Oct 80) 1

Treatment of Salvadoran Emigres in Mexico Discussed
(Editorial; EL MUNDO, 10 Sep 80) 2

Central American Plant Disease Control Group Established
(Miguel Franjul; LISTIN DIARIO, 6 Oct 80) 4

BAHAMAS

Balance of Payments Surplus Reported for First Half of 1980
(THE TRIBUNE, 24 Oct 80) 6

CUBA

Briefs
Overseas Construction Meeting 7

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Guzman Presides at 10th Reunion of Naval Class
(LISTIN DIARIO, 6 Oct 80) 8

Inflation Seen Hurting Growing Middle Class
(Bernardo Vega; LISTIN DIARIO, 4 Oct 80) 9

EL SALVADOR

Junta Members Visit Usulutan, Discuss Problems With People
(EL MUNDO, 9 Oct 80; LA PRENSA GRAFICA, 10 Oct 80)..... 12

Private Enterprise Termed Important
Leftist Extremism Denounced

UPD Issues Document Describing Objectives
(EL MUNDO, 9 Sep 80) 15

HONDURAS

Purpose of Nicaraguan Foreign Minister's Visit Criticized
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 14, 17 Oct 80) 17

Nicaragua's 'Hypocrisy' Pointed Out
D'Escoto's 'Belligerent' Attitude Scored

MARTINIQUE

Briefs
PCM Against Giscard, RPR 21

MEXICO

Steel Agreement With Japan Worth 9.3 Billion Pesos
(Maria Elena Lopez Segura; EL DIA, 11 Oct 80) 22

Spain Hopes for More Mexican Oil
(Maria Elena Lopez Segura; EL DIA, 11 Oct 80) 24

PEMEX Sponsors International Energy Conference
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 4 Oct 80) 26

West German Investments Discussed
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 6 Oct 80) 27

Salamanca-Leon Gas Pipeline Construction To Begin in November
(EL SOL DE MEXICO, 8 Oct 80) 28

NICARAGUA

Borge Gives Details of Plot Uncovered in Bluefields
(BARRICADA, 9 Oct 80) 29

Human Rights Record in Country Praised
(BARRICADA, 12, 14 Oct 80) 33

CIDH Visit Welcomed, Editorial
Accomplishments Since Revolution

Special Tribunals Coordinator Welcomes CIDH Visit
(EL NUEVO DIARIO, 13 Oct 80) 36

Growing Interventionist Desire Among U.S. Populace Noted
(BARRICADA, 15 Oct 80) 39

Police Ask Citizens To Turn in Firearms
(BARRICADA, 11 Oct 80) 40

Denationalization of Communications Media Urged
(Pedro Chamorro; LA PRENSA, 10 Oct 80) 41

Citizens Sign Petition Against School-to-Work Program
(LA PRENSA, 23 Sep 80) 42

School-to-Work Program Defended Against Opponents
(BARRICADA, 24 Sep 80) 44

Jinotegan Mothers Set Example
Old Regime Threatened Family, Editorial
Fernando Cardena, Sandinist Youth

Laws Passed To Regulate Housing, Protect Militias
(BARRICADA, 2, 9 Oct 80) 50

Housing for All
Salaries for Militiamen

MIPLAN Worried Over Labor Inefficiency, Economic Failures
(LA PRENSA, 15 Oct 80) 54

Political Manipulation of Religion Criticized
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 9 Oct 80; BARRICADA, 9 Oct 80)..... 56

FSLN Communique Countered
LA PRENSA Accused

Latin American Clerics' Seminar Hails FSLN on Religion
(BARRICADA, 9, 15 Oct 80) 59

Letter to Arce
Letter to National Directorate
Priests Give Opinions

Government Urged To Practice Austerity, Explain Spending
(Pedro Chamorro; LA PRENSA, 8 Oct 80) 62

FSLN's Attempts To Restrict Freedom of Press Criticized
(Pedro Chamorro; LA PRENSA, 6 Oct 80) 64

Alarm Expressed at Increase of Foreigners in Key Positions
(Auxiliadora Guerrero; LA PRENSA, 1 Oct 80) 66

SURINAME

Haakmat Interviewed on Domestic Legal State of Affairs
(Andre Haakmat Interview; ELSEVIERS WEEKBLAD, 13 Sep 80)..... 68

BAHAMAS' PINDLING SAYS SHIP SINKING BY CUBANS DOES NOT AFFECT TIES

Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 14 Oct 80 pp 1, 13

[Text]

PRIME Minister Pindling said Sunday that the sinking of the Defence Force vessel Flamingo in May "has not affected the relations between the government of Cuba and the government of the Bahamas."

Speaking to a select group of Miami Herald editors Mr Pindling said "the discussions between the two governments are going on with respect to settling the question of compensation. In the meantime the formal recognition, diplomatic recognition, that there has been, continues and is expected to continue unless there is serious cause to consider breaking it off. And that point hasn't been reached yet," he said.

Mr Pindling also said, that in his opinion, he thought that "in due course of time it will be recognised that Cuba will need to be afforded the same degree of recognition as any other government in the world is considered. And that recognition of a government does not signify approval of any of its systems, economic, social or religious."

He said there had been few fishing incidents involving Cuba over fishing rights, and the May 10 incident involving the Flamingo "would not have been a cause celebre had it not been for the fact that the patrol boat was sunk by the Cuban air force. In other words, that would have been a routine matter and dealt with routinely and nothing would have been heard."

But he said that the Cuban incident had at first given concern to the Bahamas government as to whether the Cuban government was about to initiate some other policy which was just becoming evident by reason of the action of their air force against the patrol craft.

Mr Pindling said that after it was explained to them the Cubans accepted the facts and "assured us that there was no change in their policy. That it was an error as is likely to happen at times and they offered to fully compensate for that error."

And he said from what had happened from May until the present "it seems that there will be a reasonable resolution of the question."

Mr Pindling declined to go any further, saying he "wouldn't want to prejudice the discussions one way or the other by raising any issue afresh right now."

In the May 10 incident to which the Prime Minister referred, two Cuban MiG fighters strafed and bombed the Defence Force vessel Flamingo near Cay Santo Domingo in the Ragged Island chain after it had arrested two Cuban fishing boats for illegally fishing in Bahamian waters. The Flamingo was sunk. As the Defence Force personnel swam for safety they were machine-gunned by the Cuban jets and four Bahamian marines were lost, their bodies never found.

CSO: 3020

TREATMENT OF SALVADORAN EMIGRES IN MEXICO DISCUSSED

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 10 Sep 80 p 6

[Editorial: "More Salvadorans Detained in Mexico"]

[Text] According to reports from international agencies, in less than a month hundreds of Salvadorans have been arrested in Mexico, after leaving their native land--where dozens of people die weekly--for fear of being victims themselves of the indiscriminate violence.

Most of the emigres are women, adolescents and children, and conservative estimates put at more than 100,000 the number of Salvadorans who have left the country this year, with the usual disadvantages of migrants traveling by land. There are thousands among these who were able to obtain legal papers and similar numbers of the rural population who were compelled to look for the nearest border carrying only the clothing on their backs. They have left behind burnt and looted ranches and assassinated relatives and fellow countrymen. And from these castaways on the sea of blood, the immigration authorities of Guatemala, Mexico and the United States are demanding visas and passports.

Guatemala and Mexico have repeatedly said that the Salvadorans who have entered their territory are adventurers who "are looking for new horizons." The arrested have explained over and over again that they are not adventurers, but rather refugees with death at their heels.

Some say that they are being compelled to participate in terrorist activities or will be killed if they do not cooperate. Others say that they are persecuted by paramilitary organizations and many others leave pushed by panic. Anyway, the emigres leave behind violence and possible death.

These explanations would be valid for anyone who is aware of the disastrous truth and would be more than enough to move the strongest souls, since these are peaceful people, most of them leaving on orders from parents or spouses. Guatemalan, Mexican and American immigration authorities have been able to determine that the Salvadorans arrested do not have criminal records and that, on the contrary, they are all honest people who were studying or working or both. Their transit through Mexico and Guatemala is generally legal and arresting them is arbitrary and inhuman.

Observers say that the attitude of the Guatemalan authorities is understandable, since they are suffering from an escalation of terror like we are. However, the attitude of the Mexican authorities is not as understandable: They should identify with the Salvadoran people who are suffering in a desperate situation.

If only the attitude of the Mexican and American authorities would change and they would open the doors of their immense territories to the Salvadoran emigres, at least while this long and bloody calvary that the Salvadoran people are suffering lasts.

9341
COS: 3010

CENTRAL AMERICAN PLANT DISEASE CONTROL GROUP ESTABLISHED

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 6 Oct 80 pp 1, 13

[Article by Miguel Franjul]

[Text] San Cristobal--Plant health experts from the five Central American nations and the Dominican Republic founded the Regional Association for Integral Disease Control here yesterday. The new organization asked these governments to impose taxes on toxic pesticides to discourage their increasing use.

The new organization includes representatives of Nicaragua, Honduras, El Salvador, Costa Rica and Guatemala, for the Central American region, while the Caribbean area will be represented by Santo Domingo and possibly Haiti, which was invited to attend an event here for the study of the incidence of plant diseases in agriculture and the best methods of controlling them.

This event, sponsored by the embassy of the FGR through its Technical Cooperation Association (GTZ) and the secretariat of agriculture, adopted some resolutions after a week of explanation and debate.

The most outstanding are the following: establishment of a regional association to institutionalize and strengthen the joint system of disease control; intensification of studies of research on organisms to combat the most important diseases in all the member countries; and studies on international cooperation in this field.

Also, the imposition of selective taxes on highly toxic pesticides was recommended after a study of the impact they may have on the economy of the peasantry and the entire nation and, specifically, their effects on the environment.

Once the regional association was established, it recommended that "whatever effort is possible be made to ensure that an event of this type will be held every year for the clarification and exchange of knowledge, such that each country can eventually host seminars of this nature."

It was agreed to undertake a campaign to interest other countries such as Panama, Mexico, Venezuela and Cuba in joining and strengthening the association, and a commission was appointed for this purpose, and also to coordinate the holding of the next regional course on joint plant disease control.

The members of the commission are Manuel Cano of Guatemala, Alex May Montero of Costa Rica, Manuel Peralta Serrata of the Dominican Republic, Hector Manuel Himede of El Salvador, Julio Sequeira of Nicaragua and Meliton Cabrera of Honduras.

Sequeira will also serve as coordinator of the future activities.

Guillermo Villanueva, of the South Center for Agricultural Development (CESDA) in the Dominican Republic, the site of the regional course, bid the foreign and domestic delegates farewell in an address in the course of which he praised the broad and openminded discussion of the possible means of improving plant insect control.

He lauded any action with a view to the joint control of disease, in the conviction that it will contribute to "strengthening efforts resulting in the reestablishment of the ecological balance, which will benefit our rural citizens and enable them to reduce operational costs without affecting production and productivity levels."

Villanueva congratulated the coordinators of the course, experts Daxl, Naumann, Schmutterer, Sequeira and Villagran, and he expressed the desire that the discussions there will contribute "to creating a realistic mental picture of the importance of this discipline which is developing, without meeting resistance from the traditional theoreticians and treatise authors who have urged the use of other methods in our eternal struggle against the plagues which are the enemy of modern man."

5157
CSO: 3010

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS SURPLUS REPORTED FOR FIRST HALF OF 1980

Nassau THE TRIBUNE in English 24 Oct 80 p 1

[Text]

THE overall surplus of $22.7 million in the country's balance of payments for the first half of this year was less than half the $49 million achieved during the same period last year, the Central Bank reported.

"The balance of payments position as measured by the changes in the country's international reserves showed a surplus of $10.6 million during the quarter under review," the bank's quarterly review for June reveals.

It said the overall surplus amounted to $22.7 million for the first half of 1980, which was much lower than $49 million achieved in the same period of 1979.

Despite substantial increases in payments for oil and non-oil imports, the current account showed a surplus of $12.7 million, which was, however, lower than $22.7 achieved in the corresponding period last year.

Imports of oil for local consumption amounted to $87 million $48.9 million or 56 per cent was for the bunkering of foreign ships and aircrafts and $38.1 million or 44 per cent was for domestic consumption.

"The increase in imports of oil for local consumption of $46 million was mainly attributed to a substantial increase of $30.6 million in the category of foreign bunkers," the bank quarterly review said.

It said the increase in domestic consumption was in the main, due to a rise in gas oil of $8.1 million and motor gasoline of $3.7 million.

The price of foreign bunkers per barrel for the second quarter of 1980 was $36.31, an increase of $21.58 over the price in the comparable period of 1979.

Gas oil per barrel increased by $18.99 over the per barrel price of $21.80 in 1979, and motor gasoline per barrel prices were up by $13.70 over the per barrel price of $27.15 in the corresponding period last year.

Data on the other merchandise trade showed that non-oil imports continued to rise mounting to $11.4 million during the second quarter while exports increased marginally from $42.8 million to $47.2 million.

Inflows from tourists for the quarter were estimated at $142.4 million compared with $123.2 million for the same period last year.

In addition, $3.2 million accrued to Government under transfer payments. Payments for travel were estimated at $14.8 million, $3.7 million more than in the second quarter of 1979.

The category "interest, dividends and profits" recorded a net outflow of $15.5 million for the quarter as compared with $17.4 million in the corresponding period last year.

The outflow under "other" of $23.5 million on account of remittances by offshore and other private companies more than offset the inflow by authorised dealers and trust companies of $8.6 million.

Also, Government interest payments amounted to $0.6 million.

The offshore companies' contribution to the economy more than doubled that of last year totalling $35.4 million for the review period against $15.8 million in the comparable period of 1979.

The net inflow on capital account for the second quarter was $5.9 million as opposed to $12.2 million during the same period last year.

Loans amounted to $8.6 million and repayments, $2.3 million. The net outflow on property purchase of $0.6 million was because Bahamians purchased property from non-residents.

Other investment amounted to a net inflow of $0.9 million.

And public corporations had borrowings to the extent of $0.4 million, while Government had repayments totalling $1.1 million.

CSO: 3020

BRIEFS

OVERSEAS CONSTRUCTION MEETING--Minister for construction abroad Levi Farah has chaired in Santiago de Cuba a meeting to analyze the province's construction work force abroad. Party, ministry and labor officials participated in the meeting. Levi Farah underscored how important it was for construction workers going abroad to have the required qualifications and to observe the destination schedule. He said that there are thousands of Cubans working on social and economic projects in Angola, Libya, Ethiopia and other countries in both the Caribbean and Africa. He added that Cuba has contracts abroad exceeding 350 million pesos and that other contracts are being negotiated amounting to approximately 1 billion. [FL241730 Havana Domestic Service in Spanish 1514 GMT 24 Oct 80]

CSO: 3010

GUZMAN PRESIDES AT 10TH REUNION OF NAVAL CLASS

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 6 Oct 80 p 13

[Text] President Antonio Guzman urged the members of the 1970-74 class of naval officers to continue their rk for the welfare of the fatherland and the armed branch.

The 22 officers present sal d the chief executive on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of their entry into the armed forces.

The ceremony, which took place in President Guzman's office, was attended by Lt Gen Mario Imbert McGregor, secretary of state of armed forces, and Vice Adm Francisco Amiama Castillo, chief of the general staff of the navy.

Others present were Maj Gen Pablo Garrido Medina, chief of the general staff of the Dominican Air Force, Maj Gen Virgilio Payano Rojas, chief of the national police, and Gen Miguel Alvarez Belen, deputy chief of the general staff of the army.

The members of the naval academy class are Lts Fabio A. Suarez Pena, Freddy Perez Sanchez, Rafael Bienvenido Arias Inoa, Esteban Negrete Olivares, Ramon Francisco Alburquerque, Ramon M. Golibart, Delfin Bautista Arias, Manuel Antonio Paredes Mejia, Felipe Perez Santana, Sergio Martinez, Camilo Nazir Tejada, Bienvenido Grullon Mendez, Ricardo Jimenez Salcedo, Leonidas, Mateo Oliva, Anibal Perdomo Frometa, Cesar De Wint Ruiz, Enrique Espino Jimenez, Rafael Lantigua Reyes, Julio Garcia Alies, Tomas Rodriguez Bido, Jose Matos Perez and Jose F. Rodriguez y Rodriguez (retired).

5157
CSO: 3010

INFLATION SEEN HURTING GROWING MIDDLE CLASS

Santo Domingo LISTIN DIARIO in Spanish 4 Oct 80 p 14A

[Article by Bernardo Vega: "The Trials of the Dominican Middle Class"]

[Text] Until 1962 we Dominicans were either very rich (tutumpote) or very poor (the unfortunate). The members of the first group, although it was a squeeze, could all fit into the Embassy Club at the Hotel Ambassador and the Santiago Recreation Center, so few were they, although well padded. The unfortunates had the right to the free enjoyment of the rest of the landscape in our broad and picturesque national territory.

The Rise of Our Middle Class

The new model of economic growth and the political system we adopted beginning in 1962 nonetheless caused a third social group, the middle class, to develop, resulting from the process of industrialization and urbanization of our country and the speedy growth of the trade sector and services.

It was in particular after 1970 that this process became dynamic. The hundreds of Dominicans who went abroad to study beginning in 1962, returning in 1967-69 with diplomas as agronomers, engineers, economists, etc, served as the human base in the process of creating the new social class.

Their rapid rise was facilitated by the simple fact that in 1962, the country had four agronomers, two economists and three electrical engineers. The state, through the enterprises of the CORDE [Dominican Corporation of State Enterprises], the CEA [State Sugar Council], INAPA [National Institute of Waterworks and Sewage], Central Bank, CDE, etc, provided these young professional people with jobs. The private sector, for its part, through the process of industrialization involving the replacement of imports, encouraged by the industrial incentive law and the FIDE [Investment Fund for Economic Development], substantially increased the number of technicians and office employees in the country.

Other mechanisms favoring the rise of the middle class were the flourishing of commercial banks, financial institutions, mortgage companies and savings and loan associations, which simultaneous with requiring relatively sophisticated office employees, provided the long-term financing so that the new class could purchase its own housing and young businessmen, without substantial resources of their own, could obtain financing for their industrial projects.

Foreign investment (Falconbridge, Rosario, Nestle, Refineria, etc) and tourism created additional jobs for the new social stratum. The expansion of sugar production, through the settlement system above all, also promoted the rapid growth of the middle class. The conversion of broad military groups into businessmen and planters between 1974 and 1978 gave an unexpected new dimension to the phenomenon. The construction industry, public projects included, brought a wide range of engineers and builders into the new stratum.

The establishment of various universities and the expansion of that already in existence enabled a large complex of young professionals to become professors. Adding to this the doctors, the dynamism of the advertising business, the rise of trade (thanks to a policy of free imports) it is readily possible to see how our social structure underwent a very important change in some 15 years. The relative ease of social mobility here undoubtedly facilitated this process, as compared with other societies with almost insurmountable social barriers.

Implications of the Phenomenon

Political, economic and sociological implications of the emergence among us of a relatively broad middle class are extraordinary. From the economic point of view, this social stratum is characterized by a high propensity for consumption, above all of goods which are status symbols. It represents the motive force of "consumerism," especially for imported products.

A recent Central Bank study shows how the family consumption structure has been changing in the country as the income level rises. While the poor save nothing and have to spend all of their limited income on the satisfaction of their food and housing needs, the middle class members are the customers in the boutiques and for a series of imported products. The present high import levels for consumer goods other than food reflect this continuing demand by the new class. The development of restaurants, discotheques, moving picture theaters, etc, is also an index of the demand of the newly wealthy for services.

Politically, the middle class in general tends to be conservative. This is the case in the Dominican Republic as well, where our present middle class has the very special characteristic of being in the first generation, i.e. the parents of its members were poor people. In this connection it is a social group opposed to violent change.

Inflation and the Middle Class

Inflation is by definition the mechanism for worsening income distribution in a country par excellence. When there is inflation, the rich become richer and the poor poorer, with the gap between the two strata increasing. The rich, with capital earnings from inventories and properties and on the basis of their ability to invest in real values with the long-term resources obtained, increase their wealth thanks to inflation. Their cost increases are passed on to the consumer.

The peasant, to the extent that he consumes what he himself produces, can somewhat offset the effects of inflation. The worker, by means of strikes and collective bargaining, has at least potentially the capacity to try to compensate for the effects of inflation somewhat.

The combination of inflation which is imported and of domestic origin, like that from which we Dominicans are suffering now, has its greatest impact precisely on the middle class.

In the case of the Dominican Republic we can then come to see special and important conclusions:

1) Despite the rise of the middle class, income distribution in our country has deteriorated rather than improved in the past 10 years.

2) At the present time, it is the middle class which is in the weakest position for defending itself against the harsh blows of inflation.

3) It is probable today that the recently developed middle class here, after just a few years of existence, is the most discontented social group, and this discontent could of course find political expression, despite the presumed conservatism believed to be characteristic of this group.

The middle class is usually regarded as a buffer for social pressures, a cushion between the numerous poor and the few rich, a safeguard against violent social change. In the Dominican case, this generation which is finding its very recently acquired social status diminished by a very real decrease in its purchasing power may well prove to be a fuse rather than a shock absorber, in which case this bourgeoisie would lose its modest charm, which is such that the most powerful classes today contemplate it with the satisfaction and affection of an artist admiring his well-wrought creation.

5157
CSO: 3010

JUNTA MEMBERS VISIT USULUTAN, DISCUSS PROBLEMS WITH PEOPLE

Private Enterprise Termed Important

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 9 Oct 80 p 28

[Text] Members of the Government Junta visited Usulutan today in their swings through departments. Arriving towards midmorning were Jose Napoleon Duarte, Dr Jose Antonio Morales Erlich and Col Adolfo Arnoldo Majano, accompanied by the ministers of agriculture, justice, interior, education, public works and planning and the undersecretary of defense. The party consisted of other officials as well.

Dr Morales Erlich spoke initially on behalf of the junta at a meeting at the National Institute with authorities of the capital city and towns of Usulutan Department, and he addressed himself to the inhabitants of the department, which is called the "breadbasket of the republic."

His speech dealt with the issue of the government's socioeconomic policy. He made the following comments, among others:

"Within this democratic, socioeconomic framework, private enterprise has a very important role to play in the future by taking part in reviving the economy with a fair balance so that private enterprise exists at all levels of production. This government is not taking everything away; it is streamlining production sectors so that output gets to all our people. Industry, trade and other domestic economic activities are going to have the chance to participate in the revolutionary process to build a new society in which all Salvadorans will share both the obligations and the benefits of progress."

Non-Marxist Revolution

Dr Morales Erlich later asserted:

"At this moment El Salvador is undertaking the first non-Marxist revolution in the Americas. We will not allow a good or bad political group to take up arms here and forcibly or violently impose its whims. We are battling against the establishment of a totalitarian system in the country, and we are succeeding because the people are aware of our struggle and are with us, with their minds on a decent and happy future for all Salvadorans, a new destiny in which Marxist-Leninists and any other extremist group have no place."

For his part, Mr Duarte reiterated what Dr Morales said about the participation and importance of private enterprise in the government's future plans. He went on to say that the country is witnessing a conspiracy engineered by the two extremes, the left and the right, to gradually lead the people towards an uprising, but that the government would not allow this because it is aware of the tactics that they are employing and knows what they hope to do in the days to come; thus, it will be able to combat and defeat them wherever they might crop up.

Leftist Extremism Denounced

San Salvador LA PRENSA GRAFICA in Spanish 10 Oct 80 pp 3, 13, 19

[Text] Yesterday in Usulutan, Jose Napoleon Duarte denounced the conspiracy against national security and the attacks on the Church, educators and other segments promoting development, attributing responsibility for them to the extreme left.

He deplored the attacks on radio station YSAX and the archbishopric and the murder of Father Manuel Antonio Reyes Monico, indicating that "this was a ploy by extremists to blame the government."

Duarte said that the government would not have to take similar action because its policy is one of a peaceful revolution, adding that the far left and right are the ones engaging in violence.

"We do not have to order killings, bombings, attacks and kidnapings," Duarte said, "because it is enough for us to give the people all that they have always struggled for...I want to make it clear," said the member of the Government Revolutionary Junta, "that the leftwing extremists are fostering chaos in the country by undertaking such things as attacks on the Church while suggesting that the government is to blame, in order to confuse the people."

Duarte underscored that the Salvadoran people already know what the far left is capable of and are familiar with its ploys, such as the recent attacks on the Church that were designed to make the government look responsible.

He then called on Catholics to calmly analyze the situation that extremists are leading our country towards.

He also appealed to the Church hierarchy not to let the extremist ploys take them by surprise, because their aim is general confusion.

He also pointed to instances of teachers whom leftwing and rightwing extremists murdered to make the government look responsible. He then reiterated that the government's best weapon is the process of changes, which the far left has not come to support, despite the repeated offers by the Government Revolutionary Junta, Duarte explained.

Jose Napoleon Duarte spoke yesterday during a visit to Usulutan as a member of the Government Revolutionary Junta; he was accompanied by Col Adolfo Arnoldo Majano and Dr Jose Antonio Morales Erlich.

Junta Protest

The following communique was then made public:

"The Government Revolutionary Junta once again denounces and condemns the snuffing out of useful lives and the terrorist acts by far left and far right groups that are endeavoring to impede the establishment of the climate of peace and calm that the people are calling for.

"Politically frustrated by the grass roots repudiation of their subversive, terrorist activities, the extremist groups operating in the country have gotten to the brink of desperation.

"This is the conclusion that we reach in noting the crimes that these groups have committed in recent days,which have been marked by sadism, hatred, a desire for revenge, fanaticism and an absolute lack of ethics.

"Entire peasant families have been slain by the extremist mobs, just because they have refused to cooperate with their subversive activities.

"The people were stupified when they learned of the brutal slaying of Maria Magdalena Henriquez, a member of the Human Rights Commission.

"The slanderous insinuations of the Marxist organizations notwithstanding, it is clear to any person who reasons without ideological extremism or fanaticism that the death of Miss Henriquez is conducive only to the political objectives of extremist segments that, in light of the in-depth changes being undertaken, are attempting at all costs to discredit the Revolutionary Government internationally.

"They then kidnaped and murdered Father Manuel Antonio Reyes Monico, who was the chaplain of the Salvadoran Air Force and a law student at Dr Jose Matias Delgado University in San Salvador.

"The clear-cut position and honesty of this priest, who worked on behalf of children, rule out any alleged ties with far leftwing groups.

"The case of San Jose Day School teachers Oscar Rene Romano Calderon and Rafael Antonio Santos Chavez, who were machinegunned to death in front of a crowd of Day School students, could not be a more eloquent illustration of the immorality of these criminal extremists.

"Educators Romano Calderon and Santos Chavez were engaged in their noble teaching efforts to complete the school year, despite the threats that small extremist groups have hurled at instructors and schools that have continued their work.

"They then added to their victims Professor Hildaura Martinez de Morales, the secretary of the Women's Movement of the Christian Democratic Party in Cabanas Department. She had worked for many years training children and youths, in addition to her struggles to achieve broader involvement for women in the development of our country and to make El Salvador a truly democratic society.

"But in its desire for revenge against the people the FDR has gone even further, and by threats and criminal actions its terrorist gangs are forcing the closure of health care centers or units in the interior of our country, thus taking away an essential service from the humblest segments of our society."

8743
CSO: 3010

UPD ISSUES DOCUMENT DESCRIBING OBJECTIVES

San Salvador EL MUNDO in Spanish 9 Sep 80 p 32

[Text] Representatives of the People's Democratic Unity (UPD), which was recently founded here, have held a press conference at the Alameda Hotel in this capital to report on their motives and objectives at this critical time for El Salvador.

It was learned that 14 groups form the UPD, with a total of approximately 100,000 workers and prospects for more people joining in the coming days. The list is as follows: Federation of Salvadoran Workers (CTS), whose representative is Jose Luis Grande; Latin American Workers Federation (CLAT), represented by Julio de Leon; FESINCONTRANS [Federation of Labor Unions of the Construction, Transportation and Allied Industries], represented by Felipe Antonio Zaldivar; Central American Unionist Party (PUCA), represented by Dr. Gabriel Pilona Araujo; Union of ISTA [Salvadoran Institute of Agrarian Transformation] Workers, represented by Ricardo Valdes; STPCAS; Organization of Agricultural and Animal Husbandry Workers, represented by Jose Saldana; Salvadoran Association of Ticket Agents; SIPCES; Eastern Federation of Salvadoran Workers; AGEPYM; SUTC; COOPYSIN (Federation of Workers, People's and Union Organizations); and the Confederation of Central American Workers (CTCA), represented by Francisco Saldana.

A document entitled "Declaration of Principles and Objectives of the UPD" was handed out to the press. Today we are publishing some ideas expressed in this document:

"As an absolute necessity for the large sector of the Salvadoran citizenship which has no voice or participation in the true and authentic process of change which the country needs without delay, and tired of so much repression and violence, the UPD has emerged as the highest organization incorporating important labor union organizations representing thousands of workers, as well as Salvadoran women--all having democratic tendencies, without commitments to any political party or government sector and opposed to the fascist and oligarchic system.

"The UPD is essentially created to defend labor demands within the framework of the law and to lay out the principles and objectives that will unify all the social sectors struggling perseveringly in search of better solutions so that the country might follow or return to the state of law and order and to the mainstream of political, economic and social democracy, without dogmatism or sectarianism.

"Within these broad guidelines, the UPD takes the patriotic initiative to open the way for all social sectors to exchange ideas. This dialogue is not the only alternative but it is the most beneficial and incorporates the common objective, which is to follow the path of peace, unity among the people, solidarity and social justice to create a pluralist, free and democratic government that represents all the social sectors--a government that is not a single-party government; a government without imperialist interventions, whatever their origin or political ideology. The country's problems must be laid out and solved by Salvadorans, even if this means tremendous sacrifice."

Later on the document states that the members retain their own structures; that the UPD considers that as long as the political problem is not solved, the crisis will increase; that on the basis of the proclamation, the Armed Forces, warrantors of the Constitution, are asked to: 1) create a government formed by progressive and democratic elements representative of the people; 2) repeal the state of siege and emergency; 3) stop the repression and persecution of politicians and union leaders; 4) define its position with respect to the reopening of the university; and 5) repeal Decree 296.

Finally, political, social, economic and cultural demands are set forth.

9341
CSO: 3010

PURPOSE OF NICARAGUAN FOREIGN MINISTER'S VISIT CRITICIZED

Nicaragua's 'Hypocrisy' Pointed Out

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 14 Oct 80 p 7

[Editorial: "Concerning a Visit"]

[Text] Today, there was been an announcement of the visit to Honduras paid by the Nicaraguan foreign affairs minister, Miguel D'Escoto, who was a priest of the Catholic Church before devoting himself full time to politics.

With that period of his life wherein he was engaged in administering sacraments left behind, the Nicaraguan government official still retains the title of priest, better known among our people as "father."

It has been learned that the Nicaraguan Bishops Conference, headed by Monsignor Miguel Obando y Bravo, has issued a pastoral letter in which it calls upon Father D'Escoto, as well as his companion Ernesto Cardenal and other priests involved in public administration in the neighboring country, to withdraw from the regime and return to their pastoral activity.

To date, it is not known whether the aforementioned individuals will obey the mandate from the bishops. In the event that they disregard the appeal which is (to put it bluntly) an order, it is possible that both the Nicaraguan Catholic hierarchy and the Roman Curia will examine the matter and end up dissociating them from their priestly function, in view of the obvious deformation that their Church activity has suffered.

In any event, and regardless of what course of action is taken by these priest-politicians, it is important for the Honduran public to reflect on what the visit of the Nicaraguan minister means to our people.

At the outset of the reckoning, it is a political act.

The government of the neighboring country obviously cannot attempt to ignore a state with which it shares a common border.

Nicaragua can disregard what they think of its government in Australia, Chile or South Africa.

But it cannot do the same with Honduras and Costa Rica. They are too close to be ignored.

Now then, what has the position of our neighbors been thus far with regard to the people and government of Honduras?

During the time of Somoza, the opposition and, quite specifically, the journalist Pedro Joaquin Chamorro (may God bless him), attacked Honduras because of the fact that we had a military regime which clearly maintained relations, even of an intimate type, with the dynasty.

One of the military chiefs who misgoverned this country the longest invited Somoza on more than one occasion, and maintained close contacts with him to the point of becoming related by marriage.

That personage was later eliminated from the power structure, but the ill will was already created; and it continued.

Despite the fact that we Hondurans gave refuge to the Sandinists, and assisted them in more than one way, and apart from the fact that they were offered food and shelter, up until now the military group ruling Nicaragua has evinced a marked, overt hostility toward our country.

One slight detail attests clearly to this: Mr D'Escoto recently addressed the General Assembly of the United Nations on his country's foreign relations.

He called several countries, including some governed by leftist groups in the Caribbean, "fraternal nations." He omitted Honduras completely.

Nicaraguan radio is constantly launching attacks against our country.

Honduras is accused of giving asylum to ex-Somozans. It is forgotten that, in the past, asylum was given to the Sandinists. And every time there is an opportunity to foment an aggressive incident, the Nicaraguan troops take advantage of it, maintaining an atmosphere of fear on the border.

With matters in this state, what can we expect from the visit by the Nicaraguan official?

Without doubt, a diplomatic offensive aimed at making us believe that the Nicaraguan regime not only has nothing to do with Marxism, but also is a friend of Honduras.

We are an honest people, sometimes even naive; but everything has a limit.

And in the case that concerns us, we must treat the visitor intelligently and courteously. But we must not succumb to the foolishness of believing that the gratuitous hatred dispensed to us by the leftist regime in the neighboring country has disappeared with the stroke of a pen.

An old Spanish proverb says that "fools do not even enjoy God." And the wisdom of popular sayings has been confirmed to the point of satiety. So, let us open our arms, but our eyes as well. Let us not, one of these days, experience an unpleasant surprise such as those we have had in the past, which have jeopardized our very existence as a nation.

D'Escoto's 'Belligerent' Attitude Scored

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 17 Oct 80 p 7

[Editorial: "With the Sword and the Laurel"]

[Text] When the Nicaraguan foreign minister, Miguel D'Escoto, arrived in Tegucigalpa, on what one assumes was a good will visit, we imagined that the priest-diplomat (a man who has straddled between the religious life and the worldly din) would come with the laurel of peace in his consecrated hands, and not with an accusation on the tip of his tongue against the military of the country which was offering him the best of receptions.

Without bothering with euphemisms, and hence deliberately, Father D'Escoto uttered some statements which, if the Honduran foreign minister had made them in Managua, would surely have been a virtual "casus belli" [cause of war], or at least reason for exacerbating the differences between a country which is taking giant steps toward a system that is not exactly democratic and another which is bent on not pursuing that path.

We thought that the seraphic presence of Minister D'Escoto would have a far more positive effect. But no; violating all the fundamental rules of courtesy, and setting aside diplomatic protocol, he engaged in directing poison darts against the Honduran military, accusing them of being "Somozans," the greatest stigma that exists today in the unfortunate land of Dario..

Why is it that these celibates meddling in politics have to sow discord every time they refer to Honduras? Because we remember the poet and priest, Ernesto Cardenal, who was recently given an award by the booksellers of Frankfurt, Germany, and who, every time he had to discuss the refugees from his country that were with us at the height of civil war, said that they were living in subhuman conditions, such as those in concentration camps; whereas the fact is that, if they were not in luxury hotels, they at least had a safe place and a mouthful to eat.

The ineffable Miguel has come to Honduran territory itself to accuse our military of a plan that the Holy Inquisition would have liked. He forgets that these men, with all the pressure they they could have had in their time, maintained the principle of nonintervention in the private affairs of the Nicaraguans, and that our country, if it was used for anything, served as a refuge for many Sandinist militans who came in search of assistance from those who considered the anti-Somoza cause their own.

No one said anything when a "committee of solidarity with the people of Nicaragua", which was engaged in collecting funds, was formed here. There was silence, and even a certain official complicity because, strictly speaking, nonintervention includes both the government and the subjects; and, in this case, there was an arrogant disregard for the actions which served to aid the Sandinists in their struggle.

Possibly, if the idea of seeking aid for Somoza had occurred to any individual or institution, then everyone would have been enraged at "that Honduran interference," because that is the way things are at present. Solidarity is a principle reserved exclusively for causes sponsored by the nondemocratic left.

We do not understand the type of diplomacy practiced by the priest D'Escoto who, on the one hand, says that he has come with the laurel of peace and, on the other, displays without concealment the belligerent, accusing and harsh sword against the men in uniform of Honduras.

We think that Nicaragua wants a system different from what they call socialism. That is all very well, because if the Nicaraguans want to live or die with that dogma, it is their problem, not ours. What we cannot understand is why he would attempt, without any discretion and rapidly, to interfere in our affairs, and cheerfully ask that the military whom he considers Somozan be stripped of their uniforms.

First of all, insofar as we know, there has been no division between Somozans and Sandinists among the members of our armed institution. That would be all right for the "Nicas," but not for Hondurans. Then, once the present government became established in the neighboring country, with the cooperation of Jimmy Carter, Carlos Andres Perez, Rodrigo Carazo, Jose Lopez Portillo and others who set aside Estrada doctrines of non-intervention and as many international conventions to give way to the Sandinists, Honduras observed a conduct which has been proper in its relations with the Nicaraguans.

If we have had to take in the refugees who arrived, it has been to fulfill a basic obligation of humanity toward political refugees who have had to leave their native soil; because the Hondurans did not exactly tell those people to come here. In spite of everything, and our needs, we did not hesitate to feed the hungry and give drink to the thirsty, as Holy Mother Church commands, a Church of which one assumes the priest from the Maryknoll Order is a faithful follower.

Now then, does the father want us, in order to be on good terms, to order all the officers into retirement, and become filled with revolutionaries of a new type, so that we may make common cause with the Sandinists?

The Reverend D'Escoto should understand that each in his own home and God in everyone's home is a golden rule for good relations among peoples. Anything else is pure demagogy, a desire to irritate and to foist the blame on the Hondurans for the misfortunes of the unlucky Nicaraguan people, who emerged from the flames only to fall into the fireplace.

2909
CSO: 3010

BRIEFS

PCM AGAINST GISCARD, RPR--The Central Committee of the Communist Party of Martinique (PCM), in referring to the coming presidential election, proposes "to wage a great political battle against the Giscardian colonial government-RPR [Rally for the Republic] in order to advance the idea of Martinique's responsibility and its nationalist demands." It calls for "militant abstention" in order to "demonstrate its determination to raise the level of the liberation struggle in Martinique." This is the first time that communists in Martinique have so clearly underlined their differences with the French Communist Party on the eve of an important election. In 1969, they supported the candidacy of Jacques Duclos and in 1974, that of Francois Mitterrand, the only opposition candidate. In the 10 June 1979 European election, they voted for the list headed by Georges Marchais. The decision of the PCM is in keeping with the new strategy drawn up on the occasion of the Seventh Congress of the party, which hardened its position in order to fight for an autonomous people's democratic state. [Text] [Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Oct 80 p 11] 11,464

CSO: 3100

STEEL AGREEMENT WITH JAPAN WORTH 9.3 BILLION PESOS

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 11 Oct 80 p 14

[Article by Maria Elena Lopez Segura]

[Text] Mexico and Japan have recently signed a steel forging and smelting agreement that will entail investments of 6 billion pesos and create 2,000 jobs, as well as a 3.3 billion peso large-diameter piping agreement, the Japanese ambassador Nobuo Matsunaga, reported.

He announced that the negotiations on the large-diamater piping would conclude shortly. In this regard, the secretary of patrimony and industrial development, Jose Andres Oteyza, asserted that this is not just another project; it is qualitatively important because it sets the guidelines for Mexico's industrialization over the last two decades of this century.

He also gave assurances that Japanese industry and the Japanese Government are firmly determined to cooperate so that the projects can be implemented as soon as possible and play a decisive role in our country's capital goods self-sufficiency.

Business Meeting

He then reported that the 12th Plenary Meeting of the Mexico-Japan Business Committee would be held from 13 to 15 October in Tokyo. It will be attended by a Mexican delegation of more than 100 high-level representatives, including the head of PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum], Jorge Diaz Serrano. The ambassador indicated that PEMEX is not in Japan to hammer out any agreement on oil sales. "We are aware that it is not possible at the moment to boost exports to our country, and we respect Mexico's production ceiling," he said.

The meeting will analyze the situation and outlook for the two economies, the current trade status, joint ventures, technological cooperation and the energy issue.

Oil

As we know, PEMEX has been exporting 100,000 barrels of crude oil a day to Japan since October, a supply level that had been scheduled for the end of the year but that was moved up. Thus, we are highly satisfied, the ambassador said, because it is important to diversify our sources of energy during these times of world energy crisis.

Japan gets 16 percent of its petroleum from Iran and Iraq and also imports oil from Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Indonesia. Some 70 percent of the energy it consumes comes from abroad, and therefore its situation was greatly alleviated by the Mexican crude oil supplies arriving ahead of schedule.

Referring specifically to the war in the Middle East, he said that if the United States or the Soviet Union intervened in the Persian Gulf region, the conflict would result in a third world war, and therefore all countries must strive to convince Iran and Iraq to put down their arms.

In conclusion, he commented on the speech that President Lopez-Portillo delivered yesterday in the presence of the prime minister of New Zealand. He said that his country shares the Mexican chief executive's view in appealing to the world to prevent a world conflagration, and he pointed out that Japan is conversing with the two warring nations in a bid to get them to stop fighting.

8743
CSO: 3010

SPAIN HOPES FOR MORE MEXICAN OIL

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 11 Oct 80 p 14

[Article by Maria Elena Lopez Segura]

[Text] The joint efforts of PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum] and the Spanish company Petronor will not be able to resolve the current energy crisis prompted by the war in the Middle East, because what is needed is crude, not refined oil, Spain's ambassador to Mexico, Eduardo Pena Abizanda, has asserted.

In a brief interview at the embassy, he indicated that the possible increase from 15 to 34 percent in Mexico's share in Petronor does not imply that cooperation between the two enterprises can resolve the current crisis, because what is needed is the raw material.

Nevertheless, an increase in the Mexican share in one of the world's largest refineries, located in the port of Bilbao, means that Spain will be able to develop its petrochemicals industry and readily distribute Mexican products of all kinds throughout the globe.

He pointed out that Mexico has shown its trust in Spain by choosing to invest in its petroleum industry, inasmuch as other nations had requested that it do likewise. Our second major triumph, he said, was Mexico's decision to buy 34 percent of the company's shares.

He indicated that this oil trade is vital to his country because it made most of its crude oil purchases in the Middle East, which brought a great many problems.

Mexico, in contrast, is a secure supply source, he asserted, and the current import level of 15 percent could easily hit 20.

He pointed out that although for the time being Spain has not asked Mexico to boost its oil exports there, this does not mean that such a request might not be forthcoming in the future, because the war between Iran and Iraq has deprived Spain of 20 percent of its total oil imports.

As far as the international situation is concerned, he said that democratic nations should form a strong bloc against hegemonies and struggle for peace.

Furthermore, he noted that trade with Mexico has greatly contributed to Spain's development, because increased exports to our country and more investment by its companies here have added much to Spain's economy.

Thus, Mexico is becoming Spain's number one trading partner in Latin America, a standing that Argentina now holds. In view of the increase in bilateral trade, however, Mexico will surely take over first place in 2 years.

In 1980, he asserted, trade will total $800 million, and he emphasized that Mexico is the number one target country for Spanish investment, which goes into several fields of industry.

8743
CSO: 3010

PEMEX SPONSORS INTERNATIONAL ENERGY CONFERENCE

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 4 Oct 80 p 9-A [Text] Changes in the world outlook in the fields of the economy, energy and international development affect each and every one of the nations on the globe. In light of this, we can assert that economies no longer have borders.

Thus, PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum], in conjunction with the Mexican Petroleum Institute, has begun a series of high-level conferences entitled "Economy, Energy and Development." Participating in them are renowned national and international experts, who are assessing and analyzing the main current economic trends, their relationship to and effects on the energy question and their impact on the various aspects of national development. This assessment of the world landscape will provide PEMEX directors with a valid decision-making tool.

The participants at this series of high-level conferences are: Rafael Izquierdo, adviser to the president of the republic; Dr Jacob Zahavi, head of the Department of Energy Models at the Stockholm School of Economics; Morris A. Adelman, president of MIT; Yoshihiko Ono, member of the Council of Science of Japan; Victor L. Urquidi, president of the Colegio de Mexico; Cesari Martini, president of the International Relations Institute of Italy, and Jean Feron, vice president of the French Energy Institute.

The "Economy, Energy and Development" conferences will be held at the PEMEX auditorium from 7 October to 27 November and will be opened by Jorge Diaz Serrano, the director general of PEMEX.

8743
CSO: 3010

WEST GERMAN INVESTMENTS DISCUSSED

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 6 Oct 80 p 4-B

[Text] Mexico is now the number three Latin American country in terms of direct, private investment from the FRG.

According to statistics from the FRG Economy Ministry, more than 800 million German marks are invested in Mexico, with an annual growth rate of over 4.4 percent.

Investment totaled 766.1 million German marks in 1978, rising to some 800 million by 1979, and there will be a major increase for the figure in 1980.

The FRG is the number two foreign investor in Mexico, trailing only the United States, and among Latin American countries with German investment, Mexico now holds third place.

Investment is mainly in such branches as vehicle construction, 452.4 million German marks; the chemical industry, 105 million; electrical engineering, 75.4 million; machinery construction, 30 million; pharmaceuticals, 24.5 million, and the leather industry, 15.5 million.

8743
CSO: 3010

SALAMANCA-LEON GAS PIPELINE CONSTRUCTION TO BEGIN IN NOVEMBER

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 8 Oct 80 pp 1-F, 4-F

[Text] Celaya, Guanajuato (OEM)--Construction work on the Salamanca-Irapuato-Silao-Leon gas pipeline, which will cost 250 million pesos, will be inaugurated by the director general of PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum], Jorge Diaz Serrano, next 3 November.

This was reported by the governor of Guanajuato, Enrique Velasco Ibarra, who added that the pipeline would bring an indispensable service for further manufacturing to the state's entire industrial corridor.

The city of Celaya has practically all of the needed infrastructure, since the line passes through the municipality, and thus the prospects of fuel supplies look quite good.

Early next month, Diaz Serrano will be in this city to inaugurate the major industrial project, which will complement the industrial infrastructure for important municipalities in the state.

The Guanajuato governor clarified that scheduled PEMEX investments might be boosted, since the costs of materials and manpower are subject to constant increases.

This project is considered a major incentive that Guanajuato is offering to investors, who now have the chance to establish themselves in this area.

There is room for large companies, which, in turn, will generate jobs for a great many residents of Guanajuato.

In conclusion, the governor hailed the PEMEX gas pipeline that will be furnishing this fuel to the most important municipalities in Guanajuato.

8743
CSO: 3010

BORGE GIVES DETAILS OF PLOT UNCOVERED IN BLUEFIELDS

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 9 Oct 80 pp 1, 5

[Text] The most extensive counterrevolutionary plot known to date, including the Bluefields incidents, was disclosed at a press conference by the minister of interior, Commander of the Revolution Tomas Borge.

Commander Borge explained at length to native and foreign newsmen the Bluefields incidents and their connection with the counterrevolutionary plot of former GN [National Guard[Col Bernardino Larios, the multinationals, some leaders of religious sects and a Spanish diplomat.

The press conference was attended by Guerrilla Commanders Lenin Cerna and Walter Ferreti, first and second in command of the General Directorate of State Security, respectively.

The information released by the minister of interior, Commander Borge, was confirmed by Wesley Hernan Savery Harrison, who was introduced to the newsmen and who said that he was one of the main ringleaders of the FAD and the one responsible for the incidents in Bluefields, where he headed the entire movement and was arrested a week ago.

Wesley Hernan, who has been battling for about 13 years to divide the Atlantic Coast from the rest of the country, claimed that he met with Bernardino Larios on three occasions, and on the second was named head of the FAD in that area, and made responsible for the Bluefields incidents.

Commander Borge stated that, for several years, an organization called the Indian, Negro and Creole Committee has been operating in that area, with separatist interests, its top-ranking leader being Hernan, who was appointed by Larios to take charge of organizing counterrevolutionary activities there.

They Met in Managua

The meetings of those heading the counterrevolution were held in the house of Colonel Larios and his cousin, Hugo Larios, in Managua. According to statements made by Hernan himself, at those same meetings they agreed to organize a plan of a separatist type on the Atlantic Coast, which would be aimed at destroying the revolutionary state and the Sandinist Front.

Those meetings were attended by Jose Vilchez, Hugo Morales, who was known as "David Hermoso," and Bernardino Larios, who admitted to being the chief of FAD; and at them, according to Comdr Tomas Borge, they disclosed their aims of overthrowing the revolutionary government. To do so, they had to plan and coordinate their activities very well, with backing from the United States Marines, Somozan guards in Honduras and the prisoners whom they would release in advance to combat the Sandinist Popular Army and to appoint a counterrevolutionary government of which Bernardino and Hernan would be members.

The General Plan

Still according to Hernan's statements, the general counterrevolutionary plan consisted of kidnapping the nine members of the National Directorate of the Sandinist National Liberation Front, and subsequently assassinating them.

A total of 130 men would would be used, and some were to be sent from the coast. They would seize the barracks and their commanders, and would release all the Somozan prisoners to combat the Sandinist Popular Army; the Somozan guards who escaped to that country when they were defeated by our people would enter via the northern border.

The date for carrying out this plot was to be 19 July, the date of the first anniversary of the revolutionary victory, but it failed, and was moved to 23 August, the day marking the completion of the literacy campaign; that failed, too, and it was changed to a few days before the arrest of Bernardino by our state security revolutionary forces.

The Weapons and the Money

An individual named Jose Vilchez was to send the weapons, consisting of 25 M-16s and 25 Galils. The shipment would be made by boat on a site near the Atlantic Coast.

The money was to be collected by several persons. COSEP [Higher Council of Private Enterprise] would give them 2.5 million cordobas to purchase weapons, but it did not give them that sum; and $105,000 was to be given by an American with the surname Thornton, who arrived from abroad, leaving it at Bluefields, and promising to send the Marines in Panama to back the movement.

The plan also called for Hernan to leave for Honduras, where he would collect weapons and contact a Colonel Bermudez to coordinate the action and to incorporate some of the Waspan militias. He was unable to make the trip to Honduras, because the Ministry of Culture appointed him to conduct some investigations at Laguna de Perlas, which he never did.

As part of the plot, the pretext of separating the Atlantic Coast from the rest of the country was to be used to set the population of that sector against the revolutionary government; and for that purpose, they would raise the banner of anticommunism and the explusion of the Cubans who are working in the rural areas on a voluntary basis.

The Plan on the Coast

The share of the Atlantic Coast in the plot involved the kidnapping of the Guerrilla Commanders William Ramirez and Lumberto Campbell (a native of that area), the minister and vice minister of development of the Atlantic Coast, respectively. This action was to be led by Weisler.

They attacked the Bluefields command, an action which they carried out confiscating 11 M-52 rifles and two carbines. In the Bluefields incidents, the counterrevolutionaries attacked several government officials, including one female comrade and two members of the Municipal Junta, putting a rope around their necks.

The Leaders

The top-ranking leaders of the Atlantic Coast counterrevolutionary movement are for the most part religious pastors who, using the excuse that the revolutionaries are atheists and that there are some Cubans present working in the rural areas, intended to arouse the populace against our revolutionary government. They are: Wesley Hernan Savery Harrison; Ricardo Jackson, second in command of the FAD on the Coast, who was to be responsible for seizing the Bluff and Corn Island, and later Puerto Cabezas; Teofilo Archivald, another counterrevolutionary leader on the Coast, a clergyman responsible for recruiting people for the Bluefields uprising; Charles Mortis, a clergyman, who was a courier among the people on the Coast; Bernardino Larios and Reverend Allen. Also implicated was the Pentacostal clergyman Gellan Dance, and Jenny Hodson, separatists from the Coast; an individual with the surname Vance; Winnie Narciso, a separatist; Eduardo Panty; Joseph Smith; Elias Vega; Rosendo Hooker; Graciela Gart; Mariano Acevedo; Jake Passar; a Reverend Wilson; and others.

They Tried To Make Contact With Dimas

In his statement, Hernan said that he tried to connect the entire movement with the criminal activities being carried out in the Honduras border area by the counterrevolutionary "Dimas," but he did not succeed.

He also said that, in the event that any of the ringleaders "perished," it was already decided who would take command.

The Command Was in Conflict

Hernan also stated that, on one occasion, Oscar Larios, Bernardino's cousin and the owner of the California Dry Cleaning establishment, had to replace Bernardino because he was too slow. Oscar Larios sought asylum in the Honduran Embassy a few days ago, and when requesting asylum said that he was from the FAD Staff.

The minister of interior, Comdr Tomas Borge, said that the majority of the main ringleaders of this great plot of the counterrevolution have been jailed, but there are some who are at large; and if they return, they will also be caught like their friends. With what has been described, the FAD has been virtually exterminated, and soon more of its members will be caught.

It was announced at the press conference that yesterday Kennedy Hodgson, one of the top-ranking heads of the movement on the Coast, was captured, and will be introduced to newsmen at the proper time. The same thing was said of Hugo Morales, who was manager of Didatsa, and who exposed the activities of the commercial attache of the Spanish Embassy in Nicaragua, Vicente Vasquez, who travels in a car with license plates CD-114.

Hernan said that he had not been mistreated in jail, and that he felt rather as if he were at a university. He also claimed that he now realizes that they were completely mistaken.

2909
CSO: 3010

HUMAN RIGHTS RECORD IN COUNTRY PRAISED

CIDH Visit Welcomed

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 12 Oct 80 p 3

[Editorial: "The CIDH Visit"]

[Text] Only a revolution which places the individual in the center of history and makes respect for all rights a principal standard for its government administration can afford to invite the CIDH [Inter-American Human Rights Commission] to make an extensive tour of its country and observe the status of human rights. Not even the detractors of Sandinism can repudiate this undeniable fact; because there is no precedent of governments on the continent inviting the CIDH to visit their nations as Nicaragua has done. On the contrary, what exists are outrageous instances such as that of the Salvadoran gorillas who, disguised as "democrats," are murdering those who are struggling for human rights in their country, and refuse to allow the CIDH to visit. The same thing holds true for Guatemala.

But in Nicaragua things are different. Before leaving, the members of the CIDH acknowledged the extensive facilities offered them by the government to tour the country and interview whomever they wished.

We shall have to find out about their report later, and we have no doubt that it will contain valuable recommendations to our government for improving the overall system of human rights protection. And would that, as its chairman, Mr Farer, stated, it would arrange financial aid for health, housing and educational programs which are areas wherein we need support to bring about the assertion of the rights of the vast majorities who have been trampled upon in the past by the exploiting minorities.

Those same minorities reflected in reactionary parties and the news media in their service played a pathetic, ridiculous role while the CIDH was in Nicaragua. They all set out to create a political atmosphere which would give the impression that human rights were not respected in Nicaragua.

There was even an instance of radio media manipulating human feelings, engaged in broadcasting the weeping of mothers and children of the Somozan prisoners, making them believe that they would thereby solve the problem of their parents. The Social Christians, desperate because of their lack of political clientele, were not ashamed to set themselves up as proponents of the Somozan cause. LA PRENSA, with its hypocritical theatricality, did the impossible to convince people that censorship had been imposed. And there was even a businessman who launched an attack against the CDS [Sandinist Defense Committees] in the State Council, claiming that they were violating human rights.

After all, what can be expected from the class which has lost its privileges forever?

Its very opportunism served to show the members of the CIDH how these sectors mobilize, act and express their views freely in the country. That is what the revolution is like.

Accomplishments Since Revolution

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 14 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] "How much freedom do the millions of unemployed in the capitalist countries have? In these countries, one cannot talk about a real exercise of the right to work and to social security. Particularly in the present crisis, it is impossible to have these basic human rights fulfilled. For 10 years, 25 million people have been out of work, and another 25 million have been doomed to work reduced periods of time." From the newspaper LE FIGARO.

The visit by the International Human Rights Commission to our country has become the main topic on the pages of the various newspapers. For some, it was an opportunity to "become intransigent proponents of human rights;" for others, it was an occasion for resuming old, hackneyed discussions of how and to what extent the legal standards are upheld in our country.

For the revolutionary government and its vanguard, it was an opportunity to confirm to the world that we are experiencing a revolutionary process of deepseated changes, and that there is no attempt to conceal the reality, but rather to show to the international agencies these changes, whom they are benefiting and the limitations which we inherited from a dependent capitalist socioeconomic system.

The issue of human rights has been traditionally manipulated by political groups and trade union associations opposed to the revolutionary process. We have observed the manipulation every day, based on situations which are actually insignificant but which assume unbelievable dimensions in the news media. It is not rare for an isolated incident to become generalized, for an individual instance to become a "theory," for an administrative mistake on the part of a police comrade to cause a raising of banners and for respect for human rights to be demanded by the "owners of businesses."

Keeping up the discussion of whether or not human rights are being respected in the exclusive area of legal affairs is succumbing to the provocation of the "champions of bourgeois democracy." It means accepting an academic discussion which could result in countless articles for or against, but which would in no way change the present conditions of the Nicaraguan workers.

Human rights are not a result of the desires of a political group, a chamber of commerce or the whim of an international agency; in our country, their promotion and defense are the result of a revolution.

Human rights in Nicaragua are called: organization, popular participation, social wages, supplies, housing and employment.

We claim that they are called organization, because in the past the workers were denied the right to organize into unions to protect their interests. The history of the rural and urban workers is filled with political action by the union organization and repression as a response. Today, the capacity for organization and collective bargaining obtained by the working class is unprecedented in history.

One of the most significant rights which has just recently been exercised in our country is called: participation in administrative management.

This is a right which has never appeared in the articles of the "bourgeois humanists," a right omitted from their editorials, and never mentioned in their speeches. The historical significance of the workers' participation can by no means by evaluated. This may be the reason that it is not mentioned, and that an attempt is made to conceal it. In this way, an attempt has been made to change this conquest, in the name of the rights of the Somozan prisoners, who also have the right to be tried by the people's courts.

The short list of historic claims of our people which we cited previously is destined to grow and develop, in accordance with the revolutionary process. But it should be noted that those who are talking about human rights now are no guarantee to insure the continuity of what has been achieved, nor to protect the interests of the workers.

The responsibility for insuring and developing the demands that have been met can only be safe in the hands of the organized workers, and in the leadership of their revolutionary vanguard. The main force for change lies in the rural and urban workers. But who is protecting the millions of workers in the capitalist countries from the brutality of the imperialist power apparatus and from bourgeois injustice?

2909
CSO: 3010

SPECIAL TRIBUNALS COORDINATOR WELCOMES CIDH VISIT

Managua EL NUEVO DIARIO in Spanish 13 Oct 80 p 9

[Text] "While the pseudodemocratic governments of Bolivia, Guatemala, El Salvador and others have placed obstacles against the visit of the Inter-American Human Rights Commission (CIDH), Nicaragua has opened its doors wide and has invited those jurists to examine the status in which they find human rights in our country, with the view that such a visit will be of sound benefit to the consolidation of the Nicaraguan revolutionary process."

According to the general coordinator of the Special Tribunals of Justice, Comrade Mario Mejia Alvarez, the visit made by the CIDH to Nicaragua is an event which transcends our borders and becomes part of the history of Latin America.

Comrade Mejia remarked: "The CIDH's visit is another convincing reality attesting to the great transformation which has been under way in Nicaragua since 19 July of last year. Previously, during the time of the dictatorship, only obstacles were offered to this kind of commission, and the very rejection of those missions was another violation of human rights.

"Now, it is quite the contrary. We have nothing to hide, and the delegations from international organizations such as CIDH, Amnesty International and the International Commission of Jurists have found among us the greatest receptiveness. We have offered them the best conditions for doing their work in all its breadth.

"And there is something else: the CIDH's visit has materialized at the behest of our country's revolutionary authorities, who are thereby giving a real, objective response to those who, chiming in with the enemies of our revolution, are going around saying that there are violations of human rights here.

"In the international realm, the foes of our process have already met with a flat refutation of their claims in the very refusal to admit CIDH expressed by governments which, to those slanderers, are examples of democracy, such as El Salvador and Guatemala, to name only countries within the Central American area. The members of the Commission are more than well aware of the great restrictions placed on their entry in the past and present, into Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay, Haiti and Bolivia."

Necessary Comparison

Comrade Mejia then went on to say that the members of CIDH would gain very valuable experience from their visit to revolutionary Nicaragua, because they could compare the present state of human rights with the experience which the same Commission had when it visited our country during the period of the dictatorship.

The subject of our interview stressed: "Although it is true that, on that occasion, the Commission's report only mentioned the rights inherent in the physical person, it is also true that the members of the Commission, in their comments, cited the reality that our country was experiencing in the areas of education, health, nutrition, housing, etc. Now, 15 months after the victory of the revolution, they will take with them the total picture of a complete change, which was made possible only by the Sandinist Popular Revolution.

"Because, as many authors of treatises have remarked, human rights should not be confined merely to the rights of the physical person, but should also include the basic rights which must meet the needs of the human being as a group, as a society and as a people."

From the Trenches to Power

"I repeat, we have nothing to hide and the Commission knows (as Comdr Tomas Borge said) that our revolution went from the trenches to power. This means that we are involved in a process which has been forging ahead with great internal limitations and many external obstacles. This means that we are by no means seeking to be perfect, because there are issues which cannot be resolved overnight. Therefore, we leave it to the conscience of any observer to form whatever judgment he wants of our country, making the observation, concerning it, that it was not until after 19 July 1979 that this republic began to be constructed in all aspects."

Comrade Mejia noted: "This reconstruction has been both material and moral. In the latter respect, we want to undertake the reconstruction of the judicial branch which will be no means be a continuation of the administration of justice that was practiced under Somoza.

"That was a judicial aberration. Justice was administered on a familial level, and from the appointment of a judge to the selection of the defenders in a court, it had to be controlled down to the last detail by the family which exercised power in this country.

"Now, the revolution has granted total autonomy to the judicial branch. Our government has complete confidence in its courts, and there is not happening what was a daily occurrence during the tyranny, when the tyrant, mistrusting even his own bosom friends, forced the military courts to try civilians, ao as to guarantee the results further still."

The Special Courts

Mario Mejia declared: "Our revolution is making the people participants in the administration of justice. A specific example is our Special Tribunals, which guarantee defendants a legal trial, the right to defense, a review of their case, freedom to express themselves before the Tribunals and the respect that is due them under the prison system."

With regard to the plan for the justice system that has taken shape in the Special Tribunals, Comrade Mario Mejia cited a recent headline which appeared in the newspaper LA PRENSA in which, without any logical relationship to the text of the article, it was stated that 7,750 Somozan defendants would be tried in those courts this year.

"The headline in that newspaper is malicious. First of all, because we here in the Tribunals cannot specify a concrete number of defendants that we shall have to try. We did not quote that figure officially or unofficially, for one simple reason: Not all the prisoners who are under the protection of our prison system will be dealt with in these courts. Many of them have been released without having come to us; and, as the investigation procedures improve, it is likely that many others will have to be released without even making their statement based on inquiry in the Special Tribunals.

"Furthermore, we have never said that the special judicial plan which went into effect at the end of December 1979 would be terminated this year. What we have stated is that the plan will be completed within a period of less than 2 years.

"And it should be noted here that the development of the justice system is directly related to unforeseen matters which are related to the development of the revolutionary process itself. So, we have the experience that the counterrevolutionary action, seriously distracting from the activity of the revolution, has delayed the progress of the judicial plan.

"Therefore, we maintain that if the conditions under which we have been working are geared to the requirements of the plan, the defendants will be tried within the period that we have mentioned."

Comrade Mejia Alvarez concluded by giving assurance that, "In any event, the special judicial procedure, by virtue of the experience that we have gained during these past months of work, has had all its gears oiled, and is progressing apace with the deadlines which we set for ouselves at the outset."

2909
CSO: 3010

GROWING INTERVENTIONIST DESIRE AMONG U.S POPULACE NOTED

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 15 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] Managua--The public opinion polls in the United States indicate that, at the present time, a greater number of Americans consider themselves "internationalist" according to a news bulletin from Washington issued by the United States International Communications Agency (formerly USIA).

According to the bulletin, the percentage of Americans describing themselves as "isolationist" has declined considerably since the mid-1970's.

According to the agency, the "internationalism" that has increased noticeably in the United States is expressed by the Americans' desire to have their country play "a more important and powerful guiding function," since the majority of gringos believe that "the United States' influence in the world has waned."

In an attempt to distort the term "internationalist," which is a revolutionary political position expressing the class solidarity of workers regardless of their nationality, the agency uses this adjective to conceal the interventionist positions voiced by the Americans who were polled.

The true essence of the "internationalism" reported by the agency becomes evident when it states that the poll revealed that public support "on behalf of United States international participation in both military and nonmilitary areas" has increased, as has the view that the United States Government "should take the opinions of its main allies into consideration."

What is clear from the poll is that there is an increased desire for interimperialist or intercapitalist cooperation to oppress peoples which has become instilled in the Americans owing to the bombardment of warmongering propaganda claiming that the United States has a right to intervene in any part of the world "to defend its vital rights."

2909
CSO: 3010

POLICE ASK CITIZENS TO TURN IN FIREARMS

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 11 Oct 80 p 5

[Text] Yesterday, Comrade Alejandro Diaz, from the Sandinist Police Office of Licenses and Permits, issued a summons for the surrender of firearms.

The appeal is directed toward the citizens who have firearms in their possession which should be turned over to that office of the Sandinist Police without fear.

The firearms which should not be in anyone's possession are: M-16, Galil and Garand rifles, Madsen submachineguns, M-52's and FAL submachineguns.

Comrade Diaz explained that this is being done inasmuch as the period of time given to turn in weapons will soon expire, and if they are not surrendered and are being held by any citizen without permission to have them, there will be heavy penalties according to law.

He also said that the Police Office of Licenses and Permits is granting permits for short-barreled weapons such as pistols and revolvers of any type, and long-barreled weapons such as shotguns and carbines used for guarding or hunting.

He also explained that no one with firearms should be afraid to turn them in, because they will not be investigated, since it is realized that our people recovered many weapons. However, it is a revolutionary obligation to surrender them.

The measure of the Sandinist Police is in keeping with the regulations issued by our Government of National Reconstruction Junta.

2909
CSO: 3010

DENATIONALIZATION OF COMMUNICATIONS MEDIA URGED

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 10 Oct 80 p 2

[Commentary by Pedro Chamorro: "The Forgotten Decree"]

[Text] The Government Junta, which is so active in issuing decrees, has perhaps forgotten one of vital importance to the development of genuine democracy in Nicaragua.

It involves the "nationalization of the news media," which formerly belonged to the Somozans and which now "belong" to the Sandinist Front, in what is called the "Sandinist Communication System."

These media, including two television channels, a newspaper and several radio stations ("The Voice of Nicaragua" included) have not been nationalized, nor have we seen them purchased from the state; but rather in the exclusive service of a political party which has a particular ideology not shared by all the Nicaraguan people. As a result, since our revolution is preeminently pluralistic in its political, social and ideological composition, it is only natural that those media cease to be an illegal monopoly of that party which, as engineer Robelo aptly put it, "is not the owner of the revolution."

It should be recalled that, after a request for the establishment of a new television channel made by the well-known radio entrepreneur, Fabio Gadea Mantilla, there was a public pledge that SS-TV would be nationalized by virtue of a decree which seems to have been forgotten now.

It is time for these partisan media to cease being such, and to become part of a National Communication System that is not in the exclusive service of a particular ideological movement and that renderes its services to the entire political spectrum, in a test of pluralism which has yet to be discerned in this irreversible process.

In the past, television was saturated with commercial advertising; now it is a medium for political indoctrination with which the televiewers are being swamped.

Radio has only changed its descriptive adjectives, but is still continuing with a rather inadvisable and unprofessional vocabulary.

Objectivity has been lost entirely, because every news item, at every minute, has a particular political objective, which serves as a guide in its preparation.

And for the media that are not alined with this system of news manipulation, there are Decrees 511 and 512, and the insults, daily threats and prefabricated programs of questions and answers, and an entire system which should be serving a loftier purpose than that of attacking its fellow journalists.

2909
CSO: 3010

CITIZENS SIGN PETITION AGAINST SCHOOL-TO-WORK PROGRAM

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 23 Sep 80 pp 1, 12

[Text] The following communication addressed to the minister of education, Dr Carlos Tunnermann, protesting against the School-to-Work Program, a copy of which has been sent to LA PRENSA, is supported by 18 pages filled with the signatures of 500 residents of Jinotega:

Jinotega, 12 September 1980.

Minister of Public Education
Dr Carlos Tunnerman
Managua, D.N.

Dear Mr Minister:

The undersigned heads of families of the department of Jinotega, justly concerned by your statements relating to the School-to-Work Project that were published recently in the media, and without knowing the full extent of the said Project, feel compelled as Christian, revolutionary and nationalist heads of families to express to your ministry our opinion relative to the draft project emanating from your authority.

We do not doubt that, in your capacity as a former teacher and now minister, you and your advisers have thoroughly studied the project in question. We permit ourselves to recall that according to our Statute of the Rights and Guaranties of Nicaraguans, whose Article 7 says: "No one will be subjected to bondage or constrained to perform forced or obligatory labor," and to Articles 35 and 36 of the same Statute, there exists a flagrant violation of these articles in the intent issued under your authority to obligate our minor-aged children to perform coffee-picking services in the state-owned plantations. This project is a a twofold violation because, besides aiming to pressure or otherwise obligate the students, they will receive no pay for their activities, which converts them into objects of exploitation. While our revolution aims, with its regulations, to end exploitation of human beings by human beings, you, with your decree, aim at exploitation of human beings by the state.

We Nicaraguans all know as well that Nicaragua subscribed to and ratified its support of, through the First Proclamation of the National Reconstruction Government dated 18 June 1979 and in its Article 1-3 which guarantees, full effectiveness of the Human Rights stipulated in the Universal Declaration of the United Nations Organization, and of the Human Rights and Responsibilities of the Organization of American States.

According to the article of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the free Republic of Nicaragua being a signatory to that declaration, any Nicaraguan can see that such a project flatly contradicts the Charter of the United Nations in respect to the cited articles.

Furthermore and coincidentally, the separation of the children from their families takes place together with the traditional spiritual feasts of the Immaculate Conception, Christmas and New Year. What is the intent of this? To uproot the traditional Christian and Catholic customs these feasts represent in the spiritual communion of our households? You must surely understand perfectly well that your decree affects a large majority of the youths who have just returned from the glorious National Literacy Crusade, which is as of now the most wonderful fruit of our revolution. These youths will not get the rest they need, if they are taken away from our households to devote themselves efficiently and responsibly to the tasks the next school year will require of them.

As heads of families, we have a right to know the future plans of this program for the coming school term, inasmuch as it is being said currently that this program is being based on the philosophy that other countries are trying to impose on us. We believe we Nicaraguans are responsible for giving our children a moral, intellectual and physical upbringing that is responsive to the needs of our own country.

To conclude, Mr Minister, we remind you that as a citizen and a minister of state, you are obligated to respect the agreements undertaken by Nicaragua. We therefore trust you will spare us having to disobey the text of your unfortunate decree by revoking it. This would avoid our exercising our rights as citizens in accordance with Article 50 of the New Statute of the Rights and Guaranties of Nicaraguans.

9399
CSO: 3010

SCHOOL-TO-WORK PROGRAM DEFENDED AGAINST OPPONENTS

Jinotegan Mothers Set Example

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 24 Sep 80 pp 1, 5

[Text] Jinotega--The Jinotega Association of Mothers of Heroes and Martyrs issued a statement strongly supporting the School-to-Work Program, under which our youth will volunteer to work as coffee pickers.

The mothers of our martyrs oppose energetically the attitude of the women of the MDN [Nicaraguan Democratic Movement], who have stirred up a commotion and are saying that the program is an attempt against the "unity of the family and Christmas."

"It is necessary that we keep clearly in mind that the efforts that have been put into gradually creating the bases of a new society have also gradually changed our sense of awareness, which is already being reflected in the momentum being displayed by our children, and it would be egoistic for us to think of impeding the progress of their ideas toward the popular well-being," the statement says.

"We are certain," it continues, "that if our own sons were alive they would be today, as they were yesterday, in the vanguard of the work for national reconstruction. We know there are youths prepared to follow their example--an example we the parents have accepted from our sons, inasmuch as they are capable of giving it, and have proven themselves to be so."

Referring to the MDN women's response to the young Revolution's call to solidify the economy through the School-to-Work Program, it affirms that "these women who are frightened today by the possibility that their children may go pick coffee, who embarrass us as Nicaraguan women--these women should assume their true role as mothers, bringing up true patriotic children, true human beings, true children of the people. They should take their places at the head of the picking brigades, with their whole families, and should thus show that their concern for the 'unity of the family' and of the people is real and that it goes beyond a paper concern into practice, creating new relations, new common interests that guarantee true cohesion among all members."

The example that the martyr sons bequeathed to their mothers and that their mothers have wisely endowed with greater value shines forth in the following paragraph: "Our attitude as heads of families must be more in keeping with the ideas and actions of our sons. They set the example yesterday in combat; let us set the example today in work and be the vanguard of the coffee harvest. Let us march at the head of it and show our sons that we have gotten their message. Those of us who can physically join it: off to the harvest!" [in boldface]

Old Regime Threatened Family

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 24 Sep 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Let Us Rebuild the Nicaraguan Family Destroyed by Capitalism"]

[Text] The Sandinist Popular Revolution has instituted profound changes in the national educational system, adapting it to the most urgent of the country's needs.

To initiate this process it had necessarily to dismantle the whole of the flawed, alienating structure that responded basically to the interests of certain of the country's social sectors and to imperialism, to which these sectors continue subordinating their interests.

The old educational system--elementary school, high school and university--had been corrupted by Somozaism to the extent to which the military dictatorship conceived of education as being of elitist nature and had become systematically permeated with values foreign to our historic specificity. The school system had been converted into the main focal point of alienation. Study programs had been mutilated and the teaching of history had become a tergiversation.

The most important step at the level of the masses has been the National Literacy Crusade and its positive results for the Nicaraguans. The other other all-important step in the educational domain has been to link theory to practice, to overcome once and for all that permanent divorce that was maintained by Somozaism between education and practical living. A change of that nature could only have been brought about by our triumphant Revolution.

A new phase in the educational system of our country--the new school system has thus been happily labeled by our teaching profession--has been opened under a new concept of education, at the service of Nicaraguan society as a whole. It seeks to give students who want it--and most of them do--practical work to perform that is closely related to their overall training. It is the start toward overcoming the contradictions that exist between manual and intellectual work, between city life and rural life.

We have plunged fully into the fundamental process of overcoming the alienations that the old bourgeois school system had imposed. A new phenomenon that had to emerge as a corollary of the Sandinist Popular Revolution. We have transformed into a reality the longstanding aspiration of the most world-renowned teachers.

It is not merely a matter of making a practical thing of education but of putting our knowledge into practice and to the test from the start of our student days, which is when we begin to groom ourselves as the future leaders of our country, an outlook that also could only have been made possible in our country as a result of a Revolution that positions man at the center of history.

As was to be expected, this new revolutionary initiative has been being steadily and systematically torpedoed by the daily LA PRENSA, twisting the truth regarding its content and perverting its aims. Dissemblingly on some occasions and openly on others, the ideologues of the reaction have argued that the clear intent of the new revolutionary state is "to break up the family," "to intervene in the parental authority of parents over their children," that this is "a manifestation of totalitarianism," etc.

However, none of this is true:

The breakup of the Nicaraguan family was produced by the old social system, in that the manner in which the outputs of production were appropriated compelled the heads of families forever to send their children to work to make day-to-day household ends meet. The Nicaraguan children who sell LA PRENSA, for example, do not do so because they are in agreement with its content, but because they need the money they earn to take home to be able to subsist.

The heads of families who abandon their homes at harvest time, leaving their families alone in the various regions of the country, do it compelled by the manner in which the productive apparatus is structured, by its seasonal nature. Harvest time is the time of greatest migration in Nicaragua. Poor families remain disarticulated. The father has to migrate from Zelaya to Chinandega, from Chontales to Leon, to earn his family's daily bread.

Family unity in the antiquated conception of LA PRENSA is measured by the closeness of the child to the parent's side. A paltry conception worthy of those who serve the interests of certain social sectors that they seek to win over as allies by appealing to the most primitive of instincts. Manipulation by someone who has always served as a psychologist to the bourgeoisie? Perhaps.

Family unity will be truly possible only when the poor of this country--that is, the vast majority of Nicaraguans--will have assured to them their daily meal, an objective for which our Sandinist Revolution is striving when it seeks permanent solutions to the problems of food, housing, unemployment, health, education, etc.

The FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] holds as a sacred party precept that the most revolutionary sons are those who respect their parents, the most self-sacrificing, etc. But with malicious intent, LA PRENSA, in its obscure reactionary interests, has been raising a cloud of dust, wilfully confusing concepts and ends.

When in this country the problem of production and productivity will have been completely solved--two basic premises of the revolutionary government's current economic policy--then and only then will unity of the family in Nicaragua be fully guaranteed. The FSLN's insistence on finding an answer to this substantive problem in the shortest possible time is tightly linked to the Sandinist policy of consolidating the Nicaraguan family, which is now disintegrated by the seasonal character of production, by the high concentration of land, by low salaries, and, in sum, by the nefarious heritage of the old regime that willingly or unwillingly represented the interests of certain social sectors which having been removed from power are continuing to accrue wealth and to exploit the Nicaraguan family.

The rest is but a new ideological offensive by LA PRENSA, in its daily press policy of denigrating the FSLN, although it hides this policy behind sybilline language, or shamefully shields it behind religious invocations, reducing Christian doctrine to the level of its game of class interests.

Fernando Cardenal, Sandinist Youth

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 24 Sep 80 p 12

[Text] "The parents who have criticized the School-to-Work Program are surprised that children and youths should work. They are not aware that in Nicaragua children have always worked. Not their children perhaps, because they belong to a privileged group; but the children of the masses leave their studies every year to work at the harvests."

This statement was made by Fernando Cardenal when he was interviewed by BARRICADA regarding the criticisms one sector or family heads has leveled at the School-to-Work Program. He commented as follows in this respect:

"I do not know if they have ever seen how, in the cotton fields and coffee plantations, entire families with their children work at picking. In Nicaragua, children and youths of the popular masses have always interrupted their studies to go to work.

"The Ministry of Education's project has genuine value from the educational standpoint. I believe that more so than through a classroom lesson--as the National Literacy Crusade proved--the new Nicaraguan will be educated through these day-to-day living contacts with the sectors that have been the most exploited, this contact with reality; the profound experiences of the Crusade will become a principal element in the new Nicaraguan's education.

"We must bear in mind," said the companero, "that in the development of character, in the acquisition of an individuals noblest values, working not only for monetary gain but for the cause of a people is an enriching element in a youth's personality."

Speaking of Christianism

Cardenal added that "more can hardly be done for the Christian upbringing, for the Christian attitudes, of youths than to accustom them to feel for others, than to lead them into attitudes of support for the noble causes of the poor, into identifying with the poor."

"I believe," he said, "that from the Christian viewpoint, learning that our idol, our aim, must never be money nor personal gain, but rather working to help others--and in that sense, this project--is of the utmost importance to a true Christian and humanitarian education.

"Here, they are trying to instrumentalize the Christian faith; Christianism is being used as a weapon by the self-serving bourgeois sectors, as a weapon against the Revolution, against those changes that adversely affect their privileges. The true Christian should welcome any project that benefits others, especially if the others are the poorer.

"To me it is significant that persons who in the past have never been interested in Christianism are those who now speak of Christianism as the answer to everything. Clearly, they are using it as a weapon. Their Christianism is not borne in their hearts but rather in their pockets, in their desire to protect their economic interests. All of us have a right to our political beliefs; but we should defend them politically. It is dishonest to use the Christian faith as a sword against the Revolution and worse yet in defense of class privileges," said the companero.

Program Does Not Affect Christmas

Companero Octavio Rivas, assistant to the minister of education, for his part, said that Christmas will not be affected by the School-to-Work Program, inasmuch as it ends on 20 December. He also clarified that participation in the program will be entirely voluntary.

Rivas also pointed out that it is not the Ministry of Education that will stipulate the work to be performed, but rather the students, professors and heads of families who will propose their own vacation jobs.

Sandinist Youth Backs Program

Companera Patricia Elvir, of Sandinist Youth, indicated that her organization considers it fundamental that the education of all youths include participation in productive work; the more so since this is a Revolution that among other things must resolve the problems of an economic revitalization.

She emphasized that there are sectors that do not understand that there is a Revolution here with profound changes, and that one of these changes is that youths should participate in productive work.

The companera concluded saying, "This School-to-Work Program is going to vastly strengthen the quality of our youth and bring highly important social benefits, above all insofar as concerns the revitalization."

9399
CSO: 3010

LAWS PASSED TO REGULATE HOUSING, PROTECT MILITIAS

Housing for All

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 2 Oct 80 p 14

[Text] The spirit of the Housing Regulation Law passed yesterday by the State Council is that never again can anyone be evicted from his home, much less be exploited by the dealers in housing needs.

The law is primarily intended to protect the majorities, those who in their desperate search for a roof under which they could live, in the past fell victim to the exploiters who sold "lots" and houses in "parcels" at criminal prices.

In this respect, we would do well to recall that the exploitation involving the so-called "clandestine" parcels in the past is a Somozan practice which must be eradicated.

Sectors Which Do Not Discern Effectiveness in the Law

Not because of naivete, much less ignorance, arguments were raised within the Council aimed at hampering the revolutionary state's effort to insure housing.

Since the law will regulate all housing purchased through adjudication, state financing or that involved in the illegal parceling, but passing laws with a single policy that will stabilize the household of every Nicaraguan worker, the representative from COSEP [Higher Council of Private Enterprise], Jaime Bengoechea, made a motion that the state should legislate on the basis of the three types of housing because, he claimed, "there is housing built with private effort, that financed by the state and that financed in a mixed fashion (state-private)."

In this regard, it befits us to note that Article 5 of the law stipulates that "housing will be for the exclusive, personal use of the individual to which it is awarded and his family; it may not be subjected to leasing, use, habitation or in any other manner."

But Article 8 of the law provides that "the owner or purchaser of the real estate may, through a request giving grounds, make a trasaction with the state." This means that, when there are individuals who must leave their dwellings for reasons of force majeure (change of job from one region to another, diplomatic travel, etc.) they are quite free to assign their dwellings to another person, through a prior arrangement with the state.

What is the purpose of this? The revolutionary state will prevent, with the Regulation Law, the repetition of dual purchase of housing on the part of a few persons, as was done in the past; because it is inconceivable that someone have two or four dwellings while there are thousands of Nicaraguans who are living under improper conditions.

Salaries for Militiamen

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 9 Oct 80 pp 1, 14

[Text] The Government of National Reconstruction will guarantee the militia members who perform tasks relating to national defense, mobilized by the Ministry of Defense, their salaries, jobs and the future of their families, in the event that they are killed in combat.

Such is the spirit of a bill passed yesterday by the State Council which, considering the various manifestations of the counterrevolution in Nicaragua and the state's inability to maintain a large-sized modern army, has opted for a voluntary reserve army comprised of the Sandinist Popular Militias.

The importance of this law was challenged (it was called petty bickering by Comrade Mercedes Mejia, councilwoman of the AMNLAE) by the delegates from the private sector, who maintained that payment for the support of the militia members would run counter to their interests. "We shall destabilize ourselves, and that would be unpatriotic," said council member Pedro Cuadra, from the Chamber of Construction.

This prompted a heated discussion which reflected the framework within which the class interests represented in the State Council move, and which ended with the Council's decision to turn the pay for the militia members over to the central government.

The first article in the law states that, when the members of the Sandinist Popular Militias are mobilized to perform military tasks by the Ministry of Defense, the days which they do not work for this reason will be paid for by the companies, which will later be reimbursed by the state with payments made directly to their payroll.

This will apply to both companies in the private sector and mixed and state-owned companies.

Article 3 also clearly stipulates that the militia members will not only retain their salaries, but also their jobs and social benefits to which they are entitled by law.

The law establishes that, if they are replaced and, upon their return, the removal of the one who replaced them proves rather complicated for reasons of production, they will be placed in another position at the same or a larger salary. The time for that reinstatement will be paid for by the company, following the same procedure.

But this was the result of several hours of discussion in the State Council. Not only were the most variegated proposals heard, but also the most diverse sentiments.

It Began With Provocation

Jorge Rojas, who read a minority opinion in the State Council, charged that if a general consensus was not reached, it was because Alvaro Jerez came to the members of the commission studying it with provocation.

Not only did he request the Ministry of Defense to reveal a large number of military secrets, but in the end he did not sign it (Omar Hallum, his alternate on the Council, explained that, even though he did not sign it, Jerez was an adherent of the bill).

Comdr Carlos Nunez intervened to state that the procedure established by the commission was a negative one, because not only had it delayed a decision on this important matter, but disturbing elements had been introduced as well.

He claimed that Alvaro Jerez attempted to destroy the bill when he made "petitions" such as the ones cited.

Carlos Salgado, from the CGT(i) [General Labor Confederation] remarked that the bill was incomplete, because it did not provide for a series of situations related to the benefits for the militiaman-worker who was risking his life in combat.

In response to that, Comrade Federico Lopez suggested the passage of the bill as it had been submitted, and that the Council's Labor and Social Security Commission later engage in devising a new bill calling for such benefits and providing for such situations. This motion was the one which eventually prevailed.

When Jorge Rojas introduced an amendment calling for the employer to be the one who directly pays for the support and financing of the militiaman-worker, the discussion began.

We Shall Fail

Reinaldo Hernandez, delegate from the Chamber of Commerce, said that the employers could not be burdened with supporting the militia members, because their business firms would fail. He said that he realized it was a patriotic duty and a civic duty to cooperate with national defense, but that if a high percentage of the employees of a business firm were mobilized that would necessitate replacing that personnel, and the expense would be doubled.

He added that, if that is done, the businss firms will fail, noting: "They run the risk of going out of existence because of the additional costs."

It was Hernandez who suggested that a state fund be set up to pay the militia members because national defense "should be charged to everyone."

It Is Fair for Them To Contribute Something

Estanislao Montiel, delegate from ATC [Agricultural Workers Association], said that, just as the militia members risk their lives for national defense, it was fair for "the gentlemen from private enterprise to contribute something to that."

Jaime Bengoechea described the financing of the Popular Militias as a special war tax.

Bengoechea was another of those who said that their business firms would fail if the bourgeoisie financed national defense. Bengoechea remarked: "It is impossible to pay the militia platoons and the new employees; we shall simply go bankrupt."

Federico Lopez, delegate from FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front], declared that the delegates from private enterprise were wrong in thinking that the militia members were hired soldiers, and that, in any event, the business owners would be contributing aid and not a salary, because they were not professional soldiers.

Pedro Cuadra, from the Chamber of Construction, described the entire allegation concerning the militias made by the delegates from the popular organizations as an illusion, and called for the creation of a tax for the militias.

Comdr Hugo Torres expressed surprise at everything that was happening, and said that it was "spiritual poverty" on the part of those whose petty interests interfered with the payment of the militias.

Mercedes Mejia, criticizing the position of the delegates to the State Council,angrily said: "This petty bickering proves the truth about those who have always claimed to be a hope for Nicaragua."

2909
CSO: 3010

MIPLAN WORRIED OVER LABOR INEFFICIENCY, ECONOMIC FAILURES

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 15 Oct 80 p 10

[Text] We have received the following news dispatches from MIPLAN [Ministry of Planning]:

Although, from the production standpoint, the first half year of Plan 80 had successful results, there was a decline from the standpoint of the "quality" of the work done, in other words, in the workers' "productivity." This drop in productivity occurred mainly in the areas wherein the wages were established on the basis of the number of hours worked, rather than the work accomplished.

This situation is due to several reasons. On the one hand, the fact that we have not yet achieved efficient work organization, and, on the other hand, it is almost a law of history that productivity drops during the period of transition from an old society to a new one. Under the Somoza regime, the worker was compelled to work owing to the exploitation to which he was subjected, which had the support of a repressive regime.

At present, the worker no longer feels coerced by a possible repression, and hence his pressure to work has been reduced. What is proposed now is to replace those negative stimuli with positive stimuli and new values, which will prompt the worker to work actively and diligently, knowing that he is no longer doing so only to earn a wage, but also to build a better fatherland for everyone. This is part of the new collective consciousness that we patriotic Nicaraguans must acquire, as part of our integration with the revolutionaryprocess.

The productivity was also affected by problems related to the supply of raw materials and spare parts for machinery.

There is still an unjust distribution of income in the country. There are workers earning very high wages in comparison with others who earn extremely low wages.

To give an idea of the seriousness of this situation, we can note that nearly 75 percent of the workers insured by the INSS [National Institute of Social Security] earn wages under 2,000 cordobas, while another 60 percent earn less than 1,500 cordobas per month.

However, the nation's economic situation does not allow for the enactment of an indiscriminate policy of wage hikes, as the revolutionary government would like.

If this were done, there would be an inflation which would affect the workers' income in particular. It would be creating the illusion of a raise which would not bring any real benefit with the higher cost of living that would occur.

The social wage (that is, the benefits in the areas of health, education, housing, etc.) is being given a great impetus by the Sandinist revolution. In this regard, we can cite the literacy campaign, the Ministry of Health's preventive medicine drives, the oral rehydration units, the various laws on tenancy, the ongoing process of building new hospitals, the assistance programs of the Ministry of Social Welfare, the concern for and measures enacted to improve working conditions in factories and on farms, etc.

In the Investment Sector

Problems have cropped up in the use of external funds that have been obtained (loans from international organizations), because we have lacked sufficient ability to submit the documents which those organizations require for providing the funds. This has caused the state, while the studies, etc. were being made, to supply the funds which should have been received from abroad. We are spending our hard currency on financing that should have been done with foreign funds.

This will cause the goals in the investment sector not to be met, although the situation (in this sector) has improved during the past few months, and a recovery is already occurring which, however, will not be sufficient to attain the goals.

In the Financial Sector

In order to bring about a rapid reactivation of production, an expansion occurred in credit which was not controlled in a rational manner. Part of that financing was diverted to nonproductive uses, and another part was allocated for imports of unnecessary products. To cite an example: 10 million cordobas were spent on chewing gum imports.

This problem is now being dealt with through measures aimed at curbing imports of nonbasic consumer products, and through stricter control of the orientation and destination of loans.

The increase in imports of basic grains and consumer goods from Central America caused a deficit in our trade balance. The imports from the area were disproportionate to our exports.

The growth of the state, as part of the reorganization of the country's public administration, was greater than anticipated. This caused an increase in state spending (current charges), which affected the greater utilization of the tax revenue collected.

However, it must be said that the state's revenue was larger than in the past. With the measures for freezing wages and vacancies in the government, it is expected that this situation will improve, allowing what is collected in the form of taxes to be used to finance internal investments in productive areas.

Directorate of Press and Propaganda, Ministry of Planning.
2909
CSO: 3010

POLITICAL MANIPULATION OF RELIGION CRITICIZED

FSLN Communique Countered

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 9 Oct 80 p 2

[Editorial: "The FSLN Communique on Religion"]

[Text] The National Directorate of the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN) has issued an Official Communique in which it defines in clear and precise terms its position as a political movement regarding the Christian faith of the majority of Nicaraguans.

BARRICADA has lent a polemic tone to the communique, giving it an eight-column headline: Faith Is Manipulated To Create Political Reaction. We do not understand the distrustful motives for this headline, but we would like to state the following: LA PRENSA's efforts in terms of the Christian religion have been aimed precisely at opposing such manipulation, under whatever banner or label. Faith should not be subjected to the service of political power, nor should it be used as a banner of opposition.

The communique is clear in this respect, and confirms this position.

Christian faith, which raised the consciousness of our people, was a basic factor in our liberation process. Moreover, the Church (as a hierarchy and as the people of God) has witnessed this process and has expressed its support at the most important and decisive moments (it is sufficient to note the Pastoral Letter and the support for the literacy campaign).

At no time has "faith been manipulated to create a political reaction;" quite the contrary: there has been an admirable commitment to participating in any situation that required Christian support. What gave rise to the suspicions and misunderstandings reflected in the BARRICADA headline is the firmness of the faith that still remains among the simple people who have not allowed politics and faith to become confused, or let their Christian principles be replaced by a different ideology.

Parallel with this profound popular conviction, what we at LA PRENSA have tried to affirm is the integral revolutionary nature of Christianity--which covers a much broader world, both natural and supernatural, than any other ideology created by the human mind--not to deny Christianity's contribution to the construction of the new Nicaragua, but just the opposite: to define it and free it from the misconceptions that belittle its immense contribution to man and his liberation.

As for the rest, we welcome clear ideas!

LA PRENSA Accused

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 9 Oct 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Reactionary Forces Disarmed"]

[Text] If we can give LA PRENSA credit for anything, it is for having jumped to a conclusion when we stated that in our country there are sectors that manipulate faith to cause a political reaction against the FSLN. Its conclusion, without our having referred to that publication at any moment, is evidence that a partial confession is proof enough.

However, it does not admit that at any time it has written about religious topics with a view to manipulating our people. But someone who practices manipulation systematically every day could not leave religion to one side and refrain from leading people to believe that the FSLN is threatening the religious faith of our people.

Now that our vanguard has put into words what it has been putting into practice throughout its historic struggle, we see that the FSLN has respect for religious faith not just because of a simple political alliance, but because of the distinguished and outstanding participation by Christians in the liberation process, and now in reconstruction.

Those who have tried to convert religion into the linchpin of their campaign to discredit the FSLN, knowing of its respect for the traditional faith of our people, maliciously argue that if it behaves that way today, it will not do so tomorrow. This has always been the attitude of the LA PRENSA ideologues. Given that they can find no arguments in the present for attacking our revolution, they assure us, like the new oracles, that the future will be different.

But we would like to stress that the manipulation of religion by LA PRENSA has been constant, systematic and malicious.

It has been constant, because every day there are diatribes against our leaders, arguing that they are attacking religion. A series of statements and positions of the government have been distorted, with regard to publicity about Christmas, the School-to Work program, etc. Libelous statements have been made, and the revolutionary government has been made to look like the enemy of Christian traditions.

That is manipulation.

It has been systematic, in that religion has become the central theme of the war of attrition against the FSLN. The worst thing about its excesses is that LA PRENSA has taken on the role of judge and interpreter. One of its ideologues stated in a debate with other Christian sectors that the FSLN should leave religion alone, implying that it was attacking religion, which is not true.

That is manipulation.

The FSLN has confirmed its profound respect for the religious traditions and celebrations of Nicaraguans. The Marian celebrations and Christmas festivities, since the triumph of the revolution, have been celebrated by our leaders. What is more, the true Christian meaning of these traditions has been revived. The vice and commercialism of the past have been attacked.

What worries LA PRENSA is the growing participation of Christians in the revolution, because their attitude merely confirms that there are all kinds among God's flock.

There are Christians who follow the Gospel, just as there are those who use it to attack the revolutionary process. Unfortunately, this is what the people who write on those topics for LA PRENSA refuse to recognize.

8926
CSO: 3010

LATIN AMERICAN CLERICS' SEMINAR HAILS FSLN ON RELIGION

Letter to Arce

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 15 Oct 80 p 9

[Text] Managua, 10 October 1980

Comrade Bayardo Arce Castano
Coordinator, Political Committee of FSLN National Directorate

Comrade Arce:

It is with great interest that the priests of several Latin American countries who are attending the Third Seminar on the Brotherhood of Priests, have received and read the document put out by the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN) concerning religion.

We appreciate your kind letter of 7 October, accompanying the text of the document.

Such a document was necessary to clarify positions which for many reasons (not all of them pure) led our people to have suspicions and worries about the future of their deep religious feelings in the Revolution.

We would like to express our conviction that the demands of our service to the people will intensify our search for truth and justice.

In our faith, we understand that the process which has led the poor to free themselves from poverty and exploitation is a sign of the Kingdom of God, and that the teachings of the Gospel commit us to that liberation.

We reiterate our appreciation to you, and enclose herewith the text of the message that we, as pastors, are sending to our ecclesiastic communities.

On behalf of the Nicaraguan Clerical Association and the Conference of Priests, we remain fraternally yours,

Guillermo Quitanilla, President of the ACLEN
Edwin Maradiaga, CONFER Director, Public Relations Department

Letter to National Directorate

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 15 Oct 80 p 9

[Text] FSLN National Directorate, Secretariat
Fte. Casa Juan de Dios Munoz
Managua

Latin American priests from 17 countries, gathered at the Third Seminar on the Brotherhood of Priests to study spiritual and pastoral issues in revolutionary times, send their greetings to the FSLN National Directorate, indicating that the assembly has received the FSLN document on religion with great interest.

We believe that this document opens up new roads for the Christians of Nicaragua whose faith allows them to participate in the revolutionary process. It also invites us to strengthen our commitment, and to take fruitful action to benefit the poor people of Latin America who are struggling for freedom.

Third Seminar on the Brotherhood of Priests

Priests Give Opinions

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 9 Oct 80 pp 1, 5

[Text] The historic document of the Sandinist National Liberation Front (FSLN), which defines its position on religion, had a noteworthy impact on the 115 priests from Latin American countries who are participating in the Seminar on the Brotherhood of Priests.

Spokesmen indicated this morning to BARRICADA that although the document is not on the priests' agenda, spontaneously "the hope was raised that the FSLN statement will help clarify the positions that will strengthen the unity of the people and Church of Nicaragua, to the benefit of the increasing liberation of the poor."

Priests' Opinions

The following are the opinions of some priests who participated in the Seminar on the Brotherhood of Priests, regarding the FSLN's historic document.

Father Jesus Garcia, representing Mexico: "Christianity is not just a cult, nor primarily a cult; it is a vision of life which must intervene in the historic process of humanity. The FSLN, in this regard, has reaffirmed a universal truth."

Concerning the vanguard's assertion that a believer can also be a revolutionary, he commented: "Christianity has meant a revelation of God's plan for humanity, and that Christians of good faith have agreed to make it a reality in history. In that sense, religion can be a necessary vehicle of Christianity, but often the vehicle has dominated the message; and when that happens there is alienation."

"But to the extent that the message is put into practice at historic moments, revolutionary potential predominates."

Division of Church Is Encouraged

"What has pleased me," said Father Garcia, "is the clarification of the internal problems of the Nicaraguan Church, and the fact that internal solutions are encouraged.

"It is not that the Sandinist Front is really encouraging the division of the Nicaraguan Church, because that division exists all over the world, due to the transitional period humanity is experiencing, which is shared and felt by all Christians.

"The reason for this is the rediscovery of Christians' role at the side of the poor and oppressed, since the Vatican Council, Medellin and Puebla.

"Respect for traditions, as set forth in the Front's document, guarantees a future tradition free from mercantilist usurpation, which under the pretext of folklore slowed down the process of purifying positive values."

Great Opportunity

Father Alejandro Vasquez, of Panama, stated: "I see in this document a great opportunity for the people of Nicaragua, because it encourages a serious attitude toward what the Sandinist Front proposes to do.

"The religious feeling of the people is practically being reevaluated. Faith causes us to commit ourselves to man, in whom we see the presence of God--the marginal man, the dispossessed man--and thus we seek to commit ourselves to his liberation."

Regarding the integration of Christian revolutionaries in the process, he indicated: "When the Sandinist Front decides to integrate priests in the process, it does so because it considers them qualified to undertake the reconstruction mission that the people of Nicaragua need.

"The purging of mercantilist and political motivations from our traditions is something we Christians are fighting for in Latin America. Religion has served as a trampoline for the exploitation of the people, by means of drunken sprees, parties, etc.

"Exclusively religious acts cannot be used as a trampoline for some politician who, by making statements in favor of religion, takes advantage of a procession and tries to win over people by creating a generous image. That is an adulteration of the people's faith."

FSLN Departs From Dogma

Father Uriel Molina remarked: "With this document the Sandinist Front makes it clear that it is not linked with orthodox Marxism, which maintains that religion is the opiate of the masses.

"The FSLN affirms in this document that also through religion can Christians attain maturity, identifying themselves with the poor, the deprived, the little followers of Christ."

8926
CFO: 3010

GOVERNMENT URGED TO PRACTICE AUSTERITY, EXPLAIN SPENDING

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 8 Oct 80 p 2

[Commentary by Pedro Chamorro]

[Text] There is a great deal of talk about austerity now, because it is no secret to anyone that the economy is not working well, and that since the triumph of the revolution, public spending has grown in an astronomical way, comparable only to the growth of the state bureaucracy.

Yet the goals for our economic recovery have still not been met and almost the only strong advances have been in nonproductive areas, in things such as walls, house remodeling, mansions, rehabilitation of clubs; millions have been spent on signs and political posters, and much more on official propaganda, plazas, and other things that do not produce a greater supply of goods.

It is hard to decide what is good and what is bad because now no explanations are given to the people of the spending that is going on and its tangible results. This silence and lack of economic information is counterproductive now that we have an honest government, but one which, like anyone, can make mistakes and is subject to the taxpayers' criticism. Now it is time for the state enterprises to publish their balance sheets, just as the government ministries should do, including the ministries of the interior and defense, which absorb the greatest proportion of the government budget.

It is an obligation to inform the people how their money is being spent, whether the money is in the form of loans, donations, or tax collections.

How much is spent and how is it justified? This is information that should be at the fingertips of all the Nicaraguan people. Only then can it be said that there is full communication between the ordinary citizen and his representatives.

Many millions have been spent on new vehicles, and practically all the new vehicles coming into Nicaragua are destined for the biggest consumer: the state. And many of these new vehicles have been destroyed through the lack of responsibility or lack of skill of the drivers. It is an everyday sight to see drivers of the people's vehicles setting a bad example. They should be penalized more severely than the ordinary citizen, because what they are destroying is not their own property, and they are setting the people a bad example.

BARRICADA, which is the "official organ of the people," representing the vanguard, should constantly publish how our nation's scarce resources are being invested.

Austerity, yes, but austerity practiced together, and an austerity preached by example and not by words! Superfluous spending, no! Investments in productive elements, yes!

If a "strait jacket" is going to be used, then I think we should begin by publishing an account of our public finances so that the people can thus take part in evaluating their administrators.

Today more than ever before, now that the elections have been postponed until 1985 for the sake of national reconstruction and the unity that is needed, it is essential that we all take an interest in our nation's good economic operation, that we restrain our budgets, that we begin to consider the cost of trips, walls, political posters, and the immense partisan propaganda signs that have invaded our cities and highways. It is the obligation of the governors to render accounts to the governed, and the right of the governed to ask for these accounts.

7679
CSO: 3010

FSLN'S ATTEMPTS TO RESTRICT FREEDOM OF PRESS CRITICIZED

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 6 Oct 80 p 2

[Commentary by Pedro Chamorro]

[Text] As time goes by, the limits of the "unrestricted freedom of the press" guaranteed by the fundamental charter of the state are becoming narrower and narrower.

A point may come when we will have to go back to publishing only "Social Notes" because we can't publish anything other than the "official communiques" released by the invariably optimistic spokesmen and press officials of our state agencies. Possibly then even social news may be banned.

Then the time will come when all the papers will be the same, because the fundamental news will say exactly the same thing; the only thing different will be the name of the paper, or perhaps its format and the size of the headlines. But in essence, everything will be part of the same "Sandinist System of Communication and Political Indoctrination," to be used to line up the disaligned and to enroll the aligned as members of the masses.

Perhaps the laws designed to do this may be applied very quickly to LA PRENSA, as Commander Ortega said: nothing new, nothing original.

But to avoid this troublesome situation, I believe it would be better, once and for all, to issue a new decree explaining just what can be published, since, as we know very well, here in Nicaragua, almost anything can fall into the subjective interpretation of what is "a counterrevolutionary act or publication." Everything depends, then, on the personality, education, and even the mental attitude of the interpreter of this hackneyed word.

Depending on the susceptibility of some people, a "counterrevolutionary act" could be a "crooked look" or a public employee who does not attend a "mass" demonstration.

And the concept of "constructive criticism" has remained undefined, hazy, in the imagination of some commanders, since only they understand its meaning and know its application.

7679
CSO: 3010

ALARM EXPRESSED AT INCREASE OF FOREIGNERS IN KEY POSITIONS

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 1 Oct 80 p 2

[Commentary by Auxiliadora Guerrero]

[Text] When I reached the age of reason I began to realize that in our country foreigners were the ones who received the best opportunities, the best treatment, the best salaries, but then this came to seem logical under the Somozist dictatorship, since at that time there was no order or honesty, and least of all, people's rights; the rights of the Nicaraguan people were trampled on by any foreigner.

I also remembered then the saying that "no one is a prophet in his own land," and even though I rebelled at this, there was no other alternative but to watch how we Nicaraguan only got the jobs that foreigners didn't want. When traveling to other countries, I tried to take advantage of this saying, but I found out that it was only valid in Nicaragua.

In Mexico, it is "Mexico for the Mexicans," in Spain "Spain for the Spaniards," etc. This means that a foreigner cannot even compete, much less displace a citizen of those countries.

With the triumph of the revolution, I had a great illusion: Nicaragua was finally going to be "Nicaragua for the Nicaraguans." With the nationalism of Sandino as a banner, no foreigner would any longer be a prophet in our land.

But this illusion did not last very long. I began to see how people were being replaced in some state organizations; they were not replaced by more highly skilled Nicaraguans, but by foreigners with the professional title of "internationalists," but who had no professional training for the jobs they held. Colombians, Chileans, Ecuadoreans, not to mention Cubans, began to fill job vacancies and to get the top salaries. The gringo military instructor was replaced by a Cuban instructor, the Nicaraguan had to submit job applications to Colombian, Ecuadorean, or even Cuban personnel officers (INRA [National Institute for Agrarian Reform], INCINE, INTURISMO, to mention just a few). A foreigner decides whether to hire a Nicaraguan.

Once again the "poor Nicaraguan" has let his rights fall into the hands of foreigners. That is why I want to call on all true Nicaraguans to assert the nationalism of Sandino, and to truly make "Nicaragua for the Nicaraguans" become a reality.

7679
CSO: 3010

HAAKMAT INTERVIEWED ON DOMESTIC LEGAL STATE OF AFFAIRS

Amsterdam ELSEVIERS WEEKBLAD in Dutch 13 Sep 80 p 11

[Interview with Deputy Prime Minister Andre Haakmat by Johan van den Bossche: "Many of my Friends Succumbed to the Temptation."]

> [Text] Only a few months ago Andre Haakmat was himself a Dutchman but he is now no longer a friend of The Netherlands. It happened after the February coup of the sergeants, when he began a kind of wholesale business in ministerial posts. An important man therefore. ELSEVIERS WEEKBLAD talked with him.

A few weeks after the Suriname February revolution became a fact and Henk Chin A Sen presented his cabinet he suddenly surfaced in Suriname after 20 years in The Netherlands. Andre Haakmat, formerly inspector of education in Amsterdam, was then still a Dutchman of Surinamese origin and a bosom friend of the new prime minister. In great haste he was naturalized and appointed as adviser of the prime minister, and a few months later he was running a wholesale business in ministerial posts, including the ministries of Justice, Army and Police, Foreign Affairs, and the post of deputy prime minister.

A centipede therefore, but one with intelligence and ambition, and moreover, generally accepted as his friend Chin A Sen's inspiring genius. He is believed to be the brain behind the 13 August coup (with the knowledge of Commander-in-Chief Bouterse and Prime Minister Chin A Sen); he was certainly the man who encouraged the prime minister to try to talk Minister De Koning into accepting inflation protection of the Dutch development assistance of 2.7 billion guilders. Even though Chin A Sen now persistently claims that a letter written by Van Agt gave him the idea, which is certainly remarkable because the Dutch prime minister does not mention protection against inflation at all in that letter.

Two months later Deputy Prime Minister Haakmat is forced to grudgingly accept the fact that The Netherlands is not yet about to give in on this point. But he is no longer a friend of The Netherlands. It shows in the way he talks about a unilateral visa arrangement.

He calls this Dutch measure stupid, but, at the same time, he calls Dutch anxiety about violations of human rights exaggerated. He believes that Surinamese situations should not be remedied with Dutch solutions.

Tribunals

ELSEVIERS WEEKBLAD: The Surinamese judiciary has a good reputation. Why should members of the old regime then appear before tribunals?

Haakmat: We do not call them tribunals but special judicial committees. We have of course known all along that there was deep seated corruption under the prior government. However, this type of case should actually be split in two categories. In the first place, cases which can be dealt with in accordance with ordinary judicial procedures will be handled by ordinary courts. However, there are also exceedingly serious cases which are not punishable by law. The latter will be judged by special judiciary committees. We are here dealing with manipulations of persons who would have been declared not guilty by ordinary courts. It should be understood that different political circumstances are involved fit only for a special judiciary committee. The Dutch peual code is still in force in Suriname but it is not compatible with our society. We feel therefore that there is no need to apply it. After all, you in The Netherlands are not using the Chinese penal code.

[Question] Should not somebody who has done wrong but cannot be legally punished be dismissed?

[Answer] We are exactly of the opposite opinion. It concerns moral and ethical crimes. The Netherlands also punishes such crimes: through disciplinary committees. Look, a physician can kill somebody, he must then appear in court. He can also be responsible for somebody's death as the result of chaotic work. That will be the responsibility of a disciplinary committee. Our special judiciary committees should be viewed in this sense."

[Question] In that case it should first be established what moral and ethical crimes are.

[Answer] It concerns actions which every Surinamese person finds impermissible. One just cannot allow corruption to exist.

[Question] Are the members of these tribunals lawyers?

[Answer] The president and his deputy are lawyers. One-half of the other members consists of military persons, the balance of ordinary citizens. They do not have to be lawyers, but they happen to be all lawyers in the first committee.

[Question] What types of punishment can the tribunal impose?

[Answer] Fines, taking away the right to vote and to be elected, confiscation of possessions, compensation, and prison terms.

[Question] But only fines have been claimed?

[Answer] That was the legislation of the prior minister, Reeder. I proposed new legislation: the maximum punishment is 30 years in prison.

However, moral and ethical crimes must naturally be proven, although we have simplified the rules. If, for instance, a comma appears to have been applied in the wrong spot there will be no dismissal. Nobody would understand that in Suriname.

[Question] Why should there be military members in the tribunals?

[Answer] We govern this country together with the military. That is the reason. On the other hand, they never asked for membership in the judiciary committees.

[Question] Perhaps you do not trust the Surinamese judiciary. It let Arron off the hook a couple of times. It is said that he cannot be legally convicted.

[Answer] Initially the military surrendered the arrested persons to the normal channels of justice. We have tried that therefore. But the old practices appeared to rear their heads again. People like ex-minister Brahim and Ewald Karamath Ali managed to flee. I consider this a case of serious neglect of the interests of the Surinamese community. We must fight that, and do all we can to succeed.

You have no idea of the level of corruption over here. Somebody who did not function in the system had no future in Surinam. It explains why so many Surinamese went to The Netherlands.

[Question] Arron's guilt is therefore a foregone conclusion. He was the prime minister of a cabinet which did nothing against corruption.

[Answer] During Arron's tenure 380 million guilders in extra income from bauxite disappeared. I do not say that Arron enriched himself. However, the money is gone; no country would take that.

[Question] But the funds were entered in detail in the ledgers of the Ministry of Finance.

[Answer] Arron sat in a little room to write down where the money could possibly have gone. Well, the calculations he came up with amounted to nothing. We are not dealing with 25 guilders. The Netherlands would have contributed another 300 million guilders in additional development assistance if Suriname itself had also contributed 300 million guilders. Just imagine the damage the Arron government did to the Surinamese.

[Question] Arron is facing an impossible task because during the remodeling process of the Ministry of Finance a portion of the files got lost.

[Answer] The previous government always got rid of incriminating material. When the military police raided ex-minister Achmed Karamath Ali's house his wife was just burning currency worth 50,000 guilders.

Succumbed

[Question] Why have you been living in The Netherlands for 20 years? With your education could not you get a job in Suriname?

[Answer] The system kept me 20 years out of Suriname. If I had wanted to work there I would have been forced to participate in the corruption. Many of my friends succumbed to the temptation. Many of them are now also in prison. Even a number of my friends with whom I made plans to forcefully end the old regime. When some of them returned to Suriname I warned them. I said: "Please stay in The Netherlands. Better to suffer the cold here than to cooperate with that regime. The hope that the regime could be toppled became smaller all the time. We tried everything to obtain arms, but always to no avail."

[Question] Ferrier was not corrupt; he was deposed nevertheless.

[Answer] Ferrier resigned as president. I believe that, consciously or unconsciously, he intended to reinstate the old way of doing things. Clearly he wanted to end his career as the man who restored parliamentary democracy in Suriname. He wanted to present the budget to the Parliament which had been rendered powerless, but in this manner the old order of things would, in one stroke, have resumed its role again. When Chin A Sen heard this he informed the army, which talked with Ferrier. In the following manner: "We ask you to resign to solve this conflict." He did so.

[Question] Wouldn't it be nice to try to restore parliamentary democracy?

[Answer] We all want to return to it. We hope to reach that moment in 2 years. Parliament will not return if the planned renovations have then not yet been accomplished. Re-establishing the NSB [National Socialist Movement] would also be unthinkable in The Netherlands.

[Question] Did Sital really intend to stage a countercoup?

[Answer] I am convinced of that. One of our men penetrated his group. Right now the size of the conspiracy is the only important thing to us. We know that some neighboring countries supported the coup; yes, a Caribbean country.

[Question] Here, one coup seems to follow the next. First it was Ormskerk, now it is Sital.

[Answer] Ormskerk's coup was ultrarightist; Sital's ultraleftist. Therefore, theoretically we have had everything.

Small Army

[Question] People have the impression that you are fast in labeling something a coup. It is a fact that Ormskerk did not have a small army of 300 men to back him up.

[Answer] We have never said that. We were only prepared to deal with it. But Ormskerk was cooking something up. We caught one of his female couriers and she confessed everything. Ormskerk completely misjudged the situation. He trained many of the persons who interrogated him and he thought he could overrule them. That was a bad mistake because they thought that they would have to fight his little army. To find out about the size and location of that small army as soon as possible

Ormskerk was indeed harshly treated. He did not want to reveal a thing. It can be said that if Ormskerk had only admitted that there was no small army he would still have been alive today. That is how I see it.

[Question] And the cause of death?

[Answer] There is actually no clarity on this point. Probably exhaustion. There was a fight when he was led to his cell. He died the next day.

[Question] Why is there no coroner's report yet? Ormskerk died months ago.

[Answer] There is indeed such a report.

[Question] But not at the Dutch embassy. The Dutch government demanded that it be delivered this very week.

[Answer] Well that will then be taken care of, I guess.

10319
CSO: 3105

END

JPRS 76840

19 November 1980

Latin America Report

No. 2215

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Indexes to this report (by keyword, author, personal names, title and series) are available from Bell & Howell, Old Mansfield Road, Wooster, Ohio 44691.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

JPRS 76840

19 November 1980

LATIN AMERICA REPORT

No. 2215

CONTENTS

INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

ARPEL Meeting on Secondary Oil, Gas Recovery Methods
(EL UNIVERSAL, 8, 9 Oct 80)..... 1

Meeting Opens in Caracas
Sodium Hydroxide Injection
Heavy Crude Recovery
Mexican on Water Injection
Lake Maracaibo Recovery Projects
Behavior of Oil Deposits
LAGOVEN Injection Projects
Venezuelan Projects Surveyed
Use of Gas Compressor
Peruvian Projects Discussed
Heavy Crude Recovery
Carbon Dioxide Injection
Ecuador's Efforts Reported

Text of Proposed Venezuelan-Colombian Maritime Agreement
(EL UNIVERSAL, 22 Oct 80)..... 14

Venezuelan Reaction To Draft Maritime Agreement With Colombia
(EL UNIVERSAL, 22 Oct 80)..... 21

Smuggling of Honduran Cattle to El Salvador, Guatemala
(LA PRENSA, 9 Oct 80)..... 26

ARGENTINA

Failure of Disarmament Talks Traced to Western Weakness
(LA PRENSA, 25 Sep 80)..... 27

Financial Situation Termed Soluble Without IMF Mediation
(LA PRENSA, 28 Sep 80)..... 29

Industrial Sector To Be Further Hit by New Tariff Reductions
(Luis Domenianni; CONVICCION, 2 Oct 80)..... 32

Sharp Drop in Demand for Farm Machinery Reported
(Osvaldo R. Fornblihtt; CONVICCION, 4 Oct 80)..... 34

BRAZIL

President Seeks To Continue Democratization, Foster Development
(Joao B. Figueiredo Interview; ERCILLA, 14 Aug 80)..... 36

Press Speculating on Possible Cabinet Changes
(Various sources, various dates)..... 42

Possible Dismissals Hinted
Galveas Denies Dismissal
Rumors on Dismissals Continue
Central Bank President Speaks
Dismissal Rumors Rebutted
Speculation Rife in Brasilia by Carlos Chagas
Speculations on Golbery Prevented

Foreign Debt Must Be Refinanced in 1981 Says Netto
(O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO, 21 Oct 80)..... 49

CHILE

Attempt at Peaceful Path to Socialism in Chile Analyzed
(Yu. N. Korolev; LATINSKAYA AMERIKA, Sep 80)..... 53

CUBA

Legal Basis for New Family Code Discussed
(Ernesto Buch Santos; REVISTA CUBANA DE DERECHO, Jan-Dec 78). 65

EL SALVADOR

Junta Counters German Organization's Criticism of Reforms
(LA PRENSA GRAFICA, 2 Oct 80)..... 74

HONDURAS

Increasing Authoritarianism of FSLN Seen as Disturbing
(Editorial; LA PRENSA, 7 Oct 80)..... 76

MEXICO

Ibarra Pledges Healthy Economy, Strong Currency
(Roberto Noriega G.; EL SOL DE MEXICO, 4 Sep 80)..... 79

Oteyza: Petroleum Production Will Not Be Changed
(EL DIA, 8 Sep 80)..... 82

Another PEMEX Oil Spill Reported
(Arturo de Aquino; EL SOL DE MEXICO, 31 Aug 80)..... 84

Second Chicoasen Unit Goes on Line
(EXCELSIOR, 5 Sep 80)..... 86

NICARAGUA

FSLN Commemorates Heroes, Martyrs in October Celebrations
(BARRICADA, 18, 20 Oct 80)..... 87

Significance of October Discussed
Planning Minister Ruiz Speaks

Pedro Chamorro, Others Speak at Rally Supporting 'LA PRENSA'
(LA PRENSA, 21 Oct 80)..... 95

Young Sandinist Discusses Integration of Youth Into Economy
(Fanor Herrera Interview; BARRICADA, 18 Oct 80)..... 101

Extensive Crop Damage From Heavy Rains Noted
(BARRICADA, 21 Oct 80)..... 104

PERU

Association of Journalists Created
(EL COMERCIO, 2 Oct 80)..... 106

Bill To Restore Newspapers' Ownership Passed by Congress
(EL COMERCIO, 2 Oct 80)..... 108

VENEZUELA

Italian Terrorist Presence in Country Denied
(EL UNIVERSAL, 8 Oct 80)..... 110

Break in Relations With Cuba Urged
(Hermogenes Lopez; EL UNIVERSAL, 9 Oct 80)..... 112

Esteban Rey Criticizes Herrera's Management Efforts
(Luis Esteban Rey; EL UNIVERSAL, 27 Sep 80)..... 113

ARPEL MEETING ON SECONDARY OIL, GAS RECOVERY METHODS

Meeting Opens in Caracas

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 8 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 5

[Text] "Forty percent of Venezuela's current oil production is extracted by means of gas or water injection in the oil-bearing deposits. Hence the importance of the secondary recovery processes to our country and to the rest of the Latin American nations, as well as the large producers in the West and Middle East, as a whole, in areas wherein the percentage of extraction of crude through secondary or tertiary processes is similar to that in our country." The foregoing statement was made by Dr Wolf Petzall, director of Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc, at the opening of the 38th meeting of experts from the Latin American Petroleum Industry Mutual Aid Association (ARPEL), which began yesterday under the chairmanship of ARPEL's secretary general, Dr Fernando Mendoza.

During the work sessions of the event which will conclude on Wednesday, 22 October, research reports will be submitted on secondary recovery methods, describing the experience of the technicians from the state oil companies of ARPEL's member nations: Chile, Colombia, Bolivia, Ecuador, Argentina, Brazil, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela. Also attending the function in the capacity of observers are representatives of the governments of Canada, France and Spain.

In his opening remarks, Dr Petzall stressed the importance of the secondary recovery processes, inasmuch as "the majority of the volumes of reserves come from secondary recovery and not from the major discoveries of new deposits, as we would all like.

"The significance of the secondary recovery methods will be found to increase in the future, owing to the increasing difficulty in discovering new oil deposits with a high degree of productivity, and the incorporation of heavy and extra-heavy oil reserves."

He added that, in the specific instance of Venezuela, the reserves have increased as a result of the discovery of unconventional oil deposits in the Orinoco Belt. The speaker pointed out: "Fortunately, we shall have a relatively long period of primary production there, but later, of necessity, we shall have to undertake alternate steam injection processes, which are not really categorized as secondary recovery, because the only thing that they do is heat the oil and reduce the viscosity to facilitate its handling. But in a third phase, we shall inevitably start to extract that heavy crude using secondary recovery methods."

At the conclusion of his address, Petzall said that, from the reports to be submitted and the discussions stemming from the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts, there would result conclusions and recommendations which he hoped would be useful to the attendees, particularly with regard to the assistance that the group of participants is rendering to its respective governments in devising oil policies and, more concretely, in determining the necessary financial resources required to maintain the production levels in the various countries, and to increase them.

Before the remarks delivered by the director of PDVSA [Venezuelan Petroleum, Inc], the secretary general of ARPEL, Dr Fernando Mendoza, took the floor to give the welcoming address to the group of participants and observers at the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts. Mendoza began his remarks by making a brief historical review of the career of ARPEL. He recalled that ARPEL came into existence in Venezuela in 1961, with the ambitious goal of Latin American oil industry integration. "However, it was not until 1965, after a meeting held in Lima, that it began to operate as we know it today.

"Up until the present, some 900 technical reports have been considered and discussed. and it has afforded the training of approximately 4,000 technicians serving our companies, at meetings similar to this, at all times maintaining our lofty priority objective: mutual assistance among its members, which is the spirit, purpose and raison d'etre of ARPEL."

He was emphatic in noting that "the era of easy oil is over," adding that now oil must be sought at greater depths, under the sea and in places where the problems of corrosion and high temperatures are marked. "Secondary recovery is the hope of many of the Latin American state oil companies and, in this regard, emphasis should be placed on the Venezuelan experience with steam injection processes, that of the Peruvian technicians with secondary recovery in the old Brea and Parinas deposits and the 29 years of the use of secondary recovery methods by the Mexican engineers in the Poza Rica fields."

Today, the work sessions will start with the presentation of the report entitled "Diagnosis and Expectations for Secondary Recovery Using Conventional Gas and Water Injection in Venezuela," by engineer Juan B. Araujo, of Venezuelan Petroleum; to be followed by a presentation made by engineer Benito Teran de la Garza, of Mexican Petroleum, of the report "Water Injection as a Secondary Recovery Process in Mexico." Then engineer Jose Endara, of the Ecuadorean State Petroleum Corporation (CEPE), will speak on the topic "Development of Secondary Recovery in Ecuador." Similar reports will be delivered by technicians from the state oil companies of ARPEL member nations today and tomorrow, concluding with the closing ceremony at which the vice president of Venezuelan Petroleum, Dr Julio Cesar Arreaza, will officiate.

Sodium Hydroxide Injection

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 8 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 6

[Text] "The injection of a sodium hydroxide solution at the rate of 0.1 percent per pound allows for the recovery of more oil than can be obtained through the injection of water alone." This assertion was made in a report submitted by Rafael Gullon, an engineer from CORPOVEN [a subsidiary of PETROVEN] Deposits, at the 38th meeting of experts from the Latin American Petroleum Industry Mutual Aid Association (ARPEL), the sessions of which are concentrating on secondary recovery methods, with contributions from Venezuelan professionals serving the oil industry and from ARPEL representatives.

He explained that the project was carried out in the eastern section of the Boscan Field. As everyone knows, the Boscan crude is a very heavy oil, of 10° API. He remarked: "At first, the injection rates were approximately 10,000 barrels from a sodium hydroxide solution of 0.1 percent per pound, an amount which was subsequently stabilized at a rate of 6,000 barrels per day. During the operation, the formation of a pressure front was detected, which resulted in a reduction in the wells' capacity for injection, with an increase in the pressure necessary for injection to displace the fluids. The development of this pressure front is due to the formation of an emulsion ring around the injected wells as a result of the interfacial tension between the sodium hydroxide solution and the oil. This emulsion consists of macromolecules capable of obstructing the wells and improving the sweep efficiency," noted Gullon.

Some of the conclusions drawn during the execution of this project indicate that the sodium hydroxide solution of 0.1 percent per pound is the optimal one, because it is the one which most reduces the interfacial tension between the Boscan crude and the connate water. The greater gain in recovery is achieved when there is injected into the core a volume of displacing fluid equal to a porous volume. The relative gain in recovery obtained from displacements under 0.1 percent of porous volume is insignificant.

The report also makes a series of recommendations which, in brief, advise the reevaluation of the geology of the field, attempting to separate the largest possible number of independent production units; the reassessment of the cores taken to arrive at a better determination of the properties of the rock; an investigation of the problems associated with production operations; an investigation of the displacement mechanisms based on the operational problems that have been encountered; a search for a definite area with a single lens and without faults, which will make it possible to test the laboratory results with the different concentrations of the solution and to observe their effect on the displacement of oil; an investigation of the effect of the drilling of interspaced wells on the final recovery, and its effect on a sodium hydroxide injection project ; and an investigation of the minimum and maximum injection rate that would allow for the formation of the emulsion front and its potential effect on the recovery.

Heavy Crude Recovery

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 9 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 9

[Text] Ninety percent of Canada's oil reserves are located in the bituminous sands of Alberta; hence the great effort to develop these reservoirs of "heavy oils."

This information is contained in the report submitted by the Canadian expert, Calvin Nager, who is a member of Petro-Canada's exploration team, at the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts currently being held in Caracas. Petro-Canada is that country's state oil corporation. The government founded it in 1975 and it has grown substantially during its brief 5 years of existence. It now has assets amounting to nearly $3.5 billion and highly skilled personnel totaling 300 employees. Internationally, Petro-Canada has a share in 6,000 square kilometers of offshore units in Norway, Great Britain and Germany, in the North Sea, as well as in offshore areas of Spain, China, Italy and the Gulf of Mexico. In addition, it has interests in nearly 50,000 square kilometers of Canadian oil areas already developed.

The report explains that this growth was attained partially by the absorption of companies previously operating in Canada. At present Petro-Canada is competing with many other Canadian and international companies operating in that country.

Petro-Canada is a complete oil company, with a capacity for exploration, development, drilling, gas and oil production, refining, natural gas processing, marketing and research. It also has interests in coal mines, oil pipeline companies, the plastics industry and other activities.

The major Canadian oil deposits are located in three basic areas. Virtually all the continental reserves are in Alberta, the western province, with additional volumes in the neighboring provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan, off Newfoundland and in the Canadian Arctic.

Canada's total reserves, including "conventional," "heavy oils" and bituminous sands, are estimated at about 45 billion cubic meters of proven oil recoverable on site. In addition, there are substantial volumes of gas and oil located offshore.

The expert explained that, in 1979, the production from the Canadian fields amounted to about 250,000 cubic meters of oil and 220 million cubic meters of gas.

The reservoirs of "heavy oils" and of oil sands and bituminous sands in Alberta appear as surface deposits north of Atabasca, and gradually increase in depth until they reach over 900 meters, as they extend in a southeasterly direction.

The operations of Great Canadian Oil Sands and Syncrude, in which Petro-Canada has an interest, are bringing successful results from these oil sands. Engineer Calvin Nager concluded by saying that other recovery techniques, particularly the thermal types, are being tested in the deep reservoirs.

Mexican on Water Injection

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 8 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 20

[Text] "Water as a displacing fluid in the secondary recovery methods is the most widely used in the world, owing mainly to its abundance on our planet, the ease with which its high efficiency can be used to displace oil and, finally, its relatively low cost." This claim was made by engineer Raul Carballeda Torres, delegate from PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum] to the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts, in a report submitted with the title "Water Injection as a Secondary Recovery Process in Mexico."

In his report, Carballeda Torres gives a summary of the water injection projects operating in the Republic of Mexico, the results accrued from this secondary recovery method and the calculation techniques used to predict its behavior, including some economic aspects, and shows Mexican Petroleum's program for establishing new, improved secondary recovery methods in its traditional producing areas, identified as the Northern Central and Southern Zones, as well as in the new ones in Chiapas-Tabasco and the Gulf of Campeche.

It is admitted that, "Whatever the mechanisms for expelling the fluids may be, when the production and pressure thereof decline, they require, to a greater or lesser extent, additional external energy which will allow for the maintenance of the pressure and a stoppage of the decline in the volume of production, as well as an increase in the hydrocarbon recovery factors. It is obvious that the history of production from the deposits in Mexico is no exception, and has required the establishment of secondary recovery methods," as it emphasizes.

It reiterates that, for the petroleum engineer or anyone closely associated with the industry it is no secret that the increase in hydrocarbon recovery is one of the most interesting challenges in the engineering related to deposits.

In making an historical review, it recalls how water injection was started in Mexico during 1951, when operations began in the world famous Poza Rica field. "Ten years later, in the San Andres field, a pilot test began and, subsequently, a complete project, which have caused the Poza Rica district to represent a milestone in history for oil production in Mexico.

"The results accrued from the development of these projects have been reflected in the construction of more plants and facilities for injection, so that, by the end of 1976, there was an average daily injection of approximately 300,000 barrels of water, a figure that has increased to 1.150 million barrels per day, with the current promotion of the execution of new projects amounting to 27 which were in operation by August 1980."

Insofar as the effects of water injection are concerned, the reporter stressed that, "The response from the deposits has been varied, depending on the size and features of the deposit, as well as on the volume of injection."

It has been determined that the additional contribution of oil indicates an increase which started during the second half of 1978, until July of this year when it reached a total of 140,000 barrels per day. This represents production equivalent to 16 percent of the total production from the fields subjected to water injection.

Lake Maracaibo Recovery Projects

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 8 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 19

[Text] The Lake Maracaibo basin (after several decades of continuous production) contains approximately 6.657 billion barrels of oil yet to be recovered.

Geologist Roger Palomino, who is a member of LAGOVEN's [a PETROVEN subsidiary] Western projects group, stresses that this gives an idea of the importance of the different secondary recovery methods.

He remarked: "At present, nearly 50 percent of the production is extracted with supplementary recovery methods, and that percentage will be increased in the future, so as to be able to reduce the rate of decline in production from the deposits."

Geologist Palomino is a representative from LAGOVEN at the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts, an event in which representatives from the various state oil companies on the continent, as well as observers from other latitudes, are participating.

This LAGOVEN expert's study is entitled "Importance of Geological Studies in the Planning of Secondary Recovery Projects." In it, he emphasizes that, in order to achieve an appropriate injection plan which will maximize the recovery of crude, one must have a thorough understanding of the geological peculiarities of each deposit.

Palomino claims that, in this way, one can explain the behavior of its production, help to decide on the most suitable type of fluid to be injected and select the most appropriate method of injection to take advantage of the natural routes of permeability of the deposit-rock.

The preparation of the report is the methodology pursued to make a geological evaluation of deposits as part of the studies preceding a pressure maintenance program.

One of its first conclusions is that, "The sedimentation and structure are the most important aspects to be considered as part of the geological study of sedimentary rock for the purpose of secondary recovery."

He adds that it is also essential to prepare sedimentation models and to determine the arrangement of deposit-rock, among other things.

In conclusion, geologist Roger Palomino recommends that, in order to reduce the degree of speculation and to make a reliable geological assessment, the latter must be included in a regional geological interpretation of an area larger than that involved in the project.

Behavior of Oil Deposits

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 9 Oct 80 Sec-2 p 7

[Text] Using a system of mathematical simulation, one can ascertain the parameters which determine the production from wells, with which it is possible to make reasonable predictions of the behavior of deposits, incidentally evaluating the feasibility of the different production strategies, such as: beginning, change in suspension of water and/or gas injection, artificial survey, new wells, reconditioning, etc.

This proposal was explained in the report entitled "Systems for Simulation of the Behavior of Deposits," submitted by Julian Paytuvi, senior engineer for CORPOVEN, S.A., included in the program for the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts, the agenda of which is focused on the study of the various secondary recovery methods, many of which our country advocates.

Paytuvi explained: "The system in question is capable of checking the behavior of a deposit and of coming up with reasonable predictions that will facilitate the selection of an optimal development strategy in advance." He added: "Furthermore, owing to its design, it occupies little space and is very speedy; it does not use tapes or discs, all of which helps to make the use of this system a simple operation."

Paytuvi explained that the mathematical method used consists of three phases: oil, gas and water; and can simulate at least two dimensions. In other words, it may be described as pseudotridimensional. He stressed: "The program calculates for each well, through linear interpolation and depending on its structural position, the gas and water saturations that are present in the vicinity of the well. To calculate the well's production condition, these saturations may be corrected by the user."

The report submitted by Paytuvi includes the mathematical formulas and equations which serve as a basis for the aforementioned theory and the practical results.

In order to test the reliability of the results obtained in this project, comparisons and predictions were made of the behavior of deposits which had already been subjected to predictions, using other models; and in every instance rather similar results were obtained.

Paytuvi disclosed that this simulation system is being used by CORPOVEN in the Eastern Division, with headquarters in Anaco, and its main office in Caracas.

In conclusion, he recommended making the maximum possible use of it, with the proper training of personnel.

LAGOVEN Injection Projects

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 9 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 7

[Text] LAGOVEN will recover over 500 million additional barrels of oil from the Lagunillas-5 deposit in Lake Maracaibo, with the use of water injection. This is only one example of the potential of this system for the Venezuelan deposits.

But, in order to make use of this potential, in many cases a more sophisticated treatment will be required than the type that has been used for water injection, because of the fact that the new recovery projects will be undertaken mainly in less permeable deposits and with more viscous crude than usual.

This information is contained in the study entitled "LAGOVEN's Plans for Treatment and Water Injection at Lake Maracaibo," a report submitted by this branch of Venezuelan Petroleum at the meeting of ARPEL experts, a function which is under way in Caracas.

The importance of this report (the author of which is Alberto Briceno, supervisor of mechanical engineering in the Production Department) lies in the fact that the secondary recovery of oil from water injection in the deposits offers great prospects for the Venezuelan oilfields, particularly those of LAGOVEN at Lake Maracaibo.

In recent years, this company has put new injection plants into operation in four deposits in Bachaquero, the center of Lago and Lagunillas, some of them by way of a test. This year, they started two more pilot projects, and the equipment has already been ordered for other plants to be put into service in 1981.

The report in question discusses the progress of the project whereby the PB-1 water injection plant, the first one operating with a water filtration and treatment plant, was established in July 1979.

As a point of departure, engineer Briceno's report emphasizes that the quality of the water in secondary recovery projects is vital. The report notes that the water in Lake Maracaibo can be treated with a reliable, economical process to obtain good quality and that, in general, it is compatible with the connate water of the oil-bearing deposits.

Water injection in Lake Maracaibo is not a new system. In 1959, according to Briceno, Creole was using that system with successful results.

The expert explained that, after nationalization, it became evident that water injection had to be expanded in more difficult deposits, and top quality water was obviously needed. To obtain it, it was concluded that the most efficient method was the treatment of water from Lake Maracaibo. That process consists of primary and secondary filtration, chlorination and supplementary chemical treatment.

Both the treatment plant and the injection plant are completely automatic.

The LAGOVEN engineer notes in conclusion that, after a year of operation of the first of these plants, it was decided that they could filter, consistently, over 90 percent of the solids suspended in the water from Lake Maracaibo.

Venezuelan Projects Surveyed

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 8 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 5

[Text] At the present time there are in progress in Venezuela 182 secondary recovery projects using conventional gas and water injection, with an estimated total daily production of 880,000 barrles of oil, from which it is expected to obtain approximately 6,000 additional barrels in the future.

This information was disclosed by engineer Juan Bautista Araujo, from Venezuelan Petroleum's Production Coordination Office, while discussing the diagnosis and expectations for secondary recovery using convention gas and water injection, in the presence of the delegates to the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts being held at present in Caracas.

Engineer Araujo explained that conventional water and gas injection, or combinations of both elements, have been used extensively in Venezuela to obtain additional oil, particularly in the deposits which store crude of the medium and light types, and, to a lesser extent, those with heavy and extra-heavy crude.

In providing details, engineer Araujo said that, of the 182 projects currently in progress, 113 are for gas injection, with a production of 320,000 barrels per day; 64 are for water injection, with a production of 300,000 barrels per day; and five are for simultaneous injection of gas and water, with a production of 260,000 barrels per day.

He emphasized that the daily production resulting from these projects accounts for approximately 40 percent of the national production.

As for the future, engineer Araujo observed that the 10-year forecast for the entire Venezuelan oil industry calls for the development of 1.1 billion additional barrels of oil reserves. Also, in his prediction, Araujo added the estimate that there are about 200 deposits capable of producing, together, from 1 to 3 billion additional barrels of oil, 70 percent of which would be light and medium oil.

Engineer Araujo also explained that the data and results of the active projects submitted in his report were updated to 31 October 1978, based on the reports on projects in progress sent by Venezuelan Petroleum's operating branches at the beginning of 1979.

He concluded his explanation by stating that water and/or gas injection has proven effective in recovering additional crude.

Engineer Araujo commented in addition that the effort for conventional gas and/or water injection, insofar as the number of projects is concerned, has been more extensive in the Eastern region. However, since there exists in that region a complex stratigraphic structural configuration, with light lenticular sands, it is impossible to carry out projects of the same magnitude as those in the West. Hence, the potential and additional reserves produced by the projects in the West are greater.

In his recommendations, Araujo advised a more exact determination of the volume of gas reserves stored by injection, and also setting the date for, and putting into effect a policy of deflation, that would take into consideration the total or partial substitution of gas injection with water to maintain the energy of the deposits. This would represent the beginning of tertiary recovery.

As a result, he also recommended a review of all the active and inactive deposits in which fluids were injected in the past, to establish an inventory of deposits to which tertiary recovery could be applied. For this purpose, a study must be made of the type of process that is applicable, and there must be a determination of its feasibility, through laboratory and field tests.

He also cited the feasibility of studying each of the 125 projects, the list of which he submitted in an annex to his report, and any other one that the operators of Venezuelan Petroleum consider advisable, to determine the feasibility of any kind of secondary recovery. In order to do this, an inventory must be taken and a timetable must be established for studies and implementation.

In his seventh recommendation, engineer Araujo considered the possibility of injecting CO_2 or nitrogen in a pilot deposit, to assess the feasibility of injecting these substances and the related costs. If the experimentation with either of the aforementioned fluids should prove successful, they would be preferred over the use of natural gas.

Use of Gas Compressor

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 9 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 7

[Text] "The location of a compressor plant is made basically through a selective process which takes into account, essentially, the relative position of the gas sources." This statement was made by engineer Alfredo Perez, from MENEVEN [a PETROVEN subsidiary], in the report entitled "Design, Construction and Operation of Gas Compressor Plants in Eastern Venezuela," which was submitted for consideration at the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts held in Caracas from 6 to 8 October, under the auspices of Venezuelan Petroleum, and which focused on the subject of the various secondary recovery methods used in Venezuela and in the different countries affiliated with the Latin American Petroleum Industry Mutual Aid Association.

The report enumerates the procedures that are followed when, for production and operational reasons, it becomes necessary to build a compressor plant. It then details the actual design of the compression process, and establishes the operational variables required and the design of the instrumentation and the pneumatic and electrical control systems.

Among the conclusions, it maintains that, "Coordination among the personnel responsible for the operation of the gas compressor plant and the personnel charged with the design is essential, for the purpose of including in the latter details that will improve and facilitate the operation of future plants."

It also stresses that the efficient operation and handling of gas demand a complete understanding of the area, and of the systems and installations related directly to production, as well as experience, technical ability and decision-making power among the personnel heading the plant.

An important recommendation in this report states: "The dynamics and expansion of the oil industry in the Eastern part of the country since the nationalization of oil and the development of the Orinoco Petroliferous Belt whereby the extraction of heavy crude will take place necessitate the establishment of a training and skills program, so as to incorporate the new techniques which are needed for the efficient execution of the projects associated with secondary recovery."

It explains the advantages accrued from gas injection, arguing that when there is little or no market for the gas produced, the injection of the latter into suitable deposits is economical, and provides a reservoir of high pressure gas that can be used when the local demand is developed. It also notes that, since the gas is lighter than the oil, the injected gas tends to form a well-defined artificial layer of gas even in formations with a pitch that is not deep. It concludes by stating: "If the product is extracted from lower down in the stratum, this becomes a source of energy conservation and the production scales can be kept high."

Peruvian Projects Discussed

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 9 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 7

[Text] "In every secondary recovery project, the most difficult factors to predict, and hence those with a critical effect on the economy of the project, in comparison with primary operations are: the determination of the reserves developed by the injection, the production system and the operating costs. All these factors, in turn, depend largely on the technological resources that are available." The foregoing statement was made by engineer Alcibiades Sosa Palomino, of the Peruvian State Petroleum Agency (PETROPERU), during his report entitled "Secondary Petroleum Potential Existing in La Brea and Parinas," in the course of the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts on the subject of secondary recovery, which is under way in Caracas, organized by Venezuelan Petroleum.

In the initial part of his remarks, Sosa Palomino gave a definition of the concept of "secondary recovery," which he considered in its broader sense as "the process whereby a fluid is injected into a deposit to displace and increase the final recovery of oil deposited in that reservoir.

"Included in this definition are both the processes for injection of fluids in the reservoirs whose development has been discontinued because they have reached an advanced state of depletion, and the so-called pressure maintenance operations which are carried out in new reservoirs or those which are only partially depleted."

He cited the injection of water and gas as the most common methods of secondary recovery.

Heavy Crude Recovery

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 9 Oct 80 Sec-2 p 4

[Text] "Inasmuch as, with gas injection, the environmental protection problems are minimal and this is essentially a conservation technique, it should be included in the possible methods for improving recovery in certain heavy oil deposits." This statement was made by engineer Antonio Martinez, representative of the MENEVEN company, a subsidiary of Venezuelan Petroleum, at the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts which convened in Caracas from 6 to 9 October.

"The large amount of energy required to maximize oil recovery, as well as the production, transportation and processing of oil, make it necessary to use techniques which will reduce energy consumption to a minimum. Gas injection is one of these techniques, since it does not require large amounts of fuel and it reduces the operational problems involved in treatment."

In his report on "Additional Recovery Through Gas Injection in Heavy Oil Deposits," engineer Martinez explained that, in the MENEVEN deposits, 133 wells have been completed, 94 of which are producers, with an average accumulated production per well of 1.2 million normal barrels, while the present production for the four deposits is approximately 16,5000 barrels per day. The results accrued to date have shown that the recovery has exceeded the estimates originally made for each one of these deposits.

Carbon Dioxide Injection

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 9 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 4

[Text] Engineer Leopoldo Larsen, from the Argentine company Government Oil Deposits, told the participants in the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts, an event sponsored by Venezuelan Petroleum which is currently under way in Caracas, that secondary recovery with the use of carbon dioxide injection has proven successful recently as a process for increasing the recovery factor in oil-bearing deposits.

In his discourse on the topic "Application of Carbon Dioxide for the Assisted Recovery of Oil," Larsen stated that, when the carbon dioxide is dissolved in crude, as a rule certain changes occur in the latter which are the reason for the increase in the final recovery, changes such as a reduction in the viscosity of the crude and its expansion. He added that the high degree of solubility of carbon dioxide in oil, its capacity to extract the light and medium components therein and, eventually, the acidic effect that it may have on a certain type of rock, must be considered to be favorable factors.

"The viscosity decreases considerably from the dissolution of carbon dioxide in crude. This effect is more noteworthy in crude that is not very light, in which sizable declines in the viscosity due to the effect of the carbon dioxide may be observed."

The reporter added that the capacity of the carbon dioxide to extract not only the light components but also the medium ones allows it to be used in deposits which have lost their lighter components during primary recovery.

Ecuador's Efforts Reported

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 8 Oct 80 Sec 2 p 17

[Text] "The hydrocarbon activities in Ecuador began in 1920, with the discovery of petroleum accumulations on the Santa Elena Peninsula, located on the Ecuadorean coast. The oil, which is the principal product, is light crude, and comes from a large number of accumulations contained in many quartziferous sands separated by shale intercalations which are part of the bodies known as Socorro, Santo Tomas and Atlanta. These formations are located at depths of approximately 1,000-5,000 feet, and are from the Eocene Age."

The report from the Ecuadorean State Petroleum Corporation (CEPE), entitled "Development of Secondary Recovery in Ecuador," was based on research work done by engineers Lupercio Arteaga, Jose Endara and Fernando Albuja, and was delivered at the 38th meeting of ARPEL experts. It dealt with the history of secondary recovery in that country, the work accomplished and the results accrued.

Engineer Jose Endara, who presented the aforementioned report to the participants and observers at the ARPEL function, explained: "The most widely accepted theory at present regarding the probable origin of the sediments on the Santa Elena Peninsula is that considering them to be an olistostromic complex, that is, a fundamentally clayey matrix containing isolated bodies known as olistolites, of highly diversified sizes, which comprise the hydrocarboniferous deposits."

The commercial exploitation of hydrocarbons on the Santa Elena Peninsula dates back to 1921. Since that date, several companies, with their respective concessions totaling an area of 120,000 hectares, have drilled over 2,700 wells, of which only 650 are now in production, the rest having been closed and abandoned.

Engineer Endara remarked that the accumulated production obtained from these wells as of 30 June of this year was about 107,690,000 barrels. The rapid decline in the wells at the beginning of their development, the virtually nonexistent water production and the change in crude production suggest that the preponderant mechanism for expulsion of the fluid was the pressure from the dissolved gas that was released.

In discussing the work done on the development of secondary recovery with the ARPEL experts, Jose Endara said: "The considerable decline in the production from the wells was initially concealed by the drilling of extension, development and filler wells, owing to the results from the stimulation work and the implementation of artificial production systems (mechanical pumping, and pneumatic and piston pumping). However these activities eventually reached a limit, and hence there occurred an intensive reduction in production."

The representative of the Ecuadorean State Petroleum Corporation, speaking on behalf of his company, stressed the interest in undertaking an intensive rehabilitation program for the oilfields on the Santa Elena Peninsula, to increase their present production level, while simultaneously affording a continuation of the pertinent studies to make a geological model of the area that would make it possible to learn in detail the geometry of the deposits, their variations in thickness, the types of boundaries and also the variations in the petrophysical properties. This detailed geological model will be the basis for the future proposal and implementation of a secondary recovery process in the fields on the Santa Elena Peninsula.

2909
CSO: 3010

TEXT OF PROPOSED VENEZUELAN-COLOMBIAN MARITIME AGREEMENT

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 22 Oct 80 Sec 1 p 12

[Text] At a special function held last night at Miraflores Palace, the president of the republic, Dr Luis Herrera Campins, turned over to the news media the draft agreement with Colombia on the demarcation of marine and submarine areas established, in their entirety, as a possible solution, by the Venezuelan and Colombian commissions during the sixth meeting, which took place in Caraballeda from 13 to 17 October.

The head of state released both the message which the members of the Venezuelan commission addressed to the foreign minister of the republic and the draft to each representative of the media at a ceremony in which he was accompanied by Foreign Minister Jose Alberto Zambrano Velazco. Following is the complete text of both documents:

Draft

Caracas, 20 October 1980

Citizen Dr Jose Alberto Zambrano, Minister of Foreign Affairs
His Office

The Venezuelan delegation for the demarcation of marine and submarine areas with Colombia has the honor of reporting to the national government, through your worthy auspices, that, at the sixth meeting of the negotiating commission for that demarcation, held at Caraballeda from 13 to 17 October, it succeeded in establishing, in its entirety, a possible solution for the aforementioned demarcation, which has been put in the form of a draft.

The delegations agreed to submit it, each on its own, to their respective governments for consideration, so that they might be given instructions in the matter before the recessed meeting resumes.

The Venezuelan delegation has the honor of submitting to the national government this report, containing the aforementioned draft and the maps accompanying it, and takes the liberty of stating, at the same time, that, in its opinion, the draft which has been devised contains the maximum that can possibly be accrued from negotiations, attains the basic goals of Venezuela and guarantees the vital interests of the nation.

The result achieved is the product of consistency in the fundamental goals that have been sought throughout the 12 years of negotiations, and of the coherence of the entire process during its various phases, wherein the solution that is being submitted for your consideration was slowly but surely formulated and backed.

The proposed draft consolidates and definitively establishes Venezuela's exclusive jurisdiction and complete sovereignty in all the waters south of the Castilletes parallel; that is, the waters included between Venezuelan coasts. It extends that jurisdiction and sovereignty further still, because it integrates the marine areas produced by the Los Monjes archipelago with the waters south of the parallel, in a single zone of anterior waters, by drawing straight lines between Monje del Norte and Punta Macolla in Paraguana, and from there in the direction of Cabo Chichibacoa, as far as where it touches the demarcation line between Guajira and Los Monjes. It is acknowledged that the aforementioned archipelago produces all its maritime jurisdictions, that is, territorial sea, continental shelf and exclusive economic zone, with the latter extending as far as the median line of the Caribbean, opening in a fan shape westward, so that it ends at West meridian 71°21'00", which is farther west than the meridian where the terrestrial border with Colombia ends; in other words, west of the Castilletes meridian. In this way, there is achieved for Venezuela, despite the geographical structural projections that the island of Aruba and the La Guajira peninsula represent for it, an exclusive maritime economic zone in the west, compatible with the country's continental front, because Aruba, at the time, agreed to turn the line of demarcation toward the east, and now Colombia has agreed to turn toward the west.

In the draft, the lines of demarcation are determined on the basis of geographical coordinates, and are drawn on the attached charts. Hence, we deem it feasible to give a description of them which will underscore their significance and location.

First Section: Starting at the point of Castilletes, where the terrestrial border reaches the sea, continuing along the corresponding parallel as far as the median line between the Paraguana peninsula and La Guajira. Intersection point B is equidistant from the closest points on the coasts of Venezuela and Colombia.

Second Section: From point B, continuing along the median line between Paraguana and La Guajira as far as point C, called that of triple equidistance; that is, the point at which the closest coasts of Paraguana, Monje del Sur and La Guajira are equidistant. This point is, at the same time, the one that reflects the fact that, starting from it, the demarcation is no longer between Paraguana and La Guajira, but rather between Los Monjes and the latter.

Third Section: From the point of triple equidistance, a line tangent to the 4-mile circumference which has Monje del Sur as a center.

Fourth Section: From point D, a line passing 4 miles west of Monje del Sur and Monje del Norte and, with the same azimuth, continuing until it meets West meridian 71°21', almost in the center of the Caribbean.

Fifth Section: From point E, along the aforementioned meridian to the point where the jurisdiction of a third state, in this case, the Dominican Republic, is reached.

The draft includes the drawing of the straight base lines mentioned previously, north of which the territorial sea, the contiguous zone and the exclusive economic zone will be measured, and south of which lie Venezuelan interior waters. The draft also calls for the solution of matters related to every treaty on demarcation of interior waters, territorial seas or continental shelf, such as those associated with the unification of oil deposits in the event that any are cut by the demarcation line, and with navigation.

Insofar as the former are concerned, it should be emphasized that the draft uses the term "deposit," and not "geological structure" or "field," which are the usual terms in international treaties of this type, and are also those used by Venezuela in its treaty with the Kingdom of the Netherlands. The use of the term "deposit" is aimed at preventing any extensive interpretation, and hence it selected the most restricted word possible, namely, "deposit." In order to achieve this, there was agreement on the method of distributing in halves the hydrocarbons extracted from deposits cut by the demarcation line but subject to the condition, in such an instance, that half of the costs be assumed. Although this method is not the one most often used in private industry or in international demarcations, it is not for that reason unusual in them, and examples of its use have occurred in many instances. In the one of concern to us, apart from the reason cited previously, it was considered advisable because it precludes the long, expensive process of determining from the outset the size of the deposit and the proportion of each therein, which would be a source of constant friction, in the event that there were really deposits cut by the demarcation line.

Insofar as navigation is concerned, innocent passage is stipulated for the interior waters resulting from the straight base lines, but regulated restrictively, and in instances especially defined in the treaty. Venezuela is thereby assured passage through the Colombian area for ships either of Venezuela or of third country registry, which need to pass through that area enroute.

It is also stipulated that the states will negotiate agreements on certain matters of mutual concern, such as fishing, the use and conservation of living resources, the safety of navigation and control of pollution.

Not included were provisions regarding instant pursuit and overflight, because it was thought that, in this case, Venezuelan interests might be harmed rather than benefited, and that it would run counter to what it has been desired to achieve by consolidating the nature of the waters south of the Castilletes parallel as interior. The latter has been Venezuela's priority objective in its foregin policy since 1940, ratified expressly in all phases of the negotiations for the demarcation of the marine and submarine waters between Venezuela and Colombia.

The Venezuelan delegation wishes to express its gratitude to the national government, in particular, for the high honor conferred upon it by having been entrusted with such an important task, and in all humility trusts that it has done its duty.

The Venezuelan delegation awaits any instructions that the national executive branch may decide to give it for conducting this final phase of the negotiations that have been assigned to it.

Sincerely,

Gustavo Planchart Manrique, Elio Orta Zambrano, Luis Herrera Marcano, Pedro Nikken

Preamble

The Government of the Republic of Venezuela and the Government of the Republic of Colombia,

Considering:

The traditional bonds of friendship and brotherhood that exist between the two nations, inspired by the ideals of the liberator, Simon Bolivar;

The need for cooperation between the two peoples, brought about by history and geography;

The extension of the jurisdiction of the riparian states to new marine and submarine areas by virtue of the development of international law;

The need to make a demarcation of the marine and submarine areas between the two countries;

The obligation incumbent on the states to resort first to direct negotiation, so as to reach agreement on matters of common concern;

The efforts of consecutive governments of both countries to arrive at an agreement the equity and justice of which will satisfy the two nations;

Have resolved to conclude a treaty, and have named as their plenipotentiaries for this purpose:

The President of the Republic of Venezuela, Dr Luis Herrera Campins,

The President of the Republic of Colombia, Dr Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala,

Who, having exchanged their full powers and found them in good and proper condition, have agreed on the following:

Article 1

The demarcation of the respective marine and submarine areas between the Republic of Venezuela and the Republic of Colombia, which include: interior waters, territorial seas, continental shelves, exclusive economic areas and any others which have been or may be established by the parties, in accordance with international law, is as follows:

Section 1: Starting at the point on which the terrestrial border reaches the sea, continuing along the North parallel 11°51'07.41", which corresponds to the latitude established in Act No 4, dated 30 March 1930, by the Colombian and Venezuelan border commissions, as far as point B, the coordinates of which are the following:

North latitude: 11°51'07.41"
West longitude: 70°43'37.374"

Section 2: From the aforementioned point B to point C, the coordinates of which are the following:

North latitude: 12°00'01.785"
West longitude: 70°41'45.698"

Section 3: From the aforementioned point C to point D, the coordinates of which are the following:

North latitude: 12°20'12.252"
West longitude: 70°58'06.490"

Section 4: From the aforementioned point D to point E, the coordinates of which are the following:

North latitude: 14°58'24.54"; 14°56'40.537". Subject to revision of calculations.
West longitude: 71°21'00"

Section 5: From the aforementioned point E, following meridian 71°21'00" northward, as far as the border with a third state.

The coordinates cited relate to Datum "La Canoa" (Venezuela), the coordinates of which are:

North latitude: 08°34'17.17"
West longitude: 63°51'34.88"

Article 2

The territorial seas and contiguous zones that have been or are established, the continental shelves and the exclusive economic zones of the Republics of Venezuela and Colombia between the La Guajira and Paraguana peninsulas, demarcated in Article 1, extend from the following lines:

First line: From Point Macolla (North latitude: 12°05'45.19"; West longitude: 70° 12'48.50") to Monje del Norte (North latitude: 12°29'42.50"; West longitude 70° 55'18.38").

Second line: From Monje del Norte to Cape Chichibacoa (North latitude: 12°17'40.70"; West longitude: 71°13'35.50").

These lines have been established by each party within its respective jurisdiction demarcated in this treaty.

The waters contained between the aforementioned lines and the respective coasts are interior waters of one or the other country, demarcated as indicated in Article 1.

Article 3

Subject to the regulations contained in this article and in international law, each party establishes innocent passage through its interior waters demarcated in this treaty for:

1) Merchant vessels of any nationality enroute to ports of either party or sailing from them bound for different maritime areas;

2) Vessels of Venezuelan or Colombian registry, either publicly or privately owned, used for commercial purposes, including the transportation or utilization of natural resources which:

a) Arriving from ports or interior waters of either party, are enroute to ports of the other, or to different maritime areas, or,

b) Arriving from different maritime areas, are enroute to interior waters of the states whose flag they are flying.

The provisions of this number 3) will also apply to vessels of other registries which are in the service of one of the parties, provided this relationship with the respective vessel has been reported in advance to the other party.

First Paragraph: The vessels which exercise the right of innocent passage cited in this article must observe the laws and regulations issued by the respective state for purposes of safe navigation, prevention of pollution and other matters stipulated in international law.

Second Paragraph: The passage mentioned in this article must be made by a direct route geared to the convenience of shipping, and must be rapid and uninterrupted. Ships may not stop nor drop anchor except in the instances cited in international law.

Article 4

In the event that a hydrocarbon deposit extends to both sides of the demarcation line established in this treaty, each party will carry out the exploration and development of the deposit within its own maritime areas, and will share half of the hydrocarbons extracted therefrom; but it must then assume half of the pertinent costs.

When one of the parties is of the opinion that a deposit explored or developed by the other extends to its side of the demarcation line fixed in this treaty, it must notify the other of this. When that notification has been made, the parties will exchange the data and information on the subject which they possess and, by mutual agreement and in a spirit of cooperation, will conduct the studies, exploration and prospecting required in accordance with the technical standards and procedures generally used, to determine whether there is actually a deposit with the features indicated.

Both parties will abide by the technical standards and procedures in order to insure maximum final recovery of the hydrocarbons contained in the deposit.

Article 5

In connection with the areas demarcated in this treaty, the parties will negotiate agreements on matters of mutual concern, such as fishing, the utilization and protection of living resources, safety of navigation, sports and tourist navigation, the control and reduction of pollution in the marine environment, the installation of pipes and cable and scientific research.

Article 6

Any differences between the parties relating to the interpretation or execution of this treaty will be resolved in accordance with the pertinent regulations in the treaties which are in effect between them, and through other means of peaceful solution recognized in international law.

Article 7

For its approval, this treaty will be subject to the constitutional procedures of each party, and it will go into effect at the time that the exchange of the instruments of ratification is made.

The lines established in this treaty have been drawn by way of illustration on nautical charts No DHN-100, scale 1:300,000 and DHN-001, scale 1:1,650,000 of the Venezuelan Bureau of Hydrography and Navigation, two copies of each of which, signed by the plenipotentiaries, are annexed to this treaty and form an integral party thereof.

In witness whereof the aforementioned plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty.

Concluded in the city of .....on the date..... in two copies of the same content and identical value.

Description of the Line

First Section: Starting at the point of Castilletes, where the terrestrial border reaches the sea, continuing along the corresponding parallel as far as the median line between the Paraguana peninsula and La Guajira. Intersection point B is equidistant from the closest points on the coasts of Venezuela and Colombia.

Second Section: From point B, continuing along the median line between Paraguana and La Guajira as far as point C, called that of triple equidistance; that is, the point at which the closest coasts of Paraguana, Monje del Sur and La Guajira are equidistant. This point is, at the same time, the one that reflects the fact that, starting from it, the demarcation is no longer between Paraguana and La Guajira, but rather between Los Monjes and the latter.

Third Section: From the point of triple equidistance, a line tangent to the 4-mile circumference which has Monje del Sur as a center.

Fourth Section: From point D, a line passing 4 miles west of Monje del Sur and Monje del Norte and, with the same azimuth, continuing until it meets West meridian 71°21, almost in the center of the Caribbean.

Fifth Section: From point E, along the aforementioned meridian to the point where the jurisdiction of a third state, in this case, the Dominican Republic, is reached.

2909
CSO: 3010

VENEZUELAN REACTION TO DRAFT MARITIME AGREEMENT WITH COLOMBIA

Caracas EL UNIVERSAL in Spanish 22 Oct 80 Sec 1 p 14

[Text] COPEI Appointed a Committee To Analyze It

Yesterday afternoon, COPEI's [Social Christian Party] National Committee began an analysis of the draft agreement between Venezuela and Colombia for the demarcation of marine and submarine areas in the Gulf of Venezuela, which was submitted to it by the president of the republic, Luis Herrera Campins.

After noon, the top-ranking leadership of COPEI, headed by Drs Pedro del Corral, president for life; Godofredo Gonzalez, acting president; Eduardo Fernandez, secretary general; and Aristides Calvani, assistant secretary general for political affairs, received from the head of state a small plastic folder containing the draft agreement with Colombia arrived at by the negotiating commission chaired by Gustavo Planchart Manrique. Upon leaving the meeting, Dr Godofredo Gonzalez told reporters:

"We have decided to convoke the party's National Committee immediately, and we shall propose the assignment of a high-level committee to study this document and to submit a report subsequently. Until that is done, we cannot release any information, much less express an opinion, because we have just now received the document that I have mentioned.

"We conversed with the president a little about everything, not just this topic, and our conversations have always been satisfactory and cordial. Both the negotiating commission and the government as a whole have been dealing with the demarcation issue in a very patriotic manner."

Democratic Action CEN Begins Its Examination Today

Today, Democratic Action's [AD] National Executive Committee [CEN] will make its first analysis of the documents submitted by the government concerning the negotiations with Colombia to demarcate marine and submarine areas.

Yesterday in Miraflores, shortly after he had met with President Herrera Campins, Gonzalo Barrios remarked: "If the agreement can be signed immediately because there is consensus, there is no reason to waste time."

Barrios, Alejandro Izaguirre, Reinaldo Leandro Mora, Arturo Hernandez Grisanti and Simon Alberto Consalvi comprised the AD delegation which conversed with the president and received the report from the Venezuelan negotiating commission.

The white party announced that it would make its studies and request all the pertinent supplementary information.

After the meeting, Senator Barrios made statements, but refused to express in-depth views concerning the matter.

"I don't think that it is very important," he remarked, when one of the newsmen asked him his personal opinion concerning the present status of the talks between the two countries.

He claimed: "We must consider that the Venezuelan negotiators have done a good job, and we cannot doubt their patriotism and the good faith that they have shown during the course of the talks.

"If there is consensus, if the public reaches the conclusion that the draft settlement is honorable and feasible, we too shall give our support."

The AD president did not indicate how long it would take that organization to establish its position regarding the documents supplied by the government.

"What procedures will AD follow in this matter?"

"I can tell you that we shall carry out our plan, which consists of informing the CEN first, and then the parliamentary faction."

"Is an agreement with Colombia imminent?"

"I would not dare to express a view on the matter. I think that any statement in one direction or another would be very indiscreet, because there are still many views to seek and many reactions to await."

"In the event that the demarcation is not achieved this time, should the talks continue?"

"Of course, until the issue is settled, it would be ideal to be able to continue talking."

In response to another question, he stressed the fact that, "Up until now, we have thought that they (the Venezuelan negotiators) have done a very good job, that they have acted very skillfully, and that it is to be hoped that the results of that effort will be positive."

"Could not the position of the retired military who have published newspaper articles cause a certain concern in the country or among the Armed Forces?"

"Well, that is a view that you may have obtained among the Armed Forces or on the street; I have a personal opinion, just as you do...."

"Are there political conditions in the country conducive to the signing of the agreement?"

"There has always been a great deal of sensitivity among the public concerning this issue, whenever the settlement has been attempted. But it all depends on the nature of the settlement. Once the public learns about it, or becomes familiar with the draft, and the background and the consequences of a lack of settlement are explained, then it is very likely that there will be consensus, so that there will be no cause for major differences."

"Should the demarcation be signed now?"

"That is a lesser, secondary point. I repeat, it all depends. If the study of the issue and the view expressed, as well as the effect that familiarity with the draft has on public opinion, show that there is consensus, then there is no reason to propose nor advocate an extension of the talks."

Gonzalo Barrios did not reject the possibility of the appointment of a special committee in AD to analyze the draft.

And, in the concluding portion of his statements, he noted that the white party leaders had discussed generalities involving the matter with President Herrera.

"The concrete material is contained in the documentation that has been given to us and that will be made public."

MAS, MEP and URD Will Study It Carefully

Upon receiving from the president of the republic the report from the negotiating commission dealing with the Colombian-Venezuelan dispute, the top-ranking leaders of the MAS [Movement for Socialism], URD [Democratic Republican Union] and MEP [People's Electoral Movement] parties stated that they would study it carefully, in order to establish a definitive position.

Those political leaders also repudiated some statements opposing the agreement between the two countries, which they described as "jingoist and chauvinist."

These leaders were received by the head of state, Dr Luis Herrera Campins, and the minister of foreign affairs, Dr Alberto Zambrano, at Miraflores Palace.

The democratic consultation concerning the dispute began at 1200 hours, and was attended by the leaders of all the nation's parties. The first to arrive were those from COPEI, followed by those from AD and, subsequently, those from MAS, URD and MEP. During the evening, those from PCV [Communist Party of Venezuela], Vanguard and MIR [Movement of the Revolutionary Left] were received.

MAS

Senator Pompeyo Marquez and Deputy Teodoro Petkoff, the MAS secretary general and president, respectively, reported on the discussion with the president.

Marquez disclosed that they were given the letters which the foreign minister sent to the president and that from the chairman of the negotiating commission to the foreign minister, as well as the maps showing the demarcations.

he said that they would take those documents to the members of his party's leadership to be analyzed, and that an opinion would be expressed later.

"We take advantage of this occasion to say two things: First, we are opposed to the feeling of hatred for the Colombian people that has arisen; and, second, we are also advocates of an agreement with Colombia on the most reasonable terms, wherein the interests of the nation, and its sovereignty, are fully protected."

The MAS secretary general expressed the view that, in the friendly relations with Colombia, there should be a discussion of a group of situations, including the development on the border strip, such as the shipping on rivers, and Venezuela's rights to compensation stipulated in other treaties, which should be brought to the negotiating table immediately after an agreement has been signed or not signed.

URD

In attendance representing the Democratic Republican Union were Humberto Bartoli and Simon Antoni Pavan, its president and secretary general, respectively.

Senator Antoni Pavan stated that they would study the report from the negotiating commission carefully, and gave assurance that his party would decide on the issue in a manner "which is most beneficial to the nation."

"Without suspicious jingoism, and also without the disarmament of a soft position that might prompt us to make concessions "

"Does URD favor reaching an agreement with Colombia at the present time?"

"We have always believed that an agreement with Colombia would be good and beneficial. As for the occasion, we shall study it. But what I mean to say is this: the occasion of any type of negotiation is contingent on its content, and not the time when it takes place. If the content is bad, the occasion will always be bad; and if the content is good, the occasion will be good."

MEP

The president and secretary general of MEP, Drs Luis Beltran Prieto Figueroa and Jesus Angel Paz Galarraga, respectively, were the last to be received at the afternoon session. They were accompanied by Dr Alvaro Silva Calderon.

When Dr Prieto was asked about the MEP's opinion of the report, his reply was as follows:

"MEP cannot have proud thoughts when the president, in receiving us, did so privately. The issue is one of a very special nature, and no show must be made of it. We received the report from the president; we shall study it carefully, and offer our views, which we shall announced to the president through the foreign minister of the republic."

The MEP leader added that the interests of the nation will at all times take precedence over the interests of the party and its leaders.

"What is your opinion of the statements opposing the agreement that have been made by certain sectors?"

"Well, everyone has his own point of view. Ours is different. It is our judgment that the matter should be studied and that if it is possible to reach an agreement that will benefit the country's interests, it should be signed."

Vice Admiral (ret) Larrazabal: 'I Share the Manifesto of the Retired Military'

The former president of the Government Junta, Vice Adm (ret) Wolfgang Larrazabal, expressed solidarity with the content of the manifesto from a group of retired military men, particularly with regard to the view of "not a millimeter of the Gulf of Venezuela to Colombia."

He said: "We military in retirement are Venezuelans, and we feel like Venezuelans. I join them, because the fact is that we must all feel together in our own devotion to Venezuela."

"Do you share their opinion?"

"Yes, I share their opinion."

"Even that related to the claim 'not a millimeter of the Gulf of Venezuela to Colombia'?"

"I don't think that this is under discussion." He repeated: "I don't think that this is something under discussion."

He explained: "It seems to me that what is being done is really new, and will lead us safely to consider our universal position. In other words, when the people know what is confronting them and when the people are informed, then they are a people who can see, and that is important."

"Do you share the theory of an agreement with Colombia?"

"I think that what is important to Venezuela, Colombia and every nation in the world is that we live in peace, with the intention of becoming developed. This is what is being sought, and I believe that the individuals directly involved in this should have that view."

"Do you think that an agreement can be reached with Colombia on the basis of the report from the negotiating commission?"

"For the present, I hope that this report will fulfill my aspirations for Venezuela, and I hope that it will be such that Venezuela will have what belongs to it, and Colombia will have what belongs to it, and that we shall live in peace."

2909
CSO: 3010

SMUGGLING OF HONDURAN CATTLE TO EL SALVADOR, GUATEMALA

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 9 Oct 80 p 30

[Text]Tegucigalpa--Smuggling of live cattle to El Salvador and Guatemala has continued to constitute one of the prime sources of revenue for a group of individuals who supposedly count upon the complicity of the authorities who are responsible for watching over the region that borders on those countries.

Cattle dealers in the region have reported that the disappearance of heifers, young bulls, and other types of milk and meat animals constitutes a regular activity that relies on tacit indifference on the part of the authorities, especially the police.

It is estimated that a monthly average of 1 to 12 thousand animals illegally leave the country, with Guatemala and El Salvador as their destination, through the notorious "blind spots."

According to the cattle dealers, "the strange thing is that on more than one occasion we have indicated the blind spots to the authorities and have told them which days are most propitious for an en masse capture of cattle thieves in full operation, but the authorities apparently consider those reports as groundless."

Moreover, better prices are offered per head of cattle in El Salvador and Guatemala than in Honduras, an incentive which could be worth the risk of smuggling the animals.

The cattle dealers said that "the smuggling of live cattle has become a standard operation in the western zone and one of the most lucrative businesses for those who allow the animals to go out of the country."

8255
CSO: 3010

FAILURE OF DISARMAMENT TALKS TRACED TO WESTERN WEAKNESS

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 25 Sep 80 p 6

[Commentary: "Impossible Negotiation"]

[Text] Everything that is done to advance the cause of disarmament will always be considered commendable, even when we assume that disarmament, by itself, will not bring about world peace, since disarmament is not the precursor of peace, but on the contrary, its necessary consequence. In the pathetic dialogue of our times people have come to imagine, against all logic, that a limitation of the growing military might of the world would lead to the so longed for and so elusive goal of world pacification.

It is true of course that the superpowers and even the states which, because of their technological and industrial development, have some forces, may attempt to limit their own production and export of military parts and equipment. But to think that this will help to bring about peace is just a fantasy. The commitment to disarmament in Europe during the period between the two world wars, which included the courageous efforts of Aristide Briand, could not avoid the final cataclysm.

The reason behind these reflections is the letter sent by the chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, Helmut Schmidt, to the Soviet leader, Leonid Brezhnev, urging the control of arms production. There is no doubt, nor should there be any, that the attitude of the German politician is inspired by his strong desire to moderate the opposing parties, and even to act as a possible mediator between them, because of the alarming tensions existing between communism, directed from Moscow, and the free nations of the west.

But what is in doubt, and strikes even the least attentive observer, is the effectiveness of this posture. If we accept the statement that disarmament is not a cause but the result of peace, it still remains to be learned whether the communist superpower has any real desire to disarm itself. In light of recent experience, the answer is obvious and unfortunately negative.

Soviet behavior, ever since the Helsinki agreements were signed 5 years ago, has been one of insincere promises of detente, a detente which was broken in reality by an aggressive and intolerant policy, as was shown so crudely both in Afghanistan and in Cambodia. In Afghanistan it was a direct aggression by means of the arrogant invasion of its armies; in Cambodia, the aggression was both indirect and calculated, by means of its obedient Vietnamese satellite.

Faced with this insincerity which became apparent almost at the time the accords were being signed, the western reaction has been negligent and naive, weak and vacillating. This was shown by the wishy-washy attitude, concealed under the guise of hoping to maintain a shaky status quo, displayed by the leaders of the liberal nations of Europe, including the chancellor of the Federal Republic himself. The results, which are an affront to the conscience of humanity, are now clear: the invasion by the communist forces of sovereign nations which were undefended, and have now been subjugated by force. These nations had no other recourse but to appeal to this sluggish conscience, because of their lack of military preparedness. This recourse, to put it in legal terms, was abandoned within the community of nations because of indecision and a lack of courage on the part of those responsible for making a decision.

This western weakness to which we refer, has just been demonstrated with the refusal of Belgium to take part with its troops--very few in number, incidentally--in the maneuvers to be conducted by NATO. No matter what may be the reasons behind this desertion, which the Belgian leaders are trying to explain with pretexts that do not hold water, such as the military coup in Turkey or socialist pressures, the fact is that the principle of solidarity that has reigned in this western defense alliance until now has been broken. When to this fact we add the paradoxical circumstance that the Atlantic Council, the supreme organ of the alliance, is to be chaired by the Belgian representative, then we have an accurate measure of the lack of confidence anyone can have in the defense mechanisms that the free world has available to counter a Soviet aggression. We should also mention the recent decision by Denmark and Holland to reduce their economic contribution to the support of this military organization.

So in light of what we have explained here, the west can expect little from this negotiation between the chancellor of the FRG and the Soviet leader. No one who displays the weakness and vacillation shown by the west can negotiate anything. The winner will always be the one who, like the Soviet Union, has brought to the conference table the unequal weight of its "fait accompli."

7679
CSO: 3010

FINANCIAL SITUATION TERMED SOLUBLE WITHOUT IMF MEDIATION

Buenos Aires LA PRENSA in Spanish 28 Sep 80 p 8

[Text] In a climate that is pessimistic about the evolution of the world economy in the first half of the 1980's, the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank is meeting in Washington. High inflation rates, slow growth in production, disturbing recessionary trends in the industrialized nations, and a decline in the rate of growth of the volume of world trade are the main prospects, which we have already analyzed in our editorial on the IMF report.

The representatives of the 140 member nations are preparing to discuss not only the world's economic situation and the policies appropriate for dealing with it, but also the allocation of a broader role to the Fund in the adjustment and financing of balance of payments. The Fund is also prepared to take a more active role in the recycling of petrodollars and to use its great resources in a manner both flexible and prudent.

The International Monetary Fund was created in 1943 in Bretton Woods. At the end of World War II, monetary stability was considered essential for the economic recovery of an impoverished world. But because of earlier experience, which had led to the abandoning of the gold standard in the 1930's by most nations, a more elastic mechanism was needed: one also based on gold in the final instance, with fixed parities that could not be changed beyond a small percentage without authorization from the Fund. In summary, the new monetary system was based on gold through the dollar exchange standard (convertible at the rate of $35 per troy ounce); its fundamental objective was monetary stability with parities of the exchange rates appropriate for the level of economic activity, jobs, and prices in each of the internal economies, as well as a stimulus for international trade.

The death certificate for the monetary system created at Bretton Woods was written when the growing deficit of the balance of payments of the United States forced President Nixon in 1971 to suspend convertibility. The organization survived the collapse of the system which it had been created to manage, and its directors set some other objectives. Meanwhile, the world is still waiting, in the expression of a noted English economist, for "the appearance of a new Keynes who will discover a monetary system that will do for monetary stability what he did for unemployment: eliminate forever the need to accept crises which had been considered inevitable and beyond the reach of government power."

The main aspiration of the Fund, repeated in a series of reports, is to make SDR's [Special Drawing Rights]--a paper gold created by the Fund at an insignificant cost as a new reserve currency--the main international reserve asset. This, shall we say, unrealistic purpose is very far from being achieved, as we see from the fact that on 30 June 1980, according to International Financial Statistics, the total reserves in the possession of the central banks and other institutions, measured in SDR's (gold, reserve position in the Fund, currencies, and SDR's), although gold was valued at only 35 SDR's per ounce, came to 323.425 billion, while the SDR's themselves, the paper currency, only came to 16.058 billion.

We should point out, along with the issues that will be discussed in the forthcoming meeting of the Board of Governors, that the world has not lost its confidence in the advantages of fixed parities, flexible only within suitable percentages when relative changes in the economic position of two or more countries so require, and with the prior approval of the members of the monetary system. This is shown by the European Community's creation of the EMS [European Monetary System], which was put in practice in 1979 to help monetary stability on the continent; it consists of a requirement that the participants not allow variations of more than 2.25 percent around the parity of bilateral rates between the parties to the agreement, the creation of the ECU [European Currency Unit], by using a basket of nine Community currencies as the center of the system, and the expansion of already established credit facilities. All this requires, of course, great internal price stability in each of the participating countries.

It should not be expected that the problems which today afflict the Argentine economy, which have been caused fundamentally by internal monetary and fiscal policies, and not by repercussions from the international economic situation, should be solved or alleviated by the expansion of the amount and terms of the credit lines of the Fund or by an increase granted by the Fund in the overall allocation of the Special Drawing Rights, according to the decisions adopted in the 35th meeting of the Board of Governors. Everything suggests that the largest facilities will be granted to developing countries that are having acute balance of payments problems because of the oil price increases. Argentina has been reluctant to turn to the IMF seeking conditional credits, and has done so only in very critical situations. The last time it did so was in 1976, and from that time on the private capital market has been Argentina's main support for covering its imbalances in its current account or to increase the amount of its international reserves.

It seems more reasonable to think that the Argentine economic crisis may be overcome or remedied by means of the present system based on the de facto dollar standard with flexible exchange rates, but with a more realistic exchange parity, with a rate of expansion of the economy that is not incompatible with the present protectionist policies of the industrialized countries against the developing nations, and with a substantial cutback in public spending.

Consequently, the cost in currency caused by the convening of excessively large delegations of public officials and Central Bank delegates, official and private bank presidents, and financial executives of some enterprises, who are preparing to visit Washington, is unjustified. Unless, of course, the purpose is to make use of this opportunity to talk with members of the private international bank in order to increase the flow of short-term capital with free exchange, at a cost that will quickly come to bear, through the debt service charges, on the weakened structure of our balance of payments, supported largely by a level of reserves created with temporary capital of these characteristics.

7679
CSO: 3010

INDUSTRIAL SECTOR TO BE FURTHER HIT BY NEW TARIFF REDUCTIONS

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 2 Oct 80 p 14

[Article by Luis Domenianni]

[Text] Resolution 1670, released 2 days ago by the Ministry of the Economy, strikes one more blow against our national industry, in this case an unexpected blow. It calls for an almost massive tariff cut by means of the establishment of new concessions for foreign producers in competition with their Argentine counterparts here within Argentine territory.

It is true that the 10 July message issued by the minister of the economy, Jose Alfredo Martinez de Hoz, had announced that "by resolution of the Ministry of the Economy, Resolution 1634/78 will be restructured." This resolution set the schedule of tariff reductions to be followed until 1984.

Nonetheless, before continuing this analysis, there are two points that should be clarified here. In the first place, when the tariff schedule was drawn up, the economic authorities termed it "the rules of the game" on which Argentine industries could rely as a guideline to carry out their reconversion programs, and so on. Just a few months later, Resolution 6/79 established, in direct contradiction with the earlier guidelines, a sort of penalty by means of quick tariff reductions for those sectors that were increasing their local prices above what the department of commerce deemed wise.

This new legal instrument establishes a new tariff reduction with few exceptions; this reduction is justified in official eyes by "the scattering" of the tariff regulations, but it is absolutely unwarranted in the opinion of those who naively thought that Resolution 1634/78 created valid "rules of the game."

In the second place, we should question the justification for all this haste, which is certainly unusual. It happened that in his 10 July message, Dr Martinez de Hoz announced that a law would be promulgated that would repeal eight extra-tariff charges and that, by a later resolution, the incidence of these charges would not be included in the effective protection except when this inclusion did not exceed a maximum tariff of 55 points.

This law was not promulgated. And there is some reason for that. Probably because the other national government organizations which had to take part in its promulgation did not agree with it. That doesn't matter. The Ministry of the Economy is erasing the code which it yesterday wrote with its own hand. And it has decided that if the extra-tariff charges can not be eliminated, the tariffs should be reduced.

Even though the press has not yet been given a complete list with the new schedule, the following table speaks eloquently enough so that more than one industrialist will be worried. But that doesn't matter. Perhaps some naive person may even bet that in 1984--as ministry sources maintain--there will be a single 20-point tariff.

Import Tariffs (in Percentages]

Items	Old Rate	New Rate
Clothes	60	48
Leather bags	60	48
Imitation leather clothes	60	48
Rugs	60	48
Handkerchieves	55	37
Sports shoes	55	48
2 HP air conditioning units	60	44
Home freezers
Kitchen fans	60	44
Vacuum cleaners and similar appliances	45	39
Color TV	55	52
Black and white TV	68	56
Radio/stereo systems	68	56
Tractors	45	39
Motorcycles	78	58
Firearms and targets	60	46

7679
CSO: 3010

SHARP DROP IN DEMAND FOR FARM MACHINERY REPORTED

Buenos Aires CONVICCION in Spanish 4 Oct 80 p 14

[Article by Osvaldo R. Kornblihtt]

[Text] Since January 1980 farm machinery sales have been dropping at a cumulative average of 10 percent a month. Because of this situation, the manufacturers of plows, harrows, harvesters, balers, silos, etc. met yesterday in the city of Pergamino in order to decide what action to take about what they termed "the total lack of response on the part of the economic officials."

One of the causes behind this meeting in Buenos Aires province of the Coordinating Committee of the Farm Machinery Industry is the knowledge of the request sent by the undersecretary for agrarian affairs to the Department of Commerce, asking that import duties for schedule NADI 84.24 (which covers the capital goods mentioned) be "brought up to date."

The Coordinating Committee consists of representatives of the Argentine Chambers of Farm Machinery Manufacturers of Buenos Aires, Rosario, and Cordoba, and the Association of Harvester Manufacturers of Rafaela. Sources from these groups said that no one is in any doubt about the intention to reduce tariffs for machinery not produced in Argentina to zero. But the problem is that the parameters used in deciding what is and what is not manufacturered here are capricious. One example: Argentina uses and manufactures plow grills in the 2.80-meter size, while Brazil manufactures the 3.20-meter size. A certificate of need for the larger size could bring them into Argentina without paying any tariffs.

In this way, "added and subsidiary value" is being imported to the detriment of a national industry that is perfectly capable of meeting such requirements. If it does not make plows of this size, it is because the demand, to date, has not warranted their manufacture.

Like the tractor industry, whose last four plants have closed or are about to close, the manufacturers of farm machinery are facing a critical situation, which has a number of origins, but which is directly related to the purchasing power of the rural producer.

The truth of this statement may be proved by comparing the price indices for farm machinery in 1980 with those of 1975. The decline in relative prices has still not enabled potential purchasers to renovate their machinery or to enlarge their stock, since their income and earnings have been seriously hurt in recent years. "The sector," said one person attending the Pergamino meeting, "is being hurt by a mistaken and stubborn policy in the area of exchange parities and tax pressure. These policies, plus the high financing costs, all combine to do the maximum damage to the farm machinery industry."

Perhaps no market has suffered from the decline in demand as much as the farm machinery (including tractors) industry. In addition to these causes, we should also mention that the tax deductions allowed for the purchase of farm machinery have practically ceased to exist.

7679
CSO: 3010

PRESIDENT SEEKS TO CONTINUE DEMOCRATIZATION, FOSTER DEVELOPMENT

Santiago ERCILLA in Spanish 14 Aug 80 pp 8-12

[Interview with Brazilian President Joao B. Figueiredo, in Chile; date not given]

[Text] Beginning today, the three-day official visit which Joao Baptista Figueiredo, president of Brazil, will make to our country will be rich in events. Accompanied by seven government ministers and preceded a few months ago by Minister of Foreign Affairs Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro, the political leader of the largest nation on the continent heads an embassy of far-reaching importance. During his stay, he and the officials in his entourage will make a series of agreements concerning such areas as tourism, defense, science, energy and transportation in addition to trade, which, it has been predicted, could increase bilateral exchanges to some $1 billion this year.

The visit, which fits into the framework of the principles of Brazilian diplomacy -- "our goal is not a solitary goal" -- follows a recent trip made by Figueiredo to Argentina. It is also a gesture of solidarity with a political dimension: Although "Brazil neither aspires to nor accepts" hemispheric leadership, its weight as an emerging power counts and counts a great deal. Its Ministry of Foreign Affairs maintains the principle of nonintervention in the internal affairs of other nations and for South America, plays the card of a "consensus" which, aside from making it regain its excellence, guarantees the best relationship between countries. The three days will make history, it is said.

[Question] A number of international analysts, including Richard Nixon in his book "The Real War," predict that Brazil will be an economic power before the end of the century. What effect would this have on Latin America and what specific projects have been outlined along these lines by its government?

[Answer] I do not believe that the word "power" describes the objectives of economic well-being of the Brazilian people. Brazil wants to grow economically within its own borders because it intends for its people, without discrimination, to enjoy adequate and dignified standards of living, social welfare, access to housing, health, educational and cultural advantages. Clearly, economic growth does not automatically make social welfare. Through adequate channels of expression, society must define its demands and purposes.

Our goal is not a solitary goal. I believe that many of our definitions come about because we are Latin America and as such, we are part of the system of values of Western civilization. In addition, as developing countries, we are learning that the effort to grow has undeniable international dimensions. In certain cases, those dimensions have been harmful to developing countries, as witnessed by the deterioration of the terms of trade. In regional integration and cooperation efforts where Latin America has set expressive examples, the international dimension must have very positive connotations.

Brazil's economic growth fits into this picture of regional cooperation. We want to grow without selfishness or open or veiled intensions of gaining power and domination. On the contrary, we also want to grow in order to share experiences at all levels of the economic system. Joint actions on a bilateral level, the support we give to subregional associations and to integration movements, are examples of the openness of our economy. We are suffering from many of the difficulties and imbalances affecting our Latin American brothers. Furthermore, we are not equal economies. Some have specific advantages in certain areas. The variety of experience and potential is a Latin American resource that must be developed on behalf of our peoples. Solidarity is fundamental so that this may take place successfully.

Cooperation Without Intervention

[Question] Specifically in the Southern Cone of America, what role is played by the Argentine-Brazilian rapprochement, once the dispute over the dams on the Upper Parana is settled?

[Answer] I believe that understanding and cooperation between Brazil and Argentina, as between all South American countries, is an essential conditions so that we might attain the shared objectives of progress and well-being. Fortunately, our region has considerable potential for development. Our countries have great natural resources and the enterprise of our people is important. The vocation for cooperation in the region is obvious, illustrated by the multiplicity of contacts for the completion of joint projects. The constructive and fruitful relations we maintain with Argentina are part of this trend toward an intensification of ties between countries in the region, based on the identification of common interests and the conviction that through solidary action, we might more easily meet the just aspirations for prosperity of our peoples.

[Question] Itamaraty was an example of international diplomacy. Specifically, what does this line of foreign policy consist of and what concrete results does Brazil owe to this policy?

[Answer] The basic principles underlying Brazilian foreign policy are well-known. We have defended the principles of nonintervention, the peaceful solution of disputes, self-determination, respect for treaties, in short, those principles on which harmonious coexistence between nations is based. The contemporary expression of these principles is the adoption of a universalist attitude in which we have sought, in a balanced way, to open up the range of our international coexistence. We believe that a just international order, free of tensions, must be based on patterns of respect for national diversities. Solutions of power and strength are inadequate, even harmful, for the dramatic situation of the problems that the community of nations is experiencing today.

One of the most consistent results we have obtained with diplomatic work is, I believe, greater reliability of the nations as international partners at the most varied levels and forums, in bilateral, regional and multilateral relations. I do not wish to dwell on this aspect because I would be praising our own cause, but I would emphasize one element: I am specifically referring to the fact that our diplomacy has consistently sought to integrate principles and action. What we say corresponds to what we do and this creates confidence in our international action. Furthermore, I believe that that action incorporates continuing values removed from passing internal circumstances and situations. We believe in our values and our philosophy of diplomatic action because we believe that they express our nationality. They are the complete expression of what the Brazilian people are today. For that reason, and also because they express the ideal of the creation of a more just world order free of tension and force, I believe that Brazil has a solid, reliable basis for international coexistence.

Atomic Power

[Question] Apparently, one of the most difficult missions for your Ministry of Foreign Affairs is now linked to the Brazilian nuclear policy and its repercussions with respect to the United States and Germany. Is this related to the expectation of turning Brazil into a world power in the full sense of the term?

[Answer] I do not believe that the Brazilian nuclear program arouses any doubts or distrust in the international community. On the contrary, the idea that developing countries such as Brazil, in the face of the energy shortage and given the need for technological and scientific progress, have every right to develop alternative forms of energy guaranteeing the achievement of levels of progress in keeping with the rights of man is completely accepted. The program has no mysteries or ulterior motives. It simply seeks to guarantee a supply of energy compatible with our needs, in addition to promoting the country's scientific and technological development. It is rigorously peaceful.

Actually, Brazil has been a constant critic of the proliferation of nuclear weapons. We condemn the absurd situation of the international system, sustained by a precarious balance of terror, a situation in which international security is defined by an increase in quantity and quality of the most horrible weapons of destruction.

Consequently, our positions are clear with respect to disarmament. We signed and ratified the Tlatelolco Treaty and we accept the safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency concerning accords between Brazil and Germany. In addition, we believe that it is essential for developing nations to ensure their full access to modern technologies capable of stimulating and guaranteeing the economic needs of their peoples.

These are the reasons that totally remove the Brazilian nuclear program from the alleged objectives of power. Furthermore, the forms of international organization based on "powers" demonstrate how precarious they are at all levels: political, economic, scientific, and so on. We do not intend to repeat the trajectories of other countries and we discard the simplistic arguments that make equality a matter of certain economic indexes and certain international actions. Brazil does not define itself internationally as a power.

Our diplomacy follows other paths aimed at lasting and just solutions to the complex international problems facing us.

Domestic Opening

[Question] Regarding domestic policy, what repercussions have there been from the ideological opening that has occurred in recent years, from the political amnesty and the return of famous opponents of the current regime in Brazil?

[Answer] I believe that amnesty played a fundamental role in the Brazilian democratization process. The measure was a valid one because the acceptance of divergent thought and ideas means that the conditions exist so that all Brazilians may fully participate in the political arena. It puts an end to distorsions and truly opens up the possibility of coexistence of all Brazilians, without any limits or reservations. Moreover, amnesty showed that our intention was real, solid and broad and presumed solidarity and a consensus. Amnesty pointed to the willingness to create a truly pluralistic society in which debate would be free and diversity would be represented through legitimate and effective channels.

Amnesty, the formation of more authentic parties, an increase in the forms of social expression and freedom of the press are some of the components of the Brazilian democratic process and the clear intention of my government is to establish it.

Finally, concerning the opening, I would emphasize that in any democracy, especially when there are strong contrasts in a developing country, there will be some dissent and contradiction. It is part of the game to coexist with divergencies and as we are showing, we are willing to do so.

[Question] Has your own political thought undergone any kind of evolution since your position with respect to the regime of Getulio Vargas up to the present, specifically with respect to your present post?

[Answer] In order to define a long trajectory of political apprenticeship and struggle in one word, I would say that throughout the years, my thought has only evolved in the sense of affirming my democratic faith.

[Question] For you, what is democracy and how do you define it with respect to Brazil?

[Answer] There is no Brazilian definition of democracy. Democracy is universally recognied by certain attributes of the political system ranging from the separation of powers to the guarantee of civil rights. Another factor is that the liberal illusion of the merely political democracy must be overcome and measures of an economic and social order must be incorporated into the concept so as to guarantee the citizen full use of his democratic rights. What is national in nature is the adaptation of these institutions to the economic, social and cultural circumstances of every country and above all, their endogenous generation.

Institutional frameworks that are abstractly defined, without any correlation between the principles and reality of the country are neither effective nor lasting. As I have often said, it is obvious that political democracy does not presume any specific performance of the economy because this could be an excuse to postpone the establishment of democracy forever. On the contrary, I believe that within the very dynamics of the political debate, in the very dynamics of the affirmation of political democracy, the economic element gradually takes shape until it becomes a kind of subject of political debate. In this way, the constituent elements of the democratic ideal are perfected and fully achieved.

Finally, democracy means dynamic movement, constant adaptation, social purpose, consensus, an ever greater openness of the political space. It means participation, acceptance of pluralism and differences in society. It means responsibility for the very fate of society, shared by every one of its members. It means freedom in its many forms and scopes, with the limitation of the consensus and the ethics of conduct determined by society. It is an evolution guided by principles, but attentive to the needs of objectivity and rationality.

[Question] The well-known "Brazilian economic miracle" has suffered heavy blows in recent years. At least chronologically, they coincided with the political opening of Brazil. What relationship do you see between the two?

[Answer] The time of the "Brazilian miracle" combined a series of favorable circumstances that are not now repeated. At any rate, it is important to establish that for me, there is no necessary relationship between economics and politics. The performance of the economy does not necessarily correspond to any specific performance of the political system. I believe that the relationships are more subtle and unexpected than what the old formulas recommended.

Once we have accepted these premises, we would have to go toward a more circumstantial analysis of the links between politics and economics, or the way in which they interact. I would recall that with the economic difficulties that are obvious, there should be an increase in social pressure, the natural result of inflationary phenomena and others.

A simple (and simplistic) solution would point to more political repression in the illusion that once the pressure are eliminated, the experts would better be able to effect an "economic cure." But that is a fallacy and for at least two reasons. First of all, economic policy measures are essentially political measures and they are negotiable. Consequently, debate, the free play of ideas, is essential for the articulation of the best policy, the best measures. Second, the systematic imposition of economic measures not based on a consensus does not lead to good results. One cannot think about fighting inflation, a fight that inevitably demands sacrifice, without the creation of confidence in and the credibility of the government.

[Question] The current economic situation in your country is demonstrating that to date, the measures adopted did not have the necessary effects. How does your government intend to face the problems affecting the Brazilian economy?

[Answer] It is not that the measures did not have an effect. The fact is that a series of outside factors beyond our control intervened and had a negative impact on the results of the measures. We do not have a rigid program. The ways of fighting the problems affecting us must necessarily be flexible and agile. In this way, with realism and determination we are facing the problems and we have the broad and mature participation of the Brazilian people in the common effort to solve them.

Within certain limitations and as long as the Brazilian development process is not affected, it is inevitable that we will adopt economic measures to fight our balance of payment situation and the undesirable inflation rate, for example. I wish to emphasize that such measures have been and will be taken, always bearing in mind our concern not to affect the continuation and expansion of our growth rate and development.

[Question] According to some experts, the measures were not drastic enough and their effects are feared since they might cause a recession. What would you say about this?

[Answer] Indeed, as I previously stated, the measures adopted were not extreme ones, first of all because we deemed that despite the seriousness of the problems we are facing, we know their implications and are confident that we can solve them. Second, we are also anxious not to affect the country's development process. As long as possible -- and I believe we still have plenty of room -- we shall maintain our development programs in order to foster better living conditions for the Brazilian people.

[Question] What are the main objectives you wish to attain before leaving your post in 1984?

[Answer] To fulfill the objectives I have set since I took office as president of the republic. In short, to restore democracy and help improve the living conditions of the Brazilian people.

11,464
CSO: 8148 /0092

PRESS SPECULATING ON POSSIBLE CABINET CHANGES

Possible Dismissals Hinted

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 15 Oct 80 p 3

[Excerpt] No one confirmed anything at Planalto Palace. The usual sources could even deny it again but the truth is that between the end of this year and the beginning of the next, Gen Joao Figueiredo will make some changes in the ministries. Three, four or five, it matters little, however, as of the closing of the PDS [Social Democratic Party] national convention in the final days of November, one must remain alert: the president's intention is to kill two birds with one stone, offering a greater share in government to the party which supports him in Congress, in that way seeking to popularize his system of forces and at the same time divesting himself of some ministers considered weaker or less supportive of major directives and decisions.

According to today's rumors--and there is the reservation that tomorrow there may be others--the political ministers who have qualities of leadership and have voter following will not leave the present government team. Therefore, if no other reasons exist, Minister of Justice Ibrahim Abi-Ackel, Minister of Social Welfare Jair Soares and Minister of Mines and Energy Cesar Cals appear to be safe.

To opine as to who may leave may be unfair and dangerous, it being worth saying only that the economic-financial command (read Delfim Netto) will not be changed, although in the area near to the minister of planning bombs may explode, the first of them on the aircraft of Minister of Finance Ernane Galveas.

"The ministers belong to the president. Only he has the authority to appoint and dismiss, up to now no one has heard him speak about who may be dismissed and who may remain. The rest is conclusion." Despite this routine cliche, repeated at Planalto every day, the minireform will come in its time and with its objectives.

Without specifying restrictions, one must pay attention to a parallel episode. Talking with close friends, President Joao Figueiredo did not avoid showing a certain generalized irritation at the actions of his ministers toward the budget and the necessary cuts in the expenditures of each of them. He said that only four of them diligently complied with the budget of the present year and when asked who they were, he answered: The Ministers of the Army, Navy, Air and Armed Forces Staff, because being subject to military discipline, they never exceeded their limits of expansion. All the rest either increased or begged for increases in the allocations destined for their respective administrations, always with a thousand and one arguments of social and economic needs. Even acknowledging that the ministers by wanting more money sought to help his government, the president could not refrain from showing his impatience, particularly when he referred to the new litany already started with respect to the next budget. History serves to show that friendship has no place in business. In other words, the president will have his reservations with respect to the precipitation of some and the impertinence of others, factors which at the proper time will weigh in the balance.

To learn who will be a minister within the PDS, or even outside of it, will be as difficult a mission as finding out who will cease to be a minister. In the official party, providing it does not become involved every day in abilities and capabilities, there should be people with the qualities for being forwarded to the president because of proven administrative experience and potential and also because of political and popular support. The idea, it is worth repeating, is to give more strength to the PDS so that it can maintain or even broaden its electoral prospects, since 1982 is almost upon us and a defeat of the government would be the worst thing that could happen to the plans for institutional improvement.

Galveas Denies Dismissal

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 17 Oct 80 p 16

[Text] Sao Paulo (O GLOBO)--Minister of Finance Ernane Galveas said yesterday that the wave of rumors on the possible dismissal of Central Bank President Carlos Langoni demands a vehement statement from government authority: "It is fitting, before the most representative organs of the Brazilian press, to officially and categorically deny the dismissal of the Central Bank president. Those rumors are unfounded and I can only view them as a form of absolutely unnecessary provocation. The appointment or dismissal of his trusted men is within the authority of President Figueiredo and no other," said Galveas.

The minister of finance, who attended a lunch given by the Brazil-United States Chamber of Commerce, questioned as to whether he was "superstitious," said he was "like all the Brazilian people." Galveas did not lose his good humor when a reporter asked him whether his superstition did not reach such a degree that it could attribute ill omens to his coming to the annual lunch of the Chamber because last year it was one of the last official acts of then Minister of Finance Karlos Rischbieter.

"I am superstitious but not that much," replied Galveas.

Inflation

The minister of finance said that the prefixing of the expansion of 45-percent in credits will not be revised and that no "developed and aware" banker wants a broadening of the limit because the financial market knows that the fight against inflation requires sacrifices.

"All the banks and financial institutions should obey that limit, even the Bank of Brazil," he said.

Galveas declared that the monetary policy continues to be restrictive and fiscal policy will remain austere in order to reduce the overall demands of the economy, discarding the possibility that the limit to the expansion of credit could be revised to provide financing for alcohol-fueled automobiles.

"The progress and future good operation of alcohol-fueled automobiles does not depend on artificial conditions such as that," he said.

With respect to the forecast by Chase Manhattan Bank that Brazilian inflation in 1981 could reach rates of 150 percent, the minister of finance said that he was surprised at the forecast because the technicians and analysts of the bank have the means for making a more exact study of the Brazilian economy.

"There is no reason for pessimisms of this type. In recent weeks I have talked with tens of the most important international bankers, who unanimously show a complete confidence in the administration of the economy and the foreign debt by the economic authorities of the country," said Galveas.

Galveas thinks that the failure of the attempt to obtain financing from the Canadian Imperial Bank does not mean that the international financial credibility of Brazil is weakened by the imposition of higher "spreads."

"It was Brazil who withdrew the request for the loan because market conditions were becoming difficult because of the Iran-Iraq war," he added.

The minister of finance said that there will be no problems for the country in reestablishing its exchange reserves, which by the end of the year should reach nearly $7 billion.

Rumors on Dismissals Continue

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 16 Oct 80 p 15

[Text] Brasilia--The press secretary of the Presidency of the Republic, Alexandre Garcia, yesterday refused to make any comment on recent statements by Minister of Finance Ernane Galveas, who said textually that the economic situation of the country was very bad. "We do not comment on statements by ministers," said the press secretary incisively, refusing to make an additional statement on the subject.

Among the advisers of the president of the republic there is the idea of the partial replacement of Figueiredo ministers who have been showing growing signs of a lack of coordination. Presidencial advisers revealed some days ago that in the economic area changes could take place in keeping with the presidential will and also with the policy practiced by Minister of Planning Antonio Delfim Neto. The decision to dismiss any minister shall always be made by the president, but there have been frequent expressions of discouragement with the work of some ministers among his advisors.

The Galveas case appears to be typical within this line of observation. The outcome of the inquiry on the sale of Companhia Vale do Rio Doce stock and the episode of the rerouting to Brasilia of the Varig DC-10, which makes the New York to Rio run, contributed to leaving the minister in a vulnerable position. Yesterday morning, however, Galveas was at the Palace and dealt with administrative affairs of his position.

Advisers to the president admit that in coming months there will be a change of some ministers, although there are no specifics as to the date on which this ministerial rearrangement could take place. Some parameters indicate that between now and March the government should rearrange its ministries in keeping with the wishes of the presidential advisers, who normally reflect the thinking of President Figueiredo himself.

Central Bank President Speaks

Rio de Janeiro O GLOBO in Portuguese 15 Oct 80 p 19

[Text] Brasilia--"I am learning to live with the rumors," said the president of the Central Bank, Carlos Langoni, as he left the bank yesterday at 1925 to attend the cocktail party celebrating the swearing in of the new leaders of the National Confederation of Industries (CNI).

The president of the Central Bank argued that he refrained from going to the swearing-in ceremony scheduled for 1800, which was attended by the president of the republic, Joao Figueiredo, because he was detained in a meeting "with the secretary of finance of Minas Gerais," Marcio Vilela.

Langoni also did not keep an appointment yesterday morning with a lady journalist from the FINANCIAL TIMES or with the president of the Sao Paulo Mercantile Bank, Gastao Vidigal Baptista Pereira, who did not want to schedule a new appointment. Langoni went to Rio de Janeiro for the funeral of Senator Jesse Pinto Freira "a great personal friend."

Dismissal Rumors Rebutted

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 14 Oct 80 p 27

[Text] Against the entire wave of rumors existing yesterday, Minister of Finance Ernane Galveas and President of the Central Bank Carlos Langoni denied that they were resigning. After meeting on official business with the president at 1615, Galveas granted an interview to the press in his office, where he spoke at length on the decision of the Securities Commission [CVM] on the Vale case.

Galveas, who was out of the country for 20 days--first attending the meetings of the IMF and the World Bank, making contacts with bankers in Washington and New York and later in Santiago, Chile, accompanying the president of the republic, replied that "this is a decision of the president and not mine," when asked about leaving the ministry. "I have nothing to add on the subject," he added, very bothered by the question, which he would not answer for television.

He said his meeting with the president, to whom he reported on the results of the IMF and the IBRD meetings and the contacts he had with bankers, was "a routine office meeting." In addition to those subjects, he continued, he informed the president of the republic on the progress of fiscal and monetary policies. As he pointed out, the president asked him nothing about the unscheduled stop by Varig last Wednesday to drop him off at Brasilia so that he could continue on to Santiago, Chile in the presidential party.

At Planalto Palace, sought out by newsmen who wanted to know whether the minister of finance would be dismissed, Minister of the Mass Media Said Farhat replied: "Minister Galveas is holding an interview at the Ministry of Finance for the press now at 1730. Therefore, you gentlemen can obtain that information directly from him."

Langoni Also Denies It

President of the Central Bank Carlos Geraldo Langoni yesterday described the rumors that he is soon to leave his post as "a fantasy without any basis in fact." Langoni arrived from Rio de Janeiro at 1600 and refused to speak to newsmen. Early in the evening he met with Minister of Finance Ernane Galveas and the president of the Bank of Brazil, Oswaldo Collin.

Despite the denial by Langoni, advisers and technicians of the Central Bank did not hide their concerns over the possibility of a new change in the management of the bank after the reports published last weekend by the most diverse press organs. That is why they sought out newsmen yesterday to obtain more details.

Those technicians believe that speculations tend to continue as a result of the economic difficulties of the country, which are impossible to overcome in the short term. As has already happened with respect to speculations on the dismissal of ministers and other authorities, the majority of Central Bank advisers prefer to believe the theory that the rumors will come to nothing.

Within the policy of the gradual fight against inflation, Central Bank technicians point out that the present management has been managing to obtain good results in conducting the monetary and credit policy and they assert that the monetary and credit pattern this year is much more favorable than in 1979.

Neither do they accept the theory that the president or directors of the Central Bank will be affected by the outcome of the Vale case. According to those sources, the punishment doled out by the CVM to the president of the Securities Exchange of Rio de Janeiro, Fernando Carvalho, was the most proper possible and they challenge Carvalho to show the compromising recordings he says he has.

Speculation Rife in Brasilia

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 14 Oct 80 p 27

[Article by Carlos Chagas: "Four Days of Rumors and Speculation in Brasilia"]

[Text] Unleashed once more, the new rumors over the dismissal of Ernane Galveas and Carlos Langoni began Friday, survived the weekend, and yesterday reached their climax, agitating the entire Federal Capital until at 1800 in a collective interview, both denied the story and spoke on subjects within their purview.

In Congress, in ministerial corridors and in Planalto Palace itself, the most varied speculations merged, some even pointing to the case of the sale of Vale do Rio Doce stock as the main reason, others referring to the extreme irritation of President Joao Figueiredo because of the incident of the "hijacking" of the Varig aircraft, which while on its New York to Rio run found itself rerouted to Brasilia early Thursday morning at the request of the minister of finance so that he could get off here. There was talk of Galveas himself not wanting to remain in the job, as well as about the impossibility of the president of the Central Bank remaining in that case.

By morning, after the routine meeting with the president of the republic, there was a meeting in General Golbery do Couto e Silva's office attended by Minister of Planning Delfim Netto, SNI [National Intelligence Service] Chief Gen Octavio Medeiros and Chief of the Military Household Gen Danilo Venturini. The conclusions were that they were examining the effects of a possible letter of resignation by the minister of finance, who afterward conducted official business with President Joao Figueiredo and was also with Delfim Netto, it not being known whether or not he was received by the chief of the civilian household.

Given as possibilities were the appointments of Flavio Pecora as minister of finance and Afonso Celso Pastore as president of the Central Bank, with the chance that the combination could be reversed, although in a parallel move, an invitation to Nestor Jose for the first of those positions would be accepted. The explanation for that alternative would lie in the fact that Pecora as well as Pastore are considered to be in Delfim Netto's pocket, the rise of both liable to serve as one more argument to accuse the chief of planning of being bent on maintaining the federal economic command within a sort of an "action among friends." Jost, with more independence, has already worked with Delfim in the Costa e Silva and Garrastazu Medici administrations and as president of the Bank of Brazil, working with him but in a position to share some of the responsibilities.

It was also admitted that despite being a personal friend of Galveas, Delfim Netto would take advantage of the opportunity to make some changes in the present policy. The new minister of finance would promote changes in the monetary correction system, broaden the expansion of credit, breaking the 45-percent barrier, and would use the opportunity for an opening under conditions of favoring new expenditures. Programs were even being made and commented upon.

The usual spokesmen for the Presidency of the Republic, beginning with Minister Said Farhat, innocently contributed to the climate of rumors. They refused to make the routine and traditional denial of many other occasions. During the afternoon, they only said they had nothing to say and that Galveas as well as Langoni would grant a collective interview at 1800. For many this was a sign of dismissal of the minister of finance and the president of the Central Bank "because even when denials are forthcoming, they are followed by dismissals, imagine what it is without them..."

Others, more cautious, however, only made note of the high temperature, believing that within some weeks, or even only at the end of the year, Ernane Galveas could leave the ministry within a broader shakeup. After all, and after the statements by the minister of finance and the president of the Central Bank describing the stories of their dismissals as fantasies, it was only one more day of rumors. Or was it?

Speculations on Golbery Prevented

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 18 Oct 80 p 4

[Text] Minister Golbery do Couto e Silva, chief of the civilian household of the Presidency of the Republic, today begins a 10-day leave "for a brief rest," it was reported yesterday by Planalto Palace Spokesman Marco Antonio Kraemer.

On giving the information, Kraemer explained that it is not a matter of any health problem but a simple absence of a few days since Minister Golbery has not had a vacation for more than a year. The palace spokesman also explained that the communique was being issued formally "to prevent possible speculations." The chief of the Civilian Household worked normally yesterday in his Planalto office until the end of the day, when he transferred his functions to Executive Deputy Joao Carvalho.

This morning, Minister Golbery should go from Granja do Ipe, where he lives, to his private home on Kilometer 17 on the Brasilia-Belo Horizonte Highway near the city of Luziania, Goias.

Golbery's leave will last until Monday, 27 October.

8908
CSO: 3001

FOREIGN DEBT MUST BE REFINANCED IN 1981 SAYS NETTO

Sao Paulo O ESTADO DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 21 Oct 80 p 34

[Text] Minister of Planning Delfim Netto said yesterday in New York that Brazil does not need to reservice its debt this year but that in 1981 the deficit in current accounts "will be some $12 billion, of which it will be necessary to refinance $5 billion." After expressing the hope that the IMF will change its standards for international financing to help developing countries and to recompense for their imbalances in the balance of payments, Delfim also emphasized that "there are no reasons why Brazil cannot resort to the Fund in search of support" and he denied that there are direct differences between the country and the international agency.

Delfim Netto also denied that Brazil is heading for an economic recession, explaining that "The rate of growth is somewhat restricted by the balance of payments now but we shall take measures to increase exports in order to recover the five to six-percent rate of growth. We shall continue to pressure for an increase in exports, not only until the trade deficit is erased, but also until we achieve a surplus," said the minister to newsmen.

Delfim Netto also touched on the increase of Brazilian exports during the talk he gave before the National Foreign Trade Council, when he opened a 2-day seminar on protectionism in international trade.. He pointed out that the amount of Brazilian exports this year should be 30 percent greater than that of 1979 and "in 1981 we shall continue to adjust our exchange policy to maintain that process." As to the foreign debt, the minister emphasized that the country will seek to reduce it with respect to exports "as we did this year."

In his analysis on prospects in international trade for 1980, the minister admitted for the first time that "Brazil could be one of the countries most affected by the present conditions of the world banking system," saying: "Even if historical evidence and economic potential may qualify Brazil as one of the most obvious choices for expansion of the free market economy, the inability of the international financial community to provide the necessary resources indicates the need for introducing some changes and implementing some reforms, keeping in mind the improvement of the effectiveness of the system in general."

He also said that problems created by the present conditions in international petroleum markets "can be more easily resolved if the international banking community would make a revision of its regulations on loans granted to countries, an event which could definitively contribute to an increase in the production of energy in world terms."

Recycling Difficult

Dealing directly with the resistance of the international banking system to continue lending to developing countries which import petroleum, Delfim Netto declared that increases in petroleum prices in 1973 were absorbed "adequately by the international monetary system, but the recycling of surpluses, resulting from the readjustments of 1980, have been more difficult to control because of the substantial deficits of countries which could not manage to expand their exports or reach self-sufficiency in energy terms."

In his opinion, there are two main reasons for these difficulties in recycling. The first is that the latter countries now represent a greater risk for private banks and the second are the institutional restrictions having to do with the percentage of loans already granted against the capital of some banks, which would indicate an excessive financial risk for some countries.

In view of the influence of high prices of imported petroleum on the economy of developing countries, Delfim Netto believes that those nations have only two options: either they reduce their imports proportionately with the increases in prices of petroleum or they try to increase their exports.

"If they choose the first option, inevitably a recessive process will result because the reduction of imports in general, and purchases of petroleum in particular, have a dramatic effect, interrupting the productive process. The second option, which envisions expenditures in activities linked to exports--employing new ways of conserving energy as much as possible or developing alternate energy sources--will allow the country to resolve the deficit of its trade balance, but almost always will require the use of foreign money to finance the adjustment of the economy," he pointed out.

Only Option

Therefore, during transition periods, developing countries have no other option except to resort to foreign loans to finance economic adjustment, he added. However, the minister of planning complained that "certain persons have a very rigid view of that dilemma: In the first place, a so-called maturity and responsible position is adopted whereby the debt is avoided no matter how great the difficulties created for the future development of the country. The second option, in a very simple version of the facts, would be only a reduction to levels of consumption existing prior to its adoption and it could represent a simple postponement of bitter but inevitable recessive measures, the lack of which would require even more dramatic measures in the future."

For Delfim the correct analysis of the two alternative is the following: "A very drastic policy of reduction of imports aimed at reducing economic growth will make the task greater for future generations, whose inheritance will be an even poorer country with a productive capability harmed by the shortage of proper expenditures during the period of adjustment. The country could also become more vulnerable to the shocks of new increases in petroleum prices because of the fact that it was not capable of using difficult times to attain an expansion in the production of alternate energy sources."

The minister also advocated an economic policy which allows relative expenditures in the export sector and in the development of alternate energy sources which "would leave future generations a better country adjusted to the new realities of energy and more capable of functioning in a new international environment."

With respect to international trade, the minister pointed out that "protectionism, as we said in the past, will not help us much," and that the greatest international cooperation "is the only alternative left to us."

Delfim also asserted that the Brazilian program for the development of alternate energy sources--particularly alcohol production--has received world attention and is being applied in a satisfactory manner. The increase in energy production by means of agricultural expansion "is being realized without an additional burden on the balance of payments and it insures the extreme potential and flexibility of the Brazilian economy," he declared.

Itinerary

After the talk, the minister attended a dinner last night with the directors of the Council of the Americas, an organization which enfolds more than 200 U.S. corporations with interests in Latin America. Before that, he told newsmen that he did not go to the United States in search of loans or refinancing, asserting that Brazil resolved the problem of petroleum supplies caused by the war in the Persian Gulf by means of agreements with Venezuela, Mexico and Indonesia, who have guaranteed the supply of 200,000 barrels daily.

Tomorrow Delfim Netto continues on to Paris where he will remain 4 days. He will meet with French President Valery Giscard D'Estaing, sign a contract for the financing of off-shore prospecting drilling rigs for PETROBRAS [Brazilian Petroleum Corporation] and coordinate the economic aspects of the visit that President Joao Figueiredo will make to France.

Next Sunday the minister will be in Japan, where he will meet with several bankers. In addition to trying to obtain a financing of nearly $150 million, the minister should negotiate Japanese participation in the Carajas and Albras-Alunorte projects.

In a "Tunnel"

Yesterday the French newspaper LE MONDE published an interview with the minister of planning in which Delfim Netto says that Brazil should have a growth rate of from five to six percent this year. "Brazil faces great difficulties but we are not the only ones. We advance along a tunnel and I cannot say when we are going to emerge from it; whether it will be 2, 3 or 4 years." What I do know is that we have already adopted the measures heading us in the proper direction," emphasizes Delfim in the interview, adding that Brazilian inflation began a downward trend 2 months ago.

8908
CSO: 3001

ATTEMPT AT PEACEFUL PATH TO SOCIALISM IN CHILE ANALYZED

Moscow LATINSKAYA AMERIKA in Russian No 9, Sep 80 signed to press 12 Aug 80 pp 5-14

/Article by Yu.N. Korolev: "The Timeliness of the Chilean Experience"/

/Text/ Ten years have passed since the beginning of the Chilean revolution and seven years since its defeat. The revolutionary authority existed for about 1,000 days, and this was a profoundly creative and historically rich feat by the popular masses, who were aroused to the struggle for freedom, equality and socialism.

The Chilean people achieved remarkable successes in this struggle. For the first time in the country's history a government was created which the people wanted and which they trusted. With support from the working class, the peasantry, the middle strata and the intelligentsia--from democrats and patriots--the government carried out profound socio-economic transformations of society.

In addition, the democratic rights of the people were expanded. As a result, hundreds of thousands of working people for a short period were able to join together in trade unions, in peasant and student federations, in residential and village committees. There arose new forms of popular organizations which in the future could have become forms for the people's authority on a nationwide scale. They were created at enterprises, where they took the form of workers' committees for vigilance and the monitoring of production; in cities and rural areas they took the form of councils for the distribution of foodstuffs and communal councils, which decided at the local level questions of revolutionary power.

The government of Salvador Allende conducted an independent and active foreign policy in defense of national sovereignty and noninterference in the affairs of nations; it took a position against the aggressive actions of imperialism and in support of the national-liberation struggle of peoples. During the years of Popular Unity there was immeasurable growth in the country's prestige in the world arena: its voice rang out loudly at all international forums. Chile occupied a worthy place among the states fighting for detente in international relations, for the establishment of a new democratic order in world economic relations and against the privileges of the imperialist monopolies.

The specific national conditions of this country were reflected in the content and nature of the Chilean revolution. The revolution developed in a capitalist country which was economically dependent on U.S. imperialism and the international monopolies. Chile had a large organized working class which had definite revolutionary traditions and a relatively low level of opportunism. The Communist Party of Chile (CPC), a unified and mass party of the proletariat, acted as a cementing and unifying force in the democratic and anti-imperialist movement. It possessed significant experience of struggle under various conditions: conditions of the underground, of semilegal and legal activities; it was broadly represented in parliament and the municipalities, and it led the powerful organizations of the working class and the peasantry. Over the course of many years the CPC acted together with the other workers party of the country, the Socialist Party of Chile (SPC), one of the leaders of which was Salvador Allende.

In the second half of the sixties there developed around this alliance a broad democratic and anti-imperialist front, including the leftist Catholic movement. A shared political platform in 1969 served as the basis for the establishment of a Popular Unity coalition, which included communists, socialists, radicals, social-democrats, Christian leftists and independents. In 1970 Popular Unity sustained victory in the presidential elections, having received a relative majority of the votes.

In accordance with the constitution, the question of who would become president of the country had to be decided by the National Congress at a joint session of the Chamber and Senate; the members of the congress were able to vote for one of two candidates who had received the largest number of votes. But in fact the fate of the candidates was decided not so much in the congress as in the people's organizations, in the trade unions, peasant federations, the political parties and in massive street demonstrations. As a result of the extremely acute class and political struggle which developed in the country in the months preceding the official voting in the congress, the alignment of forces developed in favor of the people's movement candidate, Salvador Allende.

However, the situation continued to remain extremely complex. Although the revolutionary democratic and anti-imperialist movement had achieved by November 1970 an absolute majority of the people (more than 60 percent), the alliance of the social forces was still not firm or structurally integrated. A tense struggle took place for hegemony in the revolution among the proletariat, the middle strata and the petty bourgeoisie; despite the fact that the leading role in the revolutionary movement belonged to the proletariat, it was constantly and persistently called into question. At the same time there developed a political bloc of the majority of the people which took the form of Popular Unity and the Christian Democratic Party; it was based on the "constitutional status," which was able to serve as the basis for the subsequent development of a program for the new alliance of the class and social forces.

An important factor in the victory was the fact that the leaders of the nation's armed forces (first General R. Schneider, commander of the army, who was killed by reactionaries in October, 1970; and then General C. Prats, who took over from him; and other higher officers) took a formally neutral attitude (support for "constitutionality and noninterference" in political life), which was in reality favorable toward the candidate and the Popular Unity program.

The exacerbation of the political struggle within the armed forces made it impossible for them to be used for class coercion against the masses in the interests of the bourgeoisie and imperialism, and it led to their neutralization.

Under these circumstances the majority in parliament (deputies and senators of Popular Unity and the CDP (Christian Democratic Party) supported the candidacy of S. Allende.

On 4 November 1970 S. Allende assumed the presidency and formed a government which included representatives of all the political parties of Popular Unity. Thus, Popular Unity came to power under conditions of bourgeois legality, having publicly declared its aim of implementing revolutionary socio-economic and political transformations by peaceful means and the building of socialism.

As is clear from the above, the path of revolutionary development in Chile largely confirmed the predictions of V.I. Lenin; it proved through the practice of the class and political struggle the correctness of the tenets of Marxist-Leninist theory of revolution concerning the possibility of the peaceful acquisition of power by the proletariat. The essence of this acquisition of power lies in the fact that the mass popular struggle reaches an enormous scale and leads to an alignment of forces which makes it impossible for the counterrevolution to exert armed resistance. The victory of the Chilean revolution through peaceful means signified, in contrast with the usual "parliamentary" path, nothing other than a form of class coercion by a majority of the revolutionary people over the counterrevolutionary minority. The revolution matured independently of the path it had to take: the great weight of forces on the side of the democratic and anti-imperialist forces made it possible to be limited to the use of "peaceful" forms of coercion. On the other side, the possibility of the peaceful path substantially expanded the social base of the revolution and attracted to it those groups of the population who under different conditions would not have determined to support openly the revolutionary movement.

There is significant disagreement with regard to the content of the Popular Unity regime. There are three viewpoints which predominate.
A number of authors are inclined to consider the situation which developed as a typical case of consitutional rule within the framework of representative democracy, when one candidate from one party defeats the president in elections and the other party maintains a majority in the legislative organs.[1] Another group of authors claim that there developed in Chile "two power centers," around which there clustered the forces of revolution, on the one hand, and the forces of counterrevolution, on the other hand.[2] A third group views this period as one of dual power in Chile.[3]

There is no doubt that the essence of the Popular Unity regime goes far beyond the division of the institutions of bourgeois democracy among the various parties. While preserving the formal signs of this kind of division of power, the regime expressed first of all (in an inconsistent manner perhaps or even a contradictory one) the class interests of the working class, the middle strata, and the petty bourgeoisie. It was obviously hostile to the interests of the landowners, the monopolies, the foreign companies and the bourgeoisie. In any case, the important aspect of the Chilean experience was the active use of the available opportunities to advance the revolution not only "from below," but also "from above" (the necessity of which V.I. Lenin pointed out).[4]

As a result of the first major victory in the struggle for power, the Chilean proletariat and its allies increased the likelihood of a peaceful revolutionary path, i.e., the intensification of the democratic and anti-imperialist revolution with the prospect of it becoming a socialist revolution. The acquisition of all political power and the establishment of a complete, revolutionary-democratic dictatorship, became a very important task with regard to providing for the further development of the revolution. This required the finding of a way (with the active participation of the masses) to overcome the division of power (into executive and legislative) which is characteristic of bourgeois parliamentary democracy, to combine in the form of one revolutionary-democratic organ all of its functional manifestations. The only means toward this end was still to be found in work among the masses, organizational work, the fullest possible use of state and government institutions and levers which turned up in the hands of the revolutionary forces in the interests of strengthening the mass people's movement.

In the course of the revolutionary transformations which had been unleashed, the alignment of forces was changing. In the revolutionary-democratic camp there arose currents, the representatives of which thought that the revolution had already fulfilled the tasks facing it; they wanted to halt its advancement toward socialism. On the other hand, there was an increase in the activities of those who demanded an immediate transition to socialism and the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat in the country, although the conditions for this had not yet developed. The conflicts within the democratic coalition weakened it substantially; the most steadfast and politically mature detachments of the proletariat faced socio-political isolation. The political parties which headed the revolutionary movement became incapable of carrying out fully their vanguard role. The reaction took advantage of this both within the country and abroad. It unleashed against the government and Popular Unity a propaganda campaign of slander and attacks unprecedented in the history of the country; it began the counterrevolutionary mobilization of the petty bourgeois strata of the population, using bourgeois institutions of power successfully for this. These institutions included parliament, the judicial organs, the organizations of small and medium-sized business owners, their supporters in the armed forces and the police and the mass media. The Chilean reaction received enormous help from the international bourgeoisie, especially from the USA.

Two and a half months before the 1970 presidential elections the U.S. government defined its attitude toward the possibility of a Popular Unity victory. On 27 June 1970 H. Kissinger stated at a session of the "Committee of 40": "I do not understand why we must watch with indifference while a country becomes communist due to the irresponsibility of its own people."[5] In December 1970 the American magazine NEWS AND WORLD REPORT revealed the reason for the American government's concern over the course of events in Chile. "The Chilean experience will be studied carefully in Latin America," the journal wrote, "especially in Argentina, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Peru. The communists of Chile may become the beacon for many others..." U.S. government organizations appropriated the necessary funds to carry out a coup d'etat. It became known from materials of a Senate investigation of CIA activities that the intelligence agency was the author of a number of diversionary plans aimed against the government of S. Allende. They included: the murder of General Schneider, attempts to bring Allende down in the voting in the congress (bribery of deputies, attempts to conspire with Alessandri, Frei, the CDP), economic and financial blockade, plans and the implementation of socio-economic and political "destabilization." Material and moral assistance from the USA meant a great deal to the Chilean reaction: it gave the reaction greater confidence, helped it to recruit "volunteers" for diversions. Radomiro Tomic, a leader of the CDP who was also that party's candidate for president of the country in 1970, along with Allende, wrote subsequently: "Without the American presence and encouragement, its capacity to undermine social order and to dissolve political institutions would have been extremely limited."[6]

By 1973 the situation in the country had changed substantially. The completion of the main democratic and anti-imperialist transformations posed in an objective manner the question of the coming of the socialist revolution. However, the subjective conditions for it had not yet developed. On the one hand, the conditions for the peaceful transition to the building of socialism did not exist. On the other hand, the revolutionary movement did not succeed in arming the people, nor did it prepare them for the change in the forms of struggle. The alternative slogans put forward by the Communist Party, "democracy or fascism" and "there is no civil war" did not find the necessary understanding among the masses (in whom socialist sentiments and a psychological willingness to accept open forms of struggle were growing rapidly); they met with opposition both within Popular Unity (the Socialist Party of Chile, some of the Christian leftists) and outside it (the Revolutionary Leftist Movement (MIR) and the Popular Socialist Alliance).

Under these conditions the reaction succeeded in attracting to its side influential circles of the military, who seized the leadership of the armed forces and isolated or destroyed the supporters of the government. The hopes for an alliance with the CDP on a platform of protecting the constitution and preventing civil war were not justified. By this time the leadership of the CDP had been seized by rightist conservative elements, who favored the overthrow of the legal government and in this way actually turned away from protecting bourgeois-democratic institutions. The revolution gradually shifted onto the defensive and it began to retreat. However, even when the revolutionary forces received the electoral support of nearly half the population (44 percent in March 1973 and more than 50 percent in April 1971) the Chilean bourgeoisie did not have a sufficiently broad social base to ensure itself a firm majority within the framework of the bourgeois-democratic regime. For this reason the entire counterrevolutionary opposition (including the bourgeois-liberal and national reformist opposition) obediently followed its extremist, reactionary-fascist segment, which imposed a terrorist, military-fascist dictatorship.

The question of power was the central question of the Chilean revolution as it is in any revolution. At the heart of the question is the development and implementation of a correct "strategy of alliances," or to use the words of V.I. Lenin, "the winning of a majority." More concretely, this is a question of the unity of the working class, the peasantry, the middle urban strata under the leadership of the proletariat. From the viewpoint of political tactics an equally important spot is occupied by the question of a bloc consisting of Popular Unity and the CDP. It was precisely this alliance which ensured the victory of the revolution in November 1970. The alignment of forces in the period of its offense was characterized not only by the presence of the socio-class bloc, which guaranteed the preponderance of the revolutionary-democratic and anti-imperialist movement, but also by the establish- of the leadership of the working class in this bloc in the person of the vanguard of the revolution--the communist and socialist parties, and in a broader sense by the entire coalition of Popular Unity.

After the defeat of the revolution, it became clear that the Popular Unity and CDP bloc could have prevented the victory of fascism. But other questions arose: was this kind of a bloc practically possible? If it had been created, which forces (working class or bourgeoisie) would have played a leading role in it? Could the revolutionary process have continued in the presence of this kind of a bloc?

It is obvious that these questionsare by no means abstract. Their solution is directly linked to today's struggle against the fascist regime in Chile and to the establishment of a broad democratic alliance of forces which is capable of defeating the junta.

Among those people who decisively opposed the alliance with Christian democracy during the revolution there have now appeared supporters of a bloc with the CDP, even at the cost of rejecting the struggle for proletarian hegemony. They rarely criticize Popular Unity for underestimating the middle strata, or for being unwilling to find mutual understanding with the Christian democrats. In this regard they consider that the Leninist idea of the leading role of the working class in the democratic revolution supposedly did not withstand the practical test in the course of the Chilean revolution; for this reason it is essential to work out a new theory "in line" with the present level of development of social relations. The logic of their thinking is this. Antagonistic contradictions do not exist between the working class and the middle strata, and this makes their alliance not only possible but also natural: the CDP is a party of the middle strata; consequently, it is natural to have an alliance between Popular Unity and the CDP; this alliance must be formed not under the leadership of the working class or even within the context of the struggle for its hegemony, but rather as an alliance of "equal partners," each carrying out, in "its own sphere," timely revolutionary actions without competing or running into each other, but rather serving the cause of revolution "equally."

This approach has two weak spots. The first is that although mistakes were made during the revolution with regard to policy toward the middle strata and the CDP (which, incidentally, is in reality a party of the reformist bourgeoisie and not a party of the middle strata"), Popular Unity always had influential supporters of dialogue with the CDP, who worked consistently to expand cooperation with the Christian democrats, and to increase their participation in the revolutionary process. The second point concerns the capacity of the CDP itself for this kind of dialogue and further for concrete joint work with the people's government under conditions of revolution. It proved to be extremely limited.

Let us return to the question of what the so-called equal partnership of the working class and the middle strata leads to in practice. Under capitalism the middle strata find themselves in a relatively privileged position in comparison with the working class (a higher level of education, an incomparably greater share in the distribution of the national income, access to information, representation in the organs of power, etc. Consequently, the "equal alliance" in fact can mean only the subordination of the working class to the bourgeoisie, and in the historical perspective it can mean at the best the realization of one more form of "national socialism" as a variety of the national-reformist model of capitalist development. The attraction of the Chilean revolution and the lasting significance of its lessons lie in the fact that it developed with participation by the broad strata of the people under the leadership of the working class. And this maintained the real prospect of its development into a socialist revolution. Failure to come to grips with this, to consider a given side of the question within the framework of the "mistakes" of the revolution would mean the complete emasculation of the very core of this truly historical experience of the contemporary revolutionary movement.

As numerous studies by Marxist and bourgeois scholars have shown, the middle strata are not unified socially or ideologically. They consist, on the one hand, of social groups of the transitional and early capitalist stages (ruined peasants and craftsmen, owners of small and medium-sized businesses, city merchants, etc.) and, on the other hand, hired workers of modern capitalist production (specialists, white-collar workers, the technical intelligentsia, government officials, including officers of the modern army). Consequently, they do not represent a class and they cannot play the role of a class. How can one talk about the "personal space, the ideological and political determination" of the middle strata? It is no accident that in the course of the socio-political struggle in all the capitalist countries of the world, including Chile, these groups support various political parties, from the extreme right to the extreme left. The scattered and isolated nature of their components are historically determined because they were created at various stages of the development of society.

If we take the extremely polarized centers in the ideological-political ideas prevailing among the middle strata, they will be, on the one hand, the various types of petty bourgeois and bourgeois utopian socialism (which is already reactionary under Chilean conditions), and on the other hand, state-capital and cooperative-capitalist models of national development. By their very essence these concepts are partly, dialectically acceptable to both the modern bourgeoisie and the proletariat, to the two main protanogists in the unfolding struggle, and this is the basic factor in the struggle between the bourgeoisie and the proletariat to attract the various groups of the middle strata to the side of the revolution or to the side of the counterrevolution.

The validity and inevitability of the working class's hegemony in the alliance of the broad popular forces under the contemporary conditions of class struggle are the result not only of its numbers and its qualitatively key position in social life, but also of its essence as the single force which is capable of uniting the middle strata, which are uncoordinated in a social and ideological-political regard, in the struggle for social progress (in contrast to the monopolistic bourgeoisie which can achieve--historical experience testifies to this--the mobilization of the middle strata for the sake of the counterrevolutionary, including the fascist, alternative).

The idea of the "equal partnership" is thus utopian. The proletariat fought and continues to fight for its leadership, both in revolution and now in the antifascist movement. It is another matter whether it can achieve this in the coming segment of historical development. If it becomes the leader of the democratic antifascist front, the process of liberating the country from the rule of the junta will take the form of a profound democratic and anti-imperialist revolution. If it does not succeed in this, then the fate of the country for a long time to come will be determined by various groups and blocs of the bourgeoisie and the more or less "democratic" plans of capitalism.

The Chilean revolution and the period of Popular Unity's power have posed a number of problems which have great significance for the international revolutionary and the national-liberation movement.

Some of the questions posed by the revolution have been given clear and convincing answers but others have remained completely or partly unresolved while provoking sharp polemics not only between the reaction and the democratic camp, but also within the revolutionary-democratic and anti-imperialist movement. In certain circles there has arisen a tendency to interpret the Chilean experience in such a way as to cast doubt upon the vitality of the Marxist-Leninist theory of revolution. In addition to the denial of the possibility of the peaceful path to the acquisition of power by the proletariat, there are attempts to present this path as the only one possible in our times, and to present the mechanism of bourgeois democracy as appropriate and sufficient for the socialist reconstruction of society.

V.I. Lenin never considered the possibility of the peaceful path of revolution apart from concrete historical conditions, apart from the alignment of class forces of the moment, from the entire political situation of the day. The conditions for the peaceful path arise and disappear within the framework of the development of the revolution. These conditions constitute a special and specific phenomenon which is rare in the development of the revolution, i.e., they include the general conditions for a democratic revolution (the presence of a revolutionary situation, the maturity of the subjective factor), the conditions for a democratic revolution to develop into a socialist one (hegemony of the proletariat in the alliance of the revolutionary-democratic forces) and, finally, conditions for the peaceful taking of power (the presence of the kind of preponderance of forces on the side of revolution under which the bourgeoisie and the ruling classes are not capable of exerting armed resistance). The peaceful path, according to the thought of V.I. Lenin, requires the winning of an overwhelming majority not only in general form but also in the form of mass organizations,[7] in the form of a fundamentally new form of power opposed to the bourgeoisie,[8]

i.e., the presence of that historical opposition of the forces of revolution and counterrevolution, which Lenin called dual power. In determining the conditions for the peaceful path, V.I. Lenin wrote: "Weapons in the hands of the people, the lack of coercion against the people from the outside--that was the essence of the matter. That is what opened up and ensured the peaceful path of development for the entire revolution."[9]

Consequently, it is not an "immature" revolutionary situation, nor a doubtful majority of the people or a weakness of the vanguard party, etc., but rather a high degree of maturity, a rare "supermaturity" of all the basic preconditions and conditions for the successful unfolding of the revolution, which constitute the atmosphere in which a revolution can develop according to a peaceful path.

Today we can affirm that the Chilean revolution in the offensive stage was spreading; it had on its side a majority of the people and at the very least it had neutralized the opportunities for the counterrevolution to use arms against the people. In this sense the peaceful path for the acquisition of power by the proletariat, a path which was partly traversed in Chile, confirmed the Leninist prediction about the conditions of this path. There is no doubt that the strategic line of the Communist Party of Chile and its allies concerning the unity of the working class and the middle strata of the city and the country was correct. Popular Unity made mistakes with regard to the tactics which were used to achieve this goal. As we have tried to show, changes in the alignment of class forces in the country required changes in tactical methods. The leadership of the revolution did not find in time the correct paths to the solution of the problems which had arisen. In the three years of the development of the Chilean revolution there were periods which called for a direct platform appeal by Popular Unity to the middle strata, and there were periods in which a political alliance with the CDP could have been concluded. These opportunities were not used. Major mistakes were made concerning the armed forces.[10]

The revolution in Chile was an historical landmark in the development of the revolutionary movement in Latin America. "The Chilean victory," wrote Rodney Arismendi, "marks the start of a new historical period... The events which unfolded there after the people's victory at the elections, express the essence of our epoch, as Cuba expressed it through its heroism at an earlier time."[11]

Revolution does not always or immediately end in victory. But the necessary experience of struggle has been extracted from the defeats of the people; they have learned how to be victorious. "There were in Latin America," noted L.I. Brezhnev,"remarkable heights of the liberation struggle, heroic deeds and victories, but there were also defeats and bloody massacres of patriots and revolutionaries.... But nothing from the lessons of the past will have been in vain. And, in particular, the coming to power of the Popular Unity party of Chile is an expreience which will undoubtedly be used by fighters for freedom and national independence."[12] In a speech to the 25th CPSU Congress L.I. Brezhenv emphasized that the "temporary defeat of the Chilean revolution does not diminish its historical merit or the significance of the experience."[13]

The Chilean revolution revealed both the strong and the weak aspects of the contemporary workers', communist and revolutionary-democratic movement in Chile and in other countries of the world as well. The international significance of this revolution is clearly revealed in the context of the global tasks of the peaceful revolutionary process. In this sense it can be viewed as an outstanding general rehearsal for the peaceful path of revolution at the present level of development of the class struggle, in an epoch in which two world systems exist and mankind is moving from capitalism to socialism.

FOOTNOTES

1. CHILE--AMERICA, Roma, Nos 28,29,30, 1977, p 104.

2. PROBLEMY MIRA I SOTSIALISMA, No 7, 1974, p 60.

3. SOUS LE DRAPEAU DU SOCIALISME, Paris, No 62, 1974, pp 30-31.

4. V.I. Lenin, "Poln. sobr. soch." [Complete Collected Works], Vol 11, pp 67-71.

5. CHILE--AMERICA, Nos 39-40, 1978, p 111.

6. Ibid., p 112.

7. "For several months following 27 February," wrote Lenin, "the will of the majority of the workers and peasants, the overwhelming population of the country, was clarified not only in general form. This will found expression in mass organizations--the soviets of workers', soldiers' and peasants' deputies." V.I. Lenin, "Poln. sobr. soch." [Complete Collected Works], Vol 32, p 408.

8. "Only in Russia is it possible to have a transfer of power to prepare institutions--the soviets--immediately, peacefully, and without insurrection, for the capitalists cannot resist the soviets of workers', soldiers' and peasants' deputies." V.I. Lenin, "Poln. sobr. soch." [Complete Collected Works], Vol 32, p 408.

9. V.I. Lenin, "Poln. sobr. soch." [Complete Collected Works], Vol 34, p 11.

10. In documents published after the coup the Communist Party of Chile provided a profound analysis of the mistakes and inadequacies as well as of the achivements of the revolution. See for example,

"Chiliyskaya revolyutsiya, fashistskaya diktatura, bor'ba za ee sverzheniya i cozdaniye novoy demokratii. Plenum Tsentral'nogo Komiteta Kommunisticheskoy partii Chili. Avgust 1977 g. Moskva" [The Chilean Revolution, Fascist Dictatorship, the Struggle to Overthrow It and to Create a New Democracy. Plenum of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Chile. August 1977, Moscow], 1978; L. Corvalan, "Nas zhdut nobyye bitvy. Izbrannyye stat'i i rechi [New Battles Await Us. Selected Articles and Speeches], Moscow, 1978.

11. R. Arismendi. "Lenin, revolyutsiya i Latinskaya Amerika" [Lenin, Revolution and Latin America"], Moscow, 1973, pp 495-496.

12. "Vizit Leonida Il'icha Brezhenva v Respubliku Kuba" [Leonid Il'ich Brezhnev's Visit to Cuba], Moscow, 1974, p 35.

13. L.I. Brezhenv, "Otchet Tsentral'nogo Komiteta KPSS i ocherednyye zadachi partii v oblasti vnutrenney i vneshney politiki" [Report of the CPSU Central Committee and the Immediate Tasks of the Party in the Area of Domestic and Foreign Policy], Moscow, 1976, p 36.

COPYRIGHT: Izdatel'stvo "Nauka", "Latinskaya Amerika", 1980

8543
CSO: 1800

LEGAL BASIS FOR NEW FAMILY CODE DISCUSSED

Havana REVISTA CUBANA DE DERECHO in Spanish Jan-Dec 78 pp 241-251

[Article by Ernesto Buch Santos: "The Family Code"]

[Text] Introduction

The abolishment of private ownership of the means of production and the gradual abolition of classes and all forms of exploitation of some human beings by others, are, as is clearly stated by the text we analyze, the basic principle of the Socialist Society. The fact that a number of legal norms concerning the family, which were completely alien to our society because they clashed openly with the principles of equality of all citizens and were also discriminatory against the rights of women and children born out of wedlock, were the reasons which counseled the replacement of the aforementioned legal norms and their being formed into a separate unit, extracting them from the legislation which formerly considered them. Therefore, our Revolutionary Government passed Law 1289 dated 14 February 1975 (Family Code), after it had been widely discussed by all the workers of our country and approved by a majority of more than 98 percent, with the addition to the text of the draft of suggestions by the Legal Studies Committees, after an exhaustive analysis of each and every one of those presented.

The aforementioned Code legally regulates family institutions: marriage, divorce, parent-child relationships and obligations for providing sustenance, adoption and guidance; all of this aimed at strengthening the family and the bonds of reciprocal affection, help and respect among its members; the strengthening of the marriage legally normalized or judicially recognized by an authorized court with the most absolute equality of rights for men and women; the most effective compliance by parents with their obligations with respect to the protection, moral training and education of children so that they may develop fully in all aspects and as decent citizens of the Socialist Society and, in short, the full realization of the principle of equality of all children, all of which is the legal and moral foundation of the instrument we analyze in this article.

Once the reasons which counseled the passage of the Family Code and the institutions it regulates are explained, we shall discuss the few but important changes made in this legal matter by Law No 9 dated 22 August 1977, whose general text we shall examine in the most specific way possible and with the greatest clarity with respect to the most outstanding aspects of the institutions to which we have referred, showing the conceptual differences when compared with previous legislation.

1. Marriage

Making a realization of the deep desire of Jose Marti: "I want the primary law of our republic to be the worship by Cubans of the complete dignity of man," our people, through free, direct and secret vote in a referendum, adopted the Constitution of the Republic of Cuba by an overwhelming majority. It, and the Family Code, which had been approved previously, went into effect 24 February 1976. It substantially changed the archaic concept and legal nature of the institution of marriage; it ceasing to be a merely civil contract and becoming "the voluntarily agreed upon union of a man and a woman legally fit for it for the purpose of living together."

Marriage rests on the basis of an absolute equality of rights and duties of both spouses, who are obliged to maintain the home and diligently care for the family they have formed and to cooperate jointly and closely in the education and training of the children pursuant to the principles of socialist morality.

Those officials responsible for Marital Status Records and the notary publics are the officials authorized to formalize marriages in keeping with the provisions of the code to which we refer, just as the consuls and vice consuls of the republic have the power to authorize marriage between Cubans abroad. The chief officer of a warship or the captain of a merchant or fishing ship shall also authorize marriages which may take place on board, as may the military field commander, when it is a matter of members of such military body under the same circumstances. It must be understood that in the latter two cases the marriage will be understood to be conditional as long as the marital status of the two parties has not been proved with documents if their previous marriage ended for any reason. If a foreigner, he or she must also show a foreign identity card and show authorization from the minister of justice to formalize his or her marriage in Cuba.

Women and men of over 18 years-of-age are legally authorized to marry although, exceptionally, and for justified reasons, the parents, grandparents in their absence, the step-parents, guardians, or in other cases, the court, may grant those under 18 years-of-age the authorization to marry, providing the female is at least 14 years-of-age and the male has passed his 16th birthday.

Law 1289 continued explaining that if those persons refused to grant the aforementioned authorization, one or the other of the couple affected or an older brother or sister, with the help of the district attorney, can petition the pertinent People's Court to grant the aforementioned authorization, it making its decision on the basis of the social good and that of the interested couple.

This is a precept which has been modified by Law No 9 dated 22 August 1977, Article 3 Paragraph 1, which states, that this exceptional authorization may be granted jointly by the mother and father, or one of them if the other is dead or deprived of parental rights, while the previous legislation referred to the father and mother jointly or to the one having parental rights. Also added to Paragraph 3 was subparagraph 5, which in our opinion is of extraordinary importance and states textually: "One of those authorized to do so can do it alone when the other who should grant it together with him is prevented from doing so." Article 6 has also been clarified and changed where it explains that in case some of those who are supposed to grant authorization jointly with another refuse to grant such authorization, those wanting to marry, or one of them, or an adult brother or sister of either of them, can request the pertinent People's Court to grant the aforementioned authorization. As can be seen, the new context refers to "those parties interested in marrying" while previously it only referred to "those interested parties," it also being observed that the "help of the district attorney" has been abolished, therefore, the aforementioned interested parties and the others to whom the precept applies may directly request the granting of the authorization required and the court will decide whatever is applicable, taking into consideration the interests of society and the couple, after having heard the opinion of all the interested parties from the District Attorney's Office.

Our Revolutionary text also considers "The existence of a matrimonial union between a man and a woman legally fit for it and who have the requirements of singleness and stability, shall have all the effects of a legally formalized marriage when it is recognized by the pertinent court. If that union is stable, but does not meet the requirement of singleness because one of the two is involved in a previous marriage, full legal rights shall accrue to the person who acted in good faith and to the children resulting from the aforementioned union."

It is necessary to point out that the formalization of the legal recognition of a marriage between a man and woman joined in the previously mentioned way will be retroactive, as far as its effects are concerned, to the date of the beginning of the union declared in the legal decision.

Finally, one of the questions of great importance which refers to the legal decision on the presumption of death of one of the parties, covered by Article 44 of Law 1289 dated 1975, is that which is added to the second paragraph of that precept where it refers to the case of the appearance of the spouse declared presumably dead and the other spouse has married again. This marriage is valid according to our law. In this case, the new law, No 9 dated 1977, states that the spouse who reappears will have the marital status of a divorced person, a question which, as we have said, was not mentioned in Law No 1289.

2. Divorce

The institution of divorce regulated by our Family Code produces the dissolution of marriage bonds and can only be obtained by a legal decision and will take place by the mutual agreement of the spouses or when the court confirms that there are reasons which make the marriage lose its sense for the spouses and children, and thereby for society, because an objective situation has been created that prevents the exercise of rights and fulfillment of obligations between the spouses and between them and their children. If we analyze the provisions previously established, we see that in them the moral content of the institution of marriage to which we have already referred, prevails, in contrast to the regulation contained in Decree Law No 206 dated 10 May 1934 (Divorce Law), which remained current until the passage of the legal measure to which we are referring, and which stated that divorce could be had through mutual agreement of the spouses or for any of the 18 taxatively enumerated reasons which were the bases for action existing at the time.

That decree-law was based on the principle of divorce with fault and rarely accepted that which was obtained for no-fault reasons, since the aforementioned causes for divorce could be grouped under the category of with fault or no-fault or "sineculpa." When divorce judgements were based on the former, inevitably, given their nature, there were prejudicial aspects given to the morality of those involved in a public and well-disseminated manner, which permanently degraded them in public opinion and in a great degree unjustly harmed the children, who were completely alien to the actions of their parents, marking them with a stigma which psychologically and morally prejudiced their future development.

The existence of the causes for divorce to which we referred were due to the fact that marriage was considered a civil contract, as we explained when we referred to the institution, and, therefore, affected it substantially. The elimination of those causes and the new concept of divorce contained in our current legal provisions is a great step forward in our legal regulation.

3. Parent-Child Relationships

With respect to parent-child relationships, the Family Code states that all children are equal and because of that enjoy equal rights and have the same duties toward their parents, regardless of their marital status, unlike that which was established in previous legislation in which there were legitimate children (those born during wedlock), natural children (born of parents who were not married but who were legally fit for marriage), and finally, by those called "illegitimate," who were those who were conceived by parents who were not in a position to marry. Pursuant to this differentiation among children, they unfairly received a different treatment in the moral as well as material aspect. It is enough to say that in the problem of intestate inheritance, a recognized natural child could only receive one-half of what a legitimate intestate heir could receive and the illegitimate child only had right to food and clothing. Our Family Code, by eliminating every distinction among children because of their origins, has, in our opinion, taken a fairer, more equitable and more human step forward, something which is only possible in a socialist society.

Pursuant to previous legislation, the child of parents who were not married could not be registered in the Civil Register with the surname of both of them if they did not jointly agree to do so.

The Family Code decrees that registration in this case should be done by both parents, however, when it is only requested by the mother and she gives the name of the father, he will personally be called to appear before the official in charge of the Marital Status Register and be informed that if within the period of 30 days he does not appear to admit or deny paternity, the child will be registered as his.

If the period passes and paternity has not been denied, the registration is formalized and once this is done it can only be impugned by means of whatever process applies within a period of 1 year. If paternity is denied, the registration will take place but without the name of the father, without prejudice to the right of the mother to require the registration to be made in whatever way is appropriate.

To establish the interest of the state in having the parents fulfill their duties to their children, regardless of the marital status of the parents, is a basic principle of the Family Code and thus, the primary obligation is that of acknowledging them by registering their birth. If this is not done voluntarily, our law bypasses the regular process of registration, the request for which should be forwarded to the Civil and Administrative Sections of the pertinent Provincial People's Court, pursuant to the provisions of the Law on Civil and Administrative Procedures, so that after the fulfillment of the requirements of the Family Code, a decision is issued decreeing the requested registration, if it is appropriate.

With respect to relationship between parents and children, the exercise of parental rights has exceptional importance in our Family Code, since it considers the obligatoriness of children respecting, considering, helping and obeying their parents, while they in turn have to keep their children under their protection and care, provide them with a stable home, proper support, care of their personal health and grooming, provide them with suitable recreational means, protect them properly, watch over their good behavior, cooperate with authorities to overcome any situation or ambiental environment which may unfavorably affect the children's training and development, see to their education, instill love of study in them, insure their attendance to classes, see to it that they improve themselves technically, scientifically and culturally, depending on their aptitudes, vocation and the requirements of the country's development, and also cooperate with educational authorities. They must also concern themselves with the training of their children for social life; imbuing them with the love of country, respect for its symbols and due appreciation of its values, internationalist spirit, the norms of coexistence, socialist morality and respect for the patrimonial wealth of society and the personal goods and rights of others and instill in them, through actions and the treatment given them, the knowledge of the respect they owe them, and teach them to respect the authorities, their teachers and other persons.

With respect to economic relationships, parents shall administer and care for the property of their children with the greatest diligence; will see to it that their children will properly use and enjoy the property belonging to them, and they may not give, exchange or sell it except for justified reasons of usefulness and need after authorization by the pertinent court and a hearing with the district attorney.

With respect to the civil capability of minors, the parents shall represent their children in all legal activities and business in which they have an interest, exercising their capabilities in those affairs in which full capability of action is required, performing those actions which by law are required in order to defend their interests and property.

The exercise of parental rights will be practiced until the children reach their majority, which at this time is established at 18 years-of-age and not 21 years as was required by previous legislation.

The rules contained in the Family Code with respect to the protection and care of children, is also very important because as a result of the dissolution of marriages, this aspect would cause serious upheavals if there were no regulations as proper and fair as those contained in the legal regulation we are analyzing. In the first place, the agreement of the parents, when they do not live together, will prevail. If there is no agreement between them, or if that agreement is against the moral or material interests of the children, the question shall be resolved by the pertinent court in a way which shall be the most beneficial for the minors. As a general rule, all other conditions being equal, it shall be ruled that the children will remain with the parent in whose company they were up until the time the disagreement ensued, the mother being preferrable if the children are with both of them, unless, and in every case, special reasons advise otherwise.

4. Obligation to Provide Support

Our Family Code understands support, as applied to minors, to mean sustenance, shelter, and clothing, as well as education, recreation and development. These shall be required from those who are obliged to provide them but without losing sight of the fact that this burden falls equally upon both parents. The amount of support shall be proportional to the economic means of those who provide it and the needs of those who receive it, it being possible to reduce or increase it proportionately according to the decrease or increase of the needs of the one being supported and the economic income of the one who has to provide it.

Minors may always demand support from their parents. The other persons with the right to receive it may do so when they are prevented from obtaining support by themselves because of age or incapacity. As can be seen, this provision of our Family Code referring to those who are mutually obliged to provide each other with sustenance: spouses, forebears and descendents, adoptants and adopted and brothers of any degree, is a positive innovation because it defines the true scope of the provision of sustenance, that is, with the exception of minors with respect to their parents, those who are fit for working do not have that right, something which is only possible in a society such as ours in which the Socialist State, as the Government of the People and at their service, guarantees in our Constitution that there is no man or woman who can work who does not have the opportunity to obtain employment by means of which he or she can contribute to the objectives of society and the satisfaction of personal needs, applying the socialist principle: "From each according to his capacity; to each according to his work."

Our Family Code also covers the ways of canceling parental rights as well as the loss or suspension of them by both parents, or one of them, with the reasons or motives which lead to it being explained. It is well understood that the loss or suspension of parental rights does not exempt the parents from the obligation of providing support for their children.

In sentences handed down by the Civil Courts depriving both or one parent of parental rights, or the exercise of rights is suspended, child support will be provided as applicable on the basis of the legal representation, protection and care of minors.

The affected parent or the district attorney may, through an appeal under the proper conditions, ask for an end to the suspension of parental rights as well as the modification of any other measures to which the previous paragraph refers when the circumstances which justified their adoption have changed.

As can be seen, this last paragraph refers only to the end to the suspension of parental rights and makes no provision for deprivation of them.

5. Adoption

As far as adoption is concerned, the Family Code, upon establishing this institution, establishes it in the interest of the better development and education of the minor, creating between the adoptants and adoptees a bond of parenthood similar to that existing between parents and children, with the same rights and duties. In order to adopt, it is necessary to have reached 25 years-of-age (in previous legislation it was 45), be in full enjoyment of civil and political rights, be in a situation of being able to provide for the economic needs of the adoptee and, finally, have the moral character and have had a behavior which allows the reasonable assumption that he will perform the duties to the adoptee, which the Code establishes for parents with respect to children under their control. It is necessary to point out that the adoptants must be at least 15 years older than the adoptees.

Pursuant to Law No 9 dated August 1977, in order for couples to adopt they must do it jointly and except in this case, no one may be adopted by more than one person. Law No 9 adds in its Article 101 that, however, one of the spouses may adopt the child of the other if the other parent of the minor to be adopted has died or has been deprived of parental rights. This addition, in our opinion, has relevant importance and has come to resolve in practice some de facto situations of real moral content, which before the existence of the new law had no possible solution.

Article 103 of the Family Code was also modified partially. Paragraph 3 was expanded to state that not only may minors of 16 years-of-age be adopted when parental rights have been canceled with respect to them, but also, and this is the addition: "When both parents have been deprived of them." Those who are subject to parental rights may also be adopted if those who exercise them give their express consent.

Legal authorization for adoption will have to be obtained through an action of voluntary jurisdiction presented by the adoptants, with intervention by the district attorney.

6. Guardianship

Another of the institutions contained in the Family Code, and which differs substantially from that regulated by the previous legislation contained in the Civil Code, is guardianship. Subject to guardianship are minors who are not under parental control and those adults who have been declared legally incapable of caring for themselves or administering their property because of mental disorders, being a deaf-mute or any other reason. Guardianship is legally established and has the objective of protecting, caring, educating, defending the rights and protecting the patrimonial interests of minors who are not under parental control and the fulfillment of civil obligations of the adults who have been declared legally incapacitated. In all cases, when the district attorney has been notified of the need to place a person under guardianship, he will institute measures to establish it if it is believed necessary, and he will also do it if parental rights of one exercising them are rescinded or, if applicable, an adoption is revoked.

The institution of guardianship, which up to the passage of the Family Code was regulated by the Civil Code, was exercised by a single guardian under the surveillance of the protutor. That legal text covered three classes of guardianship: testamentary guardianship, legitimate guardianship and dative guardianship. The latter was applicable when there was no testamentary guardian or persons legally bound to exercise the vacant guardianship, it then being up to the Family Council to choose the guardian in those cases where a guardianship had to be established.

From the above it can be seen that our Code eliminated the Family Council, the protutor and the method used for establishing guardianship, which represents a substantial difference between it and previous legislation because besides the fact that it simplifies the process, it offers real safeguards to the persons subject to guardianship, since it is the court which establishes it. The court does this, taking into account that which is most beneficial for the minor or for the incapacitated adult, with the ideal person for such high purposes being appointed as guardian. Because there are no fundamental pecuniary interests, since private ownership of means of production has been abolished, the guardian is not moved by bastard economic interests for his own benefit, as happened in many cases before, but rather by the praiseworthy objectives inherent in such an appointment.

The new political-administrative division of our country and, subsequently, the passage of the Law of Organization of the Judicial System in which the Rank and File People's Courts and Regional People's Courts are abolished and replaced by the Municipal Courts, brought the modification of Articles 142 and 143 of the Family Code as a result. In them the phrases "Rank and File People's Courts" and "Regional People's Courts" were replaced by the phrase "Pertinent Court." Articles 162 and 163 of the same body of law have also been modified, it being stated that the books in which established guardianships are recorded shall be kept by the courts responsible for oversight of each guardianship and not by the Regional People's Courts. The custody of those books shall remain in the hands of the court secretary, or if applicable, the secretary of the pertinent section, who shall make the entries and issue certifications, and not the secretary of the pertinent Civil Section as was stated in the oft-mentioned Family Code.

In this modest essay, we have tried to show briefly the substantial differences existing between the institutions covered by the Family Code and the way in which they were covered by the Civil Code and Decree-Law No 26 dated 10 May 1934, which regulated encumbered divorce in our country, as well as the moral concept of those institutions covered by the provisions of our current body of laws, the result of the adaptation of those provisions to the principles which rule a Socialist Society.

8908
CSO: 3010

JUNTA COUNTERS GERMAN ORGANIZATION'S CRITICISM OF REFORMS

San Salvador LA PRENSA GRAFICA in Spanish 2 Oct 80 pp 2, 20

[Text] The Information Secretariat of the Government's Revolutionary Junta yesterday countered statements from Germany that authority is exercised in El Salvador by the rightwing military to the advantage of a well-to-do minority.

"The German organization, 'Medico Internacional' [International Doctor], of Frankfurt " according to the report, "published statements that are the result of ignorance of Salvadoran reality or the malicious influence of sectarian interests."

A report sent to Germany by the Information Secretariat of the Junta, through the DPA Agency, fully explains the profound socioeconomic ,changes that have benefited the great majority of Salvadorans.

"An example of that," specifies the report, "is the case of the Agrarian Reform, the first in Latin America, which from its inception has increased the crop yield of the land."

"They say that the Agrarian Reform has affected 263 properties, including the best land in the entire country; that represents the establishment of 263 cooperatives made up of many peasants. Before, there were 200 rich families who made a profit from that land; now, hundreds of thousands of peasant families are the beneficiaries, a fact those who make those capricious statements fail to recognize," the Salvadoran spokesmen told Germany.

They Explain...

Elsewhere Medico Internacional says that El Salvador is "hermetically sealed" and that "the Salvadorans who escape run the risk of death." "What the above mentioned organization does not say," says the Information Secretariat, "is that those Salvadorans who 'are running' do so because the extremist groups that operate in El Salvador have devoted themselves for some time to murder and terrorism and are destroying very many sources of employment, which has caused logical fear in many sectors; but that here there are also 4 and 1/2 million Salvadorans who tenaciously and courageously defy the threats of terrorists. These people have successfully resisted in the face of the worst kinds of calamities."

The Salvadoran Government's report shows that the statements of Medico Internacional lack objectivity and are biased in favor of terrorist groups. Those very statements, it notes, could serve as a model of misinformation and could even indicate that the authors are disciples of Coebbels who practice Nazi propaganda methods.

It explains that the government has proposed suitable political solutions, like elections. It points out that extreme rightist terrorists are the ones who are employing violence in order to attain political power, and that they are doing this because they have no possibility of winning at the polls.

Finally, it explains that the main struggle in which the Salvadoran people are engaged is for peace of mind, inasmuch as they are tired of so much violence and so much terrorism.

8255
CSO: 3010

INCREASING AUTHORITARIANISM OF FSLN SEEN AS DISTURBING

San Pedro Sula LA PRENSA in Spanish 7 Oct 80 p 7

[Editorial: "'Proletarian' Production and Discipline in Nicaragua"]

[Text] Very interesting indeed are the events that are occurring in Nicaragua, that have to do with relations between the labor movement and production centers--for the most part state-owned--that operate there under the aegis of Sandinism.

A telex from Managua, for which the Central American News Agency accepted responsibility, indicates that "the Nicaraguan Government announced on Thursday (2 October) that seizures of factories, lands, and houses will not be tolerated in this country--and neither will illegal strikes be permitted."

According to the news report, "the five members of the National Reconstruction Junta--Daniel Ortega, Arturo Cruz, Rafael Cordova Rivas, Sergio Ramirez, and Moises Hassan--broadcast a statement on a national broadcasting channel.

It fell to Arturo Cruz, a member of the executive committee, to read the message that dealt with various topics; and "profound reflections were made on situations that affect the revolutionary process."

In the judgment of the government, there are specific plans in this country for economic destabilization through the paralysis of production in the forthcoming weeks.

"There is also a plan to defy the revolutionary order," says the document.

"All of this is occurring," added the Governmental Junta, as the time approaches for the arrival of the Inter-American Committee on Human Rights, which is to come to Nicaragua in answer to an invitation of the Sandinist government.

"Therefore," added the Junta, "it is time to announce with firmness and with the backing of the people that no challenge to order and stability will be tolerated."

The Nicaraguan Government warned that it is not a question of creating a state of emergency, but pointed out that the revolutionary decrees will be "strictly" applied to those who instigate civil disobedience or who counter the authorities.

The revolutionary decrees will also be applied against those who may be found guilty of "disrespect" to the armed forces or the police of the country.

The same thing will happen to those who may seize factories and centers of production; those who obstruct the flow of finished products from factories; those who may try to stop public conveyances; or those who may instigate the seizure of land.

Finally it was announced that peasants who have land claims must make them through the Nicaraguan Institute for Agrarian Reform and "never through de facto means, as occurs in other countries."

This is the substance of the news report.

Although this is a long citation, its importance amply justifies its being repeated, because it brings out various facts that the independent press has been emphasizing for years, in the face of the quasi indifference of the political sectors that currently represent our countries.

To begin with, it confirms a matter which--in spite of its being known--we often do not gauge conscientiously: that is, under leftist military regimes (especially under marxist totalitarianism), there is no right to strike.

For organized workers, the right to strike is tantamount to that of free speech in the case of journalists.

Generations of democratic, honest, and courageous labor union leaders gave their lives to win that right. Communism, which is said to be the "vanguard of the working class," has openly and frankly obliterated with a stroke of the pen that vital conquest in behalf of the "order and stability" mentioned in the statement referred to in the preceding paragraphs.

In addition to that, there are "seizures" of factories, farms, public offices, etc., which are so much in vogue in democratic countries and which all kinds of leftist groups carry out without any kind of restraint--even over trifles--in the face of indulgence on the part of our administrators and of a society that has been bombarded with feverish and mistaken preachment with respect to human rights; because, while on the one hand it defends the presumed rights of vociferous groups, on the other it ignores and suppresses the legitimate rights of hundreds or thousands of persons who are hurt when an extremist minority sets a factory on fire and leaves many families without work or food.

Not only that: The announcement says that the decree will be "strictly" applied to those who "are disrespectful" of the Sandinist military and police. What is "disrespect" in that context? Who decides when a citizen, or a group of citizens, is disrespectful of the police or, on the other hand, demands respect for the interests of the majority, their religious and political beliefs, or their standard of moral values?

What do the sympathizers of the Honduran left think of these methods, they who spend most of their time concocting violent acts against the government and private enterprise and planning attacks on centers of production, instead of devoting themselves to creative work and establishing their claims through dignified, responsible, and legal means?

Perhaps these aspiring leaders would prefer that we have a government that is capable of introducing draconian measures against the people's most basic rights, provided that those oppressive measures be carried out in the name of the revolution and the "proletarian dictatorship," which is nothing but a means of tyrannizing workers and the rest of the population?

With each day that passes, the situation becomes clearer and more alarming.

Once more experience teaches that one must not wait until a society, dominated by injustice, extreme poverty, the authoritarian sternness of an unpopular government (as in the Somoza era) and widespread underdevelopment, comes to the point of exploding because of totalitarian tyranny. On the contrary, progressive reforms and changes must be found to improve the well being of the majority, with respect for the right of minorities, so that peace, social harmony, equally shared progress, and freedom will prosper. Do we agree?

8255
CSO: 3010

IBARRA PLEDGES HEALTHY ECONOMY, STRONG CURRENCY

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 4 Sep 80 pp 1-A, 12-A

[Article by Roberto Noriega G.]

[Text] Mexico's economy--in a world afflicted by depression and inflation--is healthy and its currency stable, the secretary of finance and public credit said last night, as he announced that the nation's chief executive has decided to allocate 175 billion pesos this year to support SAM [Mexican Food Distribution System], aid production of staple goods, and provide an impetus to the activities of the COPLAMAR in the nation's areas.

Lawyer David Ibarra Munoz, as he revealed a package of economic and fiscal measures, the object of which is "a more equitable distribution of the benefits of growth," also indicated that the executive branch will submit a bill providing for further tax reductions for persons in the lower income brackets--at a cost of 11 billion pesos in reduced tax revenues--and another bill providing for a 35 percent excise tax on luxury items such such as luxury automobiles, yachts, planes, etc. The VAT [value-added tax] will remain unchanged.

Ibarra also said in Los Pinos last night that, based on an agreement with the chief executive, additional incentives will be provided to the programs for promoting the construction of socially needed housing for sale or rent, and that a bill will also be introduced in this regard providing for raising the current 3 percent rate of deductible depreciation to 5 percent, thus supplementing the incentive tax treatment.

The official clarified that these measures--tax reduction, aid to production of staple items, and other new measures--"do not mean a reduction of tax revenues in absolute terms; these will continue rising at a healthy rate thanks to the modern administrative system the president of the Republic has instituted and to the responsibility of its top officials."

The package announced by Ibarra Munoz can be broken out into nine main components, the first having to do with the application of fiscal and credit resources to the food system, to COPLAMAR activities and to the production of staple goods. These are programs for which 147 billion pesos had been allocated at the beginning of the year. To step up activities, cover deficits and advance these programs more rapidly, the chief executive has decided to add 28 billion pesos to that sum, bringing the total allocation to 175 billion by the end of the year.

Besides this, however, Ibarra Munoz said during his press conference, there are some additional supportive measures.

By decision of the president of the Republic, producers of staple items of popular consumption will be issued fiscal promotion certificates to increase their production and to thus keep prices stable and the country supplied. The total involved will be 4.5 billion pesos.

Another 4.6 billion pesos will go to producers of durable or nondurable consumer items which, however, are intended for the popular classes.

Together with these, there will be a significant increase in funds to be channeled through the existing mechanisms for the protection of small and medium producers and low-income consumers, namely, the FONACOT whose capital and credit resources will be increased considerably.

The same will be done in the case of the fideicommissums for the cooperatives, "because we want to encourage production and improve the system of marketing," said the finance minister.

Additionally, The funds of the Rural Bank and of the FIRA will be increased so that over an area of between 1 million and 2 million hectares, production of staple foods of popular consumption will be increased this year.

He summarized the most noteworthy aspects of these measures, decided by the chief executive, under three headings.

They are: tax relief for physical persons, especially those in the lower income brackets; tax treatment favoring the construction of socially needed housing; and VAT tax relief in the popular consumption goods category, in the form of a tax reduction of the order of 90 percent, with only those items being taxed that are injurious to health.

All of these tax relief and fiscal incentive measures represent aid totaling 25 billion pesos this year, the minister said.

Aside from this, speaking of the situation of the peso, the finance minister said that "it is to be hoped that this kind of question, which conceals underlying rumors that are prejudicial, will not be raised very often."

"Mexico," he said, "is prosperous. In a world in the throes of recession and galloping inflation, our country is the exception. Our export revenues are high.

"The soundness of the Mexican economy is evident despite external factors," the finance minister said, pointing, as proof of this, to the additional supports being provided by the government to its three basic programs: SAM, COPLAMAR and basic goods production.

9399
CSO: 3010

OTEYZA: PETROLEUM PRODUCTION WILL NOT BE CHANGED

Mexico City EL DIA in Spanish 8 Sep 80 p 2

[Text] For the remainder of this 6-year period, Mexico will not change its petroleum production program despite internal and external pressures, Secretary of Patrimony and Industrial development Jose Andres Oteyza asserted yesterday, stating in a press conference that the National Energy Plan will be submitted to the president of the republic at the end of this month.

Oteyza also announced to those present at the Conference on Economic Policy of Energy Self-Sufficient Countries that in the immediate future our country will extend the energy aid it is currently providing to Central America and the Caribbean countries to cover all of Latin America, indicating that this is consistent with the World Energy Plan proposed by Mexico to the United Nations.

The minister stated that the Energy Plan is based fundamentally on an oil production program of 2.5 million barrels a day, with a 10-percent margin of fluctuation. Nevertheless, he admitted that pressures exist for our country to increase this program--pressures, he said, that are sometimes so subtle as to be unidentifiable.

He asserted that the development plans and programs the government had instituted are based on its own development program criteria without regard for those pressures and that oil exports and the foreign currency they generate are kept strictly in accordance with the national interest, with the capacity for their absorption by the Mexican economy, and with our own development programs.

He admitted that notwithstanding the "relative success" being enjoyed by the economic plans instituted by the current administration, we do have the problems of inflation, of the concentration of income, and important ones related to our foreign trade structure.

"This," he said, "is a source of concern to us and the object of special attention on our part." Although the funds being generated by oil are already visible, he pointed out, "we now have to complete the second part of the program, which is to channel them properly to achieve a good balance in our productive structure and in our international trade structure."

However, there are other problems, such as that of international relations. We have adopted the policy of bilateral negotiations and therefore have not joined the GATT [General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (UN)]. In this manner, independently of the sale of oil, "we are demanding real transfers of technologies and capital goods. This has led us to visit different countries in an effort to advance this program."

As regards the aid to be extended to all of Latin America, he said it will range from exploration to the transfer of technology and real resources for energy development. Work will proceed in this manner, although implementation of the world plan is not yet possible, since things "move slowly" at the United Nations.

In commenting on the importance of the 3-day conference held in the city of Oaxaca, he said the most important thing had been that countries like Great Britain, Canada, Norway and Holland had supported Mexico's policies based on not opting for an oil-oriented road but rather for the road of a country with oil.

The government's economic policy, Oteyza said, is founded on three basic decisions: to plan our growth and to moderate and minimize the effects of the traditional mechanisms of the marketplace; to channel our development along the road to a better balance and a diversification of our economic structure, getting away from the oil model that could hang like a cloud over our future; and lastly, the Mexican government's decision not to join the GATT for the time being.

He admitted, however, that we have achieved only a limited success in the reorientation of our growth and that we are beginning to feel the effects of the sectorial and regional reorientation of our growth. There are still many problems.

At a breakfast meeting with journalists, and in regard to the question of whether there might be an oil-products price rise for people within the country, Oteyza said: "Things will have to be adjusted gradually, as circumstances make it desirable to do so." He explained the pricing rationale and said its aim is to not worsen the price-rise problem for the inhabitants, which is already acute, to not generate inflationary effects and to favor industrial growth.

9399
CSO: 3010

ANOTHER PEMEX OIL SPILL REPORTED

Mexico City EL SOL DE MEXICO in Spanish 31 Aug 80 p 2-A

[Article by Arturo de Aquino]

[Text] The oil pipeline that interconnects the oil drilling platforms in the Campeche Sound was cut by an anchor cable of the lighter "Tolteca," causing a serious leak and compelling PEMEX [Mexican Petroleum] to shut down its wells in the zone, which are producing 60,000 barrels a day, to avoid a spill and possible environmental contamination.

Despite the preventive measures taken, the oil that managed to escape formed an immense black patch immediately on the surface of the sea, making it necessary to treat the affected area immediately with dispersing agent.

The new PEMEX spill took place yesterday, this time in the underwater pipeline built in the Campeche Sound, which was cut while the lighter "Tolteca" was maneuvering in the oil-drilling area.

PEMEX stated that the damaged pipeline has a diameter of 24 inches and can deliver a total of 150,000 barrels a day of crude; 60,000 of these come from the wells in the Nohoch area--the affected zone--and the other 90,000 are part of the production from platforms Akal F and Akal I.

The enterprise explained that the accident had occurred at 0620 hours yesterday while the lighter was maneuvering to anchor in the vicinity of platform AKAL C.

As a result of the accident, pumping of oil was suspended immediately and the wells whose production is handled by platform Nohoch A were shut down.

As soon as the Environmental Protection Agency office was notified, its emergency brigades sped to the site of the accident, to control the spillage and treat the affected area with dispersing agent.

According to PEMEX, the wells shut down are C-2011, C-2011-D, C-2073 and C-2095, which means a reduction of 60,000 barrels a day of output.

PEMEX also indicated that, taking advantage of existing installations, the production of platforms Akal F and Akal I were diverted to the Akal J and Akal C complexes respectively, which together can handle a total of 750,000 barrels a day.

Lastly, PEMEX indicated that necessary work is going forward in the AKAL-C and Akal J complexes to interconnect production platform Nohoch A, and that normal production is expected to be resumed within the next 24 hours.

As is known, the oil extracted from the Campeche Sound accounts for the rise in recent months of the national oil production indexes. Besides, the wells in that zone are registering the highest levels of production per well not only in Mexico but throughout the world.

9399
CSO: 3010

SECOND CHICOASEN UNIT GOES ON LINE

Mexico City EXCELSIOR in Spanish 5 Sep 80 p 31-A [Text] The second unit of the Chicoasen hydroelectric plant was placed in service yesterday. This brings the plant's production capacity up to 67,000 kilowatts, and by the end of this year this plant, over the Grijalva river, will have an installed capacity of 1.5 million kilowatts.

In announcing this, the Federal Commission on Electricity [CFE] added that the supply of electric power had reached normalization with the putting into operation of another 67,000 kilowatts being generated by gas-driven plants in Ciudad Juarez, the city of Chihuahua and Piedras Negras to serve that important zone of the country's northern border.

The CFE reported that the rainy season has been normal in the upper Balsas, that the El Infiernillo dam's water level can be considered normal for this time of the year, and that the dam is expected to be completely filled by the end of the rain cycle.

As regards the Grijalva basin, the rains have not yet reached normal, but it is expected that they soon will, besides which a program has been started in cooperation with the Secretariat of Agriculture and Water Resources.

Three of the country's largest hydroelectric plants are installed over the Grijalva: Angostura, Chicoasen and Malpaso; and this is why it is important that cloud formations be diverted toward that zone and that rain be induced artificially.

Lastly, the CFE said the power failures that have been experienced in Mexico City have been owing to the distribution network and heavy rains that have fallen in the capital city of the Republic. It said that work is going forward at an accelerated rate to repair the faults.

9399
CSO: 3010

FSLN COMMEMORATES HEROES, MARTYRS IN OCTOBER CELEBRATIONS

Significance of October Discussed

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 18 Oct 80 pp 1, 5

[Text] October represents the retaking of the offensive; Pedro Arauz is the model of martyrs; the party has recovered its dimensions for taking the course charted for it by history.

These were the concluding remarks concerning the heroic feats of October delivered yesterday by Commander of the Revolution Henry Ruiz, minister of planning, during the solemn ceremony commemorating the events of October, at the Dorado movie theater.

The ceremony was attended by the members of the National Directorate, Comdr Bayardo Arce and Humberto Ortega; Guerrilla Commanders Dora Maria Tellez and Walter Ferretti; Arturo Cruz, member of the Government Junta and state minister; Lea Guido, minister and member of the Sandinist Assembly; Comrade Julio Lopez, of the FSLN [Sandinist National Liberation Front] National Secretariat; members of the FSLN Directional Committee of Managua; relatives of martyrs of the feats of October; special guests from the diplomatic corps; and representatives of the mass organizations and the Sandinist Armed Forces.

Commander of the Revolution Henry Ruiz, who spoke on behalf of the National Directorate of the Sandinist Front, made a brief historical review of the contributions from Comdr Pedro Arauz Palacios to the people's struggle, to the organization and history of the fatherland and to the October feats.

He said: "The martyrs were always right, because, as the poet Leonel Rugama said, they did not say that they died for the fatherland, but that they died."

October, a Month Which Gave Birth to History

Commenting on the events of October in the history of the Sandinist Front, he said that it was one of life's coincidences that October was the month which gave birth to the history of mankind with glorious deeds for mankind, and for the Sandinist People's Revolution as well.

He added that, with October, the struggle was resumed. It was felt in October 1977, in different theaters of war. At that time, the men on the battlefield wanted to put the victory on the calendar.

With regard to the situation that our people were experiencing in October, Commander Ruiz said that, during that period, Somoza was boasting of being the "champion of democracy."

At that time we were also undergoing an organic crisis, which was the most difficult problem. He also recalled that the revolutionary movement on the continental level was experiencing a situation of retreat, and that affected the struggle of the Sandinist Front. He said that the armed struggle was not in question; what was in question was the favorable resolution of the situation and the neutralization of the attacks that we were receiving.

It was in October that the best conditions for unity arose. The occurrence of the events in October, owing to their daring, introduced elements questioning the war, and indicated to us that it is not only possible to fight in the mountains, but in the cities as well, and that it is possible to expand the theater of war. Hence the great historical contribution from October.

October Sealed the Victory

Commander Ruiz added that, for this reason, October sealed the victory, and was the link which joined the military action and initiative for combat, and the level of the people's morale. It showed the people and the FSLN the path. He said that Somoza did not realize what October meant.

Commander Ruiz stated: "We discussed critical matters, but in the end we united, because October was the path which was the synthesis of 19 July 1979."

Later in his remarks, Commander Ruiz cited the need to underscore in history the most important aspects of the people's struggle, so that it may serve as a guide for future generations.

Pedro, the Model

Concerning Comdr Pedro Arauz Palacios, member of the National Directorate who was assassinated by the Somozan guards in the vicinity of Tipitapa on 17 October 1977, he said that he was the model of the martyrs who died during the history of the Sandinist Front's liberation struggle; a comrade who possessed all the qualifications that a true member of the Sandinist Front must meet: selflessness, sacrifice, ability to plot, distrust, guile, discipline, a propagandist outlook, combating sleep, etc.

All this was combined in Comdr Pedro Arauz. He said: "These martyrs deserved to hold the top leadership that we have today far more than we; these positions belong to them."

He also remarked that Pedro Arauz was one of the first militants to bring the scientific theory of organization into the vanguard. He always went about making organizational charts; he was concerned about holding the first congress of the National Directorate, in order to have an opportunity to discuss all the problems besetting the Directorate.

He said: "It had to be in October that Pedro died. It had to be in October, and at a high price; but in October history arose, and the theoretical discussion moved to a second phase, and practice, action was the key, and the offensive."

Maintaining the Spirit of October

In conclusion, he said that we must maintain that spirit of the October offensive in the tasks of economic reactivation, because we still have serious difficulties and we must consolidate our victory.

In her remarks, Guerrilla Commander Dora Maria Tellez, political secretary of the Sandinist Front in Managua, cited the advent of the Carlos Fonseca Northern Front, in October 1977, with 42 men ready to die for liberation.

She said that the column was headed by Comdrs German Pomares and Oscar Benavides; and it was mobilized in October to attack the Somozan command in Ocotal, as part of a plan coordinated with the action in San Carlos, Masaya and other locations. But the enemy was warned, and this meant a very difficult situation for our combatants.

The attack on Ocotal did not take place, and the action at Masaya occuured on 17 October, because the comrades could not fail in their commitment.

She said: "I mention this because we are now succumbing to a state of relaxing discipline. We need to shorten the time for dealing with the major social, economic and other problems that our people are suffering; and therefore we must make a little sacrifice for that cause."

Planning Minister Ruiz Speaks

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 20 Oct 80 pp 3, 5

[Speech by Commander of the Revolution and Minister of Planning Henry Ruiz, at the ceremony marking the "Heroic Combative Feats of October," on 17 October 1980, at the El Dorado movie theater.

[Text] "Our heroes and martyrs were always right.

"We shall cite, in connection with the heroic feats of October, some of the disturbing aspects of the historical summary of the events of October; although everyone knows that people can hardly make a summary of the history that they themselves have experienced.

"We would first like to say that our brother martyrs were always right, because, as the poet Rugama said: 'They did not say that they died for the fatherland, but that they died.'

"One always runs the risk, when a few years have elapsed, of arriving at hasty conclusions regarding all-important, profound events such as the feats of October; feats which, by historical coincidence, occurred in October, the month which gave birth to history, definitively, in the destiny of mankind.

"They were events which were not planned to coincide in October; events which were not related to the desire that they necessarily occur during that glorious month for mankind which, by coincidence, is glorious for the Sandinist People's Revolution."

We Had Become Involved in War Not To Die But To Win

"What we would like to focus on is the observation of the context of the events of October as the restarting of the offensive of the Sandinist People's War against the dictatorship, against the oppressors of our people. At that time, different forces of the Sandinist Front were battling against the enemy in different areas and different theaters of war. We combatants in the mountains had in some way carried out a series of activities for a certain length of time. And at that time the men who were leading the activities then wanted to determine the date of the victory, to put the war period on the calendar. That was a matter of concern to us too, but we did not in any way make the time official; we had become involved in war not to die, but to win.

"And we are certain that the martyrs and heroes of our history did not enter it to die, but to win. In any event, death is a factor in the hazardous life of a revolutionary.

"It is in that context that we wanted to observe the martyrs and heroes of Raiti; and in that same context to observe the martyrs and heroes who fought and died in San Carlos, Masaya and Managua, and on the site which we sadly consider sacred, where 'Federico,' our brother Pedro, died.

"They died because the official rules did not allow them the fortunes of those of us who can now recall the events that they championed. And we wish to state frankly that some of them would rightfully have, from the standpoint of history and from the standpoint of the events themselves, more merit than those of us who currently have the destiny to lead the Sandinist People's Revolution (applause).

"October arrived in the midst of an organic crisis, but, more than in the midst of an organic crisis, it arrived at the time when Somoza was being called the champion of liberty and the defender of democracy."

Prospects of the War and Unity of the Vanguard

"More important than the difficult situation that the Sandinist Front was experiencing were the prospects that the war was acquiring at that time. More than the consolidation of the very fact of Somoza were the prospects that the revolutionary movement had at that time.

"Remember, in 1970 the entire revolutionary movement in Latin America had made a strategic retreat, and we were not excluded from that contingency. There had arisen a series of theories about the war, but what was important was that in such theory the armed struggle was not a matter of discussion, nor was the strategy of power a matter of discussion. The difficult part was to deal with the spirit which the adverse blows were to some extent bringing to the members of the Vanguard and the Sandinist Front.

"For those reasons related to life, for those reaons that are customarily called dialectics, it was in October that the daring and determination coincided to take on the final offensive, which led to the defeat of the dictatorship and victory for our people.

"We must say that in October there was a 'restarting' of the offensive in the war, that October pointed to the events and synthesized the possibility of victory, that it caused us to review the organizational methods, that it allowed us to restore confidence in the guerrilla rifle and, to some extent, to vary the theaters of war which, even then, we were keeping almost categorically closed. But, from a dialectical standpoint, the conditions had been produced within the Sandinist Front; because it is no coincidence that, in the 'restarting' of the offensive, the scattered forces of the Sandinist Front joined that spirit of offensive, and proved to be the link for materializing the most beautiful and most sacred quality that our revolution has at present, which was a determining factor at that time: its revolutionary unity, the unity of the Vanguard."

October: the Most Important Milestone of the Final Offensive

"In a way, Somoza was 'laughable' at that time; he coincided with the image of the cardinal, he entertained himself on the throne, and the slogan 'Somoza forever' seemed replete with definitive reality in the ears of the vacillating. Because what was happening within the Sandinist Front was also happening among the opposition. Somoza was becoming consolidated, and caused the forces opposing us to vacillate in the face of that ostensible consolidation.

"This is why the events of October have an historical significance, which we daresay is the most important 'milestone' in the final offensive against Somoza, against the dictatorship and against the oppressors of our people. We do not hesitate to say that they were actions which introduced some questionable elements, perhaps because of the situation that we were undergoing, but perhaps more than that, because of the scope of the daring with which they had been conceived. But we must observe this from the standpoint of dialectics and from the standpoint of the history of our Sandinist Front's struggle as our people's Vanguard.

"It was not a problem of meditating on events nor of being brave or unthinking at that time; rather, the decisive 'signal' had been given to prevent what could have been a retreat of the revolutionary movement and a consolidation of the dictatorship for many years; and that signal was given by the events of October 1977.

"In short, Somoza and the dictatorship seemed to be consolidated, both politically and militarily. Very ideal conditions to reverse that status appeared from the standpoint of the political laboratory. From that standpoint, there appeared the October offensive, and it appeared precisely to provide the ingredients for the spirit of offensive, the spirit that we had found in our people, in Sandino and Fonseca.

"To summarize a little, we would like to say that October bore the seal of victory and, paradoxically, the controversy which it aroused owing to the dimensions of its daring, was the link which bound the military action and restored the evidence that relates to wars: initiative and moral superiority. It gave the people and the FSLN the point of convergence, the starting signal and the link which combined the phase of accumulation of political, military and organic energy with the offensive spirit of the people's war.

"Somoza did not really take notice of October; he entertained himself with the criminal offensive that he launched against the Sandinist combatants. But for us Sandinists who were ostensibly in retreat, we recognize in the action of October a milestone in the final offensive against Somoza; and that gave us the definitive conditions for revolutionary unity."

The Original Concept of the War and the Dimensions of the Victory

"We repeat, there were discussions about the concept of certain events, but we saw in retrospect events which proved that it was possible to fight in the city; events which indicated that the theater of war could be expanded, and that in the so-called strategic dispersion of the enemy, it was possible to fight in the districts, in the mountains and in the countryside. In a way, the original concept of the war which the Sandinist National Liberation Front had was in solidarity with that action.

"As I said, October gave the final prism, it gave the final dimension, regardless of how much we discussed the events, of the offensive and the spirit of offensive that was to support us against the enemy. And Somozo learned about it; our people learned about it. And October, or the Octobers as we say now, finally had their synthesis on 19 July 1979, 2 years later.

"The men and the concepts lie therein, in October. There is still a great deal for history to highlight, there are still events to be determined; but they must be determined from a different dimension, from the dimension provided by victory. There may be assessments of events, but there is one overall result, namely, the Sandinist victory, the victory of our people."

Pedro Arauz: Organizer and Propagandist of Revolutionary Ideas

"So there is still a great deal to record, not only the records; the ideas must be recorded. What we may not be able to record is the spirit and determination of the men who died in combat; because those men did not hesitate. Those men took the offensive again and were ready to die, as they had been ready to live and to apply their best energy to the reconstruction of the new fatherland. The heroes, like the martyrs, are not measured by that dimension; just as we cannot measure, count and balance the figure of Pedro Arauz, our brother 'Federico.' In Pedro, we would also like to see October; we would like to see the figure that aged within a few years owing to his activity and its persistence as an organizer. In Pedro, we would like to see October; just as we would like to see the model of our brothers who died, the secrecy, the guile, the tact and the insight which the clandestine life demands.

"There are few revolutionaries who have legends and pseudonyms, and who also have the skill and the protective ability to fight. And Pedro became a legend in the most difficult theater of war, surviving against an efficient security apparatus, surviving in action, with the outlook of an organizer, and of a publicizer and divulger of revolutionary ideas; fighting against sleep, fighting without rest against his own human limitations. In Pedro, we would also like to see the same spirit which the Sandinist Front had, and which the Sandinist Front still has, toward historic events.

"The Sandinist Front calls itself a young vanguard of our people, with the historic dimensions of other peoples; one that adapts itself, equips itself and interprets and works untiringly, in the face of the historic events of every day.

"In a way, Pedro, our brother 'Federico,' was imbued with that vanguard spirit. We recalled that, at one time, we were looking for Sandinist models, and searched the major personages in the Sandinist National Liberation Front. And sometimes we thought about comrades who, because of their qualities, we repeat, make us unworthy to hold the position that we have, in comparison with the wake left by their lives.

"And among those personages and models was 'Federico,' without doubt. It was difficult to achieve organic synthesis, but we must say that he was one of the first comrades to bring to the members of the Sandinist Front the scientific concept of organization. We recall 'Federico' as the first of the comrades to deal with matters which now appear to be a daily element in the lives of the organizers. He went about making plans and organizational charts, seeking methods that would make the lines of command and responsibility clearcut. We would approach, with curiosity, the notebooks in which he drew up those organizational charts. It was the unrest of a revolutionary who, at his young age, resorted to technology and to the modern advances in organization to apply them correctly to the scientific method of revolutionary organization. But in 'Federico' we also find the qualities of a tough combatant, a man who was not resigned to adversity, and who was always confident of the day of victory. In 'Federico' we see the disciplined man who is intransigent about party discipline. And we must mention it somewhat, because of the thrill of talking about 'Federico,' because we had the good fortune of working together, observing problems and engaging in war exercises. In 'Federico' we discerned the person who claimed that the party represented discipline above all else. And 'Federico' was a mirror of discipline. We recall the worries about holding the first congress of the National Directorate, to discuss in depth the leadership problems, and it did so always thinking of the Sandinist Front as a party of the revolution. That is why, at times, when the enemies oppose the Sandinist Front, and when the bourgeoisie tries to set itself up, claiming that we have become a 'suspicious' kind of party, they forget that there has always been among us that 'suspicious kind' of party; and that one of the fathers of those kinds of parties was 'Federico,' our brother Pedro. And it was not by chance that, in 'Federico,' we could even find the selflessness of the first combatants, like the selflessness of the early Christians in the catacombs: their love, their steadfastness and their dedication to struggle.

"Therefore, October is no coincidence in the progress and the history of the FSLN struggle, although it is a coincidence that the outstanding events in our history occurred in October. It is no coincidence that 'Federico' died in October. History was condensed at that time, and the Sandinist Front finally produced the energy to lead the people to victory. And in that birth, great sons of our fatherland died. 'Federico,' one of its best sons, one of the best sons of FSLN, died.

"October had to have an historic price, the physiology of that birth had to have a price. Langrand died, Lewites died, 'Chato' died and 'Federico' died; but the flag of victory was raised in such clear-cut dimensions that the theoretical discussions and difficulties of the war at that time became secondary, with a definitive recovery of action and a restoration of the spirit of offensive that the revolutionary war requires."

He Wanted To Be an Engineer, but He Decided To Be a Revolutionary

"He was born in 1948, was from Diriomo and received a diploma. He wanted to be an engineer, but he decided to be a revolutionary. His internationalist spirit took him to Beirut; he wanted to become involved in Guatemala. It was his concern to carry on the struggle, and he always talked about the people and about his origins.

"It is no coincidence therefore that we find the traits, the mystique and the dimensions of that new man in 'Federico,' and in his background and his class origins.

"Finally, we would like to sum up the evidence somewhat.

"October resumed the Sandinist offensive; Pedro was the model of the martyrs who died in that incident.

"The party has recovered its dimensions, to take the new course that history has charted for it. And it is with those three factors that we wanted, tonight, to stress that, rather than pay tribute, there should be meditation on the new feats, and new Octobers."

October Continues, and Demands Defense of What Has Been Conquered

"In conclusion, we would like to say that October continues, that difficulties are still mounting in the national area, that the spirit of offensive is still on the agenda; that the enemy has not become resigned to losing its historic privileges, and that the men who died in the past demand of the Vanguard, demand of the ranks from which they came, and demand of the people themselves that they defend what has been conquered, and build the future of which they dreamed and for which they died; that we dream and be willing to die.

"There are still problems of organization, social problems, economic problems and problems within, in the life of the revolution; but if we observe events in perspective, we must surely respond that the future is ours, that the future belongs to our people, and that the spirit of October, or the coincidence of October, will be consolidated in the future.

"Long live the eternal memory of the heroes and martyrs of October!

"Free fatherland or death!"

2909
CSO: 3010

PEDRO CHAMORRO, OTHERS SPEAK AT RALLY SUPPORTING 'LA PRENSA'

Managua LA PRENSA in Spanish 21 Oct 80 pp 1, 7

Text] During the early evening of Sunday, 19 October, accompanied by shouts of "Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Cardenal...here! LA PRENSA yesterday, LA PRENSA today, LA PRENSA foreover!" hundreds of Nicaraguan citizens spontaneously and enthusiastically received Mrs Violeta Barrios de Chamorro and her son, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, at the Augusto Cesar Sandino Airport.

The former member of the Government of Reconstruction Junta and her son were returning from the 36th annual meeting of the Inter-American Press Association (IAPA), which took place in San Diego, California, on the Pacific coast of the United States, where the burning issue of freedom of the press in America was debated at length.

The members of the reception group, men, women, adolescents and children, used copies of the newspaper LA PRENSA as flags to greet Mrs Chamorro, her son and other companions.

A large banner bearing the legend "Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, here!" was unfurled upon the arrival of the travelers in the airport reception room.

Mrs Violeta Barrios de Chamorro received several bouquets of flowers and warm embraces from women of all social classes.

Shortly before 1900 hours, a long procession of vehicles was formed and, sounding horns, drove to the Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Square, located nearby, where the illustrious journalist was assassinated.

On the square there were gathered delegations from the various political parties, including the Nicaraguan Democratic Movement, headed by engineer Alfonso Robelo; the Social Democratic Party, led by Wilfredo Montalvan; Adan Fletes, president of the Nicaraguan Social Christian Party; the Conservative Democratic Party; and the Civic Committee for Freedom of the Press; as well as some labor leaders.

The crowd constantly chanted "LA PRENSA...LA PRENSA...LA PRENSA"! Others repeated: "We Christians are here...Christ yesterday, Christ today, Christ foreover"! "Long live freedom of speech"!

Dona Violeta Speaks

Dona Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, former member of the Government Junta, was the first to address the crowd, and did so as follows:

"Managuans, all Nicaraguans...we are Nicaraguans who are living in this country.

"I want to thank you on behalf of myself and my husband, who is always here in the presence of all you Nicaraguans.

"I am returning from San Diego, California, after one of the meetings of our Inter-American Press Association (IAPA), which has always fought for the freedom of our country and of the entire hemisphere.

"Many thanks to all of you here present, regardless of what ideology you may represent. Thanks to everyone; and let us remain always united, united to exalt our country with all our hearts.

"Thanks on behalf of LA PRENSA. Many thanks to all those who made this enormous effort to come from the Augusto Cesar Sandino Airport to the Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Square.

"Many thanks to all Nicaraguans." (Applause and shouts of "long live LA PRENSA")

Dr Ricardo Paiz Castillo, Representing the Committee for Freedom of Speech

Dr Ricardo Paiz Castillo spoke on behalf of the Civic Committee for Freedom of Speech, as follows:

"Most worthy lady, Dona Violeta de Chamorro, young lady Dona Marta Lucia de Chamorro Barrios, illustrious young journalist Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Barrios.

"Honorable audience, let us bow reverently on this site where, one day, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro was taken from earthly surroundings to enter the realm of history across the threshold of immortality.

"In one of the ironies of history, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Cardenal's generous and manly blood was shed on this site but, as I said a moment ago, he moved into the category of our immortal figures."

He Died for Defending Liberties

"Let us always say: Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, who died for defending the liberties of his nation, is present in the hearts of his fellow citizens.

"It is a very high honor for me to raise my voice on this sacred site, to those of us who sigh for a truly free Nicaragua, to address you, greeting the distinguished travelers who were away from the country for a few days but who, upon returning now, have come to receive the rejoicing and encouragement of all those of us who pay tribute to a family that has proven to be an honor and glory in the history of Nicaragua."

Freedom Never Dies

Dr Ricardo Paiz Castillo went on to say: "Freedom never dies when there are upright, patriotic men who are capable of sacrificing their lives, and who risk them daily when they write an editorial and when they write their thoughts, to those who misrepresent their comments and who monopolize everything for their own benefit.

"But...those of us who know how to interpret the true meaning of the comments, and the sincerity which should be the supreme virtue of the individual, must, indeed, understand that, among those illustrious men who are shaping the history of Nicaragua, the spirited young journalist Pedro Joaquin Camorro Barrios stands out among the top rank."

The Great Challenge

"Pedro, you have a great challenge in the eyes of history and the memory of your father.

"He shed his blood for a free Nicaragua, and you must follow that path to honor his memory and to defend us from those who want to trample on our liberties...

"Here we are, a people who know one another and who do not want alien ideas for our nation that do not fit in the historic essence of Nicaragua. But there must be integrity of character, there must be courage and fear must be eliminated, so that Christ who is the salvation of the people will always shine in Nicaragua.

"In my opinion, freedom of speech is the foundation of a democracy, and when restraints are placed on it, or things are concealed which, after all, is equivalent to a violation of freedom, we men must act as such, so that the reign of freedom of speech may continue in Nicaragua.

"There comes to mind at present a presidential message given by Fernando Guzman in March 1867, stating:

"'There will never be abuse for those who forcefully and patriotically speak their mind to criticize the acts, abuses and mistakes of the government.

"'Slander itself will find me impassive; I shall scorn it, but I shall not persecute it...'

"We were born on a continent which was conceived for freedom, and we must maintain that; and when the freedoms are violated, we must act like men, to try to impose them again; because we must, indeed, always be free..."

Pedro Jaoquin Chamorro Barrios Speaks

The young journalist Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Barrios was next to speak. This was his address to an enthusiastic throng:

"I want to express appreciation for this spontaneous act of welcome that you have offered us.

"I consider it to be support for freedom of speech, which has been gradually curtailed in Nicaragua; and we must use that margin of freedom remaining to us to expand it again.

"We have come from the Inter-American Press Association (IAPA), which in the past played a very important role in protecting freedom of speech in this country, and making liberty shine again some day in Nicaragua.

"We told the truth to the IAPA: that there exists in Nicaragua a series of restrictions on freedom of speech, and there is a constant campaign of discreditation against the newspaper LA PRENSA, filled with outrages, which is aimed at having the newspaper lose the image that it has gained throughout the years and that it will continue to retain in the future."

We Have Come To Defend the Freedom of Some Journalists

"We have come to defend the freedom of some journalists who have forgotten what freedom is; because, to them, everything that comes from above is accepted without any challenge.

"Instead of trying to fight to obtain more freedom, those journalists are self-restricted and engage in insulting and slandering the others who are fighting on their behalf.

"Those gentlemen have already forgotten that the state's fundamental statute, which was the one that served to unify all the forces which put an end to the Somoza dictatorship, contains in one of its main chapters 'the right to unrestricted freedom of speech expressing thought.'

"And...so long as that right is not made genuine, we shall continue to fight; but when that right has been won by the Nicaraguan people, we shall say with honor that there is freedom of the press in Nicaragua."

What is Sad

"Because, gentlemen, it is truly sad to have to say, and it is no satisfaction to have to say that, here in Nicaragua, one cannot talk about th , that and the other. What is even worse is that there are in the laws that they have imposed on us here such old terms as 'etc' and the phrase 'other similar acts.' These are interpreted, or can be interpreted, at any time, in any way and by anyone.

"To say that we have to consult and in that way become converted into official spokesmen of the information that is claimed, is truly sad..."

The Treminio Case

"Enroute from the airport, one heard shouts calling for the release of the journalist Guillermo Treminio...And I wonder, gentlemen, what has Guillermo Treminio done to deserve to be in jail?"

(The crowd responded: "Tell the truth...") "Gentlemen, he is simply a newsman who did not become alined." (The crowd responded: "Release for Treminio!")

What They Are Busy Doing

"What are the journalists who fought bravely in the past to have freedom of speech attained in Nicaragua busy doing? Now, they are busy justifying all the laws against themselves, and attacking their fellow journalists in a despicable, slanderous, damaging manner, which I shall not repeat here.

"It would appear that they have nothing better to do than start insulting, claiming that so-and-so is this, that Robelo is that....That is not journalism.

"I became familiar with that type of journalism in a newspaper called NOVEDADES.

"Why was the IAPA good in the past and bad now?

"Because now, as in the past, it upholds freedom of the press.

"Why is there talk of bourgeois, proletarian, revolutionary or counterrevolutionary journalism? Freedom is freedom, and accepts no adjectives!

"What is important is that the people have all the news media for learning what is happening. What if we here knew nothing but the official versions of the events that are occurring? What do they want? All the newspapers to say the same thing? All of them to have the same photos? The same captions? The same insults?

"No, gentlemen, that is not freedom of speech. For this there is LA PRENSA, in its unhesitating struggle. In conclusion, democratic friends of Nicaragua, I want to tell you that we have come to pay tribute to the memory of my father here, in this square, which is called Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Square, and which is the square of freedom of speech, to be always used for that purpose and not to curtail it. Thank you very much."

Robelo on the Platform

Engineer Alfonso Robelo, president of the Nicaraguan Democratic Movement Party (MDN), mounted the improvised platform amid heavy applause, after the participants in the ceremony demanded his intervention. These were his remarks:

"A few meters from here, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Cardenal shed his blood. That blood was essential for winning a victory here against the genocidal dictatorship of Somoza.

"But that blood must also serve to prevent the establishment of another dictatorship in Nicaragua.

No Credit Is Given to Him

"No credit is given to the man who, with his blood, made it possible for the genuine popular uprisings and the first strikes that were essential for ejecting the tyrant to take place in Nicaragua. Pedro Joaquin Chamorro deserves to be recognized as a true democrat, and a man who always fought to make Nicaragua a republic again.

"That line of Pedro Joaquin is now the line of the newspaper LA PRENSA, the newspaper of all Nicaraguans. Now, there is an attempt to stifle LA PRENSA with insults, slander and despicable attacks.

"The blood of Pedro Joaquin Chamorro enriched the spirit of the Nicaraguan people to achieve freedom, and the only thing that the present slander is accomplishing is that it is making all of us Nicaraguans increasingly back the newspaper which represents democratic interests.

"I would like to reiterate here the notion expressed by Dona Violeta, regarding the unity of all Nicaraguans, a unity which was essential for overthrowing the dictatorship. But, heed me carefully, unity can only be achieved with respect. It cannot be achieved when it is asserted 'the national leadership orders,' but rather when it is said 'the Nicaraguan people order...'

"We are not here to receive orders. We are here so that the people, in free elections, and the people, in free mobilizations, can forge ahead and cause this country to really have freedom and democracy.

"There has even been an attempt to manipulate the thinking of the general of free men, Augusto Cesar Sandino, which belongs to all Nicaraguans.

"Gen Augusto Cesar Sandino always concluded his writings, and so shall I, with these brief words, claiming that what we must have here is: fatherland and freedom."

Wilfredo Montalvan

Mr Wilfredo Montalvan, president of the Social Democratic Party, was the final speaker, and his comments were phrased as follows:

"Comrades all: in consideration of the family, Dona Violeta and Pedro Joaquin, we shall conclude this ceremony, but we would like to say:

"We have all gathered here to express this support for the newspaper LA PRENSA, for freedom of speech and for Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Barrios.

"We are also recalling the career of a man who sacrificed himself to the final consequences, not only for freedom of speech, but for all public freedoms on behalf of all Nicaraguans.

"Therefore, I would like to tell you that we are, at this moment, laying the first cornerstone for a struggle that we shall continue to carry ahead, because Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Cardenal left us the line that he had devised: that it is better to die as men than to live as slaves.

"And just as the Nicaraguans shed their blood in the liberation struggle against the dictatorship, as Pedro Joaquin Chamorro Cardenal did, we must be certain that they will be willing, now and always, to shed their blood to matain the freedoms which have been the greatest aspiration of all Nicaraguans.

"Hence, our presence here represents a commitment to the past and the future: a commitment to the past, because we must remain faithful to the aspirations of Pedro Joaquin Chamorro and of the 50,000 martyrs who shed their blood for this country's freedom; and to the future, because we shall turn over to the younger generations a free Nicaragua, a Nicaragua like that dreamed of by Pedro Joaquin Camorro Cardenal, when he said 'Nicaragua will be a republic again.' Thank you very much." To end the ceremony, the audience sang the national anthem.

2909

CSO: 3010

YOUNG SANDINIST DISCUSSES INTEGRATION OF YOUTH INTO ECONOMY

Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 18 Oct 80 p 6

[Interview with Fanor Herrera, member of the 19 July Sandinist Youth organization's National Executive Secretariat; date and place not given]

[Text] Fanor Herrera, member of the 19 July Sandinist Youth organization's National Executive Secretariat, has discussed the plans for 1981 with BARRICADA.

One of the major tasks to be performed by the 19 July Sandinist Youth organization during 1981 is unquestionably that of associating the student, the nation's future technician, with production and the real situation in the rural areas, through the Work-Study Program.

It should not be thought that the youth will be dissociated from the Economic Reactivation Plan. Fanor Herrera, member of the JS-19 National Executive Secretariat, told BARRICADA that in 1981 the students must not only be familiar with the Reactivation Plan, but must study it, become thoroughly cognizant of it and back it.

The Sandinist Youth organization will provide mechanisms for achieving constantly increasing integration of students into the nation's problems.

Herewith is the interview with Fanor Herrera, leader of the 19 July Sandinist Youth organization:

[Question] Comrade Herrera, how will the 19 July Sandinist Youth organization respond to the challenges of 1981 in the areas of austerity, efficiency, productivity, reactivation, etc.?

[Answer] In the first place, we must become geared to the guidelines issued to us by our National Directorate, and to what our National Executive Committee decides.

We have been preparing a group of operating plans so that our entities will be able to respond, in 1981 and in future years, to the basic needs of our people.

First of all, the organization will have to deal with the student problems and the educational situation next year. The student comrades will have an opportunity to participate with our organization, supporting the plans of the revolution, and being better students and better technicians. We shall demand of the organization's members direct participation in schooling.

